PUBLISHERS' NOTE

The Riverside Edition of the Poetic and Dramatic Works of Robert Browning was published first in 1887. It included all the writings which the American publishers had from time to time brought out by arrangement with Mr. Browning or his representatives. A year later the English publishers issued a new and revised edition, whereupon the Riverside Edition was carefully compared with the author's latest revision and made to agree with it. There had grown up, moreover, about the writings a considerable body of comment and interpretation, and to facilitate the study and enjoyment of the poems, the American publishers engaged Mr. George Willis Cooke to prepare a Guide-Book which served as a very desirable accompaniment to the Riverside Edition of the works. They added also to the series, by arrangement with the English publishers, the authorized Life of the poet by Mrs. Sutherland Orr.

The ten volumes thus brought together furnish a complete Browning collection, but it has long been apparent that students and lovers of Browning would find it very convenient to have the complete works of their author in a single portable volume, and the plan of the Cambridge Edition so successfully applied to the poems of Longfellow and Whittier was adopted for this purpose. By a careful study of condensation with every regard for legibility it has been found possible to bring the entire body of Browning's work into a single volume, and to equip the edition with the requisite apparatus. The order of arrangement is chronological, with one or two obvious divergences. As in the other volumes of the Cambridge Edition, a biographical sketch introduces the work, brief head-notes chiefly pertaining to the origin of the respective poems have been supplied, drawn largely from Mr. Cooke's admirable volume, and a small body of pertinent notes of an explanatory character added, though the reader will readily see that the exigencies of the volume have compelled the editor to be very frugal in this respect. The appendix also contains the one notable piece of Browning's prose, a chronological list of his writings, and indexes of titles and first lines.

Boston, 4 Park Street. August 1, 1895.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH. 1

If one sought to build any genealogical structure to account for Robert Browning's genius, he would find but slight foundation in fact, though what he found would be substantial so far as it went. Browning's father was a bank clerk in London; his father again was a bank clerk. Both of these Brownings were christened Robert. The father of the poet's grandfather was Thomas Browning, an innkeeper and small proprietor in Dorsetshire, and his stock apparently was west-country English. Browning himself liked to believe that an earlier ancestor was a certain Captain Micahiah Browning who raised the siege of Derry in 1689 by an act of personal bravery which cost him his life. It is most to the point that Browning was London born with two generations of city Londoners behind him. His mother was Sarah Anne — a name which became Sarianna in the poet's sister — Wiedemann, the Scottish daughter of a Hamburg German, a shipowner in Dundee.

The characters of the poet's parents are clearly defined. Robert Browning, senior, was a man of business who performed his business duties punctiliously, and by frugality acquired a tolerably comfortable fortune, but he was not a money-making man; his real life was in his books and in the gratification of literary and aesthetic tastes. He was a voracious reader, and in a prudent way a book and print collector. "It was his habit," says Mrs. Orr, "when he bought a book — which was generally an old one allowing of this addition — to have some pages of blank paper bound into it. These he filled with notes, chronological tables, or such other supplementary matter as would enhance the interest, or assist the mastering, of its contents: all written in a clear and firm, though by no means formal, handwriting." He had a talent for versifying which he used for his entertainment; he had a cheerful nature and that genuine sociability which made him a delightful companion in the small circle which satisfied his simple, ingenious nature. He was born and bred in the Church of England, but in middle life became by choice a Dissenter, though never an exclusive one.

Mrs. Browning, the poet's mother, was once described by Carlyle as "the true type of a Scottish gentlewoman." She inherited from her father a love for music and drawing which in him was manifested in execution, in her in good taste and appreciation. She was a woman of serene, gentle and affectionate nature, and of simple, earnest religious belief. She was brought up in the kirk of Scotland, but, like her husband, connected herself in middle life with the Congregationalists. She communicated of her own religions conviction to her children; it is said that she handed down also a nervous organization.

Of these parents Robert Browning was born in the parish of St. Giles, Camberwell, London, May 7, 1812. He was the oldest of the small family, having two sisters, one, Clara, who died in childhood, and Sarianna, two years younger than himself, who outlived him. The country in which he was born and where he spent his childhood has been delightfully described by his great contemporary, Ruskin, whose Herne Hill was in the immediate neighborhood. Camberwell at that time was a suburb of London, with rural spaces and near access to the open country, though the stony foot of the metropolis was already stepping outward upon the pleasant lanes and fields. There was room for gardening and the keeping of pets, while the country gave opportunity for forays into nature's fastnesses. The boy kept owls and monkeys, magpies and hedgehogs, an eagle, snakes even, and was touched with the collector's pride, as when he started a collection of rare creatures with a couple of lady-birds brought home one winter day and placed in a box lined with cotton wool and labelled, "Animals found surviving in the depths of a severe winter." It is easy for a reader of his poems to detect the close, sympathetic observation which he disclosed for all lower life.

Indeed the characteristics of his mind as seen in his writings afterward were readily disclosed in the evidence which remains to us of his boyhood. He was insatiably curious and he was imaginatively dramatic, and he had from the first the same and generous aid of his parents in both these particulars. His father was passionately fond of children, and gave his own that best of gifts, appreciative companionship. "He was fond," says Mr. Sharpe in his Life of Browning, "of taking the little Robert in his arms and walking to and fro with him in the dusk in the library, soothing the child to sleep by singing to him snatches of Anacreon in the original to a favorite old tune of his, 'A Cottage in a Wood;'" and again the same biographer says: "One of his own [Robert's] recollections was that of sitting on his father's knees in the library, and listening with enthralled attention to the Tale of Troy, with marvellous illustrations among the glowing coals in the fireplace; with, below all, the vaguely heard accompaniment — from the neighboring room, where Mrs. Browning sat 'in her chief happiness, her hour of darkness and solitude and music' — of a wild Gaelic lament, with its insistent falling cadences."

The boy had an indifferent experience of formal schooling in his youth. The more fertilizing influence of his intellectual taste was found in his father's books. As has been said, his father had an intelligent and cultivated love of books, and eagerly shared his knowledge and his treasures with his boy. A seventeenth century edition of Quarles's Emblemes, the first edition of Robinson Crusoe, an early edition of Milton, bought for him by his father, old Bibles, a wide range of Elizabethan literature — these were pastures in which the boy browsed. Besides, he knew the eighteenth century writers, Walpole, Junius, and even Voltaire being included by the catholic minded father. The special acquaintance with Greek came later, but Latin he began early.

His attendance at school ceased when he was fourteen, then came four years of private tutors, and at eighteen he was matriculated at London University, where he spent two years. In this period of private and public tuition, his scope was widening with systematic intent. He learned dancing, riding, boxing and fencing. He became versed in French. He visited galleries, and made some progress in drawing, especially from casts. He studied music with able teachers. He had a strong interest in the stage, and displayed on occasions a good deal of histrionic ability himself.

It is said that in this growing, restless period, when indeed he had the wilfulness and aggressiveness of the young man who has the consciousness of inner power, but not yet the mastery either of art or of himself, it was an open question with him whether he should be poet, painter, sculptor or musician; an artist at any rate he knew he must be. To that all his being moved, and in his youth he manifested that temperament, by alternation dreamy and dramatic, which under favoring conditions is the background from which artistic possibilities are projected. From the vantage ground of a wooded spot near his home he could look out on the distant city lying on the western horizon, and fretting the evening sky with its spires and towers and ragged lines. The sight for him had a great fascination. Here would he lie for hours, looking and dreaming, and he has told how one night of his boyhood he stole out to these elms and saw the great city glimmering through the darkness. After all, the vision was more to him than that which brought woods and fields beneath his ken. It was the world of men and women, toward which his gaze was directed all his life.

In Browning's case, as in that of more than one recent poet, it is possible to see a very distinct passing of the torch into his hand from that of a great predecessor. He had versified from childhood. He would scarcely have been his father's child had he not. His sister remembers that when he was a very little child he would walk round and round the dining-room table, spanning the table with his palm as he marked off the scansion of the verses he had composed. Even before this rhyme had been put into his hands as an instrument, for his father had taught him words by their rhymes, and aided his memorizing of Latin declensions in the same way. So the boy lisped in numbers, for the numbers came, and by the time he was twelve he had accumulated a formidable amount of matter, chiefly Byronic in manner. With the confidence of the very youthful poet, he tried to find a publisher who would venture on the issue. He could not find one who would put his verses into print, but he found one of another sort in his mother, who read them with pride and showed them to her friends. Thus they fell into the hands of Miss Flower, who showed them to her sister, Sarah Flower Adams, whose name is firmly held in hymnologies, and with her appreciation showed them also to the Rev. William Johnson Fox, who as preacher, editor, and man of letters had a tolerably distinct position which has not yet been forgotten. Mr. Fox read and was emphatic in his recognition of promise, but with good sense advised against any attempt to get the book into print. Book it was in manuscript, and this was the publication it received. Like other first ventures, its audience was fit though few, and as will be seen later, Browning gained the best thing that first ventures are likely to bring, a generous critic.

But shortly after this came the real fructifying of the poetic germ which lay in this youthful nature. "Passing a bookstall one day," says Mr. Sharp, "he saw, in a box of second-hand volumes, a little book advertised as 'Mr. Shelley's Atheistical Poem: very scarce.' He had never heard of Shelley, nor did he learn for a long time that the Demon of the World and the miscellaneous poems appended thereto constituted a literary piracy. Badly printed, shamefully mutilated, these discarded blossoms touched him to a new emotion. Pope became further removed than ever: Byron, even, lost his magnetic supremacy. From vague remarks in reply to his inquiries, and from one or two casual allusions, he learned that there really was a poet called Shelley: that he had written several volumes; that he was dead." His mother set herself to search for more of Shelley for her son, and after recourse to Mr. Fox, made her way to the Olliers in Vere Street, and brought back not only a collection of Shelley's volumes, but of Keats's also, and thus these two poets fell into Browning's hands.

It was on a May night, Browning told a friend, he entered upon this hitherto unknown world. In a laboratory near by, and in a great copper beech not far away, two nightingales sang together. So he sat and listened to them, and read by turns from these two poets. It was his initiation into the same society. He did not at once join them, but when he made his first appearance in public, at the age of twenty, it was with a poem, Pauline, which not only held a glowing apostrophe to Shelley but was throughout colored by his ardent devotion to the poet. Twenty years later he wrote a prose apologia for Shelley in the form of an introduction to a collection of letters purporting to come from Shelley, but which were discovered to be spurious immediately upon publication. Both Pauline and an Essay on Percy Bysshe Shelley will be found in this volume, with introductions explaining the circumstances of publication, but the reader of Browning's poetry is likely to carry longest in his mind the short lyric Memorabilia, beginning:

"Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,"

in which as in a parable one may read how the sudden acquaintance with this poet was to Browning the one memorable moment in his period of youthful dreaming.

The publication anonymously of Pauline in January, 1833, was followed by a period of travel. He went to Russia nominally as secretary to the Russian consul-general, and became so enamored of diplomatic life that he essayed to enter it, but failed; so strong a hold did it take on him that he would have been glad in later life if his son had chosen this career.

The life of a poet who is not also a man of action is told mainly in the succession of his writings. Two or three sonnets followed Pauline, but the first poem to which Browning attached his name was Paracelsus, the dedication to which is dated March 15, 1835. The dedication — and the succession of these graceful compliments discloses many of Browning's friendships — was to Count de Riber-Monclar, a young French royalist, who was a private agent of the royal family, and had become intimate with the poet, who was four years his junior. The count suggested the life of Paracelsus to his friend as a subject for a poem, but on second thought advised against it as offering insufficient materials for the treatment of love. A young poet, however, who would prefix a quotation from Cornelius Agrippa to his first publication was one easily to be enticed by such a subject, and Browning fell upon the literature relating to Paracelsus which he found in the British Museum, and quickly mastered the facts, which became fused by his ardent imagination and eager speculation into a consistent whole. But though he sought his material among books, as he needs must, he found his constructive power in the silence of nature in the night. He had a great love for walking in the dark. "There was in particular," says Mr. Sharp, "a wood near Dulwich.
Robert Browning

whither he was wont to go. There he would walk swiftly and eagerly along the solitary and lightless byways, finding a potent stimulus to imaginative thought in the happy isolation thus enjoyed. . . . At this time, too, he composed much in the open air. This he rarely, if ever, did in later life. Not only many portions of Paracelsus but several scenes in Strafford were enacted first in these midnight silences of the Dulwich woodland. Here, too, as the poet once declared, he came to know the serene beauty of dawn: for every now and again, after having read late, or written long, he would steal quietly from the house, and walk till the morning twilight graded to the pearl and amber of the new day."

Poetry, it may be, more than any other form of literature, clears the way for friendship. At any rate, Paracelsus introduced Browning to John Forster, and it was at this time also that Dickens, Talfourd and Macready, Leigh Hunt, Barry Cornwall, Wordsworth and Landor were more than names to the young poet. There was doubtless something in the man as well as in his work which won him recognition. Macready says he looked more the poet than any man he had ever met. His head was crowned with wavy dark brown hair. He had singularly expressive eyes, a sensitive, mobile mouth, a musical voice, and an alertness of manner, so that he was like a quivering, high bred animal. How marked he was by his companions, and singled out to be, as Macready says, "a leading spirit of his time," is instanced by a notable occurrence at Talfourd's house after the first performance of Ion, when Talfourd included Browning with Wordsworth and Landor, who were present, in a toast to the poets of England.

It was on this occasion that Macready, whom Browning already knew well, proposed to the poet that he should write him a play as narrated in the Introduction to Strafford. The play was produced at the Covent Garden Theatre in May, 1837, and Macready and Miss Helen Faneit, afterward Lady Martin, gave distinction to its representation. It came, however, at an unfortunate time in the management, and though it gave promise of a long run, certain difficulties in the theatre compelled its withdrawal. It was published at once by Longmans, but like Browning's former book, was a failure with the public.

The monologue of Pauline had been succeeded by what may be called the conversational drama of Paracelsus, and that by the dramatic Strafford. The form now experimented with was to be the dominant one for the next ten years, though his next attempt was in form almost a reversion to Pauline. During the remainder of 1837 and until Easter, 1838, Browning was engaged on Sordello, but interrupted this poem for a couple of years which have a special interest as the years when he first visited Italy, and when he entered upon an order of production which was to be very significant of his poetic choice of subject and treatment. Browning himself recognized the importance to his acquaintance with Italy. "It was my university," he said, when asked if he had been a student at Oxford or Cambridge. The companion poems, The Englishman in Italy and The Italian in England, illustrate that double nationality in Browning's mind by which the two countries were, so to speak, married for him. The latter of these two poems was one which Mazzini used to read to his countrymen when he would demonstrate how generously an Englishman could enter into the Italian's patriotic aspirations. The journey was a rapid one. "I went," Browning says, "to Trieste, then Venice — then through Treviso and Bassano to the mountains, delicious Asolo, all my places and castles, you will see. Then to Vicenza, Padua, and Venice again. Then to Verona, Trent, Innspruck, Munich, Salzburg in Franconia, Frankfort and Mayence; down the Rhine to Cologne, then to Aix-la-Chapelle, Siège and Antwerp; then home."

It would seem as if he had begun Sordello with a bookish knowledge only of Italy, and later charged it with a more informing spirit of love for that country and embroidered it with descriptive scenes drawn from his personal observation. The poem was published in 1840, but the result of the journey in Italy and of the poet's more complete finding of himself — a process by the bye which may almost be taken as having its analogue in Sordello — were made most evident by the next publication, the story of which is told in the Introduction to Pippa Passes. The very form chosen for Bells and Pomegranates was a challenge to the public not so fantastically arrogant as Horne's famous publication of Orion at a farthing, but noticeable as an earnest of Browning's appeal to his generation and not to a select circle of admiring friends. In this series of writings, extending from 1841 through 1846, Browning struck the note again and again, in drama, lyric, and romance, which was to be the dominant note of his poetry, that disclosure of the soul of man in all manner of circumstances, as if the world were to the poet a great laboratory of souls, and he was forever to be engaged in solving, dissolving, and resolving the elements.

It is noticeable also that with this series closed Browning’s serious attempts at dramatic composition for the stage. It would almost seem as if he finally parted company with theatrical managers, partly because of the constant difficulty he had in making them subordinate to his purpose, partly and no doubt more profoundly because his own genius, bent as it was upon the interpretation of spiritual phenomena, could ill brook the demands of the acted drama that all this interpretation should stop with visible, intelligible, and satisfactory action, capable of histrionic expression. Browning’s eager penetration of the arena of life was too absorbing to permit him to call a halt when the actor on the stage could go no farther.

An example of the practical difficulties he encountered with managers will be found in the vicissitudes of A Blot in the ’Scutcheon’, which was put on the stage in 1843 and formed the fifth in the series of Bells and Pomegranates. Browning has himself told the story of his misfortunes so fully and so graphically in a letter to Mr. Frank Hill, editor of the London Daily News, forty years after the event, that it seems worth while to introduce it here. The letter, from which the following passage is taken, was dated 19, Warwick Crescent, December 17, 1884; and was written in consequence of a paragraph concerning the revival of the play, which Mr. Hill had sent in proof to Browning, from a doubt he felt of its accuracy:—

"Macready received and accepted the play, while he was engaged at the Haymarket, and retained it for Drury Lane, of which I was ignorant that he was about to become the manager; he accepted it ‘at the instigation’ of nobody,—and Charles Dickens was not in England when he did so: it was read to him after his return by Forster,—and the glowing letter which contains his opinion of it, although directed by him to be shown to myself, was never heard of nor seen by me till printed in Forster’s book some thirty years afterwards. When the Drury Lane season began, Macready informed me that he should act the play when he had brought out two others—The Patrician’s Daughter, and Plighted Truth. Having done so, he wrote to me that the former had been unsuccessful in money-drawing, and the latter had ‘smashed his arrangements altogether,’ but he would still produce my play. I had,—in my ignorance of certain symptoms better understood by Macready’s professional acquaintances,—no notion that it was a proper thing, in such a case, to ‘release him from his promise;’ on the contrary, I should have fancied that such a proposal was offensive. Soon after, Macready begged that I would call on him; he said the play had been read to the actors the day before, and ‘laughed at from beginning to end;’ on my speaking my mind about this, he explained that the reading had been done by the prompter, a grotesque person with a red nose and wooden leg, ill at ease in the love scenes, and that he would himself make amends by reading the play next morning—which he did, and very adequately,—but apprised me that, in consequence of the state of his mind, harassed by business and various trouble, the principal character must be taken by Mr. Phelps; and again I failed to understand,—what Forster subsequently assured me was plain as the sun at noonday—that to allow at Macready’s theatre any other than Macready to play the principal part in a new piece was suicidal,—and really believed I was meeting his exigencies by accepting the substitution. At the rehearsal, Macready announced that Mr. Phelps was ill, and that he himself would read the part; on the third rehearsal, Mr. Phelps appeared for the first time, and sat in a chair while Macready more than read,—rehearsed the part. The next morning Mr. Phelps waylaid me at the stage-floor to say, with much emotion, that it never was intended that he should be instrumental in the success of a new tragedy, and that Macready would play Tresham on the ground that himself, Phelps, was unable to do so. He added that he could not expect me to waive such an advantage, but that, if I were prepared to waive it, ‘he would take other, sit up all night, and have the words in his memory by next day.’ I bade him follow me to the green-room, and hear what I decided upon—which was that as Macready had given him the part, he should keep it: this was on a Thursday; he rehearsed on Friday and Saturday,—the play being acted the same evening,—of the fifth day after the ‘reading’ by Macready. Macready at once wished to reduce the importance of the ‘play’—as he styled it in the bills,—tried to leave out so much of the text that I baffled him by getting it printed in four-and-twenty hours, by Moxon’s assistance. He wanted me to call it The Sister! and I have before me, while I write, the stage-acting copy, with two lines of his own insertion to avoid the tragical ending—Tresham was to announce his intention of going into a monastery! all this, to keep up the belief that Macready, and Macready alone, could produce a veritable 'tragedy,' unproduced before. Not a shilling was spent on scenery or dresses, and a striking scene which had been used for The Patrician's Daughter did duty a second time. If your critic considers this treatment of the play an instance of 'the failure of powerful and experienced actors' to ensure its success, I can only say that my own opinion was shown by at once breaking off a friendship of many years—a friendship which had a right to be plainly and simply told that the play I had contributed as a proof of it would, through a change of circumstances, no longer be to my friend's advantage—all I could possibly care for. Only recently, when the publication of Macready's journals the extent of his pecuniary embarrassments at that time was made known, could I in a measure understand his motives for such conduct, and less than ever understand why he so strangely disguised and disfigured them. If 'applause' meant success, the play thus maimed and maltreated was successful enough; it 'made way' for Macready's own Benefit, and the theatre closed a fortnight after."

Of the more profound separation between Browning and the theatre, due to the inherent impossibility of his arresting his thought before it got beyond the actor's use, Lucia and The Return of the Druses afford good examples, and an illustration might fairly be taken from Colombe's Birthday, which was put on the stage in 1853, but scarcely held its own, though Helen Fancit took the heroine's part, and, when revived forty years after, was so cut and slashed that though the splendid idea of Valence was retained in situation, the delicate, subtle shadows which passed and repassed before the reader's mind were wanting.

The period when Browning was writing his dramas was one of spendthrift enjoyment of life. For it was a time not only of work in the British Museum and of excursions into all sorts of remote fields of literature, but of long rambles, half gipsy experiences, hours when, stretched at full length beneath the sky, he made familiar and minute acquaintance with bird and leaf, insect and snail, the wind in the trees, the search for the northwest passage of argosies of clouds. He pursued all manner of interests which absorbed him for the moment; he was living, in short, that abundant life which was reflected later in multitudinous dramatic assumptions.

Then all at once there came a concentration of his passion and a sudden revelation to him which never lost its wondrous light. Elizabeth Barrett and Robert Browning, knowing each other through their writings, then by a common service to a common friend, then by an intermittent correspondence, finally were brought together by John Kenyon, already a dear friend of each. The fragile creature, scarce able to leave her couch, and the robust, exuberantly vital man, were as far separate in external, superficial agreement as could well be, but each knew the other with an instantaneousness of knowledge and need. Again and again, not only in verses directed openly to his wife, but in those which like By the Fireside thinly veil personal feeling, the passionate constancy of this experimenting, daringly inquisitive poet towards his poet wife is splendidly disclosed, with a certain glory of frank confession which is the vehement sincerity of one who is in this one feeling genuine poet and genuine man.

Miss Barrett was an invalid, guarded with the greatest care, and Browning, in urging marriage upon her, met with all the obstacles which the circumstances raised. He confronted indeed the indomitable refusal of Miss Barrett's father. A physician had held out hopes that a removal to Italy would give the invalid a chance to regain some degree of health, but Mr. Barrett, for some not very clear reason, refused his consent to her taking the journey with her brother. It was then that Browning, who can readily be conceived of as a masterful man, won Miss Barrett's consent to a sudden and clandestine marriage, and a journey to Italy as his wife. "When she had finally assented to this course," writes Mrs. Orr, "she took a preparatory step which, in so far as it was known, must itself have been sufficiently startling to those about her; she drove to Regent's Park, and when there, stepped out of the carriage and on to the grass. I do not know how long she stood—probably only for a moment; but I well remember hearing that when, after so long an interval, she felt earth under her feet and air about her, the sensation was almost bewilderingly strange."

They were married September 12, 1846. She would not entangle Mr. Kenyon or any of her friends by announcing even her engagement; she preferred marrying without her father's knowledge, to marrying against his prohibition. For a week the husband and wife did not see each other. Then they met by agreement and went to Paris. Mr. Barrett never forgave his daughter, but the consternation with which the Browning family heard of the event quickly turned to affectionate regard for the frail wife. So far as Mrs. Browning's physical well-being was concerned, it is clear that the marriage gave her a new lease of life; and what seemed at the moment an audacious taking of fate into their own hands proved to be a case where nature obtained her best of both.

From Paris, by slow stages, they passed through France into Italy, and made their first long halt in Pisa. It was here, we are told, that Mrs. Browning showed to her husband in manuscript those Sonnets from the Portuguese which were her offering to him out of the darkness of her chamber. From Pisa they went to Florence, to Ancona, and again back to Florence, where at last they obtained a foothold in the old palace called Casa Guidi, a name to be endeared to the readers of Mrs. Browning's poetry. Mr. George S. Hillard, in his Six Months in Italy, gives a pleasant account of the Browning's when he met them in Florence in 1847.

"It is well for the traveller to be chary of names. It is an ungrateful return for hospitable attentions to print the conversation of your host, or describe his person, or give an inventory of his furniture, or proclaim how his wife and daughters were dressed. But I trust I may be pardoned if I state that one of my most delightful associations with Florence arises from the fact that here I made the acquaintance of Robert and Elizabeth Browning. These are even more familiar names in America than in England, and their poetry is probably more read, and better understood with us than among their own countrymen. A happier home and a more perfect union than theirs it is not easy to imagine; and this completeness arises not only from the rare qualities which each possesses, but from their adaptation to each other. Browning's conversation is like the poetry of Chaucer, or like his own, simplified and made transparent. His countenance is so full of vigor, freshness, and refined power, that it seems impossible to think that he can ever grow old. His poetry is subtle, passionate, and profound; but he himself is simple, natural, and playful. He has the repose of a man who has lived much in the open air; with no nervous uneasiness and no unhealthy self-consciousness. Mrs. Browning is in many respects the correlative of her husband. As he is full of manly power, so she is a type of the most sensitive and delicate womanhood. She has been a great sufferer from ill-health, and the marks of pain are stamped upon her person and manner. Her figure is slight, her countenance expressive of genius and sensibility, shaded by a veil of long brown locks; and her tremulous voice oftenutters over her words, like the flame of a dying candle over the wick. I have never seen a human frame which seemed so nearly a transparent veil for a celestial and immortal spirit. She is a soul of fire enclosed in a shell of pearl. Her rare and fine genius needs no setting forth at my hands. She is also, what is not so generally known, a woman of uncommon, nay, profound learning, even measured by a masculine standard. Nor is she more remarkable for genius and learning, than for sweetness of temper, tenderness of heart, depth of feeling, and purity of spirit. It is a privilege to know such beings singly and separately, but to see their powers quickened, and their happiness rounded, by the sacred tie of marriage, is a cause for peculiar and lasting gratitude. A union so complete as theirs—in which the mind has nothing to crave nor the heart to sigh for—is cordial to behold and something to remember."

During the fifteen years of their married life the Browning's lived for the most part in Italy, with occasional summers in England and long sojourns in Paris. The record of Browning's productions during this period is meagre, if one regards the fulness of his poetic activity both before and after. The explanation is made that these new responsibilities, — for two sons were born to them, one of whom died, — carried also great anxieties, for the frailty of Mrs. Browning's health was a constant factor in the movements of the household. But though the record is meagre as to quantity, lovers of Browning's poetry would be likely to regard this as not only a central period, chronologically, but the period when he reached his highest expression. The first collected edition of his poems appeared in 1849, to be followed the next year by Christmas-Eve and Easter-Day, and then, five years after that, in 1855, by Men and Women, a group of poems which still remains the flower of Browning's genius.
The great range taken by these poems is a witness to the fecundity and versatility of Browning's genius. It is possible, also, that to the circumstances of his life, especially its beautiful distractions, we owe the fact of a multitude of short poems rather than longer-sustained efforts. While Mrs. Browning, sheltered by the constant care exerted by her husband and stimulated by his companionship, composed her longest work, Aurora Leigh, he, never long freed from anxious thought, broke into more fragmentary production. A very good illustration of the alacrity of his mind and the instantaneous power of seizing upon opportunity is given in a passage in Mr. Gosse's Personalia:

"In recounting a story of some Tuscan noblemen who had shown him two exquisite miniature-paintings, the work of a young artist who should have received for them the prize in some local contest, and who, being unjustly defrauded, broke his ivories, burned his brushes, and indignantly foresaw the thankless art forever, Mr. Browning suddenly reflected that there was, as he said, 'stuff for a poem' in that story, and immediately with extreme vivacity began to sketch the form it should take, the suppression of what features and the substitution of what others were needful; and finally suggested the non-obvious or inverted moral of the whole, in which the act of spiritual defiance was shown to be, really, an act of tame renunciation, the poverty of the artist's spirit being proved in his eagerness to snatch, even though it was by honest merit, a benefit simply material. The poet said, distinctly, that he had never before reflected on this incident as one proper to be versified; the speed, therefore, with which the creative architect laid the foundations, built the main fabric, and even put on the domes and pinnacles of his poem was, no doubt, of uncommon interest. He left it, in five minutes, needing nothing but the mere outward crust of the versification."

It was an incident in Browning's life that when he was producing his most glorious work and receiving the admiration and intelligent appreciation of his poetical wife, he was a very insignificant figure in English literature of the day. Mrs. Browning was indifferent over the neglect her husband suffered, and in her letters drew sharp comparison between the attention paid Browning in America and the neglect he received in England. Meanwhile, whether living in Florence or sojourning in Paris or London, a choice company was always to be found welcoming and honoring the two poets. Mr. and Mrs. Story, the Hawthornes, Cardinal Manning, Massimo d'Azeglio, Sir Frederick Leighton, Mr. Odo Russell, Rossetti, Val Prinsep, Forster, Landor, Fanny Kemble,—these are some of the names closely associated with that of the Brownings in this period.

The death of Mrs. Browning, June 29, 1861, closed this most beautiful human companionship. It made also a great change in Browning's habit of life, and no doubt affected in important ways his poetical productiveness. He left Italy for England. He became absorbed, so far as personal responsibilities went, in the education of his son. By some strange caprice, he chose to make his home in an ugly part of London, and he approached it through a region of disorder and squalor. But he also, with his robust nature, denied himself the luxury of a persistent solitariness, and little by little returned to society, especially grateful for the friendship of women like Miss Isa Blagden, who stepped in at the moment of his descent into the valley of grief with their gentle ministrations.

The months that followed Mrs. Browning's death were in a way given to taking up again dropped threads of work, and to intellectual occupations, which both satisfied and stimulated his nature. He read Euripides again, perhaps in part because of the association in his mind with his wife's scholarly interests. He resumed the poems on which he had been engaged in the last months at Casa Guidi, and he pondered over his magnum opus, the germ of which had been in his mind for many months. But first, in 1863, he saw through the press a new and complete collection of his poetical works in three volumes. Then, the year following, he gathered the poems which immediately preceded and followed Mrs. Browning's death into the volume of Dramatis Personae. The reissue of his older poems and this new accession were accompanied by a clear reinforcement of his position as an English poet. He had come, too, to the point where volumes of selections from his work were in demand, a pretty good sign of a widening of his audience. Other signs followed. In 1867 he received the honorary degree of M. A. from the University of Oxford, and a few months later was made honorary fellow of Balliol College. In the year following he was asked to stand for the Lord Rectorship of the University of St. Andrews, rendered vacant by the death of J. S. Mill.

His mother had died in 1843, and in 1846 his father, who had been one of his most constant companions since his wife’s death, died also. Thereafter, he and his sister Sarianna, who had passed a life of devotion to their parents, became inseparable. Though England was their home, they spent many summers in Brittany, as his poems indicate, and now and then returned to Italy, where his son was established finally as a painter.

In 1868 appeared the six volume uniform edition of his poems, and immediately afterward began the publication, to be completed in four volumes, of The Ring and the Book. Mrs. Orr traces, in an ingenious manner, the influence which Mrs. Browning’s personality had in the conception of Pompilia in this poem. However much a single character may have been affected, it is easy to believe that this elaborate construction building in Browning’s mind during the closing years of his wife’s life and actually brought into existence in the years immediately following was, more than any single work, a great monument which the poet raised to the memory of that companion whose own poetic achievement always seemed to him of a higher worth than his own.

“The simple truth is,” he wrote to a common friend, “that she was the poet and I the clever person by comparison: remember her limited experience of all kinds, and what she made of it. Remember, on the other hand, how my uninterrupted health and strength and practice with the world have helped me.”

After The Ring and the Book the only new departure, so to speak, of Browning’s genius was in the group of poems which were built upon the foundation of Greek poetry. In 1871 appeared Balastion’s Adventure, in 1873 Aristophanes’ Apology, and in 1877 The Agamemnon of Eschylus. They have their value as expressive of Browning’s catholicity, and more particularly as his one great literary feat. With all his interest in Italy, and his delving in Renaissance literature, there can scarcely be said to be any criticism of Italian literature in the form of his own poetry. In like manner his dramatic works are not, except in a very remote or general sense, criticism of the Elizabethan drama. But his three poems above named do represent the thought and criticism of a Gothic mind confronting and admiring the Greek art and thought. Browning in these works is not a reproducer in his own terms of Greek life; he is a poet of varied experience, who, coming in contact with a great and distinct manifestation of human life, is moved to strike in here also with his thought and fancy, and because of the very elemental nature of the material, to find the keenest delight in exercising his genius upon it.

Meanwhile the facility which his long and varied practice with the English language had brought him made every new subject that appealed to him a plaything for his fertile imagination; and the speculative temper which grew upon him as the maturity of experience enlarged and enriched his material for thought, led him into long and tortuous ways. The Ring and the Book stands about midway in the bulk of his work, but whereas all the poetry and drama before that work represent thirty-five years of his life, that which follows, nearly as great in amount, represents but twenty years.

In these last years of his life, when fame had come to him and his versatility made him a ready companion, he led a semi-public life. He was in demand in all directions. As Mr. Sharp has rapidly summed it up: “Everybody wished him to come and dine; and he did his utmost to gratify everybody. He said everything; read all the notable books; kept himself acquainted with the leading contents of the journals and magazines; conducted a large correspondence; read new French, German, and Italian books of mark; read and translated Euripides and Eschylus; knew all the gossip of the literary clubs, salons, and the studios; was a frequenter of afternoon-tea parties; and then, over and above it, he was Browning; the most profoundly subtle mind that has exercised itself in poetry since Shakespeare.”

In 1881 was founded the English Browning Society, one of the most singular testimonials to the interest awakened by a contemporaneous poet known in literary history. The great mass of his writings, the recordite nature of some of the material which he had used, but more than all, the astounding variety of problems in human life and character which he had presented and either solved or opened the way to solve, made Browning an object of the greatest interest to the curious, the sympathetic, and the restless of his day. Any such movement has on its edge a frayed sort of membership, but no one can note the names of members or read the communications which appear in the society's proceedings without recognizing the intellectual ability that carried the movement along. Browning's own attitude toward the society is pretty clearly expressed in the following words which he wrote to Mr. Edmund Yates at the time of the society's foundation:

"The Browning Society, I need not say, as well as Browning himself, are fair game for criticism. I had no more to do with the founding it than the babe unborn; and, as Wilkes was no Wilkesite, I am quite other than a Browningite. But I cannot wish harm to a society of, with a few exceptions, names unknown to me, who are busied about my books so disinterestedly. The exaggerations probably come of the fifty-years'-long charge of unintelligibility against my books; such reactions are possible, though I never looked for the beginning of one so soon. That there is a grotesque side to the thing is certain; but I have been surprised and touched by what cannot but have been well intentioned, I think. Anyhow, as I never felt inconvenienced by hard words, you will not expect me to wax bumptious because of undue compliment: so enough of 'Browning'—except that he is yours very truly 'while the machine is to him.'"

In 1877 Browning removed to a more agreeable quarter in De Vere Gardens in the west end of London, and with his affection for Asolo, he set about purchasing a residence there in 1889, and it was while engaged in negotiations for the purchase that he was taken ill with bronchial troubles, and died at his son's home in Venice, December 12, 1889. He was buried in Poet's Corner, Westminster Abbey, on the last day of the year. Italy rightly divided honors with England, and on the outer wall of the Rezzonico Palace in Venice is a memorial tablet with the inscription:

PAULINE: THE FRAGMENT OF A CONFESSION

The history of the earliest printed of Browning's writings is so curious that it seems worth while to give it at greater length than its intrinsic merit would require. As a boy Browning wrote an inordinate amount of verse, imitative largely of Byron, and some of it written when he was twelve struck his father as good enough to deserve printing, but no publisher could be found ready to confirm this faith. Then Browning fell into a Shelleyan mood, and when he was twenty projected a great work of which the introduction only was written. This introduction was Pauline, which to be precise was completed October 22, 1832. Browning's aunt volunteered to pay the expenses of publication, and it was published anonymously early in 1833 by Saunders & Otley. The most authoritative person on literary matters in the young poet's circle of friends was the Rev. William Johnson Fox, a Unitarian clergyman and editor of the Monthly Repository. He had a few years before given emphatic commendation to the boy's verse, and now reviewed the poem with great warmth in his own magazine, so winning the poet's gratitude as to draw from him the extravagant expression: "I shall never write a line without thinking of the source of my first praise, be assured." The poem missed what would have been from its writer a more notable review. Mr. John Stuart Mill, six years Browning's senior, was so delighted with Pauline that he wrote to the editor of Tait's Magazine, the only periodical in which he could write freely, asking leave to review the poem. The editor replied that he had just printed a curt, contemptuous notice, and could not at once take the other track. When Mill died his copy of Pauline, crowded with annotations, fell into Browning's hands and may now be seen in the South Kensington Museum.

In spite of such hopeful promise the poem was still-born from the press. Five years later, Browning wrote in a copy "the only remaining crab of the shapely Tree of Life in my Fool's Paradise." He appears never to have spoken of it until a striking circumstance brought it again into light. Many years after it was printed Dante Gabriel Rossetti was browsing among the volumes of forgotten poetry in the British Museum. He came upon a book in which a number of pamphlet poems were bound in a heterogeneous collection. Among these was Pauline. He read it, and from its internal evidence was convinced that it was an unacknowledged poem of Browning's. The book was wholly out of print, and he made a copy of it. He wrote to Browning afterwards taxing the poet with the production, and Browning, greatly surprised at Rossetti's discovery, acknowledged the authorship. In 1865, the editor of this Cambridge edition, meeting Rossetti in London, mentioned the fact that he had been copying at the British Museum Browning's prose introduction to the suppressed spurious collection of Shelley's Letters, whereupon Rossetti told him of this other rare book. Afterwards on learning that he had copied Pauline also he said: "I suppose you will print it when you go back to America." "By no means," replied the editor; "that would be a breach of faith. I copied it as a student of Browning. I never would make it public without Browning's consent." A year or two later therefore when a new edition of the collected poems was published, he thought himself not unlikely the unwitting occasion of the inclusion of Pauline, for in the introduction Browning wrote as follows:

"The first piece in the series (Pauline), I acknowledge and retain with extreme repugnance, indeed purely of necessity; for not long ago I inspected one, and am certified of the existence of other transcripts, intended sooner or later to be published abroad; by forestalling these, I can at least correct some misprints (no syllable is changed) and introduce a boyish work by an exculpatory word. The thing was my earliest attempt at "poetry always dramatic in principle, and so many utterances of so many imaginary persons, not mine," which I have since written according to a scheme less extravagant and scale less impracticable than were ventured upon in this crude preliminary sketch,—a sketch that, on reviewal, appears not altogether wide of some hint of the characteristic features of that particular dramatis persona it would fain have reproduced: good draughtsmanship, however, and right handling were far beyond the artist at that time.

London, December 25, 1867. R. B."

Twenty years later, upon sending out his final collective edition, Browning added to the preface just quoted the following sentences:—

"I preserve, in order to supplement it, the foregoing preface. I had thought, when compelled to include in my collected works the poem to which it refers, that the honest course would be to reprint, and leave mere literary errors unaltered. Twenty years' endurance of an eyesore seems more than sufficient: my faults remain duly recorded against me, and I claim permission to somewhat diminish these, so far as style is concerned, in the present and final edition, where Pauline must needs, first of my performances, confront the reader. I have simply removed solecisms, mended the metre a little and endeavored to strengthen the phraseology—experience helping, in some degree, the helplessness of juvenile haste and heat in their untried adventure long ago."

London, February 27, 1888.

The text here given, as throughout this volume, is that of Mr. Browning's latest revision. The text of the first revision, i.e. 1867, may be found at the close of volume I. of the Riverside edition.

The quotations from Marot and Cornelius Agrippa which follow were prefixed to the original edition of the poem. The note enclosed in brackets was Browning's comment on reprinting the poem the last time.

Pauline

Plus ne suis ce que j'ai été,
Et ne le scausois jamais être.

Marot.

London: January, 1833.

V. A. XX.

[This introduction would appear less absurdly pretentious did it apply, as was intended, to a completed structure of which the poem was meant for only a beginning and remains a fragment.]

Pauline, mine own, bend o'er me—thy soft breast
Shall pant to mine—bend o'er me—thy sweet eyes,

And loosened hair and breathing lips, and arms
Drawing me to thee—these build up a screen
To shut me in with thee, and from all fear;
So that I might unlock the sleepless brood
Of fancies from my soul, their lurking-place.

Nor doubt that each would pass, ne'er to return
To one so watched, so loved and so secured.
But what can guard thee but thy naked love?
Ah dearest, whose sucks a poisoned wound
Envenoms his own veins! Thou art so good,
So calm—if thou shouldst wear a brow less light
For some wild thought which, but for me, were kept.

From out thy soul as from a sacred star!
Yet till I have unlocked them it were vain
To hope to sing; some woe would light on me;
Nature would point at one whose quivering lip
Was bathed in her enchantments, whose brow burned
Beneath the crown to which her secrets knelt,
Who learned the spell which can call up the dead,
And then departed smiling like a fiend
Who has deceived God,—if such one should seek Again her altars and stand robed and crowned
Amid the faithful! Sad confession first,
Remorse and pardon and old claims renewed,
Ere I can be—as I shall be no more.
I had been spared this shame if I had sat
By thee forever from the first, in place
Of my wild dreams of beauty and of good,
Or with them, as an earnest of their truth:
No thought nor hope having been shut from thee,
No vague wish unexplained, no wandering aim
Sent back to bind on fancy's wings and seek
Some strange fair world where it might be a law;
But, doubting nothing, had been led by thee,
Through youth, and saved, as one at length awaked
Who has slept through a peril. Ah vain, vain!

Thou lovest me; the past is in its grave
Though its ghost haunts us; still this much is ours,
To cast away restraint, lest a worse thing
Wait for us in the dark. Thou lovest me;
And thou art to receive not love but faith,
For which thou wilt be mine, and smile and take
All shapes and shames, and veil without a fear
That form which music follows like a slave:
And I look to thee and I trust in thee,
As in a Northern night one looks alway
Unto the East for morn and spring and joy.
Thou seest then my aimless, hopeless state,
And, resting on some few old feelings won
Back by thy beauty, wouldst that I essay
The task which was to me what now thou art:
And why should I conceal one weakness more?

Thou wilt remember one warm morn when winter
Crept aged from the earth, and spring's first breath
Blew soft from the moist hills; the black-thorn boughs,
So dark in the bare wood, when glistening
In the sunshine were white with coming buds,
Like the bright side of a sorrow, and the banks
Had violets opening from sleep like eyes.
I walked with thee who knewst not a deep shame
Lurked beneath smiles and careless words which sought
To hide it till they wandered and were mute,
As we stood listening on a sunny mound
To the wind murmuring in the damp cope,
Like heavy breathings of some hidden thing
Betrayed by sleep; until the feeling rushed
That I was low indeed, yet not so low
As to endure the calumny of thine eyes,
And so I told thee all, while the cool breast
I leaned on altered not its quiet beating;
And long ere words like a hurt bird's complaint
Bade me look up and be what I had been,
I felt despair could never live by thee:
Thou wilt remember, Thou art not more dear
Than song was once to me; and ne'er sung
But as one entering bright halls where all
Will rise and shout for him: sure I must own
That I am fallen, having chosen gifts
Distinct from theirs — that I am sad and fain
Would give up all to be but where I was.
Not high as I had been if faithful found,
But low and weak yet full of hope, and sure

Of goodness as of life — that I would lose
All this gay mastery of mind, to sit
Once more with them, trusting in truth and love
And with an aim — not being what I am.

O Pauline, I am ruined who believed
That though my soul had floated from its sphere
Of wild dominion into the dim orb
Of self — that it was strong and free as ever!
It has conformed itself to that dim orb,
Reflecting all its shades and shapes, and now
Must stay where it alone can be adored,
I have felt this in dreams — in dreams in which I seemed the fate from which I fled; I felt
A strange delight in causing my decay.
I was a fiend in darkness chained forever
Within some ocean-cave; and ages rolled,
Till through the cleft rock, like a moonbeam, came
A white swan to remain with me; and ages
Rolled, yet I tired not of my first free joy
In gazing on the peace of its pure wings:
And then I said, "It is most fair to me,
Yet its soft wings must sure have suffered change
From the thick darkness, sure its eyes are dim.
Its silver pinions must be cramped and numbed
With sleeping ages here; it cannot leave me,
For it would seem, in light beside its kind,
Withered, though here to me most beautiful."
And then I was a young witch whose blue eyes,
As she stood naked by the river springs,
Drew down a god: I watched his radiant form
Growing less radiant, and it gladdened me;
Till one morn, as he sat in the sunshine
Upon my knees, singing to me of heaven,
He turned to look at me, ere I could lose
The grin with which I viewed his perishing:
And he shrieked and departed and sat long
By his deserted throne, but sunk at last
Murmuring, as I kissed his lips and curled
Around him, "I am still a god — to thee."

Still I can lay my soul bare in its fall,
Since all the wandering and all the weakness
Will be a saddest comment on the song;
And if, that done, I can be young again,
I will give up all gained, as willingly
As one gives up a charm which shuts him out
From hope or part or care in human kind.
As life wanes, all its care and strife and toil
Seem strangely valueless, while the old trees
Which grew by our youth's home, the waving mass
Of climbing plants heavy with bloom and dew,
The morning swallows with their songs like words.
All these seem clear and only worth our thoughts:
So, aught connected with my early life,
My rude songs or my wild imaginations
How I look on them — most distinct amid
The fever and the stir of after years!
I ne'er had ventured e'en to hope for this,
Had not the glow I felt at His award,
Assured me all was not extinct within:
His whom all honor, whose renown springs up
Like sunlight which will visit all the world.
So that e’en they who sneered at him at first,
Come out to it, as some dark spider crawls
From his foul nets which some lit torch invades,
Yet spinning still new films for his retreat.
Thou didst smile, poet, but can we forgive?

Sun-treader, life and light be thine forever!
Thou art gone from us; years go by and spring
Gladness and the young earth is beautiful,
Yet thy songs come not, other boards arise,
But none like thee: they stand, thy majesties,
Like mighty works which tell some spirit there
Hath sat regardless of neglect and scorn,
Till, its long task completed, it hath risen
And left us, never to return, and all
Rush in to peer and praise when all in vain.
The air seems bright with thy past presence yet,
But thou art still for me as thou hast been
When grasses stood with thee as on a throne
With all thy dim creations gathered round
Like mountains, and I felt of mould like them,
And with them creatures of my own were mixed.
Like things half-lived, catching and giving life.
But thou art still for me who have adored
Though single, panting but to hear thy name
Which I achieved a spell to me alone,
Scarce deeming thou wast as a star to men!
As one should worship long a sacred spring
Scarce worth a moth’s fluttering, which long Grasses cross.
And one small tree embowers drooping —
Joying to see some wandering insect won
To live in its few rushes, or some locust
To pasture on its boughs, or some wild bird
Stoop for its freshness from the trackless air;
And then should find it but the fountain-head.
Long lost, of some great river washing towns
And towers, and seeing old woods which will live
But by its banks untrod of human foot.
Which, when the great sun sinks, lie quivering
In light as some thing half of life
Before God’s foot, waiting a wondrous change;
Then girt with rocks which seek to turn or stay
Its course in vain, for it does ever spread
Like a sea’s arm as it goes rolling on,
Being the pulse of some great country — so
Wast thou to me, and art thou to the world!
And I, perchance, half feel a strange regret
That I am not what I have been to thee:
Like a girl one has silently loved long
In her first loneliness in some retreat.
When, late emerged, all gaze and glow to view
Her fresh eyes and soft hair and lips which bloom
Like a mountain berry: Doubtless it is sweet
To see her thus adored, but there have been
Moments when all the world was in our praise,
Sweeter than any pride of after hours.
Yet, sun-treader, all hail! From my heart’s heart
I bid thee hail! E’en in my wildest dreams,
I proudly feel I would have thrown to dust
The wreaths of fame which seemed o’erhanging me.
To see thee for a moment as thou art.

And if thou livest, if thou lovest, spirit!
Remember me who set this final seal
To wandering thought — that one so pure as thou
Could never die. Remember me who flung
All honor from my soul, yet paused and said,
“There is one spark of love remaining yet.
For I have naught in common with him, shapes
Which followed him avoid me, and foul forms
Seek me, which he or could fasten on his mind;
And though I feel how low I am to him,
Yet I aim not even to catch a tone
Of harmonies he called profusely up;
So, one gleam still remains, although the last.”
Remember me who praise thee e’en with tears,
For never more shall I walk calm with thee;
Thy sweet imaginings are as an air,
A melody some wondrous singer sings.
Which, though it haunt men oft in the still eve.
They dream not to essay; yet it no less
But more is honored. I was thine in shame,
And now proud am I, the scion, who have proved
Life’s vanity, won by a word again
Into my own life — by one little word
Of this sweet friend who lives in loving me.
Lives strangely on my thoughts and looks and words,
As fathoms down some nameless ocean thing.
Its silent course of quietness and joy.
O dearest, if indeed I tell the past,
May’st thou forget it as a sad sick dream!
Or if it linger — my lost soul too soon
Sinks to itself and whispers we shall be
But closer linked, two creatures whom the earth
Bears singly, with strange feelings unrevived
Save to each other; or two lonely things
Created by some power whose reign is done,
Having no part in God or his bright world.
I am to sing whilst ebbing day dies soft,
As a lean scholar dies worn o’er his book.
And in the heaven stars steal out one by one
As hunted men steal to their mountain watch.
I must not think, lest this new impulse die
In which I trust; I have no confidence:
So, I will sing on faith as fancies come;
Rudely, the verse being as the mood it paints,
I strip my mind bare, whose first elements
I shall unveil — not as they struggle forth
In infancy, nor as they now exist,
When I am grown above them and can rule —
But in that middle stage when they were full Yet ere I had disposed them to my will;
And then I shall show how these elements
Produced my present state, and what it is.
I am made up of an intensest life,
Of a most clear idea of consciousness.
Of self, distinct from all its qualities,
From all affections, passions, feelings, powers;
And thus far it exists, if tracked, in all:
But linked, in me, to self-supremacy,
Existing as a centre to all things,
Most potent to create and rule and call
Upon all things to minister to it;
And to a principle of restlessness
Which would be all, have, see, know, taste,
Feel, all —
This is myself; and I should thus have been Though gifted lower than the meanest soul.

And of my powers, one springs up to save
From utter death a soul with such desire
Confined to clay — of powers the only one
Which marks me — an imagination which
Has been a very angel, coming not
In fitful visions, but beside me ever
And never failing me; so, though my mind
Forgets not, not a shred of life forgets,
Yet I can take a secret pride in calling
The dark past up to quell it regally.

A mind like this must dissipate itself,
But I have always had one lone-star; now,
As I look back, I see that I have halted
Or hastened as I looked towards that star —
A need, a trust, a yearning after God:
A feeling I have analyzed but late,
But it existed, and was reconciled
With a neglect of all I deemed his laws,
Which yet, when seen in others, I abhorred.
I felt as one beloved, and so shut in
From fear; and thence I date my trust in signs
And omens, for I saw God everywhere;
And I can only lay it to the fruit
Of a sad after-time that I could doubt
Even his being — e'en the while I felt
His presence, never acted from myself,
Still trusted in a hand to lead me through
All danger; and this feeling ever fought
Against my weakest reason and resolve.

And I can love nothing — and this dull truth
Has come the last: but sense supplies a love
Encircling me and mingling with my life,

These make myself: I have long sought in vain
To trace how they were formed by circumstances,
Yet ever found them mould my wildest youth
Where they alone displayed themselves, converted
All objects to their use: now see their course!

They came to me in my first dawn of life
Which passed alone with wisest ancient books
All halo-girt with fancies of my own;
And I myself went with the tale — a god
Wandering after beauty, or a giant
Standing vast in the sunset — an old hunter
Talking with gods, or a high-crested chief
Sailing with troops of friends to Tenedos,
I tell you, naught has ever been so clear
As the place, the time, the fashion of those lives:
I had not seen a work of lofty art,
Nor woman's beauty nor sweet nature's face,
Yet, I say, never morn broke clear as those
On the dim clustered isles in the blue sea,
The deep groves and white temples and wet caves:
And nothing ever will surprise me now —
Who stood beside the naked Swift-footed,
Who bound my forehead with Proserpine's hair.

And strange it is that I who could so dream
Should e'er have stooped to aim atught beneath
Aught low or painful; but I never doubted:
So, as I grew, loudly shaped my life
To my immediate wants; yet strong beneath
Was a vague sense of power though folded up —
A sense that, though those shades and times were past,
Their spirit dwelt in me, with them should rule.

Then came a pause, and long restraint chained down
My soul till it was changed. I lost myself,
And were it not that I so loathe that loss,
I could recall how first I learned to turn
My mind against itself; and the effects
In deeds for which remorse were vain as for
The wanderings of delirious dream; yet thence Came cunning, envy, falsehood, all world's wrong
That spotted me: at length I cleansed my soul.
Yet long world's influence remained; and naught
But the still life I led apart once more,
Which left me free to seek soul's old delights.
Could e'er have brought me thus far back to peace.

As peace returned, I sought out some pursuit;
And song rose, no new impulse but the one
With which all others best could be combined.
My life has not been that of those whose heaven
Was lampless save where poesy shone out;
But as a clime where glittering mountain-tops
And glancing sea and forests steeped in light
Give back reflected the far-flashing sun;
For music (which is earnest of a heaven,
Seeing we know emotions strange by it,
Not else to be revealed,) is like a voice,
A low voice calling fancy, as a friend,
To the green woods in the gay summer time:
And she bids all the way with dancing shapes
Which have made painters pale, and they go on Till stars look at them and winds call to them
As they leave life's path for the twilight world
Where the dead gather. This was not at first,
For I scarce knew what I would do. I had
An impulse but no yearning — only song.

And first I sang as I in dream have seen
Music wait on a lyrist for some thought,
Yet singing to herself until it came,
I turned to those old times and scenes where all
That's beautiful had birth for me, and made
Rude verses on them all; and then I paused —
I had done nothing, so I sought to know
What other minds achieved. No fear outbreak
As on the works of mighty, bard I gazed,
In the first joy at finding my own thoughts.
Recorded, my own fancies justified,
And their aspirations but my own.
With them I first explored passion and mind,
— All to begin anew, I gather sought
To rival what I wouldst that form
Creations of my own; if much was light
Lent by the others, much was yet my own.

I paused again: a change was coming — came:
I was no more a boy, the past was breaking
Before the future and like fever worked,
I thought on my new self, and all my powers Burst out, I dreamed not of restraint, but gazed
On all things: schemes and systems went and were came,
And I was proud (being vainest of the weak)
In wandering o'er thought's world to seek some one
To be my prize, as if you wandered o'er
The White Way for a star.

And my choice fell
Not so much on a system, as a man
On one, whom praise of mine shall not offend,
Who was as calm as beauty, being such Unto mankind as thou to me, Pauline, —
Believing in them and devoting all
His soul's strength to their winning back to peace;
Who sent forth hopes and longings for their sake,
Clothed in all passion's melodies: such first
Caught me and set me, slave of a sweet task,
To disentangle, gather sense from song;
Since, song-inwoven, lurked there words which seemed
A key to a new world, the muttering
Of angels, something yet unguessed by man.
How my heart leapt as still I sought and found
Much there, I felt my own soul had conceived,
But there living and burning! Soon the orb
Of his conceptions dawned on me; its praise
Lives in the tongues of men, men's brows are high
When his name means a triumph and a pride,
So, my weak voice may well forbear to shame
What seemed decreed my fate: I threw myself
To meet it, I was vowed to liberty.
Men were to be as gods and earth as heaven,
And I — ah, what a life was mine to prove!
My whole soul rose to meet it. Now, Pauline,
I shall go mad, if I recall that time!

Oh let me look back ere I leave forever
The time which was an hour one fondly waits
For a fair girl that comes a withered hag!
And I was lonely, far from woods and fields,
And amid thickest sibyls, who should be loose
As a stag; yet I was full of bliss, who lived
With Plato and who had the key to life;
And I had dully shaped my first attempt,
And many a thought did I build up on thought,
As the wild bee hangs cell to cell; in vain,
For I must still advance, no rest for mind.

'T was in my plan to look on real life,
The life all new to me; my theories
Were firm, so then I left, to look and learn
Mankind, its cares, hopes, fears, its woes and joys;
And, as I pondered on their ways, I sought
How best life's end might be attained — an end
Comprising every joy. I deeply mused.

And suddenly without heart-wreck I awake
As from a dream; I said, "T was beautiful,
Yet but a dream, and so adieu to it!"
As some world-wanderer sees in a far meadow
Strange towers and high-walled gardens thick with trees,
Where song takes shelter and delicious mirth
From laughing fairy creatures peeping over,
And on the morrow when he comes to lie
Forever 'neath those garden-trees fruit-flushed
Song round by fairies, all his search is vain.
First went my hopes of perfecting mankind.
Next — faith in them, and then in freedom's self
And virtue's self, then my own motives, ends
And aims and loves, and human love went last.
I felt this no decay, because new powers
Rose as old feelings left — till, muckery,
Light-heart'dness; for I had oft been sad,
Mistrusting my resolves, but now I cast
Hope joyously away; I laughed and said,
"No more of this!" I must not think: at length
I looked again to see if all went well.

My powers were greater; as some temple seemed
My soul, where naught is changed and incense rolls
Around the altar, only God is gone
And some dark spirit sitteth in his seat.
So, I passed through the temple and to me
Knelt troops of shadows, and they cried, "Hail,
king!"
We serve thee now and thou shalt serve no more!
Call on us, prove us, let us worship thee!
And I said, "Are ye strong? Let fancy bear me
Far from the past!" And I was borne away,
As Arab birds that sleeping in the wind,
O'er deserts, towers and forests, I being calm.
And I said, "I have nursed up energies,
They will prey on me." A band knelt low
And cried, "Lord, we are here and we will make Safe way for thee in thine appointed life!
But look on us!" And I said, "Ye will worship
Me; should my heart not worship too?" They shouted,
"Thyself, thou art our king!" So, I stood there
Smiling — oh, vanity of vanities!
For buoyant and rejoicing was the spirit
With which I looked out how to end my course;
I felt once more myself, my powers — all mine;
I knew while youth and health so lifted me
That, spite of all life's nothingness, no grief
Came nigh me, I must ever be light-hearted;
And that this knowledge was the only veil
Betwixt joy and despair; so, if age came,
I should be left — a wreck linked to a soul
Yet fluctuating, or mind-broken and aware
Of my decay. So a long summer morn
Found me; and ere noon came, I had resolved
No age should come on me ere youth was spent.
For I would wear myself out, like that morn
Which wasted not a sunbeam; every hour
I would make mine, and die.

And thus I sought
To chain my spirit down which erst I freed
For flight to fame: I said, "The troubled life
Of genius, seen so gay when working forth
Some trusted end, grows sad when all proves vain—
How sad when men have parted with truth's
peace
For false fancy's sake, which waited first
As an obedient spirit when delight
Came without fancy's call: but alters soon,
Comes darkened, seldom, hastens to depart,
Leaving a heavy darkness and warm tears.
But I shall never lose her; she will live
Dearer for such seclusion. I but catch
A hint, a glance of what I sing; so, pain
Is linked with pleasure, for I never may tell Half the bright sights which dazzle me; but now
Mine shall be all the radiance: let them fade
Untold—others shall arise as fair, as tast!
And when all's done, the few dim gleams transferred."

(For a new thought sprang up how well it were,
Discarding shadowy hope, to weave such lays
As straight enwrack men with praise and love,
So, I should not die utterly, should bring
One branch from the gold forest, like the knight
Of old tales, witnessing I had been there) —
"And when all's done, how vain seems e'en success—
The vaunted influence poets have o'er men!
'T is a fine thing that one weak as myself
Should sit in his lone room, knowing the words
He utters in his solitude shall move
Men like a swift wind—that though dead and gone,
New eyes shall glisten when his beauteous dreams
Of love some true in happier frames than his.
Ay, the still night brings thoughts like these,
but morn
Comes and the mockery again laughs out
At hollow praises, smiles allied to sneers;
And my soul's idol ever whispers me
To dwell with him and his unhonored song:
And I foreknow my spirit, that would press
First in the struggle, fail again to make
All bow enslaved, and I again should sink.

"And then know that this curse will come on us,
To see our idols perish; we may wither.
No marvel, we are clay, but our low fate
Should not extend to those whom trustingly
We sent before into time's yawning gulf
To face what dread may lurk in darkness there,
To find the painter's glory pass, and feel
Music can move us not as once, or, worst,
To weep decaying wits ere the frail body Decays! Naught makes me trust some love is true,
But the delight of the contented lowness
With which I gaze on him I keep forever
Above me; I to rise and rival him?

Feed his fame rather from my heart's best blood.
Wither unseen that he may flourish still!"

Pauline, my soul's friend, thou dost pity yet
How this mood swayed me when that soul found thine,
When I had set myself to live this life,
Defying all past glory. Ere thou camest
I seemed defiant, sweet, for old delights
Had flocked like birds again; music, my life,
Nourished me more than ever; then the love
Loved for itself and all it shows—that king
Treading the purple calmly to his death,
While round him, like the clouds of eve, all dusk,
The giant shades of fate, silently flitting,
Pile the dim outline of the coming dawn;
And him sitting alone in blood while friends
Are hunting far in the sunshine; and the boy
With his white breast and brow and clustering curls.
Streaked with his mother's blood, but striving now hard
To tell his story ere his reason goes,
And when I loved thee as love seemed so oft,
Thou lovedst me indeed: I wondering searched
My heart to find some feeling like such love,
Believing I was still much I had been.
Too soon I found all faith had gone from me,
And the late glow of life, like change on clouds,
Proved not the morn-blush widening into day,
But eve faint-colored by the dying sun
While darkness hastens quickly. I will tell
My state as though 'twere none of mine—despair
Cannot come near us—this it is, my state.

Souls alter not, and mine must still advance;
Strange that I knew not, when I hung away
My youth's chief aims, their loss might lead to loss
Of what few I retained, and no resource
Be left me: for behold how changed is all!
I cannot chain my soul: it will not rest
In its clay prison, this most narrow sphere:
It has strange impulse, tendency, desire,
Which nowise I account for nor explain,
But cannot stifle, being bound to trust
All feelings equally, to hear all sides:
How can my life indulge them? yet they live,
Referring to some state of life unknown.

My selfishness is satiated not,
It wears me like a flame; my hunger for
All pleasure, however or minute, grows pain;
I envy—how I envy him whose soul
Turns its whole energies to some one end,
To elevate an aim, pursue success
However mean! So, my still battled hope
Seeks out abstractions; I would have one joy.
Burr me in life, so it were wholly mine,
One rapture all my soul could fill; and this Wild feeling places me in dream afar
In some vast country where the eye can see
No end to the far hills and dales bestrewn
With shining towers and towns, till I grow mad
Well-nigh, to know not one abode but holds
Some pleasure, while my soul could grasp the world,
But must remain this vile form's slave. I look
With hope to age at last, which quenching much,
May let me concentrate what sparks it spares.

This restlessness of passion meets in me
A craving after knowledge: the sole proof
Of yet commanding will is in that power
Repressed; for I beheld it in its dawn,
The sleepless harpy with just-budding wings,
And I considered whether to forego
All happy ignorant hopes and fears, to live,
Finding a recompense in its wild eyes,
And when I found that I should perish so,
I bade its wild eyes close from me forever,
And I am left alone with old delights;
See! it lies in me a chained thing, still prompt
To serve me if I loose its slightest bond;
I cannot but be proud of my bright slave.

How should this earth's life prove my only sphere?
Can I so narrow sense but that in life
Soul still exceeds it? In their elements
My love outstrips my reason; but since love
Perforce receives its object from this earth
While reason wanders chainless, the few truths
Caught from its wanderings have sufficed to quell
Love chained below; then what were love, set free
Which, with the object it demands, would pass
Reason companioning the seraphim?
No, what I feel may pass all human love
Yet fall far short of what my love should be.
And yet I seem more warped in this than aught,
Myself stands out more hideously: of old
I could forget myself in friendship, fame,
Liberty, nay, in love of mightier souls;
But I begin to know what thing hate is—
To sicken and to quiver and grow white
And I myself have furnished its first prey.
Hate of the weak and ever-vexing will,
The selfishness, the still-decaying frame...
But I must never grieve whom wing can waft
Far from such thoughts—now. Andromeda!
And she is with me: years roll, I shall change,
But change can touch her not—so beautiful
With her fixed eyes, earnest and still, and hair
Lifted and spread by the salt-sweeping breeze,
And one red beam, all the storm leaves in heaven,
Resting upon her eyes and hair, such hair,
As she awaits the snake on the wet beach
By the dark rock and the white wave just breaking
At her feet; quite naked and alone; a thing
I doubt not, nor fear for, secure some god
To save will come in thunder from the stars.
Let it pass! Soul requires another change.
I will be gifted with a wondrous mind,
Yet sunk by error to men's sympathy,
And in the wave of life, yet only so
As to call up their fears; and there shall come
A time requiring youth's best energies;
And lo, I fling age, sorrow, sickness off,
And rise triumphant, triumph through decay.

And thus it is that I supply the chasm
'Twixt what I am and all I fain would be:
But then to know nothing, to hope for nothing,
To seize on life's dull joys from a strange fear
Lest, losing them, all's lost and naught remains!

There's some vile juggle with my reason here;
I feel I must explain to my own loss
These impulses: they live no less the same,
Liberty! what though I despair? my blood
Rose never at a slave's name proud as now.
Oh sympathies, obscured by sophistries!—
Why else have I sought refuge in myself.
But from the woes I saw and could not stay?
Love! is not this to love thee, my Pauline?
I cherish prejudice, lest I be left
Utterly loveless? witness my belief
In poets, though sad change has come there too;
No more I leave myself to follow them—
Unconvincing love! yet I try them—
Let me forget it: and I cherish most
My love of England—how her name, a word
Of hers in a strange tongue makes my heart beat!

Pauline, could I but break the spell! Not now—
All's fever—but when calm shall come again,
I am prepared: I have made life my own.
I would not be content with all the change
One frame should feel, but I have gone in thought.
Through all conjecture, I have lived all life
When it is most alive, where strangest fate
New-shapes it past surmise—the throes of men
Bit by some curse or in the grasps of doom
Half-visible and still-increasing round,
Or crowning their wide being's general aim.

These are wild fancies, but I feel, sweet friend,
As one breathing his weakness to the ear
Of pitying angel—dear as a winter flower.
A slight flower growing alone, and offering
Its frail cup of three leaves to the cold sun,
Yet joyous and confiding like the triumph
Of a child: and why am I not worthy thee?
I can live all the life of plants, and gaze
Drowsily on the bees that flit and play,
Or bare my breast for sunbeams which will kill,
Or open in the night of sounds, to look
For the dim stars; I can mount with the bird
Leaping airily his pyramid of leaves
And twisted boughs of some tall mountain tree.
Or rise cheerfully springing to the heavens;
Or like a fish breathe deep the morning air
In the misty sun-warm water; or with flower
And tree can smile in light at the sinking sun.
Just as the storm comes, as a girl would look
On a departing lover—most serene.

Pauline, come with me, see how I could build
A home for us, out of the world, in thought!
I am uplifted! fly with me, Pauline!

Night, and one single ridge of narrow path
Between the sullen river and the woods
Waving and muttering, for the moonless night
Has shaped them into images of life,
Like the uprising of the giant-ghosts,
Looking on earth to know how their sons fare:
Thou art so close by me, the roughest swell
Of wind in the tree-tops hides not the panting
Of thy soft breasts. No, we will pass to morning—
Morning, the rocks and valleys and old woods.
How the sun brightens in the mist, and here,
Half in the air, like creatures of the place.
Trusting the element, living on high boughs
That swing in the wind — look at the silver spray.

Flung from the foam-sheet of the cataract
Amid the broken rocks! Shall we stay here
With the wild hawks? No, ere the hot noon come,
Dive we down — safe! See this our new retreat
Walled in with a sloped mound of matted shrubs,
Dark, tangled, old and green, still sloping down
To a small pool whose waters lie asleep
Amid the trailing boughs turned water-plants;
And tall trees overarch to keep us in,
Breaking the sunbeams into emerald shafts,
And in the dreamy water one small group
Of two or three strange trees are got together
Wondering at all around, as strange beasts herd
Together far from their own land: all wildness,
No turf nor moss, for boughs and plants pave all,
And tongues of bank go shelving in the lym-
ph. Where the pale-throated snake reclines his head,
And old gray stones lie making eddies there,
The wild mice cross them dry-shod. Deeper in!
Shut thy soft eyes — now look — still deeper in!
This is the very heart of the woods all round
Mountain-like heaped above us; yet even here
One pond of water gleams; far off the river
Sweeps like a sea, barred out from land; but one —
One thin clear sheet has overleaped and wound
Into this silent depth, which gained, it lies
Still, as but let by sufferance; the trees bend
O'er it as wild men watch a sleeping girl,
And through their roots long creeping plants—out-stretch,
Their twined hair, steeped and sparkling; far-
eron,
Tall rushes and thick flag-knots have combined
To narrow it; so, at length, a silver thread.
It winds, all noiselessly through the deep wood
Till through a cleft-way, through the moss and stone.
It joins its parent-river with a shout.

Up for the glowing day, leave the old woods!
See, they part like a ruined arch: the sky!
Nothing but sky appears, so close the roots
And grass of the hill-top level with the air—
Blue sunny air, where a great cloud floats laden
With light, like a dead whale that white birds pick,
Floating away in the sun in some north sea.
Air, air, fresh life-blood, thin and searching air.
The clear, dear breath of God that loveth us.
Where small birds reel and winds take their delight!
Water is beautiful, but not like air:

See, where the solid azure waters lie
Made as of thickened air, and down below,
The fern-ranks like a forest spread themselves
As though each pore could feel the element;
Where the quick glancing serpent winds his way,
Float with me there, Pauline! — but not like air.

Down the hill! Stop — a clump of trees, see, set
On a heap of rock, which look o'er the far plain:
So, envious climbing shrubs would mount to rest
And peer from the sprawled boughs; wide they wave, looking
At the nutlets who whistle on their way.
To the merry chime of morning bells, past all
The little smoking cots, mid fields and banks
And copses bright in the sun. My spirit wanders:

Hedgerows for me — those living hedgerows
where
The bushes close and clasp above and keep Thought in — I am concentrated — I feel;
But my soul saddens when it looks beyond:
I cannot be immortal, taste all joy.

O God, where do they tend — these struggling aims?

What would I have? What is this "sleep" which seems
To bound all? can there be a "waking" point
Of crowning life?" The soul would never rule:
It would be first in all things, it would have
Its utmost pleasure filled, but, that complete,
Commanding, for commanding sickens it.
The last point I can trace is — rest beneath
Some better essence than itself, in weakness:
This is "myself." not what I think should be:
And what is that I hunger for but God?

My God, my God, let me for once look on thee
As though naught else existed, we alone!
And as creation crumbles, my soul's spark
Expands till I can say. — Even from myself
I need thee and I feel thee and I love thee.
I do not plead my capture in thy works
For love of thee, nor that I feel as one
Who cannot die: but there is that in me
Which turns to thee, which loves or which should love.

Why have I girt myself with this hell-dress?
Why have I labored to put out my life?

Is it not in my nature to adore
And e'en for all my reason do I not Feel him, and thank him, and pray to him —
now?

Can I forego the trust that he loves me?
Do I not feel a love which only one . . .
O thou pale form, so dimly seen, deep-eyed!
I have denied thee calmly — do I not
Pant when I read of thy consummate power,
And burn to see thy calm pure truths out-flash
The brightest gleams of earth's philosophy?
Do I not hate to hear aught question thee?
If I am erring save me, madden me.
Take from me powers and pleasures, let me die
Ages, so I see thee! I am knit round
As with a charm by sin and lust and pride,
Yet though my wandering dreams have seen all shapes
Of strange delight, oft have I stood by thee—
Have I been keeping lonely watch with thee
In the damp night by weeping Olivet,
Or leaning on thy bosom, proudly less,
Or dying with thee on the lonely cross,
Or witnessing thine outburst from the tomb.

A mortal, sin's familiar friend, doth here
Avow that he will give all earth's reward,
But to believe and humbly teach the faith,
In suffering and poverty and shame,
Only believing he is not unloved.

And now, my Pauline, I am thine forever!
I feel the spirit which has buoyed me up
Desert me, and old shades are gathering fast;
Yet while the last light waits, I would say much,
This chiefly, it is gamin that I have said
Somewhat of love I ever felt for thee
But seldom told; our hearts so beat together
That speech seemed mockery; but when dark hours come,
And joy departs, and thou, sweet, deem'st it strange
A sorrow moves me, thou canst not remove,
Look on this day I dedicate to thee,
Which through thee I began, which thus I end,
Collecting the last gleams to strive to tell
How I am thine, and more than ever now
That I sink fast: yet though I deeper sink,
No less song proves one word has brought me bliss,
Another still may win bliss surely back,
Thou knowest, dear, I could not think all calm,
For fancies followed thought and bore me off,
And left all indistinct; ere one was caught
Another glanced; so, dazzled by my wealth,
I knew not which to leave nor which to choose,
For all so floated, naught was fixed and firm,
And then thou said'st a perfect bard was one
Who chronicled the stages of all life.
And so thou hadst me shadow this first stage.
'Tis done, and even now I recognize
The shift, the change from last to past—discern
Faintly how life is truth and truth is good.
And why thou must be mine, is, that e'en now
In the dim lumph of night, that I have done,
Despite the sad forebodings, love looks through—Whispers,—Even at the last I have her still.
With her delicious eyes as clear as heaven
Where rain in a quick shower has beat down mist,
And clouds float white above like broods of swans.
How the blood lies upon her cheek, outspread
As thinned by kisses! only in her lips
It wells and pulses like a living thing,
And her neck looks like marble misted cer
With love-breath,—a Pauline from heights above,
Stooping beneath me, looking up—one look
As I might kill her and be loved the more.

So, love me—me, Pauline, and naught but me,
Never leave loving! Words are wild and weak,
Believe them not, Pauline! I stained myself
But to behold thee purer by my side,
To show thee art my breath, my life, a last
Resource, an extreme want: never believe
Aught better could so look on thee; nor seek Again the world of good thoughts left for mine!
There were bright troops of undiscovered suns,
Each equal in their radiant course; there were Clusters of far fair isles which ocean kept
For his own joy, and his waves broke on them
Without a choice; and there was a dim crowd
Of visions, each a part of some grand whole:
And one star left his peers and came with peace
Upon a storm, and all eyes pinned for him;
And one isle harbored a sea-beaten ship,
And the crew wandered in its bowers and plucked
Its fruits and gave up all their hopes of home;
And one dream came to a pale poet's sleep,
And he said: "I am singled out by God,
No sin must touch me." Words are wild and weak,
But what they would express is—Leave me not,
Still sit by me with beating breast and hair
Loosened, be watching earnest by my side,
Turning my books or kissing me when I
Look up—like summer wind! Be still to me
A help to music's mystery which mind fails
To fathom, its solution, no mere clue!
Of reason's pedantry, life's rule prescribed!
I hopeless, I the loveless, hope and love,
Wiser and better, know me now, not when You loved me as I was. Smile not! I have Much yet to dawn on you, to gladden you.
No more of the past! I'll look within no more,
I have too trusted my own lawless wants,
Too trusted my vain self, vague intuition—
Draining soul's wine alone in the still night,
And seeing how, as gathering films arose,
As by an inspiration life seemed bare
And grinning in its vacancy, while ends
To be broached, I had determined, let untied as I fixed
And fair, while others changed from fair to foul
As a young witch turns an old bag at night.
No more of this! We will go hand in hand,
I with thee, even as a child—love's slave,
Looking no farther than his liege commands.

And thou hast chosen where this life shall be:
The land which gave thee shall be our home,
Where nature lies all wild amid her lakes
And snow-swathed mountains and vast pines
With ropes of snow—where nature lies all bare,
Suffering none to view her but a race
Or stunted or deformed, like the mute dwarfs
Which wait upon a naked Indian queen.
And there (the time being when the heavens are thick
With storm) I'll sit with thee while thou dost sing
 Thy native songs, gay as a desert bird
Which chirmph as it flies for perfect joy,
Or telling me old stories of dead knights;
Or I will read great lays to thee—how she.
The fair pale sister, went to her chill grave
With power to love and to be loved and live:

Or we will go together, like twin gods
Of the infernal world, with scented lamp
Over the dead, to call and to awake,
Over the unshaped images which lie
Within my mind's cave: only leaving all,
That tells of the past doubt. So, when spring comes
With sunshine back again like an old smile,
And the fresh waters and awakened birds
And budding woods await us, I shall be Prepared, and we will question life once more,
Till its old sense shall come renewed by change.
Like some clear thought which harsh words
veiled before;
Feeling God loves us, and that all which errs
Is but a dream which death will dissipate.
And then what need of longer exile? Seek
My England, and, again there, calm approach
All I once fled from, calmly look on those
The works of my past weakness, as one views
Some scene where danger met him long before.
Ah that such pleasant life should be but dreamed!

But whate'er come of it, and though it fade,
And though ere the cold morning all be gone,
As it may be:—though music wait to wile,
And strange eyes and bright wine lure, laugh like sin
Which steals back softly on a soul half saved,
And I the first deny, decry, despise.
With this avowal, these intents so fair,—
Still be it all my own, this moment's pride!
No less I make an end in perfect joy.
E'en in my brightest time, a lurking fear
Possessed me: I well knew my weak resolves,
I felt the witchery that makes mind sleep
Over its treasure, as one half afraid
To make his riches definite: but now
These feelings shall not utterly be lost,
I shall not know again that nameless care
Lost, leaving all undone in youth, some new
And undreamed end reveal itself too late:
For this song shall remain to tell forever
That when I lost all hope of such a change,
Suddenly beauty rose on me again.
No less I make an end in perfect joy,
For I, who thus again was visited,
Shall doubt not many another bliss awaits,
And, though this weak soul sink and darkness
whelm,
Some little word shall light it, raise aloft,
To where I clearer see and better love,
As I again go o'er the tracts of thought
Like one who has a right, and I shall live
With poets, calmer, purer still each time,
And beauteous shapes will come for me to seize,
And unknown secrets will be trusted me
Which were denied the wav'er once; but now
I shall be priest and prophet as of old.

Sun-treader, I believe in God and truth
And love; and as one just escaped from death
Would bind himself in bands of friends to feel
He lives indeed, so, I would lean on thee!
Thou must be ever with me, most in gloom
If such must come, but chiefly when I die,
For I seem, dying, as one going in the dark
To fight a giant: but live thou forever,
And be to all what thou hast been to me!
All in whom this wakes pleasant thoughts of me
Know my last state is happy, free from doubt
Or touch of fear. Love me and wish me well.

SONNET.

Mr. Gosse in his Personalia copies from the Monthly Repository the following sonnet. Three other pieces first printed in the same periodical will be found as afterward grouped in Bells and Pomegranates.

Eyes, calm beside thee (Lady, couldst thou know!)
May turn away thick with fast gathering tears:
I glance not where all gaze: thrilling and low
Their passionate praises reach thee—my cheek wears
Alone no wonder when thou passest by;
Thy tremulous lids, bent and suffused, reply
To the irrepressible homage which doth glow
On every lip but mine: if in thine ears
Their accents linger—and thou dost recall
Me as I stood, still, guarded, very pale,
Besides such votarist whose lighted brow
Wore worship like an aureole, "O'er them all
My beauty," thou wilt murmur, "did prevail
Save that one only:"—Lady, couldst thou
know!

August 17, 1834.
The dedication of Paracelsus was, in a degree, the payment of a debt, for it was the young count, four years older than Browning, and at the time a private agent in England between the Duchesse de Berri and her royalist friends in France, who suggested the subject to the poet. When first published Paracelsus had the following Preface: "I am anxious that the reader should not, at the very outset,—mistaking my performance for one of a class with which it has nothing in common,—judge it by principles on which it was never moulded, and subject it to a standard to which it was never meant to conform. I therefore anticipate his discovery, that it is an attempt, probably more novel than happy, to reverse the method usually adopted by writers whose aim it is to set forth any phenomena of the mind or the passions, by the operation of persons and events; and that, instead of having recourse to an external machinery of incidents to create and evolve the crisis I desire to produce, I have ventured to display somewhat minutely the mood itself in its rise and progress, and have suffered the agency by which it is influenced and determined, to be generally discernible in its effects alone, and subordinate throughout, if not altogether excluded: and this for a reason. I have endeavored to write a poem, not a drama: the canons of the drama are well known, and I cannot but think that, inasmuch as they have immediate regard to stage representation, the peculiar advantages they hold out are really such only so long as the purpose for which they were at first instituted is kept in view. I do not very well understand what is called a Dramatic Poem, wherein all those restrictions only submitted to on account of compensating good in the original scheme are scrupulously retained, as though for some special fitness in themselves—and all new facilities placed at an author's disposal by the vehicle he selects, as pertinaciously rejected. It is certain, however, that a work like mine depends on the intelligence and sympathy of the reader for its success,—indeed were my scenes stars, it must be his cooperating fancy which, supplying all chasms, shall collect the scattered lights into one constellation—a Lyre or a Crown. I trust for his indulgence towards a poem which had not been imagined six months ago; and that even should he think slightly of the present (an experiment I am in no case likely to repeat) he will not be prejudiced against other productions which may follow in a more popular, and perhaps less difficult form."

Mr. Browning, senior, paid for the publication of Paracelsus. In its final form, as here given, it is greatly changed, not in structure but in phrase. Mr. Cooke states that the change affects nearly a third of the lines.

For if you would remember me aright, As I was born to be, you must forget All fitful, strange and moody waywardness Which e'er confused my better spirit, to dwell Only on months such as these, dear friends! — My heart no truer, but my words and ways More true to it: as Michal, some months hence, Will say, "this autumn was a pleasant time," For some few sunny days; and overlook Its bleak wind, hankering after pining leaves, Autumn would fain be sunny; I would look Like my nature's truth: and both are frail, And both beloved, for all our frailty. Michal. Par. Drop by drop! she is weeping like a child! Not so! I am content — more than content; Nay, autumn wins you best by this its mute Appeal to sympathy for its decay: Look up, sweet Michal, nor esteem the less Paracelsus. Come close to me, dear friends; still closer; thus! Close to the heart which, though long time roll by Ere it again beat quicker, pressed to yours, As now it beats — perchance a long, long time — At least henceforth your memories shall make Quiet and fragrant as befits their home. Nor shall my memory want a home in yours — Alas, that it requires too well such free Forgiving love as shall embalm it there!

That

's beauties proves alike!

When

Festus

learns

That

every common pleasure

the world

Affects

me

as himself;

that

I

have

varied appetite

for joy

devised

From

in life,

short,

Like

his;

which rush pursuit

of

aims

That

not;

would

destry;

He

may convince himself

that,

this

in

shall act

well advised.

And

last,

because,

though

heaven

and earth

and all things

were

stake.

Sweet

Michal

must not weep,

our parting

eye.

Fest.

True;

the eye

is deepening;

we sit.

little anxious to

talk

though

to-morrow

could hint

it

paced arm-in-arm

cheerful town

At

sun-dawn;

or

it

by (Tritheumus

In

Half-frightened

in but,

to-morrow!

Have

I

tell

my

the

Will

us;

all

my

't

My

Have

Your

Oh,

one

you

Say

on,

dear

Fest.

'Tis

for my peace,

indeed.

Rather than yours;

for vain

all

your

the

Par.

Dear

Festus,

me.

What

is

it

you wish?

That

I should lay

aside

my heart's pursuit;

Abandon

sole ends

which

I

live,
Reject God's great commission, and so die!
You bid me listen for your true love's sake;
Yet how has grown that love?
Even in a long
And patient cherishing of the self-same spirit
It now would quell; as though a mother hoped
To stay the lusty manhood of the child
Once weak upon her knees. I was not born
Informed and fear less from the first, but shrank
From ought which marked me out apart from men:
I would have lived their life, and died their death.
Lost in their ranks, edging destiny:
But you first guided me through doubt and fear,
Taught me to know mankind and know myself;
And now that I am strong and full of hope,
That, from my soul, I can reject all aims
Save those your earnest words made plain to me,
Now that I touch the brink of my design,
When I would have a triumph in their eyes,
A glad cheer in their voices—Michal weeps.
And Festus ponders gravely!
Fest.
To hear my purpose...
Par.
Beforehand all this evening's conference!
'Tis this way, Michal, that he uses: first,
Or he declares, or I, the leading points
Of our best scheme of life, what is man's end
And what God's will; no two laiths e'er agreed
As his with mine. Next, each of us allows
Faith should be acted on as best we may;
Accordingly, I venture to submit
My plan, in lack of better, for pursuing
The path which God's will seems to authorize.
Well, he discerns much good in it, avows
This motive worthy, that hope plausible,
A danger here to be avoided, there
An oversight to be repaired: in fine,
Our two minds go together—all the good
Approved by him. I gladly recognize,
And he counts bad, I thankfully discard,
And might forbid my looking back at last
For some strange comfort in his cautious brow.
When lo! I learn that, spite of all, there lurks
Some innate and inexplicable germ
Of failure in my scheme; so that at last
It all amounts to this—the sovereign proof
That we devote ourselves to God, is seen
In living just as though no God were there;
A life which, prompted by the sad and blind
Polly of man. Festus abhors the most;
But which these events sanctify at once,
Though to less subtle wits it seems the same,
Consider it how they may.
Mich.
Is it so, Festus?
He speaks so calmly and kindly; is it so?
Par. Reject those glorious visions of God's love
And man's design; laugh loud that God should send Vast longings to direct us; say how soon
Power satiates these, or lust, or gold; I know
The world's cry well, and how to answer it,
But this ambiguous warfare...
Fest.
That you will grant no last leave to your friend
To urge it?—for his sake, not yours? I wish
To send my soul in good hopes after you;
Never to sorrow that uncertain words
Erringly apprehended, a new creed
'Ill understood, begot rash trust in you,
Had share in your undoing.
Par.
Choose your side,
Hold or renounce: but meanwhile blame me not
Because I dare to act on your own views,
Nor shrink when they point onward, nor espy
A peril where they most ensure success.
Fest. Prove that to me—but that! Prove you abide
Within their warrant, nor presumptuous boast
God's labor laid on you; prove, all you covet,
A mortal may expect; and, most of all,
Prove the strange course you now affect, will lead
To its attainment—and I bid you speed,
Nay, count the minutes till you venture forth!
You smile; but I had gathered from slow thought—
Much musing on the fortunes of my friend—
Matter I deemed could not be urged in vain;
But it all leaves me at my need: in shreds
And fragments I must venture what remains.
Mich. Ask at once, Festus, wherefore he should scorn.
Fest. Stay, Michal! Aureole, I speak guardedly
And gravely, knowing well, what'er your error,
This is no ill-considered choice of yours,
A sudden fancy of an ardent boy,
Not from your own confiding words alone
Am I aware your passionate heart long since
Gave birth to, nourished and at length matures
This scheme, I will not speak of Einsiedeln,
Where I was born your elder by some years
Only to watch you fully from the first:
in all beside, our mutual tasks were fixed
Even then—'t was mine to have you in my view
As you had your own soul and those intents
Which fixed it when, to crown your dearest desire
With a tumultuous heart, you left with me
Our childhood's home to join the favored few
Whom, here, Trithemius condescends to teach
A portion of his lore: and not one youth
Of those so favored, whom you now despise,
Came earnest as you came, resolved, like you,
To grasp all, and retain all, and deserve
By patient toil a wide renown like his.
Now, this new ardor which supplants the old
I watched, too: 't was significant and strange,
In one matched to his soul's content at length
With rivals in the search for wisdom's prize,
To see the sudden pause, the total change;
From contest, the transition to repose—
From pressing onward as his fellows pressed,
To a blank idleness, yet most unlike
The dull stagnation of a soul, content,
Once foiled, to leave betimes a thriveless quest.
That careless bearing, free from all pretense
Even of contempt for what it ceased to seek—
Smiling humility, praising much, yet waiving
What it professed to praise—though not so well Maintained but that rare outbreaks, fierce and brief.
Revealed the hidden scorn, as quickly curbed.
PARACELSUS

That ostentatious show of past defeat,
That ready acquiescence in contempt,
I deemed no other than the letting go
His shivered sword, of one about to spring
Upon his foe's throat; but it was not thus;
Not that way looked your brooding purpose then.

For after-signs disclosed, what you confirmed,
That you prepared to task to the uttermost
Your strength, in furtherance of a certain aim
Which—while it bore the name—your rivals gave
Their own most pungent efforts—was so vast
In scope that it included their best flights,
Combined them, and desired to gain one prize
In place of many,—the secret of the world.
Of man, and man's true purpose, path and fate.

That you, not nursing as a mere vague dream
This purpose, with the sages of the past,
Have struck upon a way to this, if all
You trust to be true, which following heart and soul.
You, if a man may, dare aspire to know:
And that this aim shall differ from a host
Of aims alike in character and kind,
Mostly in this,—that in itself alone
Shall its reward be, not an alien end
Blending therewith; no hope nor fear nor joy
Nor woe, to elsewhere move you, but this pure
Devotion to sustain you or betray:
Thus you aspire.

Par. You shall not state it thus;
I should not differ from the dreamy crew
You speak of. I profess no other share
In the selection of my lot, than this:
My ready answer to the will of God
Who summons me to be his organ. All Whose innate strength supports them shall succeed
No better than the sages.

First. Such the aim, then,
God sets before you; and 'tis doubtless need
That he appoint no less the way of praise
Than the desire to praise; for, though I hold
With you, that setting forth such praise to be
The dear end and service of a man,
And hold such praise is best attained when man
Attains the general welfare of his kind
Yet this, the end, is not the instrument.
Presume not to serve God apart from such Appointed channel as he wills shall gather
Imperfect tributes, for that sole obedience
Valued perseverance! He seeks not that his altars
Blaze, care less how, so that they do but blaze.
Suppose this, then; that God selected you
To know need well your undertaking, for my faith
Shall meet implicitly what they affirm,
I cannot think you dare annex to such Selection aught beyond a steadfast will,
An intense hope; nor let your gifts create
Scorn or neglect of ordinary means
Conducive to success, make destiny
Dispense with man's endeavor. Now, dare you search
Your inmost heart, and candidly avow
Whether you have not rather will desire
For this distinction than security
Of its existence, whether you discern
The path to the fulfilment of your purpose
Clear as that purpose,—and again, that purpose
Clear as your yearning to be singled out.
For its pursuer. Dare you answer this?

Par. (after a pause). No, I have taught to fear!
Who will may know
The secret workings of my soul. What though
It be so?—if indeed the strong desire
Eclipse the aim in me?—if splendor break
Upon the outset of my path alone,
And dimpest shade succeed? What fairer seal
Shall I require to my authentic mission
Than this fierce energy?—this instinct striving Because its nature is to strive?—enticed
By the security of no broad course.
Without success forever in its eyes!
How know I else such glorious fate my own,
But in the restless irresistible force
That works within me? Is it for human will
To institute such impulses?—still less,
To disregard their promptings!
What should I do, kept among you all; your loves, your cares,
Your life—all to be mine?—Be sure that God
Ne'er dooms to waste the strength he deigns impart!
Ask the gier-eagle why she stoops at once
Into the vast and unexplored abyss,
What full-grown power informs her from the first,
Why she not marvels, strenuously beating
The silent boundless regions of the sky!
Be sure they sleep not whom God needs! Nor fear
Their holding light his charge, when every hour
That finds that charge delayed, is a new death.
This for the faith in which I trust; and hence
I can abjure so well the idle arts
These pedants strive to learn and teach; Black Arts.

Great Works, the Secret and Sublime, forsooth—
Let others prize; too intimate a tie
Connects me with our God! A sullen fiend
To do my bidding, fall'n and hateful servile
To help me—what are these, at best, beside
God helping, God directing everywhere,
So that the earth shall yield her secrets up,
And every object there he charged to strike,
Teach, gratify her master God appoints?
And I am young, my Festus, happy and free!
I can devote myself; I have a life
To live; I, singled out for this, the One!
Think, think! the wide East, where all Wis-
don is sprouting;
The bright South, where she dwelt; the hopeful
North,
All are passed over—it lights on me! "This time
New hopes should animate the world, new light
Should dawn from new revelations to a race
Weighed down so long, forgotten so long; thus shall
The heaven reserved for us at last receive
Creatures whom no unwanted splendors blind,
But ardent to confront the unclouded blaze,
Whose beams not seldom blessed their pilgrimage.
Not seldom glorified their life below.

First. My words have their old fate and make faint stand
A water-snake when fairies cross his sleep.
And having this within me and about me
While Einsiedeln, its mountains, lakes and woods
Confined me — what oppressive joy was mine
When life grew plain, and I first viewed the thronged,
The everlasting concourse of mankind!
Believe that ere I joined them, ere I knew
The purpose of the pageant, or the place
Consign'd me in its ranks — while, just awake.
Wonder was freshest and delight most pure —
'Twas then that least supportable appeared
A station with the brightest of the crowd,
A portion with the proudest of them all.
And from the tumult in my breast, this only
Could I collect, that I must thenceforth die
Or elevate myself far, far above
The gorgeous spectacle. I seemed to long
At once to trample on, yet save mankind,
To make some unexampled sacrifice
In their behalf, to wring some wondrous good
From heaven or earth for them, to perish, win-
ing
Eternal weal in the act: as who should dare
Pluck out the angry thunder from its cloud,
That, all its gathered flame discharged on him.
No storm might threaten summer's azure sleep:
Yet never to be mixed with men so much
As to have part even in my own work, share
In my own largess. Once the feat achieved,
I would withdraw from their officious praise.
Would gently put aside their profuse thanks.
Like some knight traversing a wilderness,
Who, on his way, may chance to free a tribe
Of desert-people from their dragon-foe;
When all the swarthy race press round to kiss
His feet, and choose him for their king, and yield
Their poor tents, pitched among the sand-hills,
For
His realm: and he points, smiling, to his scarf
Heavy with rived gold, his bumeric
Gay set with twinkling stones — and to the East,
Where these must be displayed!
Fest.
Good: let us hear
No more about your nature, " which first shrunk
From all that marked you out apart from men !"
Par. I touch on that; these words but analyze
The first mad impulse: 't was as brief as fond,
For as I gazed again upon the show,
I soon distinguished here and there a shape
Palm-wreathed and radiant, forehead and full
Eye.
Well pleased was I their state should thus at once Interpret my own thoughts: — " Behold the clue
To all, " I rashly said, " and what I pine
To do, these have accomplished: we are peers.
They know and therefore rule: I, too, will
know! "
You were beside me, Festus, as you say;
You saw me plunge in their pursuit whom fame
Is lavish to attest the lords of mind.
Not passing to make save the prize in view
Would satiate my cravings when obtained,
But since they strove I strove. Then came a slow
And strangling failure. We aspired alike.
Yet not the meanest plodder, Trithemius counts
PARACELSUS

A marvel, but was all-sufficient, strong
Or staggered only at his own vast wits;
While I was restless, nothing satisfied,
Distrustful, most perplexed. I would shrug over
That struggle; suffice it, that I loathed myself
As weak compared with them, yet felt somehow
A mighty power was brooding, taking shape
Within me; and this lasted till one night
When, as I sat revolting it and more,
A still voice from without said—"Seest thou not,
Desponding child, whence spring defeat and loss?
Even from thy strength. Consider: hast thou gazed Presumptuously on wisdom’s countenance,
No veil between; and can thy faltering hands,
Unguided by the brain the sight absorbs,
Pursue their task as earnest blinkers do
Whom radiance never distracted? Live their life
If thou wouldst share their fortune, choose their eyes
Unfed by splendor. Let each task present
Its petty good to thee. Waste not thy gifts
In profitless waiting for the gods’ descent,
But have some idol of thine own to dress
With their array. Know, not for knowing’s sake,
But to become a star to men forever;
Know for the gain it gets, the praise it brings,
The wonder it inspires, the love it breeds;
Look one step onward, and secure that step!"
And I smiled as one who smiles but once,
Then first discovering my own aim’s extent,
Which sought to comprehend the works of God,
And God himself, and all God’s intercourse
With the human mind; I understood, no less,
My fellows’ studies, whose true worth I saw,
But smiled not, well aware who stood by me,
And softer came their words—"There is a way:
Tis hard for flesh to tread ther-in imbued
With frailty—hopeless, if indulgence first
Have ripened inborn germs of sin to strength:
Wilt thou adventure for my sake and man’s,
Apart from all reward?" And hast it breathed—
"Be happy, my good soldier; I am by thee,
Be sure, even to the end!"—I answered not,
Knowing him. As he spoke, I was ended
With comprehension and a steadfast will;
And when he ceased, my brow was sealed his own.

If there took place no special change in me,
How comes it all things wore a different hue
Thenceforward?—pregnant with vast consequence.
Teeming with grand result, loaded with fate?
So that when, quailing at the mighty range
Of secret truths which yearn for birth, I haste
To contemplate undazzled some one truth,
Its bearings and effects alone—at once
What was a speck expands into a star.
Asking a life to pass exploring thus,
Till I tear crazed, I go to prove my soul!
I see my way as birds their trackless way.
I shall arrange! what time, what circuit first,
I ask not; but unless God send his hail
Or blinding fireballs, sleet or stifling snow,
In some time, his good time, I shall arrive;
He guides me and the bird. In his good time!

Mich. Vex him no further, Festus; it is so!
Fest. Just thus you help me ever. This would hold.
Were it the trackless air, and not a path
Inviting you, distinct with footprints yet
Of many a mighty marcher gone that way,
You may have purer views than theirs, perhaps,
But they were famous in their day—the proofs
Remain. At least accept the light they lend.
Par. Their light! the sum of all is briefly
this:
They labored and grew famous, and the fruits
Are best seen in a dark and growing earth
Given over to a blind and endless strife
With evils, what of all their lore abates?
No; I reject and spurn them utterly
And all they teach. Shall I still sit beside
Their dry wells, with a white lip and filmed eye,
While in the distance heaven is blue above
Mountains where sleep the unsummed tarns?

Fest. And yet
As strong delusions have prevailed ere now.
Men have set out as gallantly to seek
Their ruin. I have heard of such; yourself
Avow all hitherto have failed and fallen.

Mich. Nay, Festus, when but as the pilgrims fain
Through the dear way, do you expect to see
Their city dawn amid the clouds afar?

Par. Ay, sounds it not like some old well-known tale?
For me, I estimate their works and them
So rightly, that at times I almost dream
I too have spent a life the sages’ way,
And tread once more familiar paths. Perchance
I perished in an arrogant self-reliance
Agess ago; and in that act, a prayer
For one more chance went up so earnest, so
Instinct with better light let in by death,
That life was blotted out—not so completely
But scattered wrecks enough of it remain,
Dim memories, as now, when once more seems
The goal in sight again. All which, indeed.
Is foolish, and only means— the flesh I wear,
The earth I tread, are not more clear to me
Than my belief, explained to you or no

Fest. And who am I, to challenge and dispute
That clear belief? I will divest all fear.

Mich. Then Aureole is God’s commissary!
he shall
Be great and grand—and all for us!

Par. No, sweet!
Not great and grand. If I can serve mankind
Tis well; but there our intercourse must end:
I never will be served by those I serve

Fest. Look well to this; here is a plague-spot, here,
Disguise it how you may! ’Tis true, you utter
This scorn while by our side and loving us;
’Tis but a spot as yet: but it will break
Into a hideous blotch if overlooked.
How can that course be safe which from the first
Produces carelessness to human love?
It seems you have abjured the helps which men
Who overpass their kind, as you would do.
Have humbly sought; I dare not thoroughly probe
This matter, lest I learn too much. Let be
That popular praise would little instigate
Your efforts, nor particular approval
Reward you; put reward aside; alone
You shall go forth upon your arduous task,
None shall assist you, none partake your toil,
None share your triumph; still you must retain
Some one to cast your glory on, to share
Your rapture with. Were I elect like you,
I would encircle me with love, and raise
A rampart of my fellows; it should seem Impossible for me to fail, so watched
By gentle friends who made my cause their own,
They should ward off fate's envy—the great gift,
Extravagant when claimed by me alone,
Being so a gift to them as well as me.
If danger dament me or ease seduced,
How calmly their sad eyes should gaze reproach!
Mich. O Aureole, can I sing when all alone,
Without first calling, in my fancy, both
To listen by my side— even I! And you?
Do you not feel this? Say that you feel this!
Par. I feel 'tis pleasant that my aims, at length
Allowed their weight, should be supposed to need
A further strengthening in these goodly helps!
My course allures for its own sake, its sole
Intrinsic worth; and ne'er shall boat of mine
Adventure forth for gold and apes at once.
Your sages say, 'if human, therefore weak;'
If weak, more need to give myself entire
To my pursuit; and by its side, all else...
No matter! I deny myself but little.
In waiving all assistance save its own,
Would there some real sacrifice to make!
Your friends the sages threw their joys away,
While I must be content with keeping nine.
Fest. But do not cut yourself from human weal!
You cannot thrive—a man that dares effect
To spend his life in service to his kind
For no reward of theirs, unbound to them
By any tie; nor do so, Aureole! No—
There are strange punishments for such. Give up (Although no visible good flow thence; some part
Of the glory to another; hiding thus,
Even from yourself, that all is for yourself.
Say, say almost to God—'I have done all
For her, not for myself!'
Par. And who but lately
Was to rejoice in my success like you?
Whom should I love but both of you?
Fest. I know not:
But know this, you, that 't is no will of mine
You should adjure the lofty claims you make;
And this the cause— I can no longer seek
To overlook the truth, that there would be
A monstrous spectacle upon the earth,
Beneath the pleasant sun, among the trees:
—A being knowing not what love is. Hear me!
You are endowed with faculties which bear

Annexed to them as 't were a dispensation
To summon meaner spirits to do their will
And gather round them at their need; inspiring
Such with a love themselves can never feel,
Passionless 'mid their passionate votaries,
I know not if you joy in this or no,
Or ever dream that common men can live
On objects you prize lightly, but which make Their heart's sole treasure: the affections seem Beauteous at most to you, which we must taste
Or die; and this strange quality accords,
I know not how, with you; sits well upon
That imn ominous brow, though in another it scowls
An eating brand, a shame. I dare not judge you.
The rules of right and wrong thus set aside,
There's no alternative— I own you one
Of higher order, under other laws
Than bind us; therefore, emb not one hold
'Tis best aspire. Once mingled with us all...
Mich. Stay with us, Aureole! cast those Hopes away.
And stay with us! An angel warns me, too.
Man should be humble; you are very proud:
And God, dethroned, has dolcful plagues for such!
—Warms me to have in dread no quick repulse.
No slow defeat, but a complete success;
You will find all you seek, and perish so!
Par. (after a pause). Are these the barren first-fruits of my quest?
Is love like this the natural lot of all?
How many years of pain might one such hour
O'erbalance? Dearest Michal, dearest Festus.
What shall I say, if not that I desire
To justify your love; and will, dear friends,
In swerving nothing from my first resolves.
See, the great moon! and ere the mottled owls
Were wide awake, I was to go. It seems
You acquiesce at last in all save this—
If I am like to compass what I seek
By the tried career I choose; and then,
If that career, making but small account
Of much of life's delight, will yet retain Sufficient to sustain my soul: for thus
I understand these fond fears just expressed,
And first; the lore you praise and I neglect,
The labors and the precepts of old time,
I have not lightly disesteemed. But, friends
Truth is within ourselves; it takes no rise
From outward things, what'er you may believe.
There is an immest centre in us all,
Where truth abides in fulness; and around,
Wall upon wall, the gross flesh hemns it in,
This perfect, clear perception— which is truth.
A walling and perverting carnal mesh
Binds it, and makes all error; and, to know,
Rather consists in opening out a way
Whence the imprisoned splendor may escape.
Than in effecting entry for a light
Supposed to be without. Watch narrowly
The demonstration of a truth, its birth,
And you trace back the influence to its spring
And source within us; where broods radiance vast,
To be elicited ray by ray, as chance
Shall favor; chance— for hitherto, your sage
Even as he knows not how those beams are born,
As little knows he what unlocks their fount:
And men have oft grown old among their books
To die case-hardened in their ignorance,
Whose careless youth had promised what long years
Of unremitted labor ne’er performed:
While, contrary, it has chanced some idle day.
To autumn loiterers just as man-Wfred
As the midges in the sun, gives birth at last
To truth—produced mysteriously as cape
Of cloud grown out of the invisible air.
Hence, may not truth be lodged alike in all,
The lowest as the highest? some slight film
The interposing bar which binds a soul
And makes the idiot, just as makes the sage
Some film removed, the happy outlet whence
Truth issues proudly? See this soul of ours!
How it strives weakly in the child, is loosed
In manhood, clogged by sickness, back-combled
By age and waste, set free at last by death:
Why is it, flesh enthralls it or enthrones?
What is this flesh we have to penetrate?
Oh, not alone when life flows still, do truth
And power emerge, but also when strange chance
Ruffles its current; in unused conjuncture,
When sickness breaks the body—hunger, watching.
Except or less—oftentimes death’s approach.
Peril, deep joy or woe. One man shall crawl
Through life surrounded with all stirring things,
Unmoved; and he goes mad; and from the wreck
Of what he was, by his wild talk alone.
You first collect how great a spirit he hid.
Therefore, set free the soul alike in all,
Discovering the true laws by which the flesh
Accoy’s the spirit! We may not be doomed
To cope with seraphs, but at least the rest
Shall cope with us. Make no more giants, God.
But elevate the race at once! We ask
To put forth just our strength, our human strength.
All starting fairly, all equipped alike,
Gifted alike, all eagle-eyed, true-hearted—
See if we cannot beat thine angels yet!
Such is my task. I go to gather this
The sacred knowledge, here and there dispersed
About the world, long lost or never found.
And why should I be sad or born of hope?
Why do I make man’s good distinct from God’s?
Or, finding they are one, why dare mistrust?
Who shall succeed if not one pledged like me?
Mine is no mad attempt to build a world
Apart from his, like those who set themselves
To find the nature of the spirit they bore,
And, taught betimes that all their gorgeous dreams
Were only born to vanish in this life,
Refused to fit them to its narrow sphere,
But chose to figure forth another world
And other frames meet for their vast desires.
And all a dream! Thus was life scorned; but lif-

Shall yet be crowned: twine amaranth! I am priest!
And all for yielding with a lively spirit
A poor existence, parting with a youth
Like those who squander every energy
Convertible to good, on painted toys,
Breath-bubbles, gilded dust! And though I spurn
All adventitious aims, from empty praise
To love’s reward, yet whose deems such helps
Important, and concerns himself for me,
May know even these will follow with the rest—
As in the steady rolling Mayne, asleep
Yonder, is mixed its mass of schistons ore.
My own affections, laid to rest awhile.
Will waken purified, subduced alone
By all I have achieved. Till then—till then...
Ah, the time-willing loitering of a page
Through bower and over lawn, till eye shall bring
The stately lady’s presence whom he loves—
The broken sleep of the fisher whose rough coat
Enwraps the queenly pearl; these are faint pelleted types!
See, see, they look on me: I triumph now!
But one thing, Festus, Michel! I have told
All I shall e’er disclose to mortal: say—
Do you believe I shall accomplish this?
Fest. I do believe!
Mich. I ever did believe.
Par. Those words shall never fade from out my brain!
This earnest of the end shall never fade!
Arce there not, Festus, are there not, dear Michel?
Two points in the adventure of the diver,
One—when, a beggar, he prepares to plunge,
One—when, a prince, he rises with his pearl?
Festus, I plunge!
Fest. We wait you when you rise!

II. PARACELSUS ATTAINS

SCENE, Constantinople: the house of a Greek conjurer. 1531.

PARACELSUS.

Over the waters in the vaporous West
The sun goes down as in a sphere of gold
Behind the arm of the city, which between,
With all that length of domes and minarets,
Athwart the splendor, black and crooked runs
Like a Turk verse along a scimitar.
There lie, sullen memorial, and no more
Possess my aching sight! ’Tis done at last.
Strange—and the juggles of a sallow cheat
Have won me to this act! ’Tis as you cloud
Should voyage unwrecked o’er many a mountain-top
And break upon a molehill. I have dared
Come to a pause with knowledge; scan for once
The heights already reached, without regard
To the extent above; fairly compute
All I have clearly gained; for once excluding
A brilliant future to supply and perfect
All half-gains and conjectures and crude hopes.
And all because a fortune-teller will—
His credulous seekers should inscribe thus much
Their previous life's attainment, in his roll,
Before his promised secret, as he vanishes,
Make up the sum: and here, amid the scrawled Uncouth recordings of the dupes of this Old arch-genialtheic, lie my life's results!

A few blurred characters suffice to note
A stranger wandered long through many lands
And reaped the fruit he coveted in a few Discoveries, as appended here and there,
The fragmentary produce of much toil,
In a dim heap, fact and surmise together
Confusingly massed as when acquired; he was Intent on gain to come too much to stay
And scrutinize the little gained: the whole
Slip in the blank space 'twixt an idiot's gibber
And a mad lover's ditty — there it lies.

And yet those blottings chronicle a life —
A whole life, and my life! Nothing to do,
No problem for the fancy, but a life
Spent and decided, wasted past retrieve
Or worthy beyond peer. Stay, what does this Remembrancer set down concerning "life"?
'Time flees, youth fades, life is an empty dream,'
It is the echo of time; and he whose heart
Beat first beneath a human heart, whose speech
Was copied from a human tongue, can never Recall when he was living yet knew not this,
Nevertheless long seasons pass o'er him
Till some one hour's experience shows what nothing,
It seemed, could clearer show; and ever after,
An altered brow and eye and gait and speech
Attest that now he knows the adage true,
'Time fleets, youth fades, life is an empty dream.'

Ay, my brave chronicler, and this same hour
As well as any: now, let my time be!

Now! I can go no farther; well or ill,
'Tis done. I must desist and take my chance,
I cannot keep on the stretch: 't is no backshrinhing —
For let but some assurance beam, some close
To my toil grow visible, and I proceed
At any price, though closing it, I die.
Else, here I pause. The old Greek's prophecy
Is like to turn out true: "I shall not quit
His chamber till I know what I desire!"
Was it the light wind sang it o'er the sea ?

An end, a rest! strange how the notion, once
Encountered, gathers strength by moments!

Rest!
Where has it kept so long? this throbbing brow
To cease, this beating heart to cease, all cruel
And gnawing thoughts to cease! To dare let down
My strong, so high-strung brain, to dare unnerve
My harassed and tasked frame, to know my place,
My portion, my reward, even my failure,
Assigned, made sure forever! To lose myself

Among the common creatures of the world,
To draw some gain from having been a man,
Neither to hope nor fear, to live at length!
Even in failure, rest! But rest in truth
And power and recompense... I hoped that once!

What, sunk insensibly so deep? Has all
Been undergone for this? This the request
My labor qualified me to present
With no fear of refusal? Had I gone
Slightly through my task, and so judged fit
To moderate my hopes; nay, were it now
My sole concern to exculpate myself,
End things or mend them, — why, I could not choose
A humbler mood to wait for the event!
No, no, there needs not this; no, after all,
At worst I have performed my share of the task
The rest is God's concern; mine, merely this,
To know that I have obstinately held
By my own work. The mortal whose brave foot
Has trod, unscathed, the temple-court so fair
That he desieres at length the shrine of shrines,
Must let no sneering of the demons' eyes,
Whom he could pass unquailing, fasten now
Upon him, fairly past their power; no, no —
He must not stagger, faint, fall down at last,
Having a charm to baffle them; behold,
He bears his front; a mortal ventures thus
Serene amid the echoes, beams and glooms!
If he be priest henceforth, if he wake up
The god of the place to ban and blast him there.
Both well! What's failure or success to me?
I have subdued my life to the one purpose
Whereeto I ordained it; there alone I spy,
No doubt, that way I may be satisfied.

Yes, well have I subdued my life! beyond
The obligation of my strictest vow,
The contemplation of my wildest bond,
Which gave my nature freely up, in truth,
But in its actual state, consenting fully
All passionate impulses its soil was formed
To rear, should wither; but foreseeing not
The tract, doomed to perpetual barrenness,
Would seem one day, remembered as it was,
Beside the parched sand-waste which now it is,
Already strewn with faint blooms, viewless then,
I once engaged to root up loves so frail
I felt them not; yet now, 'tis very plain
Some soft spots had their birth in me at first,
If not love, say, like love; there was a time
When yet this wolfish hunger after knowledge
Set not remorselessly love's claims aside.
This heart was human once, or why recall
Einsiedeln, now, and Würzburg which the Mayne
Forsakes her course to fold as with an arm?

And Festus — my poor Festus, with his praise
And counsel and grave fears — where is he now
With the sweet maiden, long ago his bride?
I surely loved them — that last night, at least.
When we... gone! gone! the better. I am saved
The sad review of an ambitious youth
PARACELSUS

Choked by vile lusts, unnoticed in their birth, But let grow up and wind around a will Till action was destroyed. No, I have gone Purging my path successively of aught Wearing the distinct likeness of such lusts. I have made life consist of one idea: Ere that was master, up till that was born, I bear a memory of a pleasant life Whose small events I treasure; till one morn I ran o'er the seven little grassy fields, Scattering the flocks of nameless birds, to tell Poor Festus, bearing all the while for joy, To bear all trouble for my future plans, Since I had just determined to become The greatest and most glorious man on earth, And since that morn all life has been forgotten: All is one day, one only step between The onset and the end: one tyrant all— Absorbing aim fills up the interspace, One vast unbroken chain of thought, kept up Through a career apparently adverse To its existence: life, death, light and shadow, The shows of the world, were bare receptacles Or indices of truth to be wrung hence. Not ministers of sorrow or delight: A wondrous natural robe in which she went. For some one truth would dimly beacon me From mountains rough with pines, and flit and wink O'er dazzling wastes of frozen snow, and tremble Into assured light in some branching mine Where ripens, swathed in fire, the liquid gold — And all the beauty, all the wonder fell On either side the truth, as its mere robe; I see the robe now — then I saw the form, So far, then, I have voyaged with success, So much is good, then, in this working sea Which parts me from that happy strip of land: But o'er that happy strip a sun shone, too! And fainter gleams it as the waves grow rough, And still more faint as the sea widens; fast I sicken on a dead gulf streaked with light From its own putrefying depths alone. Then, God was pledged to take me by the hand; Now, any miserable bargain can bid My pride depart. All is alike at length: God may take pleasure in confounding pride By hiding secrets with the scorned and base — I am here, in short: so little have I paused Throughout! I never glanced behind to know If I had kept my primal light from wane, And thus insensibly am — what I am! Oh, bitter; very bitter! And more bitter, To fear a deeper curse, an inner ruin, Plague beneath plague, the last turning the first To light beside its darkness. Let me weep My youth and its brave hopes, all dead and gone, In tears which burn! Would I were sure to win Some startling secret in their stead, a tincture Of force to flush old age with youth, or breed Gold, or imprison moonbeams till they change To opal shafts! — only that, hurling it Indignant back. I might convince myself My aims remained supreme and pure as ever! Even now, why not desire, for mankind's sake, That if I fail, some fault may be the cause, That, though I sink, another may succeed? O God, the despicable heart of us! Shut out this hideous mockery from my heart!

'T was politic in you, Amoreo, to reject Single rewards, and ask them in the lump; At all events, once launched, to hold straight on: For now 't is all or nothing. Mighty profit Your gains will bring if they stop short of such Full consummation! As a man, you had A certain share of strength; and that is gone Already in the getting these you boast. Do not they seem to laugh, as who should say — "Great master, we are here indeed, dragged forth To light; this hast thou done: be glad! Now, seek The strength to use which thou hast spent in getting!"

And yet 't is much, surely 't is very much. Thus to have emptied youth of all its gifts, To feed a fire meant to hold out till morn Arrived with inexhaustible light; and lo, I have heaped up my last, and day dawns not! And I am left with gray hair, faded hands, And furrowed brow. Ha, ha, I, at all, Mistaken the wild nursling of my breast? Knowledge it seemed, and power, and remem- pense?

Was she who glistened through my room of nights, Who laid my head on her soft knees and smoothed The damp lockets — whose sly soothes just began When my sick spirit craved repose awhile — God! was I fighting sleep off for death's sake?

God! Thou art mind! Unto the master-mind Mind should be precious. Spare my mind alone! All else I will endure; if, as I stand Here, with my gains, thy thunder smite me down, I bow me: 't is thy will, thy righteous will; I o'erpass life's restrictions, and I die; And if no trace of my career remain Save a thin curse at pleasure of the wind In these bright chambers level with the air, See thou to it! But if my spirit fail, My once proud spirit forsake me at the last, Hast thou done well by me? So do not thou! Crush not my mind, dear God, though I be crushed! Hold me before the frequency of thy seraphs. And say, — "I crushed him, lest he should dis- turb My law: Man must not know their strength: behold, Weak and alone, how he had raised himself!"

But if delusions trouble me, and thou, Not seldom felt with rapture in thy help Throughout my toils and wanderings, dost in- tend To work man's welfare through my weak en- deavor, To crown my mortal forehead with a beam From thine own blinding crown, to smile, and guide
This puny hand and let the work so wrong'd
Be styled my work,— hear me! I covet not
An influx of new power, an angel's soul:
It were no marvel then—but I have reached
Thus far, a man; let me conclude, a man!
Give but one hour of my first energy,
Of that invincible faith, but only one!
That I may cover with an eagle-glance
The truths I have, and spy some certain way
To mould them, and completing them, possess!

Yet God is good: I started sure of that,
And why dispute it now? I'll not believe
But some undoubted warning long ere this
Had reached me: a fire-labrum was not deemed
Too much for the old founder of these walls,
Then, if my life has not been natural,
It has been monstrous: yet, till late, my course
So ardently engrossed me, that delight,
A pausing and reflecting joy, it is plain,
Could find no place in it. True, I am worn;
But who clothes summer, who is life itself?
God, that created all things, can renew!
And then, though after-life to please me now
Must have no likeness to the past, what hinders
Reward from springing out of toil, as changed
As bursts the flower from earth and root and stalk?

What use were punishment, unless some sin
Be first detected? let me know that first!
No man could ever offend as I have done . . .

(A voice from within.)
I hear a voice, perchance I heard
Long ago, but all too low,
So that scarce a care it stirred
If the voice were real or no:
I heard it in my youth when first
The waters of my life outburst:
But, now their stream ebbs faint, I hear
That voice, still low, but fatal-clear—
As if all poets, God ever meant
Should save the world, and therefore lent
Great power to him who, perchance, refused
To do his work, or lightly used
Those gifts, or failed through weak endeavor,
So, mourn cast off by him forever,—
As if these leaned in airy ring
To take me; this the song they sing.

Lost, lost! yet come,
With our van troop make thy home.
Come, come! for we
Will not breathe, so much as breathe
Reproach to thee,
Knowing what thou sink'st beneath.
So sank we in those old years,
We who bid thee, come! thou last
Who, living yet, hast life o'erpast.
And altogether we, thy peers,
Will pardon grave for thee, the last
Whose trial is done, whose lot is cast
With those who watch but work no more,
Who gaze on life but live no more.
Yet we trusted thou shouldst speak
The message which our lips, too weak,
Refused to utter,— shouldst redeem
Our fault: such trust, and all a dream!
Yet we chose thee a birthplace

Where the richness ran to flowers:
Couldst not sing one song for grace?
Not make one blossom man's and ours?
Must one more recreant to his race
Die with unexerted powers,
And join us, leaving as he found
The world, he was to loosen, bound?
Anguish! ever and forever;
Still beginning, ending never!
Yet, lost and last one, come!
How couldst understand, alas,
What our pale ghosts strove to say,
As their shades did glance and pass
Before thee night and day?
Thou wast blind as we were dumb:
Once more, therefore, come, 0 come!
How should we clothe, how arm the spirit
Shall next thy post of life inherit—
How guard him from thy speedy ruin?
Tell us of thy sad undoing
Here, where we sit, ever pursuing
Our weary task, ever renewing
Sharp's sorrow, far from God who gave
Our powers, and man they could not save!"

(Aprile enters.)
Ha, ha! our king that wouldst be, here at last?
Art thou the poet who shall save the world?
Thy hand to mine! Stay, fix thine eyes on mine!
Thou wouldst be king? Still fix thine eyes on mine!

Par. Ha, ha! why croaching not? Am I not king?
So torture is not wholly unavailing!
Have my fierce spasms compelled thee from thy lair?
Art thou the sage I only seemed to be,
Myself of after-time, my very self
With sight a little clearer, strength more firm,
Who rob'st him in my robe and grasps my crown
For just a fault, a weakness, a neglect?
I scarcely trusted God with the surmise
That such might come, and thou didst hear the while!

Aprile. Thine eyes are lustreless to mine:
My hair
Is soft, may silken so: to talk with thee
Flushes my cheek, and thou art ash-pale.
Truly, thou hast labored, hast withstood her lips,
The siren's! Yes, 'tis like thou hast attained!
Tell me, dear master, wherefore now thou coun'st
I thought thy solemn songs would have their need
In after-time; that I should hear the earth
Exult in thee and echo with thy praise,
While I was laid forgotten in my grave.

Par. Ah fiend, I know thee, I am not thy dupe!
Thou art ordained to follow in my track,
Reaping my sowing; as I scorned to reap
The harvest sown by sages passed away.
Thou art the sober searchcr, cautious striver,
As if, except through me, thou hast searched or striven!

Ay, tell the world! Degrade me after all,
To an aspirant after fame, not truth —
To all but envy of thy fate, be sure!

 Nay, sing them to me; I shall envy
Thou shalt be king! Sing thou, and I will sit Beside, and call deep silence for thy songs.
And worship thee, as I had ne'er been meant
To fill thy throne: but none shall ever know!
Sing to me; for already thy wild eyes
Unlock my heart-strings, as some crystal-shaft
Reveals by some chance blaze its parent font!
After long time: so thou reveal'st my soul.
All will flash forth at last, with thee to hear!

(Par. (His secret! I shall get his secret — fool!)

I am he that aspired to know; and thou?

(Par. I would love infinitely, and be loved!

(Par. Poor slave! I am thy king indeed,
Thou deem'st
That — born a spirit, dowered even as thou,
Born — for thy fate — because I could not curb
My yearnings to possess at once the full
Enjoyment, but neglected all the means
Of realizing even the frailest joy.
Gathering no fragments to appease my want,
Yet nursing up that want till thus I die —
Thou deem'st I cannot trace thy safe sure march
O'er perils that o'erwhelm me, triumphing,
Neglecting naught below for heights above,
Despising nothing and ensuring all —
Nor that I could (my time to come again)
Lead thus my spirit securely as thine own.
Listen, and thou shalt see I know thee well.
I would love infinitely ...

(Par. Ah, lost! lost!
Oh ye who armed me at such cost,
How shall I look on all of ye
With your gifts even yet on me?

(Par. Ah, 'tis some moon-struck creature after all!
Such fond foolish as are like to haunt this den:
They spread contagion, doubtless: yet he needeth
To echo one foreboding of my heart
So truly, that ... no matter! How he stands
With eye's last sunbeam staying on his hair
Which turns to it as if they were akin:
And those clear smiling eyes of saddest blue
Nearly set free, so far they rise above
The painful fruitless striving of the brow
And enforced knowledge of the lips, firm-set
In slow despondency's eternal sigh!
Has he, too, missed life's end, and learned the cause?
I charge thee, by thy fealty, be calm!
Tell me what thou wouldest be, and what I am.

(Par. I would love infinitely, and be loved.

First: I would carve in stone, or cast in brass,
The forms of earth. No ancient hunter lifted
Up to the gods by his renown, no nymph
Squeezed the sweet soul of a woodland tree
Or sapphire spirit of a twilight star.
Should be too hard for me; no shepherd-king
Regal for his white locks; no youth who stands
Silent and very calm amid the throng.
His right hand ever hid beneath his robe

Until the tyrant pass; no lawgiver,
No swan-soft woman rubbed with lucid oils
Given by a god for love of her — too hard!
Every passion springing from man, conceived by man.
Would I express and clothe it in its right form,
Or blend with others struggling in one form,
Or show repressed by an ungainly form.
Oh, if you marvelled at some mighty spirit
With a fit frame to execute its will — Even unconsciously to work its will
You should be moved no less beside some strong
Rare spirit, fettered to a stubborn body,
Endeavoring to subdue it and inform it
With its own splendor! All this I would do:
And I would say, this done, "His spirits created.

God grants to each a sphere to be its world,
Appointed with the various objects needed
To satisfy its own peculiar want;
So I create a world for these my shapes
Fit to sustain their beauty and their strength?"

And, at the word, I would contrive and paint
Woods, valleys, rocks and plains, dells, sands and wastes,
Lakes which, when morn breaks on their quiver
ing bed,
Blaze like a wyvern flying round the sun,
And ocean isles so small, the dog-fish tracking
A dead whale, who should find them, would swim thrice
Around them, and fare onward — all to hold
The offspring of my brain. Nor these alone:
Bronze labyrinth, palace, pyramid and crypt,
Baths, galleries, courts, temples and terraces.
Marts, theatres, and wharfs — all filled with
men,
Men everywhere! And this performed in turn,
When those who looked on, pined to hear the hopes
And fears and hates and loves which moved the crowd,
I would throw down the pencil as the chisel,
And I would speak; no thought which ever stirred
A human breast should be untold; all passions,
All soft emotions, from the turbulent stir
Within a heart fed with desires like mine.
To the last comfort shutting the tired lids
Of him who sleeps the sultry noon away
Beneath the tent-tree by the wayside well:
And this in language as the need should be.
Now poured at once forth in a burning flow,
Now piled up in a grand array of words.
This done, to perfect and consummate all,
Even as a luminous haze links star to star,
I would supply all chasms with music, breathing
Mysterious motions of the soul, no way
To be defined save in strange melodies.
Last, having thus revealed all I could love,
Having received all love bestowed on it,
I would die: preserving so throughout my course
God full on me, as I was full on men:
He would approve my prayer, "I have gone through
The love-breadth of life; create for me
If not for men, or take me to thyself,
Eternal, infinite love!"
PARACELSUS

Gathered these magic herbs, berry and bud,
In haste, not pausing to reject the weeds,
But happy plucking them at any price.
To me, who have seen them bloom in their own soil.
They are scarce lovely: plait and wear them,
You !
And guess, from what they are, the springs that fed them,
The stars that sparkled o'er them, night by night,
The snakes that travelled far to sip their dew !
Thus for my higher loves; and thus even weakness
Would win me honor. But not these alone
Should claim my care; for common life, its wants
And ways, would I set forth in beauteous hues:
The lowest bend should not possess a hope,
A fear, but I'd be by him, saying better
Than he his own heart's language. I would live
Forever in the thoughts I thus explored,
As a discoverer's memory is attached
To all be finds; they should be mine henceforth,
Imbued with me, though free to all before:
For clay, once cast into my soul's rich mine,
Should come up crusted o'er with gems. Nor this Would need a meaner spirit than the first:
Nay, 'twould be but the selfsame spirit, clothed
In humbler guise, but still the selfsame spirit:
As one spring wind unbinds the mountain snow
And comforts violets in their hermitage.

But, master, poet, who hast done all this,
How didst thou escape the ruin whelming me?
Didst thou, when serving thee to this attempt,
Ne'er range thy mind's extent, as some wide hall,
Dazzled by shapes that filled its length with light,
Shapes clustered there to rule thee, not obey,
That will not wait thy summons, will not rise
Singly, nor when thy practised eye and hand
Can well transfer their loveliness, but crowd
By thee forever, bright to thy despair?
Didst thou ne'er gaze on each by turns, and ne'er
Resolve to single out one, though the rest
Should vanish, and to give that one, entire
In beauty, to the world; forgetting, an,
Its peers, whose number baffles mortal power?
And, this determined, wast thou ne'er seduced
By memories and regrets and passionate love,
To glance once more farewell? and did their eyes
Fasten thee, brighter and more bright, until
Thou couldst but stagger back unto their feet,
And laugh that man's applause or welfare ever
Could tempt thee to forsake them? Or when years
Had passed and still their love possessed thee wholly,
When from without some murmur startled thee
Of darkling mortals famished for one ray
Of thy so-hoarded luxury of light,
Didst thou ne'er strive even yet to break those spells
And prove thou couldst recover and fulfil
Thy early mission, long ago renounced,

If thou hast ne'er
Conceived this mighty aim, this full desire,
Thou hast not passed my trial, and thou art
No king of mine.

Par.

Ah me!

Apr.

But thou art here!

Thou dost not gaze like me upon that end
Till thine own powers for compassing the bliss
Were blind with glory; nor grow mad to grasp
At once the prize long patient toil should claim,
Nor spurn all granted short of that. And I
Would do as thou, a second time: nay, listen!
Knowing ourselves, our world, our task so great,
Our time so brief, it is clear if we refuse
The means so limited, the tools so rude
To execute our purpose, life will fleet,
And we shall fade, and leave our task undone.
We will be wise in time: what though our work
Be fashioned in despite of their ill-service,
Be contrived to reach the end?
? Through little praise
Did full resources wait on our goodwill
At every turn. Let all be as it is.
Some say the earth is even so contrived
That tree and flower, a vegetation gay, conceal
A bare and skeleton framework. Had we means Answering to our mind! But now I seem Wrecked on a savage isle: how rear thereon
My palace? Branching palms the props shall be,
Fruit glossy mingling; gems are for the East;
Who heeds them? I can pass them. Serpents' scales,
And painted birds' down, furs and fishes' skins
Must help me; and a little here and there
Is all I can aspire to: still my art
Shall show its birth was in a gentler clime.
Had I green jars of malachite, this way
I'd range them: where those sea-shells glister above,
Cressets should hang, by right: this way we set
The purple carpets, and these mats are laid,
Woven of fern and rush and blossoming fag."
Or if, by fortune, some completer grace
Be spared to me, some fragment, some slight sample
Of the prouder workmanship my own home boas.
Some trifle little heeded there, but here
The place's one perfection — with what joy
Would I enshrine the relic, cheerfully
Forseeing all the marvels out of reach!
Could I retain one strain of all the psalm
Of the angels, one word of the fiat of God,
To let my followers know what such things are!
I would adventure nobly for them: little lakes:
When nights were still, and still the morning sea,
And far away I could desyre the land
Where I departed, whither I return,
I would dispart the waves, and stand once more
At home, and load my bark, and hasten back.
And fling my gains to them, worthless or true.
"Friends," I would say, "I went far, far for them,
Past the high rocks the haunt of doves, the mounds
Of rock earth from whose sides strange trees grow out,
Past tracts of milk-white minute blinding sand,
Till, by a mighty moon, I tremblingly

And to that end, select some shape once more? And did not must-like influences, thick films,
Faint memories of the rest that charmed so long
Thine eyes, float fast, confust thee, bear thee off,
As whirling snow-drifts blind a man who treads
a mountain-ridge, with guiding spear, through storm?
Say, though I fell, I had excuse to fall;
Say, I was tempted sorely: say this.
Dear lord, April's lord!

Par. Clasp me not thus, April! That the truth should reach me thus! We are weak dust. Nay, clasp not or I faint!
Apr. My king! and envious thoughts could outrage thee?
Lo, I forget my ruin, and rejoice
In thy success, as thou! Let our God's praise
Go bravely through the world at last! What care
Through me or thee? I feel thy breath. Why, tears?
Tears in the darkness, and from thee to me?
Par. Love me henceforth, April, while I learn
To love; and, merciful God, forgive us both!
We wake at length from weary dreams; but both
Have slept in fairy-land: though dark and drear
Appears the world before us, we no less
Wake with our wrists and ankles jewelled still.
I too have sought to know, as thou to love—
Excluding love as thou refusedst knowledge.
Still thou hast beauty and I, power. We wake:
What penance canst devise for both of us?
Apr. I hear thee faintly. The thick darkness! Even Thine eyes are hid. 'T is as I knew: I speak,
And now I die. But I have seen thy face!
O poet, think of me, and sing of me!
But to have seen thee and to die so soon!
Par. Die not, April! We must never part.
Are we not halves of one dissevered world,
Whom this strange chance unites once more?
Part? never!
Till thou the lover, know: and I, the knower,
Love—until both are saved. April, hear!
We will accept our gains, and use them—now!
God, he will die upon my breast, April!
Apr. To speak but once, and die! yet by my side,
Hush! hush!
Ha! go you ever girt about
With phantoms, powers! I have created such,
But these seem real as I.
Par. Whom can you see
Through the accursed darkness?
Apr. Stay; I know,
I know them: who should know them well as I?
White brows, lit up with glory; poets all!
Par. Let him but live, and I have my reward!
Apr. Yes; I see now. God is the perfect poet,
Who in his person acts his own creations,
Had you but told me this at first! Hush! hush!
Par. Live! for my sake, because of my great sin,
To help my brain, oppressed by these wild words
And their deep import. Live! 'tis not too late.
I have a quiet home for us, and friends,
Michal shall smile on you. Hear you? Lean thus:
And breathe my breath. I shall not lose one word
Of all your speech, one little word, April!
Apr. No, no. Crown me? I am not one of you!
'T is he, the king, you seek. I am not one.
Par. Thy spirit, at least, April! Let me love.
I have attained, and now I may depart.

III. PARACEL'SUS

SCENE, Basel: a chamber in the house of Paracelsus.
1526.

PARACEL'SUS, FESTUS.

Par. Heap logs and let the blaze laugh out!
Fest. True, true!
'T is very fit all, time and chance and change
Have wrought since last we sat thus, face to face
And soul to soul—all cares, far-looking fears,
Vague apprehensions, all vain fantasies bred
By your long absence, should be cast away,
Forgotten in this glad unhoped renewal
Of our affections.
Par. Oh, omit not aught
Which witnesses your own and Michal's own
Affection: spare not that! Only forget
The honors and the glories and what not,
It pleases you to tell profusely out.
Fest. Nay, even your honors, in a sense, I waive:
The wondrous Paracelsus, life's dispenser,
Fate's commissary, idol of the schools
And courts, shall be no more than Aureole still.
Still Aureole and my friend as when we parted
Some twenty years ago, and I restrained
As best I could the promptings of my spirit
Which secretly advanced you, from the first.
To the pre-eminent rank which, since, your own
Adventurous ardor nobly triumphing,
Has won for you.
Par. Yes, yes. And Michal's face
Still wears that quiet and peculiar light
Like the dim circle floating round a pearl.
Fest. Just so.
Par. And yet her calm sweet countenance,
Though saintly, was not sad: for she would sing
Alone. Does she still sing alone, bird-like,
Not dreaming you are near? Her carols drop
In flakes through that old leafy bower built
Under the sunny wall at Würzburg, from her lattice
Among the trees above, while I, unseen,
Sat coming some rare scroll from Tritheim's shelves,
Much wondering notes so simple could divert
My mind from study. Those were happy days.
Respect all such as sing when all alone!
Fest. Scarcely alone; her children, you may guess, are wild beside her.

Par. Ah, those children quite unsettle the pure picture in my mind:

A girl, she was so perfect, so distinct:

No change, no change! Not but this added grace
May blend and harmonize with its compeers,
And Michal may become her motherhood;
But 'tis a change, and I detest all change,
And must a change in aught I loved long since.
So, Michal— you have said she thinks of me?—
Fest. O very proud will Michal be of you!
Imagine how we sat, long winter-nights,
Scheming and wondering, shaping your pre-

Adventure, or devising its reward;
Shutting out fear with all the strength of hope,
For it was strange how, even when most secure
In our domestic peace, a certain dim
And fleeting shade could suddenly all; it seemed
A restlessness of heart, a silent yearning,
A sense of something wanting, incomplete—
Not to be put in words, perhaps avoided
By mute consent— but, said or unsaid, felt
To point to one so loved and so long lost.
And then the hopes rose and shut out the tears—
How you would laugh should I recount them now!

I still predicted your return at last
With gifts beyond the greatest of them all,
All Tritheim's wondrous troop; did one of which Attain renown by any chance, I smiled,
As well aware of who would prove his peer.
Michal was sure some woman, long ere this,
As beautiful as you were sage, had loved...

Par. Far-seeing, truly, to discern so much
In the fantastic projects and day-dreams
Of a raw restless boy!
Oh, no; the sunrise
Well warranted our faith in this full noon!
Can I forget the anxious voice which said,
"Festus, have thoughts like these e'er shaped
Themselves
In other brains than mine? have their possessors
Existed in like circumstances? were they weak
As I, or ever constant from the first,
Despising youth's allurements and rejecting
As spider-films the shackles I endure?
Is there hope for me?"— and I answered gravely
As an acknowledged elder, calmer, wise;
More gifted mortal. O you must remember,
For all your glorious...

Par. Glorious? ay, this hair,
These bands— may, touch them, they are mine!

Recall
With all the said recollections, times when thus
To lay them by your own e'er turned you pale
As now. Most glorious, are they not?"

Fest. Why— why—
Something must be subtracted from success
So wide, no doubt. He would be scrupulous, truly.
Who should object such drawbacks. Still, still,
Aureole,
You are changed, very changed! 'T were losing nothing
To look well to it: you must not be stolen
From the enjoyment of your well-won need.

Par. My friend! you seek my pleasure, past a doubt:
You will best gain your point, by talking, not
Of me, but of yourself.

Fest. Have I not said
All touching Michal and my children? Sure
You know, by this, full well how Aenechen looks
Gravely, while one disperses her thick brown hair;
And Aureole's glee when some stray gamnet builds
Amid the birch-trees by the lake. Small hope
Have I that he will honor (the wild imp)
His namesake. Sigh not! 'tis too much to ask
That all we love should reach the same proud fate.
But you are very kind to humor me
By showing interest in my quiet life;
You, who of old could never tame yourself
To tranquil pleasures, must at heart despise...

Par. Festus, strange secrets are let out by death
Who blabs so oft the follies of this world:
And I am death's familiar, as you know,
I helped a man to die, some few weeks since,
Warped even from his go-cart to one end
The living on princes' smiles, reflected from
A mighty herd of favorites. No mean trick
He left untried, and truly well-nigh wormed
All traces of God's finger out of him;
Then died, grown old. And just an hour before,
Having lain long with blank and soulless eyes,
He sat up suddenly, and with natural voice
Said that in spite of thick air and closed doors
God told him it was June; and he knew well,
Without such telling, herebells grew in June;
And all that kings could ever give or take
Would not be precious as those blooms to him.
Just so, allowing I am passing sage,
It seems to me much worthier argument
Why panions, eyes that laugh, bear beauty's prize
From violets, eyes that dream— (your Michal's choice)—
Than all fools find to wonder at in me
Or in my fortunes. And be very sure
I say this from no prurient restlessness,
No self-complacency, itching to turn
Vary and view its pleasure from all points.
And, in this instance, willing other men
May be at pains, demonstrate to itself
The readiness of the very joy it tastes.
What should delight me like the news of friends
Whose memories were a solace to me oft,
As mountain-baths to wild fowls in their flight?
Often than you had wasted thought on me
Had you been wise, and rightly valued bliss,
But there's no taming nor repressing hearts:
God knows I need such!— So, you heard me speak?

Fest. Speak? when?

Par. When but this morning at my class?

There was noise and crowd enough. I saw you not.
Surely you know I am engaged to fill

1 Citriiiula (flam'mula) herba Paracelso multim famil

iars. — Doen.
The chair here?—that 'tis part of my proud fate
To lecture to as many thick-skulled youths
As please each day, to throng the theatre,
To my great reputation, and no small
Danger of Basel’s beeches long amused
To crack beneath such honor?

Fest. I was there; I mingled with the throng: shall I avow,
Small care was mine to listen?—too intent
On gathering from the murmurs of the crowd
A full corroboration of my hopes!
What can I learn about your powers? but they Know, care for naught beyond your actual state,
Your actual value; yet they worship you.
Those various natures whom you sway as one!
But ere I go, be sure I shall attend...

Par. Stop, o’ God’s name: the thing’s by no means yet.
Past remedy! Shall I read this morning’s labor —At least in substance? Naught so worth the gaining
As an apt scholar! Thus then, with all due
Precision and emphasis—you, beside—are clearly
Guiltless of understanding more, a whit.
The subject than your stude—allowed to be
A notable advantage.

Fest. Surely, Aureole,
You laugh at me!

Par. I laugh? Ha! ha! thank heaven,
I charge you, if ’t be so! for I forget
Much, and what laughter should be like. No less,
However, I forego that luxury
Since it alarms the friend who brings it back.
True, laughter like my own must echo strangely
To thinking men: a smile were better far;
So, make me smile! If the exciting look
You wore but now be smiling, ’tis so long
Since I have smiled! Alas, such smiles are born Alone of hearts like yours, or herdsmen’s souls
Of ancient time, whose eyes, calm as their flocks,
Saw in the stars mere garnishment of heaven,
And in the earth a stage for altars only.

Never change. Festus: I say, never change!
Fest. My God, if he be wracked after all?
Par. When last we parted, Festus, you declared—
—Or Michal, yes, her soft lips whispered words
I have preserved. She told me she believed
I should succeed; meaning, that in the search
I then engaged in, I should meet success:
And yet be wracked: now, she augured false.

Fest. Thank heaven! but you spoke strangely:
could I venture
To think bare apprehension lest your friend,
Dazzled by your resplendent course, might find Herculean lesson—indeed in your own,
could move
Such earnest mood in you? Fear not, dear friend,
That I shall leave you, inwardly repining
Your lot was not my own!

Par. And this forever? Forever! gull who may, they will be gull’d!
They will not look nor think: ’tis nothing new
In them: but surely he is not of them!
My Festus, do you know. I reckoned, you—

Though all beside were sand-blind—you, my friend,
Would look on me, once close, with piercing eye
Untroubled by the false glare that confounds
A weaker vision: would remain serene,
Though singular amid a gaping throng.
I feared you, or I had come, sure, long ere this,
To Einsiedeln. Well, error has no end,
And Rhasia is a sage, and Basel boasts
A tribe of wits, and I am wise and blest
Past all dispute! ’Tis vain to fret at it.
I have vowed long ago my worshippers
Shall owe to their own deep sagacity
All further information, good or bad,
Small risk indeed my reputation runs.
Unless perchance the glance now searching me
Be fixed much longer; for it seems to spell
Dimly the characters a simpler man
Might read distinct enough. Old eastern books
Say, the fallen prince of morning some short space
Remained unchanged in semblance; say, his brow
Was hued with triumph: every spirit then
Praising, his heart on flame the while:—a tale!
Well, Festus, what discover you. I pray?
Fest. Some foul deed sullies then a life which else
Were raised supreme?

Par. Good: I do well, most well.
Why strive to make men hear, feel, fret themselves
With what is past their power to comprehend?
I should not strive now: only, having nursed
The faint surmise that one yet walked the earth,
One, at least, not the utter fool of show,
Not absolutely formed to be the dupe
Of shallow plausibilities alone:
One who, in youth, found wise enough to choose
The happiness his riper years approve,
Was yet so anxious for another’s sake,
That, ere his friend could rush upon a mad
And ruinous course, the converse of his own,
His gentle spirit essayed, prejudged for him
The perilous path, foresaw its destiny,
And warned the weak one in such tender words,
Such accents—his whole heart in every tone—
That off their memory comforted that friend,
When it by right should have increased despair:
—Having believed, I say, that this one man
Could never lose the light thus from the first
His portion—how should I refuse to grieve
At even my gain if it disturb our old
Relation, if it make me out more wise?
Therefore, once more reminding him how well
He prophesied. I note the single flaw
That spoils his prophet’s title. In plain words,
You were deceived, and thus were you deceived.
I have not been successful, and yet am
Most miserable; ’tis said at last: nor you
Give credit, lest you force me to concede
That common sense yet lives upon the world!

Fest. You surely do not mean to banter me?

Par. You know, or—if you have been wise
Enough
To cleanse your memory of such matters—knew.
As far as words of mine could make it clear,
That 't was my purpose to find joy or grief
Soley in the fulfilment of my plan
Or plot or whatsoe'er it was; rejoicing
Alone as it proceeded prosperously,
Sorrowing then only when mischance retarded
Its progress. That was in those Würzburg days!
Not to prolong a theme I thoroughly hate,
I have pursued this plan with all my strength;
And having failed therein most signalily,
Cannot object to ruin utter and dread.
As all-excelling would have been the prize
Had fortune favored me. I scarce have right
To vex your frank good spirit late so glad
In my supposed prosperity, I know,
And, were I lucky in a glut of friends
Would well agree to let your error live,
Nay, strengthen it with fables of success.
But mine is no condition to refuse
The transient solace of so rare a godsend,
My solitary luxury, my one friend:
Accordingly I venture to put off
The weariest vest of falsehood calling me,
Secure when he is by. I lay me bare,
Prove at his mercy,—but he is my friend!
Not that he needs retain his aspect grave;
That answers not my purpose; for 'tis like,
Some sunny morning—Bassel being drained
Of its wise population, every corner
Of the amphitheatre crammed with learned clerks,
Here Colompiadius, looking worlds of wit,
Here Castellanus, as profound as he,
Monstrous here, Probenius there, all squeezed
And staring,—that the zany of the show,
Even Paracelsus, shall put off before them
His trappings with a grace but seldom judged
Expedient in such cases;—the grim smile
That will go round! Is it not therefore best
To venture a rehearsal like the present
In a small way? Where are the signs I seek,
The first-fruits and fair sample of the scorn
Due to all quacks? Why, this will never do!
Fest. These are foul vapors, Aureole; naught
like!
The effect of watching, study, weariness.
Were there a spark of truth in the confusion
Of these wild words, you would not outrage thus
Your youth's companion. I shall never regard
These wanderings, bred of faintheart and much study.
'Tis not thus you would trust a trouble to me,
To Michel's friend.

Par.
I have said it, dearest Festus!
For the manner, 't is ungracious probably;
You may have it told in broken sobs, one day.
And scalding tears, ere long; but I thought best
To keep that off as long as possible.
Do you wonder still?
Fest.
No; it must oft fall out
That one whose labor perfects any work,
Shall rise from it with eye so worn that he
Of all men least can measure the extent
Of what he has accomplished. He alone
Who, nothing tasked, is nothing weary too,
May clearly scan the little he effects:
But we, the bystanders, untouched by toil,
Estimate each aright.

Par.
This worthy Festus
is one of them, at last! 'T is so with all!
First, they set down all progress as a dream;
And next, when he whose quick discomfiture
Was counted on, accomplishes some few
And doubtful steps in his career,—behold,
They look for every inch of ground to vanish
Beneath his tread, so sure they spy success!
Fest. Few doubtful steps? when death re-

tries before
Your presence,—when the noblest of mankind,
Broken in body or sublimed in soul,
May through your skill renew their vigor, raise
The shattered frame to pristine statefulness?
When men in racking pain may purchase dreams
Of what delights them most, swooning at once
Into a sea of bliss or rapt along
As in a flying sphere of turbulent light?
When we may look to you as one ordained
To free the flesh from fell disease, as frees
Our Luther's burning tongue the lettered soul?
When...
Par.
When and where, the devil, did you get
This notable news?
Fest. Even from the common voice;
From those whose envy, daring not dispute
The wonders it decrees, attributes them
To magic and such folly.
Par.
Folly? Why not
To magic, pray? You find a comfort doubtless
In holding, God never troubles him about
Us or our doings; once we were judged worthy
The devil's tempting; I heldfast; forgive me,
And rest content. You prophesy on the whole
Was fair enough as prophecies go;
At fault a little in detail, but quite
Precise enough in the main; and heretofore
I pay due homage; you guessed long ago
(The prophet!) I should fail—and I have failed, Fest. You mean to tell me, then, the hopes which fed
Your youth have not been realized as yet?
Some obstacle has barred them hitherto?
Or that their innate...
Par.
As I said but now,
You have a very decent prophet's fame,
So you but shun details here. Little matter
Whether those hopes were mad,—the aims they sought.
Safe and secure from all ambitious fools;
Or whether my weak wits are overcome
By what a better spirit would scorn: I fail.
And now methinks 't were best to change a theme
I am a sad fool to have stumbled on,
I say confusedly what comes uppermost;
But there are times when patience proves at fault,
As now: this morning's strange encounter—you
Beside me once again! you, whom I guessed
Alive, since hitherto (with Luther's leave)
No friend have I among the saints at peace,
To judge by any good their prayers effect.
I knew you would have helped me—why not he,
My strange competitor in enterprise,
Bound for the same end by another path,
Arrived, or ill or well, before the time.
At our disastrous journey's doubtful close?
How goes it with April? Ah, they miss
Your lawn sad sunny idleness of heaven,
Our martyrs for the world's sake; heaven shuts Fast:
The poet mad is howling by this time!
Since you are my sole friend then, here or there,
I could not quite repress the varied feelings
This meeting wakens; they have had their vent,
And now forget them. Do the rear-mice still Hang like a fretwork on the gate (or what
In my time was a gate) fronting the road
From Einsiedeln to Lachen?

Fest.
Tritle not:
Answer me, for my sake alone! You smiled
Just now, when I supposed some deed, unworthy
Yourself, might blot the else so bright result;
Yet if your motives have continued pure,
Your will unaltering, and in spite of this,
You have experienced a defeat, why then
I say not you would cheerfully withdraw
From contest — mortal hearts are not so fashioned —
But surely you would ne'ertheless withdraw.
You sought not fame nor gain nor even love,
No end distinct from knowledge,— I repeat
Your very words: once satisfied that knowledge
Is a mere dream, you would announce as much,
Yourself the first. But how is the event?
You are defeated — and I find you here!

Par. As though "here" did not signify defeat!
I spoke not of my little labors here,
But of the break-down of my general aims:
For you, aware of their extent and scope,
To look on these sage lecturings, approved
By beardless boys, and bearded dotards worse,
As a fit consummation of such aims,
Is worthy notice. A professorship,
At Basel! Since you see so much in it,
And think my life was reasonably drained
Of life's delights to render me a match
For duties arduous as such post demands,—
Be it far from me to deny my power
To fill the petty circle lotted out
Of infinite space, or justify the host
Of honors thence accruing. So, take notice,
This jewel damming from my neck preserves
The features of a prince, my skill restored
To plague his people some few years to come:
And all through a pure whim. He had eased
the earth
For me, but that the droll despair which seized
The vermin of his household, tickled me.
I came to see. Here drivelled the physician,
Whose most infallible nostrum was at fault;
There quaked the astrologer, whose horoscope
Had promised him interminable years;
Here a monk fumbled at the sick man's mouth
With some undoubted relic — a sudury
Of the Virgin; while another pind bulve
Of the same brotherhood, he loved them ever
Was actively preparing' neath his nose
Such a suffumigation as, once fired.
Had sulked the patient dead ere he could groan.
I cursed the doctor and upset the brother,
Brushed past the conjurer, vowed that the first guest
Of stench from the ingredients just alight

Would raise a cross-grained devil in my sword,
Not easily laid: and ere an hour the prince
Slept as he never slept since prince he was.
A day — and I was pesting for my life.
Placed, through the town as one whose spite
Had near availed to stop the blessed effects
Of the doctor's nostrum which, well seconded
By the sudury, and most by the costly smoke —
Not leaving out the strenuous prayers sent up
Hard by in the abbey — raised the prince to life:
To the great reputation of the seer.
Who, confident, expected all along
The glad event — the doctor's recompense —
Much largess from his highness to the monks —
And the vast solace of his loving people,
Whose general satisfaction to increase;
The prince was pleased no longer to defer
The burning of some dozen heretics
Remanded till God's mercy should be shown Touching his sickness: last of all were joined Ample directions to all loyal folk
To swell the complement by seizing me
Who — doubtless some rank sorcerer — endeavor-
To thwart these pious offices, obstruct
The prince's cure, and frustrate heaven by help
Of certain devils dwelling in his sword.
By luck, the prince in his first fit of thanks
Had forced this bumble on me as an earnest
Of further favors. This one case may serve
To give sufficient taste of many such,
So, let them pass. Those shelves support a pile
Of patents, licenses, diplomas, titles
From Germany, France, Spain, and Italy;
They authorize some honor; ne'ertheless
I set more store by this Erasmus sent
He trusts me; our Frobenius is his friend,
And him I raised" may, read it "from the dead."

I weary you, I see. I merely sought
To show, there's no great wonder after all
That, while I fill the class-room and attract
A crowd to Basel, I get leave to stay,
And therefore need not scruple to accept
The utmost they can offer, if I please:
For 'tis but right the world should be prepared
To treat with favor even fantastic wants
Of one like me, used up in serving her
Just as the mortal, whom the gods in part
Devoured, received in place of his lost limb
Some virtue or other — cured disease, I think;
You mind the fables we have read together.

Fest. You do not think I comprehend a word.
The time was, Aureole, you were apt enough
To clothe the airiest thoughts in specious
breath;
But surely you must feel how vague and strange
These speeches sound.

Par. Well, then: you know my hopes;
I am assured, at length, those hopes were vain;
That truth is just as far from me as ever;
That I have thrown my life away; that sorrow
On that account is idle, and further effort
To mend and patch what's marred beyond repairing,
As useless: and all this was taught your friend
By the convincing good old-fashioned method
Of force — by sheer compulsion. Is that plain?
Fest. Dear Aureole, can it be my fears were just?

God wills not . . .

Par. Now, 'tis this I most admire —
The constant talk men of your stamp keep up
Of God's will, as they style it; one would swear
Man had but merely to uplift his eye,
And see the will in question characterized
On the heaven's vault. 'Tis hardly wise to meet
Such topics: doubts are many and faith is weak,
I know as much of any will of God
As knows some dumb and tortured brute what

Man,
His stern lord, wills from the perplexing blows
That plague him every way; but there, of course,
Where least he suffers, longest he remains —
My case; and for such reasons I plod on,
Subdued but not convinced, I know as little
Why I deserve to fail, as why I hoped Better things in my youth. I simply know
I am no master here, but trained and beaten into the path I tread; and here I stay,
Until some further intimation reach me,
Like an obedient drudge. Though I prefer
To view the whole thing as a task imposed
Which, whether dull or pleasant, must be done —
Yet, I deny not, there is made provision
Of joys which tasteless jaded might affect;
Nay, some which please me too, for all my pride

Pleasures that once were pains: the iron ring
Fosterling about a slave's neck grows at length
Into the flesh it eats, I hate no longer
A host of petty vile delights, undreamed of
Or spurned before; such now supply the place
Of my dead aims: as in the autumn woods
Where tall trees used to flourish, from their roots
Springs up a fungous brood sickly and pale,
Chill mushrooms colored like a corpse's cheek.

Fest. If I interpret well your words, I own
It troubles me but little that your aims
Vast in their damping and most likely grown
Extorted, arrogantly since, have baffled you.
Perchance I am glad; you merit greater praise;
Because they are too glorious to be gained,
You do not blindly cling to them and die;
You fell, but have not sullenly refused
To rise, because an angel worsted you
In wrestling, though the world holds not your peer;
And though too harsh and sudden is the change
To yield content as yet, still you pursue
The ungracious path as though 't were rosy-straw.
'Tis well; and your reward, or soon or late,
Will come from him whom no man serves in vain.

Par. Ah, very fine! For my part, I conceive
The very passing from all further toil,
Which you find heinous, would become a seal
To the sincerity of all my deeds.
To be consistent I should die at once;
I calculated on no after-life;
Yet (how crept in, how fostered, I know not)
Here am I with as passionate regret
For youth and health and love so vainly lavished,

As if their preservation had been first
And foremost in my thoughts; and this strange fact
Humbled me wondrously, and had due force
In rendering me the less averse to follow
A certain counsel, a mysterious warning —
You will not understand — but 'twas a man
With aims not mine and yet pursued like mine
With the same fervor and no more success,
Perishing in my sight; who summoned me,
As I would shun the ghastly fate I saw,
To serve my race at once; to wait no longer
That God should interfere in my behalf,
But to distrust myself, put pride away,
And give my gains, imperfect as they were,
To men. I have not leisure to explain
How, since, a singular series of events
Has raised me to the station you behold,
Wherein I seem to turn to most account
The mere wreck of the past, — perhaps receive
Some feeble gimmering token that God views
And may approve my penance: therefore here
You find me, doing most good or least harm,
And if folks wonder much and profit little
'Tis not my fault; only, I shall rejoice
When my part in the farce is shuffled through,
And the curtain falls: I must hold out till then.

Fest. Till when, dear Aureole?

Par. Till I'm fairly thrust
From my proud eminence. Fortune is fickle
And even professors fall: should that arrive,
I see no sin in ceding to my bent.
You little fancy what rude shocks apprise us
We sin: God's intimations rather fail
In clearness than in energy: 't were well
Did they but indicate the course to take
Like that to be forsaken, I would fain
Be spared a further sample. Here I stand,
And here I stay, be sure, till forced to fit,

Fest. Be you but firm on that head! long ere then
All I expect will come to pass, I trust:
The cloud that wraps you will have disappeared.
Meantime, I see small chance of such event:
They praise you here as one whose lore, already Divulged, eclipses all the past can show.
But whose achievements, marvellous as they be,
Are faint anticipations of a glory
About to be revealed. When Basel's crowds
Dismiss their teacher, I shall be content
That he depart.

Par. This favor at their hands
I look for earlier than your view of things
Would warrant. Of the crowd you saw to-day,
Remove the full half sheer amazement draws,
More novelty, naught else; and next, the tribe
Whose innate blockish dulness just perceives
That unless miracles (as seem my works)
Be wrought in their behalf, their chance is slight
To puzzle the devil; next, the numerous set
Who bitterly hate established schools, and help
The teacher that oppugns them, till he once
Have planted his own doctrine, when the teacher
May reckon on their ranor in his turn;
Take, too, the sprinkling of sagacious knaves
Whose cunning runs not counter to the vogue
But seeks, by flattery and crafty nursing,
To force my system to a premature
Short-lived development. Why swell the list?
Each has his end to serve, and his best way
Of serving it: remove all these, remains
A scathing, a poor dozen at the best,
Worthy to look for sympathy and service.
And likely to draw profit from my pains.

Fest. This is no encouraging picture: still these few Redeem their fellows. Once the germ implanted,
Its growth, if slow, is sure.

Par. God grant it so! I would make some amends: but if I fail,
The luckless rogues have this excuse to urge,
That much is in my method and my manner,
My uncounted habits, my impatient spirit,
Which hinders of reception and result.
My doctrine: much to say, small skill to speak!
These old aims suffered not a looking-off
Though for an instant; therefore, only when I
Thus renounce them and resolved to reap
Some present fruit—to teach mankind some truth
So dearly purchased—only then I found
Such teaching was an art requiring cares
And qualities peculiar to itself:
That to possess was one thing—to display
Another, With renown first in my thoughts,
Or popular praise, I had soon discovered it:
One grows but little apt to learn these things.

Fest. If it be so, which nowise I believe,
There needs no waiting fuller dispensation
To leave a labor of so little use.
Why not throw up the irksome charge at once?

Par. A task, a task!
But wherefore hide the whole
Extent of degradation once engaged
In the confessing vein? Despite of all
My fine talk of obedience and repugnance,
Duplicity and what not, 'tis yet to learn
If when the task shall really be performed,
My inclination free to choose once more,
I shall do aught but slightly modify
The nature of the hated task I quit.
In plain words, I am spoiled; my life still tends
As first it tended; I am broken and trained.
To my old habits: they are part of me.
I know, and none so well, my darling ends
Are proved impossible: no less, no less,
Even now what humors me, fond fool, as when
Their faint ghosts sit with me and tatter me
And send me back content to my dull round?
How can I change this soil?—this apparatus
Constructed solely for their purposes,
So well adapted to their every want,
To search out and discover, prove and perfect;
This intricate machine whose most minute
And meanest motions have their charm to me.
Though to none else—an aptitude I seize,
An object I perceive, a use, a meaning.
A property, a fitness, I explain.
And I alone:—how can I change my soul?
And this wronged body, worthless save when tasked
Under that soul's dominion—used to care
For its bright master's cares and quite subdue
Its proper cravings—not to ail nor pine
So he but prosper—whither drag this poor
Tried patient body? God! how I essayed
To live like that mad poet, for a while
To love alone;—and how I felt too warped
And twisted and deformed! What should I do,
Even though released from drudgery, but return

Faint, as you see, and halting, blind and sore,
To my old life and die as I began?
I cannot feed on beauty for the sake
Of beauty only, nor can drink in balm
From lovely objects for their loveliness;
My nature cannot lose her first imprint;
I must hoard and heap and class all truths
With one ulterior purpose: I must know!
Would God translate me to his throne, believe
That I should only listen to his word
To further my own aim! For other men,
Beauty is prodigiously strewn around,
And I were happy could I quench as they
This mad and thievish longing, and content me
With beauty for itself alone: alas,
I have addressed a flock of heavy mail
Yet may not join the troop of sacred knights;
And now the forest-creatures fly from me,
The grass-banks cool, the sunbeams warm no more.
Best follow, dreaming that ere night arrive,
I shall o'ertake the company and ride
Glittering as they!

Fest. I think I apprehend
What you would say: if you, in truth, design
To enter once more on the life thus left,
Seek not to hide that all this consciousness
Of failure is assumed!

Par. My friend, my friend,
I tell, you listen; I explain, perhaps
You must stand: there our communion ends.
Have you learnt nothing from to-day's discourse?
When we would thoroughly know the sick
Man's state
We feel awhile the fluttering pulse, press soft
The hot brow, look upon the languid eye,
And thence divine the rest. Must I lay bare
My heart, hideous and beating, or tear up
My vitals for your gaze, ere you will deem Enough made known? You! who are you, forsooth?
That is the crowning operation claimed
By the arch-demonstrator—heaven the ball,
And earth the audience. Let April and you
Secure good places: 't will be worth the while.

Fest. Are you mad, Anoreis? What can I have said
To call for this? I judged from your own words.

Par. Oh, doubtless! A sick wretch desires the approbation
That mocks him from the bed-foot, and all grievously
You thither turn at once: or he recounts
The perilous journey he has late performed.
And you are puzzled much how that could be!
You find me here, half stupid and half mad;
It makes no part of my delight to search
Dear Trust,

Another's words I ponder today,

And the event is, you combine, contrast

They thoroughly conveyed all hidden here —

Here, loathsome with despair and hate and rage!

Is there no fear, no shrinking and no shame?

Will you, as I trust, let me —

Must I go deeper? Ay or no?

Fest. Dear friend...

Par. True; I am brutal — 'tis a part of it;
The plague's sign — you are not a lazar-haunter,

How should you know? Well then, you think it strange

I should profess to have failed utterly,

And yet propose an ultimate return

To courses void of hope: and this, because

You know not what temptation is, nor how

It is like to ply men in the sickliest part,

You are to understand that we who make sport

For the gods, are hunted to the end:

There is not one sharp volley shot at us,

Which 'scapeed with life, though hurt, we slacken pace

And gather by the wayside herbs and roots

To staunch our wounds, secure from further harm.

We are assailed to life's extremest verge.

It will be well indeed if I return,

A harmless busy fool, to my old ways!

I would forget hints of another fate,

Significant enough, which silent hours

Have lately scared me with.

Fest. Another! and what?

Par. After all, Festus, you say well: I am

A man yet: I need never humble me.

I would have been — something, I know not what;

But though I cannot soar, I do not crawl,

There are worse portions than this one of mine.

You say well!

Fest. Ah!

Par. And deeper degradation!

If the mean stimulants of vulgar praise

If vanity should become the chosen food

Of a sunk mind, should stille even the wish

To find its early aspirations true,

Should teach it to breathe falsehood like life-breath —

An atmosphere of craft and trick and lies;

Should make it proud to emulate, surpass

Base natures in the practices which woke

Its most indignant loathing once ... No, no!

Utter damnation is reserved for hell!

I had immortal feelings; such shall never

Be wholly quenched: no, no!

My friend, you wear

A melancholy face, and certain 'tis

There 's little cheer in all this dismal work.

But was it my desire to set abroach

Such memories and forebodings? I foresaw

Where they would drive. 'T were better we discuss

News from Lucerne or Zurich; ask and tell

Of Egypt's flaring sky or Spain's cork-groves.

Fest. I have thought: trust me, this mood will pass away!

I know you and the lofty spirit you bear,

And easily ravel out a clue to all.

These are the trials meet for such as you,

Nor must you hope exemption; to be mortal

Is to be pelted with trials manifold,

Look round! The obstacles which kept the rest

From your ambition, have been spurned by you;

Their fears, their doubts, the chains that bind them all,

Were flax before your resolute soul, which naught

Avails to aye save these delusions bred

From its own strength, its selfsame strength disguised,

Mocking itself. Be brave, dear Aureole! Since

The rabbit has his shade to frighten him,

The fawn a rustling bough, mortals their cares,

And higher natures yet would slight and laugh

At these entangling fantasies, as you

At trammels of a weaker intellect,

Measure your mind's height by the shade it casts!

I know you.

Par. And I know you, dearest Festus!

And how you love unworthily; and how

All admiration renders blind,

Fest. You hold

That admiration blinds?

Par. Ay and alas!

Fest. Naught blinds you less than admiration, friend!

Whether it be that all love renders wise

In its degree; from love which blends with love —

Heart answering heart — to love which spends itself

In silent mad idolatry of some

Pre-eminent mortal, some great soul of souls.

Which ne'er will know how well it is adored.

I say, such love is never blind; but rather

Alive to every minutest spot

Which mars its object, and which hate (supposed

So vigilant and searching) dreams not of Love broods on such: what then? When first perceived

Is there no sweet strife to forget, to change,

To overload those blemishes with all

The glow of general goodness they disturb?

— To make those very defects an endless source

Of new affection grown from hopes and fears?

And, when all fails, is there no gallant stand

Made even for much proved weak? no shrinking-back

Lest, since all love assimilates the soul

To what it loves, it should at length become

Almost a rival of its idol? Trust me,

If there be flocks who seek to work our hurt,

To ruin and drag down earth's mightiest spirits

Even at God's foot, 't will be from such as love,

Their zeal will gather most to serve their cause;

And least from those who hate, who most essay

By contumely and scorn to blot the light

Which forces entrance even to their hearts:

For thence will our defender tear the veil

And show within each heart, as in a shrine,

The giant image of perfection, grown
In hate's despite, whose calumnies were spawned
In the untroubled presence of its eyes.
True admiration blinds not; nor am I
So blind. I call your sin exceptional;
It springs from one whose life has passed the bounds
Prescribed to life. Compound that fault with God!
I speak of men; to common men like me
The weakness you reveal endears you more,
Like the far traces of decay in suns,
And did you have good cheer?
Par. Proclaim! Optime!
Think of a quiet mountain-cloistered priest
Instructing Paracelsus! yet 't is so.
Come, I will show you where my merit lies.
'Tis in the advance of individual minds
That the slow crowd should ground their expectation
Eventually to follow: as the sea
Waits ages in its bed till some one wave
Out of the multitudinous mass, extends
The empire of the whole, some feet perhaps, Over the strip of sand which could confine
Its fellows so long time: thenceforth the rest.
Even to the meanest, hurry in at once,
And so much is clear gained. I shall be glad
If all my labors, failing of aught else,
Suffice to make such inroad and procure
A wider range for thought: nay, they do this;
For, whatsoever my notions of true knowledge
And a legitimate success, may be.
I am not blind to my undervalued rank
When classed with others: I precede my age:
And whose wills is very free to mount
These labors as a platform whence his own
May have a prosperous outset. But, alas! My followers — they are noisy as you heard;
But, for intelligence, the best of them
So clumsily wield the weapons I supply
And they extol, that I begin to doubt
Whether their own rude clubs and pebble-stones
Would not do better service than my arms
Thus violently — if ever will not fail
Sooner before the old awkward batters Than my more subtle warfare, not half learned.
Fest. I would supply that art, then, or withhold
New arms until you teach their mystery.
Par. Content you, 'tis my wish; I have recourse
To the simplest training. Day by day I seek
To wake the mood, the spirit which alone
Can make those arms of any use to men.
Of course they are for swaggering forth at once
Graced with Ulysses' bow, Achilles' shield —
Flash on us, all in armor, then Achilles!
Make our hearts dance to thy resounding step!
A proper sight to scare the crows away!
Fest. Pity you choose not then some other method
Of coming at your point. The marvelous art
At length established in the world bids fair
To remedy all hindrances like these: Trust to Prasenus' press the precious lore
Obscured by nuncupation manner, or unfit
For raw beginners; let his types secure
A deathless monument to after-time;
Meanwhile wait confidently and enjoy
The ultimate effect: sooner or later
You shall be all-revealed.
Par. The old dull question
In a new form; no more. Thus: I possess
Two sorts of knowledge: one — vast, shadowy.
Hints of the unbounded aim I once pursued:
The other consists of many secrets, caught
While bent on nobler prize. — perhaps a few
Prime principles which may conduct to much:
These last I offer to my followers here.
Now, bid me chronicle the first of these,
My ancient study, and in effect you bid
Revert to the wild courses just abjured:
I must go find them scattered through the world.
Then, for the principles, they are so simple
Being chiefly of the overturning sort,
That one time is as proper to propound them
As any other — to-morrow at my class,
Or half a century hence embalmed in print.
For if mankind intend to learn at all,
They must begin by giving faith to them
And acting on them: and I do not see
But that my lectures serve indifferent well:
No doubt these dogmas fall not to the earth,
For all their novelty and rugged setting.
I think my class will not forget the day
I let them know the gods of Israel,
Aetius, Orbisius, Galen, Rhasis,
Serapion, Avicenna, Averroës,
Were blocks!
Fest. And that reminds me, I heard something
About your waywardness: you burned their books.
It seems, instead of answering those sages.
Par. And who said that?
Fest. Some one met yesternight
With Ecolampadius. As you know, the purpose
Of this short stay at Basel was to learn
His pleasure touching certain missives sent
For our Zuinglius and himself. 'T was he Apprised me that the famous teacher here
Was my old friend.
Par. Ah, I forgot: you went . . .
Fest. From Zurich with advice for the ear
Of Luther, now at Wittenberg — you know,
I make no doubt, the differences of late
With Carameladins) — and returning sought
Basel and . . .
Par. I remember. Here's a case, now.
Will teach you why I answer not, but burn
The books you mention. Pray, does Luther dream
His arguments convince by their own force
The crowds that own his doctrine? No, indeed!
His plain denial of established points
Ages had sanctified and men supposed
Could never be oppugned while earth was under
And heaven above them — points which chance or time
Affected not — did more than the array
Of argument which followed. Boldly deny!
There is much breath-stopping, hair-stiffening
Awhile; then, amazed glances, mute awaiting
The thunderbolt which does not come; and next,
Reproachful wonder and inquiry: those
Who else had never stirred, are able now.
To find the rest out for themselves, perhaps
To outstrip him who set the whole at work,
— As never will my wise class its instructor,
And you saw Luther?

"Fest."
"'Tis a wondrous soul!
'T is true: the so-heavy chain which galled mankind
Is shattered, and the noblest of us all
Must how to the deliverer—may, the worker
Of our own project—we who long before
Had burst our trammels, but forgot the crowd,
We should have taught, still groaned beneath their load:
This he has done and nobly. Speed that may!
Whatever be my chance or my mischance,
What benefits mankind must glad me too;
And men seem made, though not as I believed,
For something better than the times produce.
Witness these gangs of peasants your new lights
From Suabia have possessed, whom Münzer leads,
And whom the duke, the landgrave and the elector
Will cahn in blood! Well, well; 't is not my world!

"Fest."
"Hark!"

"Par."
'Tis the melancholy wind astir
Within the trees; the embers too are gray:
Morn must be near.

"Fest."
Best ope the casement; see,
The night, late strewn with clouds and flying stars,
Is blank and motionless; how peaceful sleep
The tree-tops altogether! Like an asp,
The wind slips whispering from bough to bough.

"Par."
Aye; you would gaze on a wind-shaken tree
By the hour, nor count time lost.

"Fest."
So you shall gaze;
Those happy times will come again.

"Par."
When, gone, gone,
Those pleasant times! Does not the meaning wind
Seem to bewail that we have gained such gains
And bartered sleep for them?

"Fest."
It is our trust
That there is yet another world to mend
All error and mischance.

"Par."
Another world!
And why this world, this common world, to be
A make-shift, a mere foil, how fair soever,
To some fine life to come? Man must be fed
With angels' food, forsooth; and some few traces
Of a diviner nature which look out
Through his corporeal baseness, warrant him
In a supreme contempt of all provision
For his inferior tastes—some strangling marks
Which constitute his essence, just as truly
As here and there a gem would constitute
The rock, their barren bed, one diamond.
But were it so—we were man all mind— he gains
A station little enviable. From God
Down to the lowest spirit ministrant,
Intelligence exists which casts our mind
Into immeasurable shade. No, no:
Love, hope, fear, faith—these make humanity;
These are its sign and note and character.

And these I have lost!—gone, shut from me
forever.
Like a dead friend safe from unkindness more!
See, morn at length. The heavy darkness seems Diffrt, gray and clear without the stars;
The shrubs bestir and rouse themselves as if
Some snake, that weighed them down all night, let go
His hold; and from the East, fuller and fuller
Day, like a mighty river, flowing in;
But clouded, wintry, desolate and cold.
Yet see how that broad prickly star-shaped plant,
Half-down in the crevice, spreads its woolly
leaves
All thick and glistening with diamond dew.
And you depart for Einsiedeln this day,
And we have spent all night in talk like this!
If you would have me better for your love,
Revert no more to these sad themes.

"Fest."
One favor,
And I have done. I leave you, deeply moved;
Unwilling to have fared so well, the while
My friend has changed so sorely. If this mood
Shall pass away, if light once more arise
Where all is darkness now, if you see fit
To hope and trust again, and strive again,
You will remember—not our love alone—
But that my faith in God's desire that man
Should trust on his support, (as I must think
You trust d) is obscured and dim through you:
For you are thus, and this is no reward.
Will you not call me to your side, dear Aureole?

IV. PARACELSIUS ASPIRES

Scene, Colmar in Alsatia: on Inn. 1528.

Paracelsus, Festus.

"Par. (to Johannes Oporinus, his Secretary).
Sic itur ad astra! Dear Von Visenberg
Is scandalized, and poor Torinus paralyzed.
And every honest soul that Basel holds
Aghast; and yet we live, as one may say,
Just as though Liechtenfels had never set
So true a value on his sorry carcass,
And learned Pütter had not crowned us dumb.
We live; and shall as surely start to-morrow
For Nuremberg, as we drink speedy seathing
To Basel in the mulling wine, suffused
A delicate blush, no fainter tinge is born
T he shut heart of a bud. Pledge me, good John—"

"Basel; a hot plague ravage it, and Pütter Oppose the plague!" Even so? Do you too share
Their panic, the reptiles? Ha, ha; faint through these Desist for these! They manage matters so
At Basel, 't is like: but others may find means
To bring the stoutest braggit of the tribe.
Once more to crouch in silence—means to breed
A stupid wonder in each food again.
Now big with admiration at the skill
Which stripit a vain pretender of his phylums;
And, that done,—means to brand each shabby
brow
So deeply, surely, ineffaceably,
That henceforth flattery shall not pucker it
Out of the furrow; there that stamp shall stay
To show the next they fawn on, what they are,
This Basel with its magnates, — fill my cup,
Whom I curse soul and limb. And now dispatch,
Dispatch, my trusty John; and what remains
To do, whate'er arrangements for our trip
Are yet to be completed, see you hasten
This night; we'll weather the storm at least:
— to-morrow.

For Nunzianberg! Now leave us; this grave clerk
Has divers weighty matters for my ear:

(ORPHEUS goes out.)

And spare my lugs. At last, my gallant Festus,
I am rid of this arch-knave that dogs my heels
As a gaunt crow a gasping sheep; at last
May give a loose to my delight. How kind,
How very kind, my first best only friend!
Why, this looks like fidelity. Embrace me!
Not a hair silvered yet? Right: you shall live
Till I am worth your love; you shall be proud,
And — but let time show! Did you not wonder?
I sent to you because our compact weighed
Upon my conscience — (you recall the night)
At Basel, which the gods confound! — because Once more I aspire. I call you to my side:
You come. You thought my message strange?

Fest. So strange
That I must hope, indeed, your messenger
Has mingled his own fancies with the words
Purporting to be yours.

Par. He said no more.
'T is probable, than the precious folk I leave
Said fiftyfold more roughly. Welladay,
'T is true! poor Paracelsus is exposed
At last; a most egregious quack he proves:
And those he overreached must spit their hate
On one who, utterly beneath contempt,
Could yet deceive their topping wits. You heard
Bare truth: and at my bidding you come here
To speed me on my enterprise, as once
Your lavish wishes sped me, my own friend!

Fest. What is your purpose, Argus?

Par. Oh, for purpose,
There is no lack of precedents in a case
Like mine; at least, if not precisely mine,
The case of men cast off by those they sought
To benefit.

Fest. They really cast you off?
I only heard a vague tale of some priest,
Cured by your skill, who wrangled at your claim.
Knowing his life's worth best; and how the judge
The matter was referred to saw no cause
To interfere, nor you to hide your full
Contempt of him; nor he, again, to smother
His wrath thereat, which raised so fierce a flame
That Basel soon was made no place for you.

Par. The affair of Liechtenfels? the shallow lover false,
The last and wildest outrage — mere pretence!
I knew it. I foretold it from the first,
How soon the stupid wonder you mistook
For genuine loyalty — a cheering promise
Of better things to come — would pall and pass;
And every word comes true. Soul is among
The prophets! Just so long as I was pleased
To play off the mere antics of my art,
Fantastic gambols leading to no end,
I got huge praise: but one can never keep down
Our foolish nature's weakness. There they flocked.
Poor devils, jostling, swearing and perspiring.
I'll fill the walls rang again; and all for me!
I had a kindness for whom he was right;
But then I stopped not till I tacked to that
A trust in them and a respect — a sort
Of sympathy for them; I must needs begin
To teach them, not amaze them, 'to impart
The spirit which should instigate the search
Of truth,' just what you bade me! I spoke out,
Forthwith a mighty squadron, in disgust,
Filed off — "the sifted chaff of the sack," I said,
Redoubling my endeavors to secure
The rest. When lo! one man had tarried so long
Only to ascertain if I supported
This tenet of his, or that; another loved
To hear impartially before he judged,
And having heard, now judged; this bland disciple
Passed for my dupe, but all along, it seems,
Spied error where his neighbors marvelled most;
That fiery doctor who had haled me friend,
Did it because my by-paths, on proved wrong
And beaconed properly, would commend again
The good old ways our sires jogged safely over,
Though not their squinamish sons; the other worthy Discovered divers verses of St. John,
Which, read successively, refreshed the soul,
But, muttered backwards, cured the gout, the stone,
The coca and what not. Quid multo? The end
Was a clear class-room, and a quiet leer
From grave folk, and a sour reproachful glance
From those inclined to whom ran once and installed
The new professor scarce a year before;
And a vast flourish about patient merit
Obscured awhile by flushy tricks, but sure
Sooner or later to emerge in splendor —
Of which the example was some luckless wight
Whom my arrival had discomfited.
But now, it seems, the general voice recalled
To fill my chair and so efface the stain
Basel had long incurred. I sought no better.
Only a quiet dismissal from my post.
And from my heart I wished them better suited
And better served. Good night to Basel, then!
But fast as I proposed to rid the tribe
Of my obnoxious back, I could not spare them
The pleasure of a parting kick.

Fest. You smile.

Par. Deepen them as they merit!

If I smile,
'T is with as very contempt as ever turned Flesh into stone. This courteous recompense
This grateful . . . Festus, were your nature fit
To be defiled, your eyes the eyes to ache
At gangrene-blotches, eating poison-blains,
The ulcerous barfly scurf of leprosy
Which finds—a man, and leaves—a hideous thing
That cannot but be mended by hell-fire,
—I would lay bare to you the human heart
Which God cursed long ago, and devils make since.
Their nest pet and their never-tiring home,
Oh, sages have discovered we are born
For various ends—to love, to know: has ever
One stumbled, in his search, on any signs
Of a nature in us formed to hate? To hate?
If that be our true object which evokes
Our powers in fullest strength, be sure 'tis hate!
Yet men have doubted if the best and bravest
Of spirits can nourish him with hate alone.
I had not the monopoly of fools,
It seems, at Basel.
Fest. But your plans, your plans!
I have yet to learn your purpose, Aureole!
Par. Whether to sink beneath such ponderous shame,
To shrunk up like a crushed snail, undergo
In silence and desist from further toil,
And so subside into a monument
Of one their censure blasted? or to bow
Cheerfully as submissively, to lower
My old pretensions even as Basel dictates,
To drop into the rank her wits assign me
And live as they prescribe, and make that use
Of my poor knowledge which their rules allow,
 Proud to be patted now and then, and careful
To practise the true posture for receiving
The amplest benefit from their hoofs' appliance
When they shall condescend to tutor me?
Then, one may feel resentment like a flame
Within, and deck false systems in truth's garb,
And tangle and entwine mankind with error,
And give them darkness for a dower and falsehood.
For a possession, ages: or one may mope
Into a shade through thinking, or else drowse
Into a dreamless sleep and so die off.
But I,—now Festus shall divine!—but I
Am merely setting out once more, embracing
My earliest aims again! What thinks he now?
Fest. Your aims? the aims?—to Know?
And where is found
The early trust...
Par. Nay, not so fast; I say,
The aims—not the old means. You know they made me
A pin-money-stock; I was a fool; you know
The when and the how: hardly those means
again!
Not but they had their beauty; who should know
Their passing beauty, if not I? Still, dreams
They were, so let them vanish, yet in beauty
If that may be. Stay: thus they pass in song!

[He sings.

Heap cassia, sandal-buds and stripes
Of labdanum, and aloe-balls,
Smeared with distilled Indian wipes
From out her hair: such balsam falls
Down sea-side mountain pedestals,

From tree-tops where tired winds are tain,
Spent with the vast and howling main,
To treasure half their island-gain.

And strew faint sweetness from some old
Egyptian's fine worm-eaten shroud
Which breaks to dust when once unrolled;
Or shredded perfume, like a cloud
From closet long to quiet vowed,
With muffled and dropping arras hung,
Monderling her hate and threats among.
As when a queen, long dead, was young.

Mine, every word! And on such pile shall die
My lovely fancies, with fair perished things,
Themselves fair and forgotten; yes, forgotten,
Or why abjure them? So, I made this rhyme
That fitting dignity might be preserved;
No little proud was I! through the list of drugs
Smacks of my old vocation, and the verse
Halts like the best of Luther's psalms.
Fest. But, Aureole,
Talk not thus wildly and madly. I am here—
Did you know all? I have travelled far, indeed,

To learn your wishes. Be yourself again!
For in this mood I recognize you less
Than in the horrible despondency
I witnessed last. You may account this, joy;
But rather let me gaze on that despair.
Then hear these incoherent words and see
This flashed check and intensely-sparkling eye.
Par. Why, man, I was light-hearted in my prime,
I am light-hearted now; what would you have?
April was a poet, I make songs
'Tis the very anguish of success I want!
Why should I not be joyous now as then?
Fest. Joyous! and how? and what remains for joy?
You have declared the ends (which I am sick
Of naming) are impracticable.
Par. Ay,
Pursued as I pursued them—the arch-fool.
Listen: my plan will please you not, 'tis like
But you are little versed in the world's ways
This is my plan—first drinking its good luck,
I will accept all helps; all I despised
So rashly at the outset, equally
With early impulses, late years have quenched:
I have tried each way singly: now for both!
All helps! no one sort shall exclude the rest.
I seek to know and to enjoy at once,
Not one without the other as before.
Suppose my labor should seem God's own cause
Once more, as first I dreamed,—it shall not baff me
Of the meanest earthiest sensualist delight
That may be snatched; for every joy is gain,
And gain is gain, however small. My soul
Can die then, nor be taunted—"what was gained?"
Nor, on the other hand, should pleasure follow
As though I had not spurned her lithereto,
Shall she o'ercloud my spirit's rapt communion
With the tumultuous past, the teeming future,
Glorious with visions of a full success.
Fest. Success!
And I hush—mind his I the When I was best, my youth
Unwasted, seemed success not surest too?
It is the nature of darkness to obscure.
I am a wanderer: I remember well
One journey, how I feared the track was missed,
So long the city I desired to reach
Lay hid; when suddenly its spires afar
Flashed through the circling clouds; you may conceive
My transport. Soon the vapors closed again,
But I had seen the city, and one such glance
No darkness could obscure; nor shall the present
A few dull hours, a passing shame or two,
Destroy the vivid memories of the past.
I will fight the battle out; a little spent—
Perhaps, but still an able combatant.
You look at my gray hair and furrowed brow?
But I can turn even weakness to account:
Of many tricks I know, 'tis not the least
To push the ruins of my frame, whereon
The fire of vigor trembles scarce alive,
Into a heap, and send the flame aloft.
What should I do with age? So, sickness lends
An aid; it being I fear, the source of all
We boast of: mind is nothing but disease,
And natural health is ignorance.
I see
Fest. But one good symptom in this notable scheme,
I feared your sudden journey had in view
To wreak immediate vengeance on your foes.
'T is not so: I am glad.
Par. And if I please
To spit on them, to trample them, what then?
'T is sorry warfare truly, but the fools
Provoke it. those that ever bade me soften it,
But if they must provoke me, cannot suffer
Forbearance on my part, if I may keep
No quality in the shade, must needs put forth
Power to match power, my strength against their strength,
And teach them their own game with their own arms—
Why, be it so and let them take their chance!
I am above them like a god; there's no hiding the fact:
what idle scriples, then,
Were those that ever bade me soften it,
Communicate it gently to the world,
Instead of proving my supremacy,
Taking my natural station o'er their head,
Then owning all the glory was a man's!—
And in my elevation man's would be,
But live and learn, though life's short, learning hard!
And therefore, though the wreck of my past self,
I fear, dear Pütter, that your lecture-room
Must wait awhile for its best ornament,
The penitent empiric, who set up
For somebody, but soon was taught his place;
Now, but too happy to be let confess
His error. snuff the candles, and illustrate (Fiat experientia corpore vit.)
Your medicine's soundness in his person. Wait, Good Pütter!

Fest. He who sneers thus, is a god!
Par. Ay, ay, laugh at me! I am very glad
You are not galled by all this swaggering; you
Can see the root of the matter! how I strive
To put a good face on the overthrow
I have experienced, and to bury and hide
My degradation in its length and breadth;
How the mean motives I would make you think
Just mingle as is due with nobler aims,
The appetites I modestly allow
May influence me as being mortal still—
Do good me, drive me on, and fast supplant
My youth's desires. You are no stupid dupe:
You find me out! Yes, I had sent for you
To calm these childish lies upon you, Festus!
Laugh—you shall laugh at me.
Fest. The past, then, Aureole,
Proves nothing? Is our interchange of love
Yet to begin? Have I to swear I mean
No flattery in this speech or that? For you,
What'er you say, there is no degradation;
These low thoughts are no inmates of your mind.
Or wherefore this disorder? You are vexed
As much by the intrusion of base views,
Familiar to your adversaries, as they
Were troubled should your qualities alight
Amid their murky souls: not otherwise,
A stray wolf which the winter forces down
From our bleak hills, suffices to affright
A village in the vales—while foresters
Sleep calm, though all night long the famished troop
Snuff round and scratch against their crazy hats.
These evil thoughts are monsters, and will flee.
Par. May you be happy, Festus, my own friend!
Fest. Nay, further; the delights you fail would think
The superciders of your noble aims,
Though ordinary and harmless stimulants,
Will never content you, . . .
Par. Hush! I once despised them
But that soon passes. We are high at first
In our demand, nor will abate a jot
Of toil's strict value; but time passes o'er,
And humber spirits accept what we refuse:
In short, when some such comfort is doled out
As these delights, we cannot long retain Bitter contempt which urges us at first
To hurl it back, but long it to our breast
And thankfully retire. This life of mine
Must be lived out and a grave thoroughly earned:
I am just fit for that and naught beside.
I told you once, I cannot now enjoy,
Unless I deem my knowledge gains through joy;
Nor can I know, but straight warm tears reveal
My need of linking also joy to knowledge:
So, on I drive, enjoying all I can,
And knowing all I can. I speak, of course,
Confusedly; this will better explain—feel here
Quick beating, is it not?—a fire of the heart
To work off some way, this as well as any.
So, Festus sees me fairly launched; his calm
Compassionate look might have disturbed my conce.
But now, far from rejecting, I invite
What bids me press the closer, lay myself
Open before him, and be soothed with pity;
I hope, if he command hope, and believe
As he directs me—satisfying myself
With his enduring love. And Festus quits me
To give place to some credulous disciple
Who holds that God is wise, but Paracelsus
Has his peculiar merits: I sink in
That homage, chuckle o'er that admiration,
And then dismiss the fool; for night is come,
And I betake myself to study again,
Till patient searchings after hidden lore
Half wring some bright truth from its prison;
my frame
Trembles, my forehead's veins swell out, my hair
Tingles for triumph. Slow and sure the morn
Shall break on my pent room and dwindling lamp
And furnace dead, and scattered earths and ores;
When, with a failing heart and throbbing brow,
I must review my captured truth, sum up
Its value, trace what ends to what begins,
Its present power with its eventual bearings,
Latent affinities, the views it opens,
And its full length in perfecting my scheme.
I view it sternly circumscribed, cast down
From the high place my fond hopes yielded it.
Proved worthless—which, in getting, yet had cost
Another wrench to this fast-falling frame.
Then, quick, the cup to quaff, that chases sorrow!
I lapse back into youth, and take again
My fluttering pulse for evidence that God
Means good to me, will make my cause his own,
Soo! I have cast off this remorseless care
Which clogged a spirit born to soar so free,
And my dim chamber has become a tent,
Festus is sitting by me, and his Michael...
Why do you start? I say, she listening here.
(For yonder—Würzburg through the orchard-bough!)
Motions as though such ardent words should find
No echo in a maiden's quiet soul,
But her pure bosom heaves, her eyes fill fast
With tears, her sweet lips tremble all the while!
Ha, ha!
Fest. It seems, then, you expect to reap
No unreal joy from this your present course,
But rather...
Par. Death! To die! I owe that much
To what, at least, I was. I should be sad
To live contented after such a fall.
To thrive and fatten after such reverse!
The whole plan is a makeshift, but will last
My time.
Fest. And you have never mused and said,
"I had a noble purpose, and the strength
To compass it; but I have stopped halfway,
And wrongly given the first-fruits of my toil
To objects little worthy of the gift.
Why linger round them still? why chafe my fault?
Why seek for consolation in defeat,
In vain endeavors to derive a beauty
From ugliness? why seek to make the most
Of what no power can change, nor strive instead
With mighty effort to redeem the past
And, gathering up the treasures thus cast down.
To hold a steadfast course till I arrive
At their fit destination and my own?"
You have never pondered thus?
Par. Have I, you ask?
Often at midnight, when most fancies come,
Would some such airy project visit me:
But ever at the end... or will you hear
The same thing in a tale, a parable?
You and I, wandering over the world wide.
Chance to set foot upon a desert coast.
Just as we cry, "No human voice before Broke the inverter silence of these rocks!"
—Their querulous echo startles us; we turn:
What ravaged structure still looks o'er the sea?
Some characters remain, too! While we read,
The sharp salt wind, impatient for the last
Of even this record, wistfully comes and goes,
Or sings what we recover, mocking it.
This is the record; and my voice, the wind's.
[He sings.]

Over the sea our galleys went,
With cleaving prows in order brave
To a speeding wind and a bounding wave
A gallant armament:
Each bark built out of a forest-tree
Left leafy and rough as first it grew,
And nailed all over the gapping sides.
Within and without, with black ball-hides.
Seethed in fat and splashed in flame,
To hear the playful billows' game;
So, each good ship was rude to see,
Rude and bare to the outward view.
But each upborne a stately tent
Where cedar pales in scented row
Kept out the flakes of the dancing brine,
And an awning drooped the mast below.
In fold on fold of the purple fine,
That neither noontide nor starshine
Nor moonlight cold which maketh mad,
Might pierce the regal tenement.
When the sun dawned, oh, gay and glad
We set the sail and plied the oar;
But when the night-wind blew like breath.
For joy of one day's voyage more,
We sung together on the wide sea,
Like men at peace on a peaceful shore;
Each sail was loosed to the wind so free,
Each helm made sure by the twilight star.
And in a sleep as calm as death,
We, the voyagers from afar,
Lay stretched along, each weary crew
In a circle round its wondrous tent
Whence gleamed soft light and curled rich scent,
And with light and perfume, music too:
So the stars wheeled round, and the darkness past,
And at morn we started beside the mast,
And still each ship was sailing fast.
Now, one morn, land appeared—a speck
Dim trembling betwixt sea and sky:
"Avoid it," cried our pilot, "check
The shunt, restrain the eager eye!"
But the heaving sea was black behind
Paracelsus

For many a night and many a day,
And land, though but a rock, drew nigh;
So, we broke the cedar pales away,
Let the purple awning flap in the wind,
And a statue bright was on every deck!

We shouted, every man of us,
And steered right into the harbor thus,
With pomp and strain glorious.

A hundred shapes of lucid stone!
All day we built its shrine for each,
A shrine of rock for every one,
Nor paused till in the westering sun.
We sat together on the beach
To sing because our task was done.
When lo! what shouts and merry songs!
What laughter all the distance stirs!
A loaded raft with happy throes
Of gentle island-es!

"Our isles are just at hand," they cried.
"Like cloudlets faint in even sleeping.
Our temple-gates are opened wide.
Our olive-groves thick shade are keeping
For these majestic forms" — they cried.
Oh, then we awoke with sudden start
From our deep dream, and knew, too late,
How bare the rock, how desolate,
Which had received our precious freight:
Yet we called out — "Depart!
Our gifts, once given, must here abide.
Our work is done; we have no heart
To mar our work," — we cried.

Fest. In truth?

Par. Nay, wait: all this in tracings faint
On rugged stones strewed here and there, but piled
In order once: then follows — mark what follows!

"The sad rhyme of the men who proudly chung
To their first fault, and withered in their pride."

Fest. Come back then, Aureole; as you fear
God, come!

This is foul sin; come back! Renounce the past,
Forswear the future; look for joy no more,
But wait death's summons amid holy sights,
And trust me for the event — peace, if not joy.
Return with me to Einsiedeln, dear Aureole!

Par. No way, no way! it would not turn to goad
A spotless child sleeps on the flowering moss
'Tis well for him; but when a sinful man,
Envyng such slumber, may desire to put
His guilt away, shall he return at once
To rest by lying there? Our sires knew well
(Spite of the grave discoveries of their sons)
The fitting course for such: dark cells, dim lamps,
A stone floor one may writhe on like a worm:
No mossy pillow blue with violet's!

Fest. I see no symptom of these absolute
And tyrannous passions. You are calmer now.
This verse-making can purge you well enough.
Without the terrible penance you describe.
You love me still: the lusts you fear will never Outrage your friend. To Einsiedeln, once more!
Say but the word!

Par. No, no; those lusts forbid:

They crouch, I know, cowering with half-shut eye
Beside you; 't is their nature. Thrust yourself
Between them and their prey; let some fool
Style me

Or king or quack, it matters not — then try
Your wisdom, urge them to forgo their treat!
No, my; learn better and look deeper. Festus!
If you knew how a devil sneers within me
While you are talking now of this, now that,
As though we differed scarcely save in trivles!

Fest. Do we so differ? True, change must proceed.
Whether for good or ill; keep from me, which!
Do not confide all secrets: I was born
To hope, and you...

Par. To trust: you know the fruits!

Fest. Listen: I do believe, what you call trust
Was self-delusion at the best: for, see!
So long as God would kindly pioneer
A path for you, and screen you from the world.
Procure you full exemption from man's lot,
Man's common hopes and fears, on the mere pretext

Of your engagement in his service — yield you
A limitless license, make you God, in fact.
And turn your slave — you were content to say
Most courtly praises! What is it, at last,
But selfishness without example? None
Could trace God's will so plainly as you, while yours
Remained implied in it; but now you fail,
And we, who prate about that will, are fools!
In short, God's service is established here
As he determines fit, and not your way,
And this you cannot brook. Such discontent
Is weak. Renounce all creatureship at once!
Affirm an absolute right to have and use
Your energies; as though the rivers should say —
"We rush to the ocean; what have we to do
With feeding streamlets, lingering in the vales.
Sleeping in lazy pools?" Set up that plea,
That will be bold at least!

Par. 'Tis like enough.
The serviceable spirits are those, no doubt,
The East produces: lo, the master bids —
They wake, raise terraces and garden-grounds
In one night's space; and, this done, straight begin

Another century's sleep, to the great praise
Of him that framed them wise and beautiful.
Till a lamp's rubbing, or some chance akin.
Wake them again. I am of different mould.
I would have soothed my lord, and slaved for him
And done him service past my narrow bond.
And thus I get rewarded for my pains!

Par. Beside, 'tis vain to talk of forwarding
God's glory otherwise: this is alone

The sphere of its increase, as far as men
Increase it; why, then, look beyond this sphere?
We are his glory; and if we be glorious.
Is not the thing achieved?

Fest. Shall one like me
Judge hearts like yours? Though years have changed you much,
And you have left your first love, and retain
PARACELSUS

Its empty shade to veil your crooked ways,
Yet I still hold that you have honored God.

And who shall call your course without reward?
For, wherefore this repining at defeat
Had triumph ne'er inured you to high hopes?
I urge you to forsake the life you curse,
And what success attends me? — simply talk
Of passion, weakness and remorse; in short,
Anything but the naked truth — you choose
This so-despised career, and cheaply hold
My happiness, or rather other men's.

Once more, return!

Par. And quickly. John the thief

Has pilled half my secrets by this time:
And we depart by daybreak. I am weary,
I know not how; not even the wine-cup soothes
My brain to-night . . .

Do you not thoroughly despise me, Festus?
No flattery! One like you needs not be told
We live and breathe deceiving and deceived.
Do you not scorn me from your heart of hearts,
Me and my cant, each petty subterfuge,
My rhymes and all this frothy shower of words,
My glozing self-deceit, my outward crust
Of lies which wrap, as better, morphew, furfur
Wrap the sound flesh? — so, see you flatter not!
Even God flatters: but my friend, at least,
Is true. I would depart, secure henceforth
Against all further insult, hate and wrong
From puny foes; my one friend's scorn shall brand me:

No fear of sinking deeper!

Fest. No, dear Aureole!

Par. No, no; I came to counsel faithfully,
There are old rules, made long ere we were born,

By which I judge you. I, so fallible,
So infinitely low beside your mighty
Majestic spirit! — even I can see
You own some higher law than ours which call
Sin, what is no sin — weakness, what is strength.
But I have only these, such as they are,
To guide me; and I blame you where they bid,
Only so long as blam ing promises
To win peace for your soul: the more, that sorrow

Has fallen on me of late and they have helped me
So that I faint not under my distress,
But wherefore should I scruple to avow
In spite of all, as brother judging brother,
Your fate is most inexplicable to me?
And should you perish without recompense
And satisfaction yet — too hastily
I have relied on love: you may have sinned,
But you have loved. As a mere human matter —

As I would have God deal with fragile men
In the end — I say that you will triumph yet!

Par. Have you felt sorrow, Festus? —'tis because
You love me. Sorrow, and sweet Michal yours!
Well thought on: never let her know this last
Dull winding-up of all: these miscreants dared
Insult me — me she loved: — so, grieve her not!

Fest. Your ill success can little grieve her now.

Par. Michal is dead! pray Christ we do not craze!

Fest. Aureole, dear Aureole, look not on me thus!
Fool, fool! this is the heart grown sorrow-
proof —
I cannot bear those eyes.

Par. Nay, really dead?

Fest. 'Tis scarce a month.

Par. Stone dead! — then you have laid her Among the flowers ere this. Now, do you
know,
I can reveal a secret which shall comfort
Even you. I have no julep, as men think.
To cheat the grave; but a far better secret.
Know, then, you did not ill to trust your love
To the cold earth: I have thought much of it:
For I believe we do not wholly die.

Fest. Aureole!

Par. Nay, do not laugh; there is a reason
For what I say: I think the soul can never Taste death. I am, just now, as you may see,
Very unfit to put so strange a thought
In an intelligible dress of words;
But take it as my truth, she is not dead.

Fest. But not on this account alone? you surely,

—Aureole, you have believed this all along?

Par. And Michal sleeps among the roots and dews,
While I am moved at Basel, and full of schemes
For Nuremberg, and hoping and despairing,
As though it mattered how the farce plays out,
So it be quickly played. Away, away!
Have your will, rabble! while we fight the prize,
Troop you in safety to the snug back-seats
And leave a clear arena for the brave
About to perish for your sport! — Behold!

V. PARACELSUS ATTAINS

SCENE, Salzburg: a cell in the Hospital of St. Sebastian. 1541.

Festus, Paracelsus.

Fest. No change! The weary night is well-nigh spent,
The lamp burns low, and through the casement-bars
Gray morning glimmers feebly: yet no change!
Another night, and still no sigh has stirred
That fallen discolored mouth, no pang re lit
Those fixed eyes, quenched by the decaying body.

Like torch-flame choked in dust. While all beside
Was breaking, to the last they held out bright,
As a stronghold where life entrenched itself;
But they are dead now — very blind and dead;
He will drowse into death without a groan.

My Aureole — my forgotten, ruined Aureole!
The days are gone, are gone! How grand thou wast!
And now not one of those who struck thee
down
Poor glorious spirit — concerns him even to stay
And satisfy himself his little hand
Could turn God's image to a livid thing.

Another night, and yet no change! 'Tis much
That I should sit by him, and bathe his brow,
And chase his hands; 'tis much: but he will Know me, and look on me, and speak to me
Once more — but only once! His hollow cheek Looked all night long as though a creeping laugh
At his own state were just about to break
From the dying man: my brain swam, my throat swelled,
And yet I could not turn away. In truth,
They told me how, when first brought here, he seemed
Resolved to live, to lose no faculty;
Thus striving to keep up his shattered strength,
Until they bore him to this stifling cell:
When straight his features fell, an hour made white
The flushed face, and relaxed the quivering limb,
Only the eye remained intense awhile
As though it recognized the tomb-like place,
And then he lay as here he lies.

Ay, here!
Here is earth's noblest, nobly garlanded —
Her bravest champion with his well-won
prize —
Her best achievement, her sublime amends
For countless generations fleeting fast.
And followed by no trace; — the creature-god
She instances when angels would dispute
The title of her brood to rank with them.
Angels, this is our angel! Those bright forms
We clothe with purple, crown and call to thrones,
Are human, but not his; those are but men
Whom other men press round and kneel before;
Those palaces are dwelt in by mankind;
Higher provision is for him you seek
Amid our pomp and glories: see it here!
Behold earth's paragon! Now, raise thee, clay!

God! Thou art love! I build my faith on that.
Even as I watch beside thy tortured child
Uncensur'd whose hot tears fall fast by him,
So doth thy right hand guide us through the world
Wherein we stumble. God! what shall we say?
How has he sinned? How else should he have done?
Surely he sought thy praise — thy praise, for all
He might be busied by the task so much
As half forget awhile its proper end.
Dost thou well, Lord? Thou canst not but prefer
That I should range myself upon his side
How could he stop at every step to set
Thy glory forth? Haist thou but granted him
Success, thy honor would have crowned success.
A halo round a star. Or, say he erred,
Save him, dear God; it will be like thee: bathe
him
In light and life! Thou art not made like us;
We should be wroth in such a case; but thou
Forgivest — so, forgive these passionate thoughts
Which come unsought and will not pass away!
I know thee, who hast kept my path, and made
Light for me in the darkness, tempering sorrow
So that it reached me like a solemn joy;
It were too strange that I should doubt thy love.
But what am I? Thou maddest him and knowest
How he was fashioned. I could never err
That way: the quiet place beside thy feet,
Reserved for me, was ever in my thoughts:
But he — thou shouldst have favored him as well!

Ah! he waketh! Aureole, I am here! 'tis Festus!
I cast away all wishes save one wish —
Let him but know me, only speak to me!
He mutters; louder and louder; any other
Than I, with brain less bidden, could collect
What he pours forth. Dear Aureole, do but look!
Is it talking or singing, this he utters fast?
Misery that he should fix me with his eye.
Quick talking to some other all the while!
If he would husband this wild vehemence
Which frustrates its intent? — I heard. I know
I heard my name amid those rapid words.
Oh, he will know me yet! Could I divert
This current, lead it somehow gently back
Into the channels of the past! — His eye
Brighter than ever! It must recognize me!

I am Erasmus: I am here to pray
That Paracelsus use his skill for me.
The schools of Paris and of Padua send
These questions for your learning to resolve.
We are your students, noble master: leave
This wretched cell, what business have you
here?
Our class awaits you; come to us once more!
O agony! the utmost I can
Touch him not; how else arrest his ear?
I am commissioned . . . I shall crave like him,
Better be mute and see what God shall send.

Par. Stay, stay with me!

Fest. I will; I am come here
To stay with you — Festus, you loved of old;
Festus, you know, you must know!

Par. Festus! Where's
April, then? Has he not chanted softly
The melodies I heard all night? I could not Get to him for a cold hand on my breast,
But I made out his music well enough,
O well enough! If they have filled him full
With magical music, as they freight a star
With light, and have remitted all his sin.
They will forgive me too, I too shall know!

Fest. Festus, your Festus!

Par. Ask him if April
Knows as he Loves — if I shall Love and Know?
I try; but that cold hand, like lead — so cold!

Fest. My hand, see! I do

Par. Ah, the curse, April, April!
We get so near — so very, very near!
'Tis an old tale: Jove strikes the Titans down,
Not when they set about their mountain-piling
But when another rock would crown the work,
And Phaeton—doubtless his first radiant plunge
Astonished mortals, though the gods were calm,
And Jove prepared his thunder; all old tales!

Par. Ay, fiends must laugh
So cruelly, so well! most like I never Could tread a single pleasure underfoot,
But they were grinning by my side, were chuckling
To see me toil and drop away by flakes!
Hell-spawn! I am glad, most glad, that thus I fail!
Your cunning has o’ershot its aim. One year,
One month, perhaps, and I had served your turn;
You should have curbed your spite awhile. But now,
Who will believe ’t was you that held me back?
Listen: there’s a shame and hissing and contempt,
And none but laughs who names me, none but spits
Measurless scorn upon me, me alone,
The quack, the cheat, the liar,—all on me!
And thus your famous plan to sink mankind
In silence and despair, by teaching them
One of their race had proved the utmost truth,
Had done all man could do, yet failed no less—
Your wise plan proves abortive. Men despair?
Ha, ha! why, they are hooting the empire,
The ignorant and incapable fool who rushed
Madly upon a work beyond his wits;
Nor doubt they but the simplest of themselves
Could bring the matter to triumphant issue.
So, pick and choose among them all, accursed!
Try now, persuade some other to slave for you,
To ruin body and soul to work your ends?
No, no; I am the first and last, I think.

Fest. Dear friend, who are accused, who has done . . .

Par. What have I done? Fiends dare ask that? or you.
Brave men? Oh, you can chime in boldly, backed
By the others! What had you to do, sage peers?
Here stand my rivals; Latin, Arab, Jew,
Greek, join dead hands against me: all I ask
Is, that the world enroll my name with theirs,
And even this poor privilege, it seems,
They range themselves, prepared to disallow.
Only observe! why, fiends may learn from them!
How they talk calmly of my thrones, my fierce
Aspirings, terrible watchings, each one claiming
Its price of blood and brain; how they dissect
And sneeringly disparage the few truths
Got at a life’s cost; they too hanging the while
About my neck, their lies misleading me
And their dead names browbeating me! Gray crew,
Yet steeped in fresh malevolence from hell.
Is there a reason for your hate? My truths
Have shaken a little the palm about each prince?
Just think, Apollo, all these leering dotards
Were bent on nothing less than to be crowned
As we! That yellow bare-eyed wretch in chief
To whom the rest cringe low with feigned respect,
Galen of Pergamos and all!—may speak

The tale, old man! We met there face to face:
I said the crown should fall from thee. Once more
We meet as in that ghastly vestibule:
Look to my brow! Have I redeemed my pledge?

Par. Peace, peace, peace; ah, see!

Fest. Oh, emptiness of fame!
O Persic Zoroaster, lord of stars!
—who said these old renowns, dead long ago,
Could make me overlook the living world
To gaze through gloom at where they stood, indeed.
But stand no longer? What a warm light life
After the shade! In truth, my delicate witch,
My serpent-queen, you did but well to hide
The jangles I had else detected. Fire
May well run harmless o’er a breast like yours!
The cave was not so darkened by the smoke
But that your white limbs dazzled me; oh, white,
And panting as they twinkled, wildly dancing!
I cared not for your passionate gestures then.
But now I have forgotten the charm of charms,
The foolish knowledge which I came to seek,
While I remember that quaint dance; and thus
I am come back, not for those mummerys,
But to love you, and to kiss your little feet
Soft as an emrine’s winter coat!

Fest. Will struggle through these thronging words at last,
As in the angry and tumultuous West
A soft star trembles through the drifting clouds.
These are the strivings of a spirit which hates
So sad a vault should coopt it, and calls up
The past to stand between it and its fate.
Were he at Einsiedeln—or Michal here!

Par. Cruel! I seek her now—I kneel—I shriek—
I clasp her vesture—but she fades, still fades;
And she is gone; sweet human love is gone!
’Tis only when they spring to heaven that angels
Reveal themselves to you; they sit all day
Beside you, and lie down at night by you
Who care not for their presence, muse or sleep,
And all at once they leave you, and you know them!
We are so fooled, so cheated! Why, even now
I am not too secure against foul play;
The shadows deepen and the walls contract;
No doubt some treachery is going on.
’T is very dusk. Where are we put, April?
Have they left us in the lurch? This murky loathsomely
Dearth-trap, this slacker-house, is not the hall
In the golden city! Keep by me, April!
There is a hand groping amid the blackness
To catch us. Have the spider-fingers got you,
Poet? Hold on me for your life! If once
They pull you!—Halt!
’T is but a dream—no more!
I have you still; the sun comes out again;
Let us be happy; all will yet go well!
Let us confer: is it not like, April,
That spite of trouble, this ordeal passed,
The value of my labors ascertained.
Just as some stream foams long among the rocks
But after glidest glassy to the sea,
So, full content shall henceforth be my lot.
What think you, poet? Louder! Your clear voice
Vibrates too like a harp-string. Do you ask
How could I still remain on earth, should God
Grant me the great approval which I seek?
I, you, and God can comprehend each other,
But men would murmur, and with cause enough;
For when they saw me, stainless of all sin,
Preserved and sanctified by inward light,
They would complain that comfort, shut from them,
I drank thus unespied; that they live on,
Nor taste the quiet of a constant joy,
For ache and care and doubt and weariness.
While I am calm; help being vouchsafed to me,
And lid from them. — I were best consider
that!
You reason well, April; but at least
Let me know this, and die! Is this too much?
I will learn this, if God so please, and die!
If thou shalt please, dear God, if thou shalt please!
We are so weak, we know our motives least
In their confused beginning. If at first
I sought... but wherewith bare my heart to thee?
I know thy mercy: and already thoughts
Flock fast about my soul to comfort it,
And intimate I cannot wholly fail.
For love and praise would clasp me willingly
Could I resolve to seek them. Thou art good,
And I should be content. Yet — yet first show
I have done wrong in daring! Rather give
The supernatural consciousness of strength
Which fed my youth! Only one hour of that,
With thee to help — O what should bar me then?

Lost, lost! Thus things are ordered here!
God's cruel cross,
And yet he takes no pride in us! — none, none!
Truly there needs another life to come!
If this be all — I must tell Festus that!
And other life await us not — for one,
I say 'tis a poor cheat, a stupid bungle,
A wretched failure. I, for one, protest
Against it, and I hurl it back with scorn.

Well, onward though alone! Small time remains,
And much to do: I must have fruit, must reap
Some profit from my toils, I doubt my body
Will hardly serve me through; while I have labored
It has decayed; and now that I demand
Its best assistance, it will crumble fast:
A sad thought, a sad fate! How very full
Of wormwood 'tis, that just at altar-service,
The rapt hymn rising with the rolling smoke,
When glory dawns and all is at the best,
The sacred fire may thicker and grow faint
And die for want of a woodrifer's help.
Thus fades the flagging body, and the soul
Is pulled down in the overthrow. Well, well —
Let men catch every word, let them lose naught
Of what I say; something may yet be done.

They are ruins! Trust me who am one of you:
All ruins, glorious once, but lonely now.
It makes my heart sick to behold you crouch
Beside your desolate fane: the arches dim,
The crumbling columns grand against the moon.
Could I but rear them up once more... but that
May never be, so leave them! Trust me,

Why should you linger here when I have built
A far resplendent temple, all your own?
Trust me, they are but ruins! See. April,
Men will not heed! Yet were I not prepared
With better refuge for them, tongue of mine
Should never reveal how blank their dwelling is:
I would sit down in silence with the rest.

Ha, what? you spit at me, you grin and shriek
Contempt into my ear — my ear which drank
God's accents once? you curse me? Why men,
I am not formed for it! Those hideous eyes
Will be before me sleeping, waking, praying,
They will not let me even die, spare, spare me,
Sinning or no, forget that, only spare me
The horrible scorn! You thought I could support
But now you see what silly fragile creature
Cowers thus. I am not good nor bad enough,
Not Christ nor Cain, yet even Cain was saved
From Hate like this. 'Let me but totter back!
Perhaps I shall elude those pangs which creep
Into my very brain, and shut these scorched
Eyelids and keep those mocking faces out.

Listen, April! I am very calm:
Be not deceived, there is no passion here
Where the blood leaps like an imprisoned thing:
I am calm: I will exterminate the race!
Enough of that: 'tis said and it shall be;
And now be merry; safe and sound am I
Who broke through their best ranks to get at you,
And such a havoc, such a rout, April!

Fest. Have you no thought, no memory for me,
Aureole? I am so wretched — my pure Michal
Is gone, and you alone are left me now,
And even you forget me. Take my hand —
Lean on me thus. Do you not know me, Aureole?

Par. Festus, my own friend, you are coming last.
As you say, 'tis an awful enterprise;
but you believe I shall go through with it:
'Tis like you, and I thank you. Thank him
for me.

Dear Michal! See how bright St. Saviour's spire
Flames in the sunset; all its figures quaint
Gay in the glancing light: you might conceive
A troop of yellow-vested white-haired Jews
Bound for their own land where redemption dawns.

Fest. Not that blest time — not our youth's time, dear God!

Par. Ha — stay! true, I forget — all is done
since,
And he is come to judge me. How he speaks,
PARACELSUS

How calm, how well! yes, it is true, all true; All quackery; all deceit; myself can laugh The first at it, if you desire; but still You know the obstacles which taught me tricks So foreign to my nature — envy and hate, Blind opposition, brutal prejudice, Bold ignorance — what wonder if I sunk To humor men the way they most approved? My cheats were never palmed on such as you, Dear Festus! I will kneel if you require me, Impart the measure knowledge I possess, Explain its bounded nature, and avow My insufficiency — whate'er you will: I give the light up: let there be an end, A privacy, an obscure nook for me, I want to be forgotten even by God, But if that cannot be, dear Festus, lay me, When I shall die, within some narrow grave, Not by itself — for that would be too proud — But where such graves are thickest; let it look Nowise distinguished from the hillocks round, So that the peasant at his brother's bed May tread upon my own and know it not; And we shall all be equal at the last, Or classed according to life's natural ranks, Fathers, sons, brothers, friends — not rich, nor wise, Nor gifted: lay me thus, then say, "He lived Too much advanced before his brother men: They kept him still in front: 't was for their good, But yet a dangerous station. It was strange That he should tell God he had never ranked With men: so, here at least he is a man." Fest. That God shall take thee to his breast, dear spirit, Unto his breast, be sure! and here on earth Shall splendor sit upon thy name forever. Sun! all the heaven is glad for thee: what care If lower mountains light their snowy phares At thine efflufence, yet acknowledge not The source of day? Their theft shall be their bale: For after-ages shall retrack thy beams, And put aside the crowd of busy ones And worship thee alone — the master-mind, The thinker, the explorer, the creator! Then, who should sneer at the convulsive throes With which thy deeds were born, would scorn them as well; The sheet of winning subterraneous fire Which, pent and writhing, sends no less at last Huge islands up amid the simmering sea. Behold thy might in me! thou hast infused Thy soul in mine; and I am grand as thou, Seeing I comprehend thee — I so simple, Thou so august. I recognize thee first; I saw thee rise, I watched thee early and late, And though no glance reveal thou dost accept My homage — thus no less I proffer it, And bid thee enter gloriously thy rest. Par. Festus! Fest. I am for noble Aureole, God! I am upon his side, come weal or woe. His portion shall be mine. He has done well, I would have sinned, had I been strong enough, As he has sinned. Reward him or I waive Reward! If thou canst find no place for him, He shall be king elsewhere, and I will be His slave forever. There are two of us. Par. Dear Festus! Fest. Here, dear Aureole! ever by you! Par. Nay, speak on, or I dream again, Speak on! Some story, anything — only your voice, I shall dream else. Speak on! ay, leaning so! Fest. Thus the Mayne gildeth Where my Love abideth. Sleep's no softer: it proceeds On through lawns, on through meads, On and on, what' er befal, Meandering and musical, Though the niggard pastureage Bears not on its shaven ledge Aught but weeds and waving grasses To view the river as it passes, Save here and there a scanty patch Of primroses too faint to catch A weary bee. Par. More, more; say on! Fest. And scarce it pushes Its gentle way through strangling rushes Where the glossy kingfisher Flutter's when noon-heats are near, Glad the shelving banks to shun, Red and steaming in the sun, Where the shrew-mouse with pale throat Burrows, and the speckled stoat; Where the quick sandpipers flit In and out the marl and grit That seems to breed them, brown as they: Naught disturbs its quiet way, Save some lazy stork that springs, Trailing it with legs and wings, Whom the shy fox from the hill Rouses, creep he ne'er so still. Par. My heart! they lose my heart, those simple words; Its darkness passes, which naught else could touch: Like some dark snare that force may not expel, Which gildeth out to music sweet and low, What were you doing when your voice broke through A chaos of ugly images? You, indeed! Are you alone here? Fest. All alone: you know me? This cell? An unexceptionable vault: Good brick and stone: the bats kept out, the rats Kept in: a snug nook: how should I mistake it? Fest. But wherefore am I here? Par. Ah, well remembered! Why, for a purpose — for a purpose, Festus! 'T is like me: here I trifle while time fleets, And this occasion, lost, will ne'er return. You are here to be instructed. I will tell God's message; but I have so much to say, I fear to leave half out. All is confused No doubt; but doubtless you will learn in time. He would not else have brought you here: no doubt I shall see clearer soon. Fest. You are not in despair?

This is my change, my sight, my signet-ring Is still upon my hand, I think — even so; Last, my good sword; ah, trusty Azoth, leapest Beneath thy master’s grasp for the last time? This couch shall be my throne: I bid these walls be consecrate, this wretched cell become A shrine, for here God speaks to men through me.

Now, Festus, I am ready to begin.

Fest. I am dumb with wonder.

Par. Listen, therefore, Festus! There will be time enough, but none to spare. I must content myself with telling only. The most important points. You doubtless feel that I am happy. Festus; very happy.

Fest. 'Tis no delusion which uplifts him thus! Then you are pardoned, Aureole, all your sin?

Par. Ay, pardoned: yet why pardoned?

Fest. 'Tis God’s praise That man is bound to seek, and you...

Par. Have lived! We have to live alone to set forth well God’s praise. 'Tis true, I sinned much, as I thought, And in effect asked mercy, for I strove To do that very thing; but, do your best Or worst, praise rises, and will rise forever. Pardon from him, because of praise denied — Who calls me to himself to exalt himself? He might laugh as I laugh!

Fest. But all comes To the same thing. 'Tis fruitless for mankind To fret themselves with what concerns them not; They are no use that way; they should lie down Content as God has made them, nor go mad In thrivesless cares to better what is ill.

Par. No, no; mistake me not, let me not work

Concluding every phrase, with upturned eye, As though one stooped above his head to whom He look’d for confirmation and approval, Where was it gone so long, so well preserved? Then, the forefinger pointing as he speaks, Like one who traces in an open book The matter he declares; 'tis many a year Since I remarked it last: and this in him, But now a ghastly wreck!

Dear Aureole, you have them found out at last That worldly things are utter vanity. That man is made for weakness, and should wait In patient ignorance, till God appoint...

Par. Ha, the purpose: the true purpose: that is it!

How could I fail to apprehend! You here, I thus! But no more trifling; I see all, I know all: my last mission shall be done If strength suffice. No trifling! Stay; this posture Hardly befits one thus about to speak: I will arise.

Fest. Nay, Aureole, are you wild?

You cannot leave your couch.

Par. No help; no help;

Not even your hand. So! there, I stand once more!

Speak from a couch? I never lectured thus. My gown — the scarlet lined with fur; now put The chain about my neck; my signet-ring Is still upon my hand, I think — even so; Last, my good sword; ah, trusty Azoth, leapest Beneath thy master’s grasp for the last time? This couch shall be my throne: I bid these walls Be consecrate, this wretched cell become A shrine, for here God speaks to men through me.

Fest. But all comes To the same thing. 'Tis fruitless for mankind To fret themselves with what concerns them not; They are no use that way; they should lie down Content as God has made them, nor go mad In thrivesless cares to better what is ill.
More harm than I have worked! This is my case:
If I go joyous back to God, yet bring
No offering, if I render up my soul
With all the fruits it was ordained to bear,
If I apply the better to love God
For sin, as one who has no claim on him,
Be not deceived! It may be surely thus
With me, while higher prizes still await
The mortal persevering to the end,
Besides I am not all so valueless:
I have been something, though too soon I left
Following the instincts of that happy time.

Fest. What happy time? For God's sake, for man's sake,
What time was happy? All I hope to know
That answer will decide. What happy time?
Par. When but the time I vowed myself to man?

Fest. Great God, thy judgments are inscrutable!
Par. Yes, it was in me; I was born for it —
Paracelsus: it was mine by right.
Doubtless a searching and impetuous soul
Might learn from its own motions that some task
Like this awaited it about the world;
Might seek somewhere in this blank life of ours
For fit delights to stay its longings vast;
And, grappling Nature, so prevail on her
To fill the creature full she dared thus frame
Hungry for joy; and, bravely tyrannous,
Grow in demand, still craving more and more,
And make each joy conceded prove a pledge
Of other joy to follow — bating naught
Of its desires, still seizing fresh pretence
To turn the knowledge and the rapture wrung
As an extreme, last boon, from destiny,
Into occasion for new covetings,
New strifes, new triumphs: — doubtless a strong
Along, unmaid might attain to this,
So glorious is our nature, so august
Man's inborn uninstructed impulses,
His naked spirit so majestical!
But this was born in me; I was made so;
Thus much time saved: the feverish appetites,
The tumult of unproved desire, the unamed
Uncertain yearnings, aspirations blind,
Distrust, mistake, and all that ets in tears
Were saved me; thus I entered on my course.
You may be sure I was not all exempt
From human trouble; just so much of doubt
As made me plant a surer foot upon
The sun-road, kept my eye unmurmured 'mid
The fierce and flashing splendor, set my heart
Trembling so much as warned me I stood there
On sufferance — not to idly gaze, but cast
Light on a darkling race; save for that doubt,
I stood at first where all aspire at last
To stand: the secret of the world was mine.
I knew, I felt, (perception unexpressed,
Uncomprehended by our narrow thought,
But somehow felt and known in every shift
And change in the spirit, — nay, in every pore
Of the body, even,) — what God is, what we are,
What life is — how God tastes an infinite joy
In infinite ways — one everlasting bliss,
From whom all being emanates, all power
Proceeds; in whom is life forevemore,
Yet whom existence in its lowest form
Includes; where dwells enjoyment there is he:
With still a flying point of bliss remote,
A happiness in store afar, a sphere
Of distant glory in full view; thus climbs
Pleasure its heights forever and forever.
The centre-fire heaves underneath the earth,
And the earth changes like a human face;
The molten ore bursts up among the rocks,
Winds into the stone's heart, onbraches bright
In hidden mines, spots barren river-beds,
Crumbles into fine sand where sunbeams bask —
God joys therein. The wroth sea's waves are edged
With foam, white as the bitten lip of hate,
When, in the solitary waste strange groups
Of young volcans come up, cyclops-like,
Staring together with their eyes on flame —
God tastes a pleasure in their uncounted pride.
Then all is still; earth is a wintry clod:
But spring-wind, like a dancing psaltress, passes
Over its breast to waken it, rare verdure
Buds tenderly upon rough banks, between
The withered tree-roots and the cracks of frost,
Like a smile striving with a wrinkled face;
The grass grows bright, the boughs are swollen
With blooms.
Like chrysalids impatient for the air,
The shining dorns are busy, beetles run
Along the furrows, ants make their ad;,
Above, birds fly in merry flocks, the lark
Sorrs up and up, shivering for very joy;
Far the ocean sleeps; white fishing-gulls
Flit where the strand is purple with its tribe
Of nestled limpets; savage creatures seek
Their loves in wood and plain — and God renewrs
His ancient rapture. Thus he dwells in all,
From life's minute beginnings, up to last
To man — the consummation of this scheme
Of being, the completion of this sphere
Of life: whose attributes had here and there
Been scattered o'er the visible world before.
Asking to be combined, dim fragments meant
To be united in some wondrous, whole
Imperfect qualities throughout creation,
Suggesting some one creature yet to make,
Some point where all those scattered rays should meet
Convergent in the faculties of man.
Power, neither put forth blindly, nor con-rolled
Calmly by perfect knowledge; to be used
At risk, inspired or checked by hope and fear:
Knowledge — not intuition, but the slow
Uncertain fruit of an enhancing toil,
Strengthened by love; love — not severely pure,
But strong from weakness, like a chance-sown plant
Which, cast on stubborn soil, puts forth changed
Buds, and softer stains, unknown in happier climes;
Love which endures and doubts and is oppressed
And cherished, suffering much and much sus-tained.
And blind, oft-failing, yet believing love,
A half-enlightened, often-checkered trust: —
Hints and previsions of which faculties,
Are strewn confusedly everywhere about
The inferior natures, and all lead up higher,
All shape out dimly the superior race,
The heir of hopes too fair to turn out false,
And man appears at last. So far the seal
Is put on life; one stage of being complete,
One scheme wound up: and from the grand result
A supplementary reflux of light,
Illustrates all the inferior grades, explains
Each back step in the circle. Not alone
For their possessor down those qualities,
But the new glory mixes with the heaven
And earth; man, once described, imprints forever
His presence on all life-less things: the winds
Are henceforth voices, wailing or a shout,
A querulous matter or a quick gay laugh,
Never a senseless gust now man is born.
The heralded pangs commune and have deep thoughts,
A secret they assemble to discuss
When the sun drops behind their trunks which glare
Like grates of hell: the peerless cup afloat
Of the lake-lily is an urn, some nymph
Swims bearing high above her head: no bird
Whistles unseen, but through the gaps above
That let light in upon the gloomy woods,
A shape peeps from the breezy forest-top,
Arch with small puckered mouth and mocking eye.
The morn has enterprise, deep quiet droops
With evening, triumph takes the sunset hour,
Voluptuous transport ripens with the corn
Beneath a warm moon like a happy face:
—And this to till us with regard for man,
With apprehension of his passing worth,
Desire to work his proper nature out,
And ascertain his rank and final place,
For these things tend still upward, progress is the law of life, man is not Man as yet,
Nor shall I deem his object served, his end
Attained, his genuine strength put fairly forth,
While only here and there a star dispels
The darkness, here and there a towering mind
Overlooks its prostrate fellows: when the host
Is out at once to the despair of night,
When all mankind alike is perfected,
Equal in full-bloated powers — then, not till then, I say, begins man's general infamy.
For whereas make account of feverish starts
Of restless members of a dormant whole,
Impatient nerves which quiver while the body
Shimmers as in a grave? Oh, long ago
The bow was twitched, the tremulous lids
As it would pluck a lion by the jaw;
The glorious creature laughed out even in sleep!
But when full roused, each giant-limb awake,
Each sinew strung, the great heart pulsing fast,
He shall start up and stand on his own earth.
Then shall his long triumphant march begin,
Thence shall his being date,—thus wholly roused.
What he achieves shall be set down to him.
What all the race is perfected alike
As man, that is; all tend to mankind.
And, man predicted, all has its end thus far:
But in completed man begins anew
A tendency to God. Prognostics told
Man's near approach; so in man's self arise
August anticipations, symbols, types
Of a dim splendor ever on before.
In that eternal circle life pursues,
For men begin to pass their nature's bound,
And find new hopes and cares which fast supply
Their proper joys and griefs; they grow too great
For narrow creeds of right and wrong, which fade
Before the unmeasured thirst for good: while peace
Rises within them ever more and more.
Such men are even now upon the earth.
Serene amid the half-formed creatures round
Who should be saved by them and joined with them.
Such was a vast task, and I was born to it
Free, as I said but now, from much that chains
Spirits, high-dowered but limited and vexed
By a divided and delusive aim,
A shadow mocking a reality
Whose truth avails not wholly to disperse
The fitting mimic called up by itself,
And so remains perplexed and nigh put out
By its fantastic fellow's waving gleam.
I, from the first, was never cheated thus;
I never fashioned out a fancied good
Distinct from man's; a service to be done,
A glory to be ministered unto
With powers put forth at man's expense, withdrawn
From laboring in his behalf; a strength
Denied that might avail him. I cared not
Lest his success ran counter to success
Elsewhere: for God is glorified in man,
And to man's glory vowed I soul and limb.
Yet, constituted thus, and thus endowed,
I failed: I gazed on power till I grew blind.
Power; I could not take my eyes from that:
That only, I thought, should be preserved, increased
At any risk, displayed, struck out at once
The sign and note and character of man.
I saw no use in the past: only a scene
Of degradation, ugliness and tears.
The record of disgrace best forgotten,
A sullen page in human chronicles
Fit to erase. I saw no cause why man
Should not stand all-sufficient even now,
Or why his annals should be forced to tell
That once the tide of light about to break
Upon the world, was sealed within its spring:
I would have had one day, one moment's space,
Change man's condition, push each slumbering claim
Of mastery o'er the elemental world
At once to full maturity, then roll
Oblivion o'er the work, and hide from man.
What night had ushered morn. Not so, dear child.
Of after-days, wilt thou reject the past
Big with deep warnings of the proper tenure
By which thou hast the earth: for thee the present.
Shall have distinct and trembling beauty, seen
Beside that past's own shade when, in relief, Its brightness shall stand out: nor yet on thee Shall burst the future, as successive zones Of several wonder open on some spirit
Flying secure and glad from heaven to heaven: But thou shalt painfully attain to joy.
While hope and fear and love shall keep thee man!
All this was hid from me: as one by one
My dreams grew dim, my wide aims circumscribed,
As actual good within my reach decreased,
While obstacles sprung up this way and that
To keep me from effecting half the sum.
Small as it proved; as objects, mean within
The primal aggregate, seemed, even the least.
Itself a match for my concentrated strength—
What wonder if I saw no way to shun
Despair? The power I sought for man, seemed God's.
In this conjuncture, as I prayed to die,
A strange adventure made me know, one sin
Had spott'd my career from its uprise;
I saw Aprile — my Aprile there!
And as the poor melodious wretch disburdened
His heart, and morn'd his weakness in my ear,
I learned my own deep error; love's nudging
Taught me the worth of love in man's estate.
And what proportion love should hold with power
In his right constitution; love preceding
Power, and with much power, always much more love;
Love still too straitened in his present means,
And earnest for new power to set love free.
I learned this, and supposed the whole was learned:
And thus, when men received with stupid wonder
My first revelations, would have worshipped me,
And I despised and loathed their proffered praise —

A TRAGEDY

DEDICATED, IN ALL AFFECTIONATE ADMIRATION,

TO

WILLIAM C. MACREASY

LONDON, APRIL 25, 1837

Paracelsus found an enthusiastic reader in the actor Macready, who begged Browning to write him a play, even suggesting the subject to him, which did not awaken the poet's interest. More than a year passed, when the two met at a supper given by Macready after the successful presentation of Talfourd's Ion. As the guests were leaving, Macready said to Browning: "Write a play, Browning, and keep me from going to America." "Shall it be historical and English?" replied Browning. "What do you say to a drama on Strafford?" and the poet now had his subject. His choice is readily explained by the fact that he was at this time helping his friend Forster with his Life of Strafford contained in Lives of Eminent British Statesmen. Indeed, Mr. Furnivall says without hesitation that the agreement of the Strafford of the play with the Strafford of Forster's biography is due to the fact that Browning wrote the whole of the Life of Strafford after the first seven paragraphs.

When the play was rehearsing Browning gave Macready a hint which he had composed for the children's song in Act V. It was not used, because the two children who were to sing wished a more pretentious song. The hint which Browning composed was purposely no more than a crowning measure. He afterward gave it to Miss Hickey for her special edition of Strafford, and it is reproduced here in its place. The following is Browning's preface to the first edition:

"I had for some time been engaged in a Poem of a very different nature, when induced to make the present attempt; and am not without apprehension that my eagerness to freshen a jaded mind by diverting it to the healthy natures of a grand epoch, may have operated unfavorably on the represented play, which is one of Action in Character, rather than Character in Action. To remedy this, in some degree, considerable entailment will be necessary, and, in a few instances, the supplying details not required, I suppose, by the mere reader. While a trifling success would much gratify, failure will not wholly discourage me from another effort: experience is to come; and earnest endeavor may yet remove many disadvantages.

"The portraits are, I think, faithful; and I am exceedingly fortunate in being able, in proof of this, to refer to the subtle and eloquent exposition of the characters of Eliot and Strafford, in the Lives of Eminent British Statesmen, now in the course of publication in Lardner's Cyclopaedia, by a writer [John Forster] whom I am proud to call my friend; and whose biographies of Hampden, Pym, and Vane, will, I am sure, fitly illustrate the present year--the Second Centenary of the Trial concerning Ship-Money. My Carlisle, however, is purely imaginary: I at first sketched her singular likeness roughly in, as suggested by Matthews and the memoir-writers--but it was too artificial, and the substituted outline is exclusively from Voiture and Waller.

"The Italian boat-song in the last scene is from Redi's 'Bacco,' long since naturalized in the joyous and delicate version of Leigh Hunt."

ACT I

SCENE I. A House near Whitehall. Hampden, Hollin, the younger Vane, Rudyard, Fiennes and many of the Presbyterian Party; Loudon and other Scots Commissioners.
Hamp. For England's sake let every man be still.

Vane. You say so, Hollis? Well, I must be still.

It is indeed too bitter that one man, any one man's mere presence, should suspend England's combined endeavor: little need To name him!

Rud. For you are his brother, Hollis! Hampden. Shame on you, Rudyard! time to tell him that

When he forgets the Mother of us all.

Rud. Do I forget her?

Hamp. You talk idle hate Against her foe: is that so strange a thing? Is hating Wentworth all the help she needs?

A Puritan. The Philistine strode, cursing as he went:

But David — five smooth pebbles from the brook Within his scrip...

Rud. Be you as still as David!

Fiennes. Here's Rudyard not ashamed to wag a tongue

Still with ten years' disease of Parliaments;

Why, when the last sat, Wentworth sat with us!

Rud. Let's hope for news of them now he returns —

He that was safe in Ireland, as we thought!

— But I'll abide Pym's coming.

Vane. Now, by Heaven, Then may be cool who can, silent who will —

Some have a gift that way! Wentworth is here, here, and the King's face closed with him Ere this. And when I think on all that's past Since that man left us, how his single arm Rol'd the advancing good of England back And set the woeful past up in its place,

Exalting Dagon where the Ark should be, —

How that man has made firm the fickle King (Hampden, I will speak out!) — in aught he feared

To venture on before; taught tyranny Her dismal trade, the use of all her tools,

To ply the scourgery yet screw the gag so close

That strangled agony bleeds mute to death —

How he turns Ireland to a private stage

For training infant villains, new ways

Of wringing treasure out of tears and blood,

Unheard oppressions nourished in the dark

To try how much man's nature can endure —

If he dies under it, what harm? if not,

Why, one more trick is added to the rest.

Worth a king's knowing, and what Ireland bears

England may learn to bear: — how all this while That man has set himself to one dear task,

The bringing Charles to dish of more and more Power, power without law, power and blood too

— Can I be still?

Hamp. For that you should be still.

Vane. Oh Hampden, then and now! The year he left us,

The People in full Parliament could wrest

The Bill of Rights from the reluctant King; And now he'll find in an obscure small room

A stealthy gathering of great-hearted men That take up England's cause: England is here!

Vane. And, Rudyard, I'll say this —

Which all true men say after me, not loud But solemnly and as you 'd say a prayer! This King, who treads our England underfoot, Has just so much... it may be fear or craft, As bids him pause at each fresh outrage; friends,

He needs some stern hand to grasp his own. Some voice to ask, "Why shrink? Am I not by?"

Now, one whom England loved for serving her, Found in his heart to say, "I know where best The iron heel shall bruise her, for she leans Upon me when you trample," Witnss's, you!

So Wentworth heartened Charles, so England fell. But insahmsuch as life is hard to take

From England...

Many Voices. Go on, Vane! 'Tis well said, Vane!

Vane. Who has not so forgotten Runnymede! —

Voices. 'Tis well and bravely spoken, Vane! Go on!

Vane. There are some little signs of late she knows

The ground no place for her. She glances round, Wentworth has dropped the hand, is gone his way

On other service: what if she arise?

No! the King beckons, and beside him stands

The same bad man once more, with the same smile

And the same gesture. Now shall England crouch,

Or catch at us and rise?

Voices. The Renegade!

Haman! Ahithophel! Hemp. Gentlemen of the North. It was not thus the night your claims were urged, And we pronounced the League and Covenant. The cause of Scotland, England's cause as well: Vane there, sat motionless the whole night through.

Vane. Hampden!

Fiend. Stay, Vane!

London. Be just and patient, Vane!

Vane. Mind how you counsel patience, London! you Have still a Parliament, and this your League To back it: you are free in Scotland still! While we are brothers, hope's for England yet. But know you wherefore Wentworth comes? to quench
This last of hopes? that he bring war with him?
Know you the man's self? what he dares?
Lou.
All know -- 'tis nothing new.
Vane.
And what's new, then?
In calling for his life? Why, Pym himself --
You must have heard -- ere Wentworth dropped our cause.
He would see Pym first; there were many more
Strong on the people's side and friends of his,
Eliot that's dead, Rudyard and Hampden here,
But for these Wentworth cared not; only, Pym
He would see -- Pym and he were sworn, 'tis said,
To live and die together; so, they met
At Greenwich. Wentworth, you are sure, was.
Specious enough, the devil's argument
Lost nothing on his lips; he'd have Pym own
A patriot could not play a purer part
Than follow in his track; they two combined Might put down England. Well, Pym heard him out;
One glance -- you know Pym's eye -- one word
was all:
"You leave us, Wentworth! while your head
is on,
I'll not leave you."
Hamp.
Has he left Wentworth, then?
Has England lost him? Will you let him speak,
Or put your crude surmises in his mouth?
Away with this! Will you have Pym or Vane?
Voices. Wait Pym's arrival! Pym shall speak.
Hamp.
Meanwhile
Let London read the Parliament's report
From Edinburgh: our last hope, as Vane says, is in the stand it makes. London!
Vane.
No, no!
Silent I can be: not indifferent!
Hamp.
Then each keep silence, praying God
to spare
His anger, cast not England quite away
In her this visitation!
A Puritan.
Seven years long
The Midianite drove Israel into dens
And caves. Till God sent forth a mighty man,
(Pym enters.)
Even Gideon!
Pym.
Wentworth's come: nor sickness, care,
The ravaged body nor the ruined soul,
More than the winds and waves that beat his ship;
Could keep him from the King. He has not reached
Whitehall: they've hurried up a Council there
To lose no time and find him work enough.
Where's London? your Scots' Parliament ...
Lou.
Holds firm:
We were about to read reports.
Pym.
The King
Has just dissolved your Parliament.
Lou, and other Scots.
Great God!
An oath-breaker! Stand by us, England, then!
Pym. The King's too sanguine; doubtless Wentworth's here;
But still some little form might be kept up.
Hamp. Now speak, Vane! Rudyard, you had much to say!
Hol. The rumor's false, then ...
Pym.
Ay, the Court gives out
His own concerns have brought him back: I know
'Tis the King calls him. Wentworth supersedes
The tribe of Cuttingtons and Hamiltons Whose part is played; there's talk enough, by
this, --
Merciful talk, the King thinks: time is now
To turn the record's last and bloody leaf
Which, chronicling a nation's great despair,
Tell's they were long rebellious, and their lord
Indulgent, till, all kind expedients tried,
He drew the sword on them and reigned in peace.
Land's laying his religion on the Scots
Was the last gentle entry: the new page Shall run, the King thinks, "Wentworth thrust it down
At the sword's point."
A Puritan.
I'll do your bidding, Pym,
England's and God's -- one blow!
Pym.
A goodly thing --
We all say, friends, it is a goodly thing
To right that England. Heaven grows dark above:
Let's snatch one moment ere the thunder fall,
To say how well the English spirit comes out
Beneath it! All have done their best, indeed,
From lion Eliot, that grand Englishman.
To the least here: and who, the least one here,
When she is saved (for her redemption dawns Dimly, most dimly, but it dawns -- it dawns!)
Who'd give at any price his hope away
Of being named along with the Great Men?
We would not -- no, we would not give that up!
Hamp. And one name shall be dearer than all names.
When children, yet unborn, are taught that name
After their fathers', -- taught what matchless
man . . .
Pym. . . . Saved England? What if Wentworth's should be still
That name?
Rud. and others. We have just said it, Pym!
His death Saves her! We said it -- there's no way beside.
I'll do God's bidding, Pym! They struck down Joab
And purged the land.
Vane.
No villainous striking-down!
Rud. No, a calm vengeance: let the whole land rise
And shout for it. No Feltons!
Pym.
Rudyard, no!
England rejects all Feltons; most of all
Since Wentworth . . . Hampden, say the trust
again.
Of England in her servants -- but I'll think
You know me, all of you. Then, I believe,
Spite of the past, Wentworth rejoins you,
friends!
Vane and others. Wentworth? Apostate!
Judas! Double-dyed
A traitor! Is it Pym, indeed . . .
Pym. . . . Who says
Vane never knew that Wentworth, loved that man,
Was used to stroll with him, arm locked in arm,
Along the streets to see the people pass,
And read in every island-countenance.
Fresh argument for God against the King,—
Never sat down, say, in the very house
Where Eliot's brow grew broad with noble thoughts.
(You've joined us, Hampden—Holli's, you as well.)
And then left talking over Racine's death...
Vane. To frame, we know it well, the choicest clause
In the Petition of Right: he framed such clause
One month before he took at the King's hand
His Northern Presidency, which that Bill Denounced.

Pym. Too true! Never more, never more
Walked we together! Most alone I went.
I have had friends—all here are fast my friends—
But I shall never quite forget that friend,
And yet it could not but be real in him!
You, Vane,—you, Radulph, have no right to trust
To Wentworth: but can no one hope with me?
Hampden, will Wentworth dare shed English blood
Like water?
Hamp. Ireland is Aceldama.
Pym. Will he turn Scotland to a hunting-ground
To please the King, now that he knows the King?
The People or the King? and that King, Charles!
Hamp. Pym, all here know you; you'll not sett your heart
On any baseless dream. But say one deed
Of Wentworth's, since he left us... [Shouting without.

Vane. There! he comes,
And they shout for him! Wentworth's at Whitehall,
The King embracing him, now, as we speak,
And he, to be his match in courtesies,
Taking the whole war's risk upon himself,
Now, while you tell us here how changed he is!
Hear you?
Pym. And yet if 'tis a dream, no more,
That Wentworth chose their side, and brought the King
to love it as though Land had loved it first,
And the Queen after; that he led their cause
Calm to success, and kept it spotless through,
So that our very eyes could look upon
The travail of our souls, and close content
That violence, which so much mars even right
Which sanctions it, had taken off no grace
From its serene regard. Only a dream!
Hamp. We meet here to accomplish certain good
By obvious means, and keep tradition up
Of free assemblages, else obsolete,
In this poor chamber: nor without effect
Has friend met friend to counsel and confirm,
As, listening to the beats of England's heart,
We spoke its wants to Scotland's prompt reply
By these her delegates. Remains alone
That word grow deed, as with God's help it shall—
But with the devil's kindness, who doubts too?
Looked we or no that tyranny should turn
Her engines of oppression to their use?
Whereof, suppose the worst be Wentworth here—
Shall we break off the tactics which succeed
In drawing out our formidablest foe,
Let bickering and disunion take their place?
Or count his presence as our conquest's proof,
And keep the old arms at their steady play?
Proceed to England's work! Fienne, read the list,

Fien. Ship-money is refused or fiercely paid
In every county, save the northern parts
Where Wentworth's influence...[Shouting. Vane,]
I, in England's name, Declare her work, this day, at end! Till now,
Up to this moment, peaceful strife was best.
We English had free leave to think; till now,
We had a shadow of a Parliament
In Scotland. But all's changed: they change the first,
They try brute-force for law, they, first of all...

Voices. Good! Talk enough! The old true hearts with Vane!
Vane. Till we crush Wentworth for her, there's no act
Serves England!
Voices. Vane for England!
Pym. Something to England. I seek Wentworth,
Friends.

Scene II. Whitehall.

Lady Carlisle and Wentworth.

Wentworth. And the King?
Lady Carlisle. Wentworth, lean on me!
Sit then!
I'll tell you all; this horrible fatigue
Will kill you.
Went. No;—or, Lucy, just your arm;
I'll not sit till I've cleared this up with him:
After that, rest. The King?
Lady Car. Confides in you.
Went. Why? or, why now?—They have kind threats, the knaves!
Shout for me—they!
Lady Car. You come so strangely soon:
Yet we took measures to keep off the crowd—
Did they shout for you?
Went. Wherefore should they not?
Does the King take such measures for himself?
Beside, there's such a dearth of malcontents,
You say!
Lady Car. I said but few dared carp at you.
Went. At me? at us, I hope! The King and I!
He's surely not disposed to me bear
The fame away from him of these late deeds
In Ireland? I am yet his instrument
Be it for well or ill? He trusts me, too.
Lady Car. The King, dear Wentworth, purposes, I said.
To grant you, in the face of all the Court . . .
Went. All the Court! Evermore the Court about us!
Savile and Holland, Hamilton and Vane About us, then the King will grant me — what?
That he for once put these aside and say — "Tell me your whole mind, Wentworth!"
Lady Car. You professed
You would be calm.
Went. Lucy, and I am calm! How else shall I do all I come to do, Broken, as you may see, body and mind, How shall I serve the King? Time wastes meanwhile, You have not told me half. His footstep! No, Quick, then, before I meet him, — I am calm — Why does the King distrust me?
Lady Car. He does not Distrust you.
Went. Lucy, you can help me; you Have even seemed to care for me: one word! Is it the Queen?
Lady Car. No, not the Queen: the party
That poisons the Queen's ear, Savile and Holland.
Went. I know, I know: old Vane, too, he's one too.
Go on, and he's made Secretary. Well? Or leave them out and go straight to the charge; The charge!
Lady Car. Oh, there's no charge, no precise charge; Only they sneer, make light of — one may say, Nibble at what you do.
Went. I know! but, Lucy, I reckoned on you from the first! — Go on!
Was sure could I once see this gentle friend When I arrived, she'd throw an hour away To begin her . . . what am I?
Lady Car. You thought of me,
Dear Wentworth?
Went. But go on! The party here!
Lady Car. They do not think your Irish government Of that surpassing value . . .
Went. The one thing
Of value! The one service that the crown May count on! All that keeps these very Vanes In power, to vex me — not that they do vex, Only it might vex some to hear that service Decried, the sole support that's left the King!
Lady Car. So the Archbishop says.
Went. Ah? well, perhaps The only hand held up in my defence May be old Land's! These Hollanders then, these Saviles Nibble? They nibble? — that's the very word!
Lady Car. Your profit in the Customs, Bristol says.
Exceeds the due proportion: while the tax . . .
Went. Enough! 'tis too unworthy, — I am not So patient as I thought! What's Pym about?
Lady Car. Pym?
Went. Pym and the People,
Lady Car. Oh, the Faction! Extinct — of no account: there'll never be Another Parliament.
Went. Tell Savile that!
You may know — nay, you do — the creatures here
Never forget! that in my earliest life
I was not . . . much that I am! The King
May take my word on points concerning Pym
Before Lord Savile's, Lucy, or if not,
I bid them: ruin their wise selves, not me,
These Vanes and Hollands! I'll not be their tool
Who might be Pym's friend yet.
But there's the King!
Where is he?
Lady Car. Just appraised that you arrive,
Went. And why not here to meet me? I was told,
He sent for me, may, longed for me,
Lady Car. Because, — He is now . . . I think a Council's sitting now About this Scots affair,
Went. A Council sits?
They have not taken a decided course
Without me in the matter?
Lady Car. I should say . . .
Went. The war? They cannot have agreed to that?
Not the Scots' war? — without consulting me —
Me, that am here to show how rash it is,
How easy to dispense with? — Ah, you too
Against me! well, — the King may take his time, — Forget it, Lucy! Cares make peevish: mine
Weigh me (but 't is a secret) to my grave.
Lady Car. For life or death I am your own, dear friend!
(Went. goes out.
Went. Heartless! but all are heartless here. Go now.
Forsake the People! I did not forsake The People: they shall know it, when the King Will trust me! — who trusts all beside at once, While I have not spoke Vane and Savile fair, And am not trusted: have but saved the throne: Have not picked up the Queen's glove prettily, And am not trusted. But he'll see me now. Weston is dead: the Queen's half English now — More English: one decisive word will brush These insects from . . . the step I know so well! The King! But now, to tell him . . . no — to ask
What is in me he distrusts; — or, best begin By proving that this frightful Scots affair Is just what I foretold. So much to say,
And the flesh fails, now, and the time is come, And one false step no way to be repaired. You were avenged, Pym, could you look on me.
(Pym enters.)
Went. I little thought of you just then.
Pym. No? I Think always of you, Wentworth.
Went. The old voice I wait the King, sir.
Pym. True — you look so pale! A Council sits within; when that breaks up He'll see you.
Went. Sir, I thank you.
Pym. Oh, thank Land!
You know when Land once gets on Church affairs
The case is desperate: he'll not be long
To-day: he only means to move, to-day;
We English all are proud to have a hand.
In butchering the Scots for serving God
After their fathers' fashion: only that!
Went. Sir, keep your jests: for those who relish them!
(Does he enjoy their confidence?) 'Tis kind
To tell me what the Council does.

Pym. You grudge
That I should know it had resolved on war
Before you came? no need: you shall have all
The credit, trust me!
Went. Have the Council dared —
They have not dared . . . that is — I know you not.
Farewell, sir: times are changed.
Pym. — Since we two met
At Greenwich? Yes: poor patriots though we be,
You cut a figure, makes some slight return
For your exploits in Ireland! Changed indeed,
Could our friend Eliot look from out his grave!
Ah, Wentworth, one thing for acquaintance'
sake
Just to decide a question: have you, now,
Felt your old self since you forsook us?
Went. Sir!
Pym. Spare me the gesture! you misapprehend.
Think not I mean the advantage is with me,
I was about to say that, for my part,
I never quite held up my head since then —
Was quite myself since then: for first, you see,
I lost all credit after that event.
With those who recollect how sure I was
Wentworth would outdo Eliot on our side.
Forgive me; Savile, old Vane, Holland here,
Eschew plain-speaking: 'tis a trick I keep.
Went. Now, when, where, Savile, Vane, and Holland speak,
Plainly or otherwise, would have my scorn,
All of my scorn, sir . . .
Pym. Did not my poor thoughts
Claim somewhat?
Went. Keep your thoughts! believe the King
Mistrusts me for their prattle; all these Vanes
And Saviles! make your mind up, a' God's love,
That I am discontented with the King!
Pym. Why, you may be: I should be, that I know,
Were I like you.
Went. Like me?
Pym. I care not much
For titles: our friend Eliot died no lord,
Hampden's no lord, and Savile is a lord;
But you care, since you sold your soul for one,
I can't think, therefore, your soul's purchaser
Did well to laugh you to such utter scorn
When you twice prayed so humbly for its price,
The thirty silver pieces . . . I should say,
The Earldom you expected, still expect.
And may. Your letters were the movingest!
Console yourself: I've borne him prayers just now
From Scotland not to be oppressed by Land,
Words moving in their way: he'll pay, be sure.
As much attention as to those you sent.
Went. False, sir! Who showed them you?
Suppose it so,
The King did very well . . . nay, I was glad
When it was shown me: I refused, the first!
John Pym, you were my friend — forbear me once!
Pym. Oh, Wentworth, ancient brother of my soul,
That all should come to this!
Went. Leave me!
Pym. My friend.
Why should I leave you?
Went. To tell Rudyard this.
And Hampden this!
Pym. Whose faces once were bright
At my approach, now sad with doubt and fear.
Because I hope in you — yes, Wentworth, you
Who never mean to ruin England — you
Who shake off, with God's help, an obscene dream
In this Ezekiel chamber, where it crept.
Upon you first, and wake, yourself, your true.
And proper self, our Leader, England's Chief.
And Hampden's friend!
This is the proudest day!
Come, Wentworth! Do not even see the King!
The rough old room will seem itself again;
We'll both go in together: you've not seen
Hampden so long: come: and there's Fiennes:
you'll have
To know young Vane. This is the proudest day!
(The King enters. Wentworth lets fall Pym's hand.
Charles. Arrived, my lord? — This gentle man, we know
Was your old friend.
The Scots shall be informed
What we determine for their happiness,
[This is the proudest day!]
You have made haste, my lord.
Went. Sir, I am come . . .
Cha. To see an old familiar — nay, 'tis well;
Aid us with his experience: this Scots' League
And Covenant spreads too far, and we have proofs
That they intrigue with France: the Faction
too.
Whereof your friend there is the head and front,
Abets them, — as he boasted, very like.
Went. Sir, trust me! but for this once, trust me, sir!
Cha. What can you mean?
Went. That you should trust me, sir:
Oh — not for my sake but 'tis sad, so sad
That for distrusting me, you suffer — you
Whom I would die to serve: sir, do you think
That I would die to serve you?
Cha. But rise, Wentworth!
Went. What shall convince you? What does
Savile do
To prove him . . . Ah, one can't tear out one's heart
And show it, how sincere a thing it is!
Cha. Have I not trusted you?
Went. Say aunt but that!
There is my comfort, mark you: all will be
So different when you trust me — as you shall!
It has not been your fault, — I was away,
Mistook, malign'd, how was the King to know?
I am here, now — he means to trust me, now —
All will go on so well!

Cha. Be sure I do —
I've heard that I should trust you: as you came,
Your friend, the Countess, told me.

Went. No, — hear nothing —
Be told nothing about me! — you're not told
Your right-hand serves you, or your children love you!

Cha. You love me, Wentworth: rise!

Went. I can speak now.
I have no right to hide the truth. 'Tis I
Can save you: only I. Sir, what must be?

Cha. Since Laud's assured (the minutes are Loath as I am to spill my subjects' blood...
Went. That is, he'll have a war: what's done is done!

Cha. They have intrigued with France; that's clear to Laud.
Went. Has Laud suggested any way to meet
The war's expense?

Cha. He'd not decide so far
Until you joined us.

Went. Most considerate!
He's certain they intrigue with France, these Scots?

The People would be with us,

Cha. Pym should know.

Went. The People for us — were the People for us!

Sir, a great thought comes to reward your trust: —
Summon a Parliament! in Ireland first,
Then, here.

Cha. In truth?

Went. That saves us! that puts off
The war, gives time to right their grievances —
To talk with Pym. I know the Faction — Laud
So says it — tutors Scotland: all their plans
Suppose no Parliament: in calling one
You take them by surprise. Produce the proofs
Of Scotland's treason: then bid England help:
Even Pym will not refuse.

Cha. You would begin
With Ireland?

Went. Take no care for that: that's sure
To prosper.

Cha. You shall rule me. You were best
Return at once: but take this ere you go!
Now, do I trust you? You're an Earl: my Friend
Of Friends; yes, while... You hear me not!
Went. Say it all over again — but once again:
The first was for the music: once again!

Cha. Strafford, my friend, there may have been reports,
Vain rumors. Henceforth touching Strafford is
To touch the apple of my sight: why gaze
So earnestly?

Went. I am grown young again,
And foolish. What was it we spoke of?

Cha. Ireland,
The Parliament, —

Went. I may go when I will?

Cha. Are you tired so soon of us?

Went. My King!
But you will not so utterly abhor
Cha. You said just now this was the only way.

Went. Sir, I will serve you!

Cha. Strafford, spare yourself:
You are so sick, they tell me.

Went. That's well and prospers now.
'Tis my soul
This Parliament
We'll summon it, the English one — I'll care
For everything. You shall not need them much.
Cha. If they prove restive...

Went. I shall be with you.

Cha. Ere they assemble?

Went. I will come, or else
Deposit this infirm humanity
P the dust. My whole heart stays with you, my King!

[As Wentworth goes out, the Queen enters.

Cha. That man must love me.

Queen. Is it over then?
Why, he looks yellower than ever! Well,
At least we shall not hear eternally
Of service — services: he's paid at least.

Cha. Not done with; he engages to surpass
All yet performed in Ireland.

Queen. I had thought
Nothing beyond was ever to be done.
The war. Charles — will he raise supplies
enough?

Cha. We've hit on an expedient; he...
that is,
I have advised... we have decided on
The calling — in Ireland — of a Parliament.

Queen. O truly! You agree to that? Is that
The first-fruit of his counsel? But I guessed
As much.

Cha. This is too idle, Henriette!
I should know best. He will strain every nerve,
And once a precedent established...

Queen. Notice
How sure he is of a long term of favor!
He'll see the next, and the next after that;
No end to Parliaments!

Cha. Well, it is done.
He talks it smoothly, doubtless. If, indeed.
The Commons here...

Queen. Here? you will summon them
Here? Would I were in France again to see A King!
But, Henriette...

Queen. Oh, the Scots see clear!
Why should they bear your rule?

Cha. But listen, sweet!

Queen. Let Wentworth listen — you confide in him!

Cha. I do not, love. — I do not so confide!
The Parliament shall never trouble us!
. . Nay, hear me! I have schemes, such schemes: we'll buy
The leaders off: without that, Wentworth's counsel
Had never prevailed on me. Perhaps I call it
To have excuse for breaking it forever.
And whose will then the blame be? See you
not?
Come, dearest! — look, the little fairy, now,
That cannot reach my shoulder! Dearest, come!

ACT II

SCENE I. (As in Act I. Scene I.)

The same Party enters.

Rud. Twelve subsidies!
Vane. O Rodyard, do not laugh
At least!
Rud. True: Strafford called the Parliatement —
'Tis he should laugh!
A Puritan. Out of the serpent’s root
Comes forth a cockatrice.

t. — A stinging one,
If that’s the Parliament: twelve subsidies!
A stinging one! but, brother, where’s your word
For Strafford’s other nest-egg, the Scots’ war?
The Puritan. His fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

t. Shall be? It chips the shell, man;
peeps abroad,
Twelve subsidies! — Why, how now, Vane?
Rud. Peace. Fiennes!
t. Ah? — But he was not more a dupe
Or you, or any here, the day that Pym
Returned with the good news. Look up, friend
Vane!
We all believe that Strafford meant us well
In summoning the Parliament.

(Vanex enters.)

Vane. Now, Hampden,
Clear me! I would have leave to sleep again:
I’d look the People in the face again:
Clear me from having, from the first, hoped,
dreamed
Better of Strafford!
Hamp. You may grow one day
A steadfast light to England, Henry Vane!
Rud. Meantime, by flashes I make shift to
you
Strafford revived our Parliaments; before,
War was but talked of; there’s an army, now:
Still, we’ve a Parliament! Poor Ireland hears
Another wrench (she dies the hardest death!?) —
Why, speak of it in Parliament: and lo,
’Tis spoken, so console yourselves!
t. The jest!
We clamoured, I suppose, thus long, to win
The privilege of laying on our backs
A sover burden than the King dares lay.
Rud. Mark now: we meet at length, complaints pour in
From every county, all the land cries out
On loans and levies, curses ship-money,
Caills vengeance on the Star Chamber; we lend
An ear, “Ay, lend them all the ears you
have!”

Puts in the King; “my subjects, as you find,
Are fretful, and conceive great things of you,
Just listen to them, friends; you’ll sanction me
The measures they most wince at, make them
yours,

Instead of mine. I know: and to begin,
They say my levies pinch them,—raise me straight
Twelve subsidies!”
t. All England cannot furnish
Twelve subsidies!
Hol. But Strafford, just returned
From Ireland — what has he to do with that?
How could he speak his mind? He left before
The Parliament assembled. Pym, who knows
Strafford . . .
Rud. Would I were sure we know ourselves!
What is for good, what, bad — who friend, who foe!
Hol. Do you count Parliaments no gain?
Rud. A gain?
While the King’s creatures overbalance us?
— There’s going on, beside, among ourselves
A quiet, slow, but most effectual course
Of buying over, sapping, leaving
The lump till all is leaven. Glanville’s gone.
I’ll put a case; had not the Court declared
That no sum short of just twelve subsidies
Will be accepted by the King — our House,
I say, would have consented to that offer
To let us buy off ship-money!
Hol. Most like.
If, say, six subsidies will buy it off,
The House . . .
Rud. Will grant them! Hampden, do you hear?
Congratulate with me! the King’s the king,
And gains his point at last — our own assent
To that detested tax! All’s over, then
There’s no more taking refuge in this room,
Protesting, “Let the King do what he will,
We, England, are no party to our shame;
Our day will come!” Congratulate with me!

(Pym enters.)

Vane. Pym, Strafford called this Parliament,
you say,
But we’ll not have our Parliaments like those
In Ireland. Pym!
Rud. Let him stand forth, your friend!
One doubtful act hides far too many sins;
It can be stretched no more, and, to my mind,
Begins to drop from those it covered.

Other Voices.

Good!
Let him avow himself! No fitter time!
We wait thus long for you.
Rud. Perhaps, too long!
Since nothing but the madness of the Court,
In thus unmasking its designs at once,
Has saved us from betraying England. Stay —
This Parliament is Strafford’s: let us vote
Our list of Grievances too black by far
To suffer talk of subsidies: or best,
That ship-money’s disposed of long ago
By England: any vote that’s broad enough:
And then let Strafford, for the love of it,
Support his Parliament!

Vane. And vote as well
No war to be with Scotland! Hear you, Pym?
We’ll vote, no war! No part nor lot in it
For England!

Many Voices. Vote, no war! Stop the new levies!
No Bishops' war! At once! When next we meet!

Pym. Much more when next we meet!

Friends, which of you
Since first the course of Strafford was in doubt,
Has fallen the most away in soul from me?

Vane. I sat apart, even now under God's eye.
Pondering the words that should denounce you,

Pym. In presence of us all, as one at league
With England's enemy.

Pym. You are a good
And gallant spirit, Henry. Take my hand
And say you pardon me for all the pain
Till now?. Strafford is wholly ours.

Many Voices. Sure? sure?

Pym. Most sure: for Charles dissolves the Parliament
While I speak here.

— And I must speak, friends, now!

Strafford is ours. The King detects the change,
Gasts Strafford off forever, and resumes
His ancient path: no Parliament for us,
No Strafford for the King!

— Come, all of you,
To bid the King farewell, predict success
To his Scots' expedition, and receive Strafford, our commander now. The next will be Indeed a Parliament!

Vane. Forgive me, Pym!

Voices. This looks like truth: Strafford can have, indeed,

Pym. No choice.

Voices. Friends, follow me! He's with the King.

Come, Hampden, and come, Rudyard, and come, Vane!

This is no sullen day for England, sirs!

Strafford shall tell you!

Voices. To Whitehall then! Come!

Scene II. Whitehall.

Charles and Strafford.

Char. Strafford!

Strafford. Is it a dream? my papers, here —
Thus, as I left them, all the plans you found
So happy — (look! the track you pressed my hand
For pointing out) — and in this very room,
Over these very plans, you tell me, sir,
With the same face, too — tell me just one thing
That ruins them! How's this? What may this mean?
Sir, who has done this?

Char. Strafford, who but I?

You made me put the rest away: indeed
You are alone.

Straff. Alone, and like to be!

No fear, when some unworthy scheme grows ripe,

Of those, who hatched it, leaving me to loose
The mischief on the world! Land hatches war,
Falls to his prayers, and leaves the rest to me.

And I'm alone.

Char. At least, you knew as much
When first you undertook the war.

Strav. My liege,
Was this the way? I said, since Land would lap
A little blood, 't were best to hurry over
The loathsome business, not to be whole months
At slaughter — one blow, only one, then, peace.

Save for the dreams. I said, to please you both
I'd lead an Irish army to the West.

While in the South an English... but you look
As though you had not told me fifty times
'I was a brave plan! My army is all raised,
I am prepared to join it...

Char.

Strav.... When, for some little thing, my whole design
Is set aside — where is the wretched paper?
I am to lead — (say, here it is! — to lead
The English army: why? Northumberland,
That I appointed, chooses to be sick —
Is frightened: and, meanwhile, who answers for
The Irish Parliament? or army, either?

Is this my plan?

Char. So disrespectful, sir?

Straff. My liege, do not believe it! I am yours,
Yours ever: 't is too late to think about:

To the death, yours. Elsewhere, this untoward step
Shall pass for mine; the world shall think it mine.

But here! But here! I am so seldom here,
Seldom with you, my King! I soon to rush
Alone upon a giant in the dark?

Char. My Strafford!

Straff. [Examines papers awhile.] "Seize
The passes of the Tyne!"

But, sir, you see — see all I say is true?
My plan was sure to prosper, so, no cause
To ask the Parliament for help; whereas
We need them frightfully.

Char. Need the Parliament?

Straff. Now, for God's sake, sir, not one error more!

We can afford no error; we draw, now,
Upon our last resource: the Parliament
Must help us!

Char. I've undone you, Strafford!

Stav. Nay —

Nay — why despond, sir? 't is not come to that!
I have not hurt you? Sir, what have I said
To hurt you? I unsay it! Don't despond:
Sir, do you turn from me?

Char.

Stav. My friend of friends!

Char. We'll make a shift. Leave me the Parliament!

Help they us ne'er so little and I'll make Sufficient out of it. We'll speak them fair.
They're sitting: that's one great thing; that half gives
Their sanction to us; that's much: don't despond:

Why, let them keep their money, at the worst!
The reputation of the People's help
Is all we want: we'll make shift yet!

Char.

Stav. Good Strafford!

Stav. But meantime, let the sum be ne'er so small
They offer, we'll accept it: any sum —

For the look of it; the least grant tells the Scots
The Parliament is ours — their stanch ally
Turned ours: that told, there's half the blood to strike!
What will the grant be? What does Glanville think?
Cha. Ahas!
Straf. My liege?
Cha. Strafford!
Straf. But answer me!
Have they. . . Oh surely not refused us half?
Half the twelve subsidies? We never looked
For all of them. How many do they give?
Cha. You have not heard. . .
Straf. (What has he done?) — Heard what?
But speak at once, sir, this grows terrible.
[The King continuing silent.
You have dissolved them! — I'll not leave this

Cha. It was old Vane's ill-judged vehemence.

Straf. Old Vane?
Cha. He told them, just about to vote the half,
That nothing short of all twelve subsidies
Would serve our turn, or be accepted.

Straf. Vane! Vane! Who, sir, promised me, that very Vane . .
O God, to have it gone, quite gone from me,
The last hope — I that despair, my hope —
That I should reach his heart one day, and cure
All bitterness one day, be proud again
And young again, care for the sunshine too,
And never think of Elliot any more. —
God, and to toll for this, go far for this.
Get nearer, and still nearer, reach this heart
And find Vane there!
[Suddenly taking up a paper, and continuing with a forced calmness.
Northumberland is sick:
Well, then, I take the army: Wilmot leads
The horse, and he, with Conway, must secure
The passes of the Tyne: Ormond supplies
My place in Ireland. Here, we'll try the City:
If they refuse a loan — debase the coin
And seize the bullion! we've no other choice!
Herbert. . . And this while I am here! with you!
And there are hosts such, hosts like Vane! I go,
And, I once gone, they'll close around you, sir,
When the least pique, pettiest mistrust, is sure
To ruin me — and you along with me!
Do you see that? And you along with me!
— Sir, you'll not ever listen to these men,
And I away, fighting your battle? Sir,
If they — if she — charge me, no matter how —
Say you, "At any time when he returns
His head is mine!" Don't stop me there! You
know
My head is yours, but never stop me there!
Cha. Too shameful, Strafford! You advised the war,
And . . .
Straf. I! I! that was never spoken with
Till it was entered on! That loathe the war!
That say it is the maddest, wickedest. . .
Do you know, sir, I think within my heart,
That you would say I did advise the war;
And if, through your own weakness, or, what's worse,
These Scots, with God to help them, drive me back,
You will not step between the raging People
And me, to say . . .
I knew it! from the first
I knew it! Never was so cold a heart!
Remember that I said it — that I never believed you for a moment!
— And, you loved me?
You thought your perfidy profoundly hid
Because I could not share the whisperings
With Vane, with Savile? What, the face was masked?
I had the heart to see, sir! Face of flesh.
But heart of stone — of smooth cold frightful
stone!
Ay, call them! Shall I call for you? The Scots
Goaded to madness? Or the English — Pym —
Shall I call Pym, your subject? Oh, you think I'll leave them in the dark about it all?
They shall not know you? Hampden, Pym shall not?
(PYM, HAMPTON, VANES, etc., enter.)
[Dropping on his knee.] This favored with your gracious countenance.
What shall a rebel League avail against Your servant, utterly and ever yours?
So, gentlemen, the King's not even left
The privilege of bidding me farewell
Who haste to save the People — that you style
Your People — from the mercies of the Scots
And France their friend?
To CHARLES.] Pym's grave gray eyes are fixed
Upon you, sir!
Your pleasure, gentlemen.

Hamp. The King dissolved us — 'tis the King we seek
And not Lord Strafford.
Straf. Strafford, guilty too
Of counselling the measure. [To CHARLES.
(Shh . . . you know —
You have forgotten — sir, I counselled it
A heinous matter, truly! But the King
Will yet see cause to thank me for a course
Which now, perchance . . . [Sir, tell them so!]
— he blames.
Well, choose some fitter time to make your charge:
I shall be with the Scots, you understand?
Then yelp at me!
Meanwhile, your Majesty
Binds me, by this fresh token of your trust . . .
[Under the pretence of an earnest farewell, STRAFFORD conducts CHARLES to the door, in such a manner as to hide his agitation from the rest: as the King disappears, they turn as by one impulse to Pym, who has not changed his original posture of surprise.

Hamp. Leave we this arrogant strong wicked
man!
Vane and others. Hence, Pym! Come out of this unworthy place
To our old room again! He's gone.

[STRAFFORD, just about to follow the King, looks back.]

Pym. Not gone! [To STRAFFORD.] Keep tryst! the old appointment
's made anew:
Forget not we shall meet again!

Straf. So be it!
And if an army follows me—

Will entertain your army! Par.

You have misconceived, Strafford: time shows,

Body and spirit! Fool to feign a doubt.

Pretend the scrupulous and nice reserve

Of one whose prowess shall achieve the feat!

What share have I in it? Do I affect

To see no dismal sign above your head

When God suspends his ruinous thunder there?

Stratford is dowered. Touch him no one of you.

Pym. Hamonds, etc., go and.

Strat. Pym, we shall meet again!

You here, child?

Lady Car.

I know it all; hush, Stratford!

She. Ah! you know?

I shall make a sorry soldier, Lady!

All knights begin their enterprises, we read.

Under the best of auspices; it is morn.

The Lady gives his sword upon the Youth.

He's always very young— the trumpets sound,

ups, pledge him, and, why, the King blesses

You need not turn a page of the romance

To learn the Dreadful Giant's fate. Indeed,

We've the fair Lady here; but she apart,

A poor man, rarely having handled lance,

And rather old, weary, and far from sure

His Squires are not the Giant's friends. All's

one:

Let us go forth!

Lady Car. Go forth?

What matters it?

We shall die gloriously — as the book says.

Lady Car. To Scotland? not to Scotland?

Strat. Am I sick

Like your good brother, brave Northumber-

Beside, these walls seem falling on me.

Lady Car. Stratford.

The wind that saps these walls can undermine

Your camp in Scotland, too. Whence creeps

The wind?

Have you no eyes except for Pym? Look here!

A breed of silken creatures lurk and thrive

In your contempt. You'll vanquish Pym? Old

Vane

Can vanquish you. And Vane you think to fly?

Rush on the Scots! Do nobly! Vane's slight

neer

Shall test success, adjust the praise, suggest

The faint result: Vane's sneer shall reach you

there.

You do not listen!

Strat. Oh, I give that up.

There's fate in it: I give all here quite up.

Care not what old Vane does or Holland does

Against me! 'Tis so idle to withstand

In no case tell me what they do!

Lady Car. But, Stratford.

Strat. I want a little strife, beside; real strife;

This petty palace-warfare does me harm:

I shall feel better, fairly out of it.

Lady Car. Why do you smile?
And you are really bound for Scotland then? I wish you well; you must be very sure Of the King's faith, for Pym and all his crew Will not be idle — setting Vane aside! Straf. If Pym is busy, — you may write of Pym.

Lady Car. What need, since there's your King to take your part? He may endure Vane's counsel; but for Pym — Think you he'll suffer Pym to . . .

Straf. Child, your hair Is glossier than the Queen's!

A curl of me?

Lady Car. — the weary way!

Lady Car. — Stay, let me fasten it.

Straf. [showing the George.] He hung it there: twine yours around it, child!

Lady Car. No — no — another time — I strike so! And there's a masque on foot. Farewell. The Court Is dull; do something to enliven us In Scotland: we expect it at your hands. Straf. I shall not fail in Scotland.

Lady Car. Prosper — if You'll think of me sometimes!

Straf. How think of him And not of you? of you, the lingering streak (A golden one) in my good fortune's eye.

Lady Car. Strafford . . . Well, when the eye has its last streak

The night has its first star. [She goes out.

Straf. That voice of hers — You'd think she had a heart sometimes! His voice Is soft too.

Only God can save him now.

Be Thou about his bed, about his path! His path! Where's England's path? Diverging wide, And not to join again the track my foot Must follow — whither? All that forlorn way Among the tombs! Far — far — till . . . What, they do Then join again, these paths? For, huge in the dusk, There's — Pym to face!

Why then, I have a foe To close with, and a fight to fight at last Worthy my soul! What, do they beard the King? And shall the King want Strafford at his need? Am I not here? Not in the market-place. Pressed on by the rough artisans, so proud To catch a glance from Wentworth! They lie down Hungry yet smile, "Why, it must end some day: Is he not watching for our sake?" Not there! But in Whitehall, the whited sepulchre, The . . . Curse nothing to-night! Only one name They'll curse in all those streets to-night. Whose fault? Did I make kings? set up, the first, a man

To represent the multitude, receive All love in right of them — supplant them so, Until you love the man and not the king — The man with the mild voice and mournful eyes Which send me forth.

— To breast the bloody sea That sweeps before me: with one star for guide. Night has its first, supreme, forsaken star.

ACT III

SCENE i. Opposite Westminster Hall.

Sir Henry Vane, Lord Savile, Lord Holland and others of the Court.

Sir ii. Vane. The Commons thrust you out? Savile. And what kept you From sharing their civility? Vane. Kept me? Fresh news from Scotland, sir! worse than the last, If that may be. All's up with Strafford there: Nothing to bar the mad Scots marching hither Next Lord's-day morning. That detained me, sir! Well now, before they thrust you out, — go on— Their Speaker — did the fellow Lenthall say All we set down for him?

Holland. Not a word missed. Ere he began, we entered, Savile, I And Bristol and some more, with hope to breed A wholesome awe in the new Parliament, But such a gang of graceless ruffians, Vane, As glared at us!

Vane. So many?

Sav. Not a bench Without its complement of barly knaves; Your hopeful son among them: Hampden leant Upon his shoulder — think of that! Vane. I'd think On Lenthall's speech, if I could get at it. Urged he, I ask, how grateful they should prove For this unlooked-for summons from the King? Holland. Just as we drilled him,

Vane. That the Scots will march On London?

Holland. All, and made so much of it, A dozen subsidies at least seemed sure To follow, when . . .

Vane. Well?

Holland. "Tis a strange thing now! I've a vague memory of a sort of sound, A voice, a kind of vast unnatural voice — Pym, sir, was speaking! Savile, help me out What was it all?

Sav. Something about "a matter" — No. — " work for England."

Sav. How should I get used to Pym More than yourselves?

Holland. However that may be, "T was something with which we had nought to do. For we were "strangers," and 't was "England's work" —

(All this while looking us straight in the face.)
In other words, our presence might be spared. So, in the twinkling of an eye, before I settled to my mind what ugly brute was likest Pym just then, they yelled us out, locked the doors after us, and here are we. Vane. Eliot's old method...

Saw. Prithee, Vane, a truce To Eliot and his times, and the great Duke, And how to manage Parliaments! "Twas you Advised the Queen to summon this: why, Strafford To do him justice would not hear of it. Vane. Say rather, you have done the best of turns To Strafford: he's at York, we all know why. I would you had not set the Scots on Strafford Till Strafford put down Pym for us, my lord! Saw. Was it I altered Strafford's plans? did I...

(A Messenger enters.)

Mrs. The Queen, my lords — she sends me: follow me At once; 'tis very urgent! she requires Your counsel: something perilous and strange Occasions her command.

Saw. We follow, friend! Now, Vane; — your Parliament will plague us all! Vane. No Strafford here beside!

Hol. Nay, find a fitter time for quarrels —

Pym Will overmatch the best of you; and, think, The Queen!

Vane. Come on, then: understand, I loathe Strafford as much as any — but his use! To keep off Pym, to screen a friend or two, I would we had reserved him yet awhile.

Scene II. Whitehall.

The Queen and Lady Carlisle.

Queen. It cannot be.

Lady Car. It is so.

Queen. Why, the House have hardly met.

Lady Car. They met for that.

Queen. No, no!

Meet to impeach Lord Strafford? 'Tis a jest, Lady Car. A bitter one.

Queen. Consider! 'Tis the House we summoned so reluctantly, which nothing But the disastrous issue of the war persuaded us to summon. They'll wreak all Their spite on us, no doubt; but the old way is to begin by talk of grievances: They have their grievances to busy them.

Lady Car. Pym has begun his speech.

Queen. Where's Vane? — That is. Pym will impeach Lord Strafford if he leaves His Presidency; he's at York, we know, Since the Scots beat him: why should he leave York?

Lady Car. Because the King sent for him, Queen. Ah — but if The King did send for him, he let him know We had been forced to call a Parliament —

A step which Strafford, now I come to think, Was vehement against.

Lady Car. The policy Escaped him, of first striking Parliaments To earth, then setting them upon their feet And giving them a sword: but this is idle. Did the King send for Strafford? He will come.

Queen. And what am I to do?

Lady Car. What do? Fail, madam! Be ruined for his sake? what matters how, So it but stand on record that you made An effort, only one?

Queen. At Theobald's!

Lady Car. Send for him at once: he must Dissolve the House.

Queen. Wait till Vane finds the truth Of the report: then...

Lady Car. — It will matter little What the King does. Strafford that lends his arm And breaks his heart for you!

(Sir H. Vase enters.

Vane. The Commons, madam, Are sitting with closed doors. A huge debate, No lack of noise; but nothing, I should guess, Concerning Strafford: Pym has certainly Not spoken yet.

Queen. [To Lady Carlisle.] You hear?

Lady Car. I do not hear That the King's sent for! Vane. Savile will be able To tell you more.

(Holland enters.

Queen. The last news, Holland?

Holl. Pym is raging like a fire. The whole House means To follow him together to Whitehall And force the King to give up Strafford.

Queen. Strafford?

Holl. If they content themselves with Strafford! Land is talked of, Cottington and Wind-hank too. Pym has not left out one of them — I would You heard Pym raging!

Queen. Vane, go find the King! Tell the King, Vane, the People follow Pym To brave us at Whitehall!

(Savile enters.

Sav. Not to Whitehall — 'T is to the Lords they go: they seek redress On Strafford from his peers — the legal way, They call it.

Queen. [Wait, Vane!]

Sav. But the adage gives Long life to threatened men. Strafford can save Himself so readily: at York, remember, In his own county: what has he to fear? The Commons only mean to frighten him From leaving York. Surely, he will not come.

Queen. Lucy, he will not come!

Lady Car. Once more, the King Has sent for Strafford. He will come.

Vane. Oh doubtless! And bring destruction with him: that 's his way. What but his coming spoilt all Conway's plan? The King must take his counsel, choose his friends,
Be wholly ruled by him! What's the result? The North that was to rise, Ireland to help. — What came of it? In my poor mind, a fright Is no prodigious punishment.

Lady Car. A fright? I'wou'll tail worse than Strafford if he thinks To frighten him. [To the Queen.] You will not save him then?

Sav. When something like a charge is made, the King Will best know how to save him : and 'tis clear, While Strafford suffers nothing by the matter, The King may reap advantage: this in question, No dimming you with ship-money complaints!

Queen. [To Lady Carlisle.] If we dissolve This, who will pay the army?

Protect us from the insolent Scots?

Lady Car. In truth, I know not, madam, Strafford's fate concerns Me little; you desired to learn what course Would save him : I obey you.

Vane. Notice, too, There can't be fairer ground for taking full Revenge — Strafford's revengeful! — than he'll have Against his old friend Pym.

Queen. Why, he shall claim Vengeance on Pym!

Vane. And Strafford, who is he To 'scape maced amid the accidents That harass all beside? I, for my part, Should look for something of discomfiture Had the King trusted me so thoroughly And been so paid for it.

Holl. He'll keep at York: All will blow over: he'll return no worse, Humbled a little, thankful for a place Under as good a man. Oh, we'll dispense With seeing Strafford for a month or two!

(Strefford enters.)

Queen. You here!

Straf. The King sends for me, madam.

Queen. Sir, The King ...

Straf. An urgent matter that imports the King! [To Lady Carlisle.] Why, Lucy, what's in agitation now, That all this muttering and shrugging, see, Begins at me? They do not speak!

Lady Car. 'Tis welcome! For we are proud of you — happy and proud To have you with us, Strafford! You were staunch At Durham: you did well there! Had you not been stayed, you might have ... we said, even now.

Our hope's in you!

Vane. [To Lady Carlisle.] The Queen would speak with you.

Straf. Will one of you, his servants here, convey the To signify my presence to the King?

Sav. An urgent matter?

Straf. None that touches you, Lord Savile! Say, it were some treacherous Sly pitiful intriguing with the Scots — You would go free, at least! (They half divine My purpose!) Madam, shall I see the King? The service I would render, much concerns His welfare.

Queen. But his Majesty, my lord, May not be here, may ...

Straf. Its importance, then, Must plead excuse for this withdrawal, madam, And for the grief it gives Lord Savile here.

Queen. [Who has been conversing with Vane and Holland.] The King will see you, sir!

[To Lady Carlisle.] Mark me: Pym's worst Is done by now; he has impeached the Earl, Or found the Earl too strong for him, by now. Let us not seem instructed! We should work No good to Strafford, but deform ourselves With shame in the world's eye. [To Strafford.] His Majesty Has much to say with you.

Straf. Time fleeting, too!

[To Lady Carlisle.] No means of getting them away? And she —

What does she whisper? Does she know my purpose?

What does she think of it? Get them away!

Queen. [To Lady Carlisle.] He comes to baffle Pym — he thinks the danger Far off: tell him no word of it! a time For help will come; we'll not he wanting then. Keep him in play. Lucy — you, self-possessed And calm! [To Strafford.] To spare your lordship some delay I will myself acquaint the King. [To Lady Carlisle.] Beware!

[The Queen, Vane, Holland, and Savile go out.]

Straf. She knows it?

Lady Car. Tell me, Strafford!

Straf. Afterward!

This moment's the great moment of all time, She knows my purpose?

Lady Car. Thoroughly: just now She bade me hide it from you.

Straf. Quick, dear child, The whole e' the scheme?

Lady Car. (Ah, he would learn if they Comeive at Pym's procedure! Could they but Have once apprised the King! But there's no time For falsehood, now.) Strafford, the whole is known.

Straf. Known and approved?

Lady Car. Hardly discomfanciued.

Straf. And the King — say, the King consents as well?

Lady Car. The King's not yet informed, but will not dare To interpose.

Straf. What need to wait him, then? He'll sanction it! I stayed, child, tell him, long!

It vexed me to the soul — this waiting here. You know him, there's no counting on the King. Tell him I waited long!

Lady Car. (What can he mean?)

Straf. I knew They would be glad of it, — all over once,
Lady Car. (Is he mad?) Dear Strafford, you were not want to look so happy.

Straff. Sweet, I tried obedience thoroughly. I took The King's wild plan; of course, ere I could reach My army, Conway ruined it. I drew The wrecks together, raised all heaven and earth, And would have fought the Scots: the King at once Made truce with them. Then, Lucy then, their dear child.

God put it in my mind to love, serve, die
For Charles, but never to obey him more!
While he endured their insolence at Ripon
I fell on them at Durham. But you'll tell
The King I waited? All the anteroom
Is filled with my adherents.

Lady Car. Strafford — Strafford, What daring act is this you hint?

Straff. No, no! 'Tis here, not daring if you knew? all here!

(Drawing papers from his breast)

Full proof; see, ample proof — does the Queen know I have such damning proof? Bedford and Essex,

Brooke, Warwick, Savile (did you notice Savile?)
The simper that I spoilt? Saye, Mandeville — Sold to the Scots, body and soul, by Pym!

Lady Car. Great heaven!

Straff. From Savile and his lords, to Pym
And his bosom, crushed! — Pym shall not ward the blow
Nor Savile creep aside from it! The Crew
And the Cabal — I crush them!

Lady Car. And you go —

Strafford, and now you go? —

Straff. — About no work
In the background, I promise you! I go Straight to the House of Lords to claim these knaves, Mainwaring!

Lady Car. Stay — stay, Strafford!

Straff. She'll return, The Queen — some little project of her own!

No time to lose: the King takes fright perhaps.

Lady Car. Pym's strong, remember!

Straff. Very strong, as fits The Faction's head — with no offence to Hampden,

Vane, Rudyard, and my loving Holli: one
And all they lodge within the Tower to-night
In just equality, Bryan! Mainwaring!

The Peers debate just now (a lucky chance)
On the Scots' war: my visit's opportune.

When all is over, Bryan, you proceed To Ireland: these dispatches, mark me, Bryan, Are for the Deputy, and these for Ormonde:

We want the army here — my army, raised
At such a cost, that should have done such good.

We'll find a use for it. Willis... or, no — you!

You, friend, make haste to York: bear this, at once.

Or, — better stay for form's sake, see yourself
The news you carry. You remain with me to execute the Parliament's command.

Mainwaring! Help to seize these lesser knaves,
Take care there's no escaping at backdoors:
'I'll not have one escape, mind me — not one!

I seem revengeful, Lucy? Did you know
What these men dare!

Lady Car. It is so much they dare!

Straff. I proved that long ago; my turn is now.

Keep sharp watch, Goring, on the citizens!

Observe who harbors any of the breed
That scramble off: be sure they smart for it!

Our coffers are but lean.

And you, child, too,

Shall have your task; deliver this to Laud.

Laud will not be the slowest in my praise:

"Thorough," he'll cry! — Foolish, to be so glad!

This life is gay and glowing, after all:

'Tis worth while, Lucy, having foes like mine
Just for the bliss of crushing them. To-day
Is worth the living for.

Lady Car.

That reddening brow! You seem

Straff. Well — do I not? I would be well —
I could not but be well on such a day!

And, this day ended, 'tis of slight import
How long the ravaged frame subjects the soul
In Strafford.

Lady Car. Noble Strafford!

Straff. No fare-well!

I'll see you anon, to-morrow — the first thing.

— If she should come to stay me!

Lady Car. Go — 'tis nothing

Only my heart that swells: it has been thus Ever now: go, Strafford!

Straff. To-night, then, let it be,
I must see Him: you, the next after Him.

I'll tell you how Pym looked. Follow me, friends!

You, gentlemen, shall see a sight this hour
To talk of all your lives. Close after me!

"My friend of friends!"

[STRAFFORD AND THE REST GO OUT.

Lady Car. The King — ever the King!

No thought of one beside, whose little word
Unveils the King to him — one word from me,
Which yet I do not breathe!

Ah, have I spared Strafford a pang, and shall I seek reward
Beyond that memory? Surely too, some way
He is the better for my love. No, no,

He would not look so joyous — I'll believe
His very eye would never sparkle thus,
Had I not prayed for him this long, long while.

SCENE III. The Antechamber of the House of Lords.

Many of the Presbyterian Party. The Adherents of STRAFFORD, etc.

A Group of Presbyterians. — 1. I tell you he struck Maxwell: Maxwell sought
To stay the Earl: he struck him and passed on.

2. Fear as you may, keep a good countenance
Before these ruffians.

3. Strafford here the first,
With the great army at his back!

4. I would Pym had made haste: that's Bryan, hush —
The gallant pointing.

Strafford’s Followers. — 1. Mark these worthies, now!
2. A passively gathering: "Where the carcass is There shall the eagles" — What’s the rest?

Say crows.

A Presbyterian. Stand back, sirs!
One of Strafford’s Followers. Are we in Geneva?
A Presbyterian. No, nor in Ireland; we have leave to breathe.

One of Strafford’s Followers. Truly? Be — hold how privileged we be
That serve "King Pym"! There’s Some-one at Whitehall
Who skulks obscure: but Pym struts . . .
The Presbyterian. Nearer.

A Follower of Strafford. Higher.

We look to see him. [To his Companions.] I’m to have St. John
In charge; was he among the knaves just now
That followed Pym within there?

Another. The gaunt man
Talking with Rudyard. Did the Earl expect
Pym at his heels so fast? I like it not.

( MAXWELL enters.)

Another. Why, man, they rush into the net!
Here’s Maxwell —
Ha, Maxwell? How the brethren flock around
The fellow! Do you feel the Earl’s hand yet
Upon your shoulder, Maxwell?

Maxwell. Gentlemen.

Stand back! a great thing passes here.

A Follower of Strafford. [To another.] The Earl
Is at his work. [To M.] Say, Maxwell, what great thing!

Speak out! [To a Presbyterian.] Friend. I’ve a kindness for you! Friend,
I’ve seen you with St. John: 0 stockishness!
Wear such a ruff, and never call to mind
St. John’s head in a charger? How, the plague,
Not laugh?

Another. Say, Maxwell, what great thing!

Another. Nay, wait:
The jest will be to wait.

First. And who’s to bear
These demure hypocrites? You’d swear they came . . .

Came . . . just as we come!

[A Puritan enters hastily and without observing Strafford’s Followers.

The Puritan. How goes on the work?

Has Pym . . .

A Follower of Strafford. The secret’s out at last. Aha.

The carrion’s scented! Welcome, crow the first!

Gorge merrily, you with the blinking eye!
"King Pym has fallen!"

The Puritan. Pym?
A Strafford. Pym!
A Presbyterian. Only Pym?

Many of Strafford’s Followers. No, brother, not Pym only: Vane as well.

Rudyard as well, Hampden, St. John as well!
A Presbyterian. My mind misgives; can it be true?

Another. Lost! Lost!
A Strafford. Say we true, Maxwell?
The Puritan. Pride before destruction,
A haughty spirit goeth before a fall.
Many of Strafford’s Followers. Ah now! The very thing! A word in season!

A golden apple in a silver picture
To greet Pym as he passes!

[The doors at the back begin to open, noise and light issuing.

Max. Stand back, all!

Many of the Presbyterians. I hold with Pym!

And . . .

Strafford’s Followers. Now for the text!

He comes! Quick!
The Puritan. How hath the oppressor ceased!
The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked!
The sceptre of the rulers, he who smote
The people in wrath with a continual stroke,
That ruled the nations in his anger — he
Is persecuted and none hindereth!

[The doors open, and STRAFFORD issues in the greatest disorder, and amid cries from within of "Void the House!"

STRAFFORD. Impeach me! Pym! I never struck, I think.
The felon on that calm insulting mouth
When it proclaimed — Pym’s mouth proclaimed me . . . God!

Was it a word, only a word that held
The outrageous blood back on my heart — which beats!
Which beats! Some one word — "Traitor," did he say.

Bending that eye, brimful of bitter fire,
Upon me?

Max. In the Commons’ name, their servant
Demands Lord Strafford’s sword.

STRAFFORD. What did you say?

Max. The Commons bid me ask your lordship’s sword.

STRAFFORD. Let us go forth: follow me, gentlemen!
Draw your swords too: cut any down that bar
us.

On the King’s service! Maxwell, clear the way!
[The Presbyterians prepare to dispute his passage.

STRAFFORD. Stay: the King himself shall see me
here.

Your tablets, fellow!

[To MAINWARING.] Give that to the King!
Yes, Maxwell, for the next half-hour, let he!

Nay, you shall take my sword!

[MAXWELL advances to take it.

[Nay, no — not that]

Their blood, perhaps, may wipe out all thus far.
All up to that — no! Why, friend, you see
When the King lays your head beneath my foot
It will not pay for that. Go, all of you!"
Hear. I dare, my lord, to disobey: none stir! Straff. This gentle Maxwell! — Do not touch him, Bryan! [To the Presbyterians.] Whichever enwr of you will carry this Escapes his fellow's fate. None saves his life? None? [Cries from within of "STRAFFORD."] Slingsby, I've loved you at least: make haste! Stab me! I have not time to tell you why. You then, my Bryan! Mainwaring, you then! Is it because I spoke so hastily.

At Alberton? The King had vexed me. [To the Presbyterians.] You! — Not even you? If I live over this, The King is sure to have your heads, you know! But what if I can live this minute through? Pym, who is there with his pursuing smile! [Lower cries of "STRAFFORD!"

The King! I troubled him, stood in the way Of his negotiations, was the one Great obstacle to peace, the Enemy Of Scotland; and he sent for me, from York. My safety guaranteed — having prepared A Parliament — I see! And at Whitehall The Queen was whispering with Vane — I see The trap! [Tearing off the George. I tread a gawgaw underfoot.

And cast a memory from me. One stroke, now! [His own Adherents disarm him. Renewed cries of "STRAFFORD."

England! I see thy arm in this and yield. Pray you now — Pym awaits me — pray you now! [STRAFFORD reaches the doors: they open wide. Hampden and a crowd discovered, and, at the bar, Pym standing apart. As STRAFFORD kneels, the screen shuts.

ACT IV

SCENE I. Whitehall.
The King, the Queen, Hollis, Lady Carlisle. (Vane, Holland, Savile, in the background.)

Lady Car. Answer them, Hollis, for his sake! One word! Cha. [To Hollis.] You stand, silent and cold, as though I were Deceiving you — my friend, my playfellow Of other times. What wonder after all? Just so, I dreamed my People loved me. Hol. Sir, it is yourself that you deceive, not me. You'll quit me comforted, your mind made up That, since you've talked thus much and grieved thus much, All you can do for Strafford has been done. Queen. If you kill Strafford — come, we grant you leave.

Suppose — Hol. I may withdraw, sir? Lady Car. Hear them out! 'Tis the last chance for Strafford! — Hear them out! Hol. "If we kill Strafford" — on the eighteenth day Of Strafford's trial — "We."

Cha. Pym, my good Hollis

Pym, I should say!

Hol. Ah, true — sir, pardon me! You witness our proceedings every day; But the screened gallery, I might have guessed, Admits of such a partial glimpse at us, Pym takes up all the room, shuts out the view. Still, on my honor, sir, the rest of the place Is not unoccupied. The Commons sit — That's England; Ireland sends, and Scotland too.

Their representatives; the Peers that judge Are easily distinguished; one remarks The People here and there: but the close curtain Must hide so much!

Queen. Acquaint your insolent crew, This day the curtain shall be dashed aside! It served a purpose.

Hol. Think! This very day? Ere Strafford rises to defend himself? Cha. I will defend him, sir! — sanction the past This day: it ever was my purpose. Rage At me, not Strafford! Lady Car. Nobly! — will he not Do nobly?

Hol. Sir, you will do honestly; And, for that deed, I too would be a king. Cha. Only, to do this now! — "deaf" (in your style) "To subjects' prayers." — I must oppose them now! It seems their will the trial should proceed. — So palpably their will!

Hol. You peril much. But it were no bright moment save for that. Strafford, your prime support, the sole rosetree Which props this quaking House of Privilege. (Flood comes, winds beat, and see — the treacherous sand!) Doubtless, if the mere putting forth an arm Could save him, you'd save Strafford.

Cha. And they dare Consummate calmly this great wrong! No hope? This ineffaceable wrong! No pity then? Hol. No plague in store for perfidy? — Farewell! You call me, sir — [To Lady Carlisle.] You, lady, bade me come To save the Earl: I came, thank God for it, To learn how far such perfidy can go! You, sir, concert with me on saving him Who have just ruined Strafford!

Cha. I? — and how?

Hol. Eighteen days long he throws, one after one, Pym's charges back: a blind moth-eaten law! — He'll break from it at last: and whom to thank? The mouse that gnawed the lion's net for him Got a good friend, — but he, the other mouse. That looked on while the lion freed himself — Fared he so well, does any fable say?

Cha. What can you mean?

Hol. Pym never could have proved Strafford's design of bringing up the troops
To force this kingdom to obedience: Vane—Your servant, not our friend, has proved it.

Cha. Vane?

Hol. This day. Did Vane deliver up or no? The letters which, furnished by his son to Pym, Seal Strafford's fate?

Cha. Sir, as I live, I know Nothing that Vane has done! What treason next?

I wash my hands of it. Vane, speak the truth! Ask Vane himself!

Hol. I will not speak to Vane, Who speak to Pym and Hampden every day.

Queen. Speak to Vane's master then! What gain to him Were Strafford's death?

Hol. Ha? Strafford cannot turn As you, sir, sit there—and you forth, demand If every hateful act were not set down In his commission?—whether you contrived Or no, that all the violence should seem His work, the gentle ways—your own,—his part,

To counteract the King's kind impulses—

While... but you know what he could say! And then He might produce—mark, sir!—a certain chance

To set the King's express command aside,

It need were, and be blameless. He might add...

Cha. Enough!

Hol. —Who bade him break the Parliament,

Find some pretence for setting up sword-law!

Queen. Retire!

Cha. Once more, whatever Vane dared do, I know not: he is rash, a fool—I know Nothing of Vane!

Hol. Well— I believe you. Sir, Believe me, in return, that...

[Turning to Lady Carlisle.] Gentle lady, The few words I would say, the stones might hear Sooner than these.—I rather speak to you, You, with the heart! The question, trust me, takes Another shape, today: not, if the King Or England shall succumb—but, who shall pay The forfeit, Strafford or his master. Sir, You loved me once: think on my warning now!

Cha. On you and on your warning both!—Carlisle!

That paper!

Queen. But consider!

Cha. Give it me!

There, signed—will that content you? Do not speak! You have betrayed me, Vane! See! any day, According to the tenor of that paper, He bids your brother bring the army up, Strafford shall head it and take full revenge. Seek Strafford! Let him have the same, before He rises to defend himself!

Queen. In truth?

That your shrewd Hollis should have worked a change

Like this! You, late reluctant...

Cha. Say, Carlisle!

Your brother Percy brings the army up, Falls on the Parliament—I'd think of you, My Hollis! say, we plotted long—'tis mine, The scheme is mine, remember! Say, I cursed Vane's folly in your hearing! If the Earl Does rise to do us shame, the fault shall lie With you, Carlisle!

Lady Car. Nay, fear not me! but still That's a bright moment, sir, you throw away. Tear down the veil and save him!

Queen. Go, Carlisle!

Lady Car. (I shall see Strafford—speak to him: my heart Must never beat so, then! And if I tell The truth? What's gained by falsehood? There they stand Whose trade it is, whose life it is! How vain To gild such rottenness! Strafford shall know, Thoroughly know them!)

Queen. Trust to me! [To Carlisle.]

Carlisle, You seem inclined, alone of all the Court, To serve poor Strafford: this bold plan of yours Merits much praise, and yet...

Lady Car. Time presses, madam.

Queen. Yet—may it not be something pre

Stratford defends himself to-day—reserves Some wondrous effort, one may well suppose! Lady Car. Ay, Hollis hints as much.

Cha. Why linger then?

Haste with the scheme—my scheme: I shall be there

To watch his look. Tell him I watch his look! Queen. Stay, we'll precede you!

Lady Car. At your pleasure.

Cha. Say—

Lady Car. Say, Vane is hardly ever at Whitehall! I shall be there, remember!

Cha. On our return, Carlisle, we wait you here!

Lady Car. I'll bring his answer. Sir, I follow you.

Prove the King faithless, and I take away All Stratford cares to live for: let it be—'Tis the King's scheme!

My Stratford, Carlisle, I can save,
Nay, I have saved you, yet am scarce content, Because my poor name will not e'er cross your mind. Stratford, how much I am unworthy you!}

Scene II. A passage adjoining Westminster Hall.

Many groups of Spectators of the Trial. Officers of the Court, etc.

1st Spec. More crowd than ever! Not know Hampden, man?

That's he, by Pym. Pym that is speaking now. No, truly, if you look so high you'll see Little enough of either!

2d Spec. Stay: Pym's arm Points like a prophet's rod.

3d Spec. Ay, ay, we've heard Some pretty speaking: yet the Earl escapes.

4th Spec. I fear it: just a foolish word or two
About his children — and we see, forsooth.
Not England's foe in Strafford, but the man
Who, sick, half-blind . . .
2d Spec. What's that Pym's saying now
Which makes the curtains flutter? Look! A hand
Catches them. Ah! The King's hand!
5th Spec. I had thought Pym was not near so tall. What said he,
friend?
2d Spec. "Nor is this way a novel way of blood."
And the Earl turns as if to . . . Look! look!
Many Spectators. There!
What aids him? No — he rallies, see — goes on,
And Strafford smiles. Strange!
An Officer. Haselrig!
Many Spectators. Friend? Friend?
The Officer. Lost, utterly lost: just when we looked for Pym
To make a stand against the ill effects
Of the Earl's speech! Is Haselrig without?
Pym's message is to him.
3d Spec. Now, said I true?
Will the Earl leave them yet at fault or no?
1st Spec. Never believe it, man! These notes of Vane's
Ruin the Earl.
5th Spec. A brave end: not a whit
Less firm, less Pym all over. Then, the trial is abroad. No — Strafford means to speak
again?
An Officer. Stand back, there!
5th Spec. Why, the Earl is coming hither!
Before the court breaks up! His brother,
look, —
You'd say he'd depre-cated some fierce act
In Strafford's mind just now.
An Officer. Stand back, I say!
2d Spec. Who's the veiled woman that he talks with?
Many Spectators. Hush —
The Earl! the Earl!
Enter Strafford, Slingsby, and other Secretaries,
Holles, Lady Carlisle, Maxwell, Balphour, etc.
Strafford converses with Lady Carlisle.
Hol. So near the end! Be patient —
Return!
Straf. [To his Secretaries.] Here — anywhere — or, 'tis freshest here!
To spend one's April here, the blossom-month:
Set it down here!
[They arrange a table, papers, etc.
So, Pym can quail, can cower
Because I glance at him, yet more 's to do.
What's to be answered. Slingsby? Let us end!
[To Lady Carlisle.] Child, I refuse his offer;
whatsoe'er
It be! Too late! Tell me no word of him!
"Tis something, Holli's, I assure you that
To stand, sick as you are, some eighteen days
Fighting for life and fame against a pack
Of very curs, that lie through thick and thin.
Eat flesh and bread by wholesale, and can't say
"Strafford" if it would take my life!
Lady Car. Be moved!
Glance at the paper!
Straf. Already at my heels!
Pym's faulting bloodhounds scent the track
again.
Peace, child! Now, Slingsby!
Messengers from Lane and other of Strafford's Coun-el within the Hall are coming and going during the Sicr.-
Straf. [setting himself to write and dictate.] I shall beat you. Holli's!
Do you know that? In spite of St. John's tricks,
In spite of Pym — your Pym who shrank from
me!
Holli would have contrived it otherwise.
[To a Messenger.] In truth? This slip, tell
Lane, contains as much
As I can call to mind about the matter.
Holli would have disclaimed . . .
[Calling after the Messenger.] And Radcliffe,
say,
The only person who could answer Pym,
is safe in prison, just for that.
Well, well!
't had not been recorded in that case,
I bullied you.
[To Lady Carlisle.] Nay, child, why look so grieved?
All's gained without the King! You saw Pym quail?
What shall I do when they acquit me, think
you,
But tranquilly resume my task as though
Nothing had intervened since I proposed
To call that traitor to account! Such tricks,
Trust me, shall not be played a second time,
Not even against Land, with his gray hair —
Your good work, Holli's! Peace! To make amends,
You, Lucy, shall be here when I impeach
Pym and his fellows.
Hol. Wherefore not protest
Against our whole proceeding, long ago?
Why feel indignant now? Why stand this while Enduring patiently?
Straf. Child, I'll tell you —
You, and not Pym — you, the slight graceful girl
Tall for a flowering lily, and not Holli's
Why I stood patient! I was fool enough
To see the will of England in Pym's will;
To fear, myself had wronged her, and to wait
Her judgment: when, behold, in place of it . . .
[To a Messenger who whispers.] Tell Lane to answer no such question! Law, —
I grapple with their law! I'm here to try
My actions by their standard, not my own!
Their law allowed that levy: what's the rest
To Pym, or Lane, any but God and me?
Lady Car. The King's so weak! Secure this chance! 'Twas Vane,
Never forget, who furnished Pym the notes . . .
Straf. Fit.— very fit, those precious notes of Vane.
To close the Trial worthily! I feared
Some spue of nobleness might hunger yet
And spoil the character of all the past,
Vane eased me . . . and I will go back and say
As much — to Pym, to England! Follow me.
I have a word to say! There, my defence
Is done!
Stay! why be proud? Why care to own
My gladness, my surprise? Nay, not surprise! Wherein insist upon the little pride
Of doing all myself, and sparring him
The pain? Child, say the triumph is my King’s!
When Pym grew pale, and trembled, and sank
down,
One image was before me： could I fail?
Child, care not for the past, so indistinct,
Obscure — there’s nothing to forgive in it,
’Tis so forgotten! From this day begins
A new life, founded on a new belief
In Charles.
Hol. In Charles? Rather believe in Pym:
And here he comes in proof! Appeal to Pym!
Say now unfair...
Straf. To Pym? I would say nothing!
I would not look upon Pym’s face again.
Lady Car. Stay, let me have to think I pressed your hand!
(Strafford and his Friends go out.
(Enter Hampden and Vane.)
Vane. O Hampden, save the great misguided man!
Plead Strafford’s cause with Pym! I have remarked
He moved my muscle when we all declaimed
Against him, you had but to breathe — he turned
Those kind calm eyes upon you.
[Enter Pym, the Solicitor-General St. John, the Mangers of the Trial, Fienes, Rudyard, etc.
Rud. Horrible!
Till now all hearts were with you: I withdraw
For one. Too horrible! But we mistake
Your purpose, Pym: you cannot snatch away
The last spar from the drowning man.
Fien. He talks
With St. John of it — see, how quietly!
[To other Presbyterians.] You’ll join us?
Strafford may deserve the worst:
But this new course is monstrous. Vane, take heart!
This Bill of his Attainder shall not have
One true man’s hand to it.
Vane. Consider, Pym!
Confront your Bill, your own Bill: what is it?
You cannot catch the Earl on any charge, —
No man will say the law has hold of him
On any charge; and therefore you resolve
To take the general sense on his desert,
As though no law existed, and we met
To found one. You refer to Parliament
To speak its thought upon the abortive mass
Of half-borne-out assertions, dubious hints
Hereafter to be cleared, distortions — ay,
And wild inventions. Every man is saved
The task of fixing any single charge
On Strafford: he has but to see in him
The enemy of England.
Pym. A right scruple!
I have heard some called England’s enemy
With less consideration.
Vane. Pity me!
Indeed you make me think I was your friend!
I who have murdered Strafford, how remove
That memory from me?
Pym. I absolve you, Vane.
Take you no care for aught that you have done!

Vane. John Hampden, not this Bill! Reject this Bill! He stagger through the ordeal: let him go, Strew no fresh fire before him! Plead for us!
When Strafford spoke, your eyes were thick with tears.
Hamp. England speaks louder: who are we,
to play
The generous pardoner at her expense,
Magnanimously waive advantages,
And, if he conquer us, applaud his skill?
Vane. He was your friend.
Pym. I have heard that before.
Fien. And England trusts you.
Hamp. Shame be his, who turns
The opportunity of serving her
She trusts him with, to his own mean account —
Who would look nobly frank at her expense!
Fien. I never thought it could have come to this.
Pym. But I have made myself familiar,
Fienes.
With this one thought — have walked, and sat,
And slept.
This thought before me. I have done such things.
Being the chosen man that should destroy
The traitor. You have taken up this thought
To play with, for a gentle stimulant,
To give a dignity to idler life
By the dim prospect of empire to come,
But ever with the softening, sure belief.
That all would end some strange way right at last.
Fien. Had we made out some weightier
charge!
Pym. You say
That these are petty charges; can we come
To the real charge at all? There he is safe.
In tyranny’s stronghold. Apostasy
Is not a crime, treachery not a crime:
The cheek burns, the blood tingles, when you speak
The words, but where’s the power to take revenge
Upon them? We must make occasion serve,—
The oversight shall pay for the main sin
That mocks us.
Rud. But this unexampled course,
This Bill!
Pym. By this, we roll the clouds away
Of precedent and custom, and at once
Bid the great beacon-light God sets in all,
The conscience of each bosom, shine upon
The guilt of Strafford: each man lay his hand
Upon his breast, and judge!
Vane. I only see
Stratford, nor pass his corpse for all beyond!
Rud, and others. Forgive him! He would join us, now he finds
What the King counts reward! The pardon.
too,
Should be your own. Yourself should bear to Stratford
The pardon of the Commons.
Pym. Meet him? Stratford?
Have we to meet once more, then? Be it so!
And yet — the prophecy seemed half fulfilled

When, at the Trial, as he gazed, my youth, Our friendship, divers thoughts came back at once,
And left me, for a time... 'Tis very sad!
To-morrow we discuss the points of law,
With Lane— to-morrow?

Pym. Not before to-morrow— So, time enough! I knew you would relent!
The next day, Halserig, you introduce
The bill of his Attainder. Pray for me!

Scene III. Whitehall.

The King.

Cha. My loyal servant! To defend himself Thus irresistibly— withholding aught That seemed to implicate us!
We have done Less gallantly by Strafford. Well, the future Must recompense the past.
I understand you, Strafford, now! The scheme— Carlisle's mad scheme—he'll sanction it, I fear, For love of me. 'T was too precipitate:
Before the army's fairly on its march, He'll be at large: no matter.
Well, Carlisle?

(Enter Pym.)

Pym. Fear me not, sir— my mission is to save, This time.
Cha. To break thus on me! unannounced!

Pym. It is of Strafford I would speak.
Cha. No more Of Strafford! I have heard too much from you.

Pym. I spoke, sir, for the People; will you hear A word upon my own account?

Cha. Of Strafford?

So turns the tide already? Have we tamed The insolent brawler?— Strafford's eloquence Is swift in its effect.) Lord Strafford, sir,
Has spoken for himself.

Pym. Sufficiently. I would apprise you of the novel course The People take: the Trial fails.
Cha. Yes, yes: We are aware, sir: for your part in it Means shall be found to thank you.

Pym. Pray you, read This schedule! I would learn from your own mouth —It is a matter much concerning me— Whether, if two Estates of us concede The death of Strafford, on the grounds set forth Within that parchment, you, sir, can resolve To grant your own consent to it. This Bill Is framed by me. If you determine, sir, That England's manifested will should guide Your judgment, ere another week such will Shall manifest itself. if not, — I cast Aside the measure.

Cha. You can hinder, then. The introduction of this Bill?

Pym. I can.

Cha. He is my friend, sir: I have wronged him: mark you, Had I not wronged him, this might be. You think Because you hate the Earl... (turn not away, We know you hate him)— no one else could love Strafford: but he has saved me, some affirm. Think of his pride! And do you know one strange, One frightful thing? We all have used the man As though a drudge of ours, with not a source Of happy thoughts except us; and yet Strafford has wife and children, household cares, Just as if we had never been. Ah, sir. You are moved, even you, a solitary man Wend to your cause— to England if you will!

Pym. Yes— think, my soul— to England! Draw not back!

Cha. Prevent that Bill, sir! All your course seems fair Till now. Why, in the end, 'tis I should sign The warrant for his death! You have said much I ponder on; I never meant, indeed, Strafford should serve me any more. I take The Commons' counsel; but this Bill is yours— Nor worthy of its leader: can that, sir,
For that, however! I will quite forget You named it to me. You are satisfied?

Pym. Listen to me, sir! Eliot laid his hand, Wasted and white, upon my forehead once; Wentworth—he's gone now!— has talked on, whole nights, And I beside him; Hampden loves me: sir, How can I breathe and not wish England well, And her King well?

Cha. I thank you, sir, who leave That King his servant. Thanks, sir!

Pym. Let me speak! —Who may not speak again; whose spirit yearns For a cool night after this weary day: —Who would not have my soul turn sicker yet In a new task, more fatal, more angust, More full of England's utter woe or woe, I thought, sir, could I find myself with you. After this trial, alone, as man to man — I might say something, warn you, pray you, save— Mark me, King Charles, save—you! But God must do it. Yet I warn you, sir — With Strafford's faded eyes yet full on me! As you would have no deeper question moved —"How long the Many must endure the One,?" Assure me, sir, if England give assent To Strafford's death, you will not interfere! Or—

Cha. God forsakes me. I am in a net And cannot move. Let all be as you say!

(Enter Lady Carlisle.)

Lady Car. He loves you— looking beautiful with joy.

Because you sent me! he would spare you all The pain! he never dreamed you would forsake Your servant in the evil day— nay, see Your scheme returned! That generous heart of his!

He needs it not — or, needing it, disdains A course that might endanger you— you, sir. Whom Strafford from his inmost soul...
Well—what, sir, is this?
All is not well! What parchment have you there?

Pym. Sir, much is saved us both.

Lady Car. This Bill! Your lip Whitewas—you could not read one line to me
Your voice would falter so!
Pym. No recant yet!
The great word went from England to my soul,
And I arose. The end is very near.

Lady Car. I am to save him! All have shrunk beside;
'Tis only I am left. Heaven will make strong
The hand now as the heart. Then let both die!

ACT V

SCENE I. Whitehall.

Hollis, Lady Carlisle.

Hol. Tell the King then! Come in with me!
Lady Car. Not so!
He must not hear till it succeeds.

Hol. Succeed?
No dream was half so vain—you'd rescue Straf-
And outwit Pym! I cannot tell you . . . lady,
The block pursues me, and the hideous show.
To-day . . . is it to-day? And all the while He's sure of the King's pardon. Think, I have To tell this man he is to die. The King
May read his hair, for me! I'll not see Straf-

Lady Car. Only, if I succeed, remember—
Charles
Has saved him. He would hardly value life Unless his gift. My stanch friends wait. Go in—
You must go in to Charles!

Hol. And all beside Left Strafford long ago. The King has signed
The warrant for his death! the Queen was sick
Of the eternal subject. For the Court,—
The Trial was amusing in its way.
Only too much of it: the Earl withdrew
In time. But you, fragile, alone, so young,
Amid rude mercenaries—you devise
A plan to save him! Even though it fails,
What shall reward you?

Lady Car. I may go, you think,
To France with him? And you reward me, friend,
Who lived with Strafford even from his youth
Before he set his heart on state-affairs
And they bent down that noble brow of his.
I have learned somewhat of his latter life,
And all the future I shall know: but, Hollis,
I ought to make his youth, my own as well.
Tell me,—when he is saved!

Hol. My gentle friend.
He should know all and love you, but 'tis vain!
Lady Car. Love? no—too late now! Let him love the King!

'Tis the King's scheme! I have your word, remember!
We'll keep the old delusion up. But, quick!
Quick! Each of us has work to do, beside!
Go to the King! I hope—Hollis—I hope!
Say nothing of my scheme! Insh, while we speak
Think where he is! Now for my gallant friends!
Hol. Where he is? Calling wildly upon Charles.
Guessing his fate, pacing the prison-floor.
Let the King tell him! I'll not look on Straff-

Scene II. The Tower.

Strafford sitting with his Children. They sing.

Andante.

O bell' an-da-re, Per barca in mare,
Di Primavera!

William. The boat's in the broad moonlight all this while—
Verso la sera
Di Primavera!

And the boat shoots from underneath the moon
Into the shadowy distance; only still
You hear the dipping oar—
Verso la sera.
And faint, and fainter, and then all's quite gone,
Music and light and all, like a lost star.
Anne. But you should sleep, father: you were to sleep.
Straff. I do sleep, Anne; or if not—you must know
There's such a thing as . . .
You're too tired to sleep?

It will come by-and-by and all day long.

In that old quiet house I told you of:
We sleep safe there.

Why not in Ireland?

No!

Too many dreams!—That song's for Venice,

You know how Venice looks upon the map
Isles that the mainland hardly can let go?

You've been to Venice, father?

I was young, then.

A city with no King; that's why I like

Even a song that comes from Venice.

Oh, I know why! Anne, do you love

the King?

But I'll see Venice for myself one day.

See many lands, boy—England last of all,

That way you'll love her best.

You sought to ruin her, then?

Ah, they say that.

Why?

I suppose they must have words to say,

As you to sing.

But they make songs besides:

Last night I heard one, in the street beneath,

That called you... Oh, the names!

Dont mind her, father!

They soon left off when I cried out to them,

We shall so soon be out of it, my boy!

'Tis not worth while: who needs a foolish song?

Why, not the King.

Well: it has been the fate

Of better; and yet,—wherefore not feel sure

That Time, who in the twilight comes to mend

All the fantastic day's caprice, consign

To the low ground once more the ignoble Term,

And raise the Genius on his orb again,

That Time will do me right?

(Shall we sing, William?

He does not look thus when we sing.)

For Ireland,

Something is done: too little, but enough

To show what might have been.

I have no heart

To sing now! Aye, how very sad he looks!

Oh, I so hate the King for all he says!

Forsook them? What, the common songs will run

That I forsook the People? Nothing more?

Ay, Fame, the busy scribe, will pause, no doubt,

Turning a deaf ear to her thousand slaves

Noisy to be enrolled,—will register

The curious glosses, subtle notices.

Ingenious clearings-up one fain would see

Beside that plain inscription of The Name

The Patriot Pym, or the Apostate Strafford!

[The Children remove their caps timely, but break off. (Enter Hollis and an Attendant.)

No,—Hollis? in good time!—Who is he?

One

That must be present.

Ah—I understand.

They will not let me see poor Laud alone.

How politic! They'd use me by degrees

To solitude; and, just as you came in,

I was solicitous what life to lend

When Strafford's "not so much as Constable in the King's service." Is there any means

To keep one's self awake? What would you do

After this bustle, Hollis, in my place?

Observe, not but that Pym and you

Will find me news enough—news I shall hear

Under a quince-tree by a fish-pond side

At Wentworth. Garrard must be re-engaged

My newsmen. Or, a better project now—

What if all's consummated, and the Saints

Reign, and the Senate's work goes swimmingly?

What if I venture up, some day, unseen,

To saunter through the Town, notice how Pym,

Your Tribune, likes Whitehall, drop quietly

Into a tavern, hear a point discussed,

As, whether Strafford's name were John or

James—

And be myself appealed to—i, who shall

Myself have near forgotten!

I would speak...

Then you shall speak,—not now. I want just now,

To hear the sound of my own tongue. This place

Is full of ghosts.

Nay, you must hear me, Strafford!

Oh, readily! Only, one rare thing more,

The minister! Who will advise the King,

Turn his Rejames, Richelieu and what not,

And yet have health—children, for aught I

know—

My patient pair of traitors! Ah,—but, William,

Does not his cheek grow thin?

'Tis you look thin.

Father!

A scamper o'er the breezy wolds

Sets all to-rights.

You cannot sure forget

A prison-roof is o'er you, Strafford?

No.

Why, no. I would not touch on that, the first.

I left you that. Well, Hollis? Say at once,

The King can find no time to set me free!

A mask at Theobald's?

Hold: no such affair

Detains him.

True: what needs so great a matter?

The Queen's lip may be sore. Well: when he pleases.

Only, I want the air: it vexes flesh

To be pent up so long.

The King—i hear

His message, Strafford: pray you, let me speak!

Go, William! Anne, try o'er your song again!

[The Children retire.

They shall be loyal, friend, at all events.

I know your message: you have nothing new.

To tell me: from the first I guessed as much.

I know, instead of coming here himself.

Leading me forth in public by the hand.
The King prefers to leave the door ajar
As though I were escaping — bids me trudge
While the mob gapes upon some show prepared
On the other side of the river! Give at once
His order of release! I’ve heard, as well,
Of certain poor manoeuvres to avoid
The granting pardon at his proper risk;
First, he must prattle somewhat to the Lords,
Must talk a trifle with the Commons first,
Be grieved I should abuse his confidence,
And far from blaming them, and . . . Where’s the order?
Hol. Save me!
Straf. Why, he’d not have me steal away?
With an old doublet and a steeple hat
Like Pryme’s? Be smuggled into France, perhaps?
Hol. ’tis for my children! ’twas for them
I first consented to stand day by day
And give your Puritans the best of words,
Be patient, speak when called upon, observe
Their rules, and not return them prompt their lie?
What in that boy of mine that he should prove
Son to a prison-breaker? I shall stay
And he’ll stay with me. Charles should know
as much.
He too has children!
[Turning to Hollis’s companion.] Sir, you feel for me!
No need to hide that face! Though it have looked Upon me from the judgment-seat . . . I know Strangely, that somewhere it has looked on
me . . .
Your coming has my pardon, nay, my thanks:
For there is one who comes not.
Hol. Whom forgive,
A one to die!
Straf. True, all die, and all need
Forgiveness: I forgive him from my soul.
Hol. ’tis a world’s wonder: Strafford, you
must die!
Straf. Sir, if your errand is to set me free
This heartless jest mars much. Hal! Tears in truth?
We’ll end this! See this paper, warm — feel Warm with lying next my heart! Whose hand is
there?
Whose promise? Read, and loud for God to hear!
“Strafford shall take no hurt” — read it, I say!
“In person, honor, nor estate” —
Hol. The King . . .
Straf. I could unkind him by a breath?
You sit
Where Loudon sat, who came to prophesy
The certain end, and offer me Pym’s grace
If I’d renounce the King: and I stood firm
On the King’s faith. The King who lives . . .
Hol. To sign
The warrant for your death.
Straf. “Put not your trust
In princes, neither in the sons of men,
In whom is no salvation!”
Hol. Trust in God!
The scaffold is prepared: they wait for you:
He has consented. Cast the earth behind!
Cha. You would not see me, Strafford, at your foot!
It was wrong from me! Only, curse me not!
Hol. [To Strafford.] As you hope grace and pardon in your need,
Be merciful to this most wretched man.
[Voices from within.

Verso la sera
Di Primavera.

Straf. You’ll be good to those children, sir? I
know
You’ll not believe her, even should the Queen
Think they take after one they rarely saw.
I had intended that my son should live
A stranger to these matters: but you are
So utterly deprived of friends! He too
Must serve you — will you not be good to him?
Or, stay, sir, do not promise — do not swear!
You, Hollis — do the best you can for me!
I’ve not a soul to trust to: Wandesford’s dead,
And you’ve got Radcliffe safe, Land’s turn comes next;
I’ve found small time of late for my affairs,
But I trust any of you, Pym himself —
No one could hurt them: there’s an infant,
too —
These tedious cares! Your Majesty could spare them.
Nay — pardon me, my King! I had forgotten
Your education, trials, much temptation,
Some weakness: there escaped a peevish
word —
’Tis gone: I bless you at the last. You know
All’s between you and me: what has the world
To do with it? Farewell!
Cha. [at the door.] Balfour! Balfour!
(Enter Balfour.)
The Parliament! — go to them: I grant all Demands. Their settings shall be permanent:
Tell them to keep their money if they will:
I’ll come to them for every coat I wear
And every crust I eat: only I choose To pardon Strafford. As the Queen shall choose!
— You never heard the People howl for blood,
Beside!
Balfour. Your Majesty may hear them now:
The walls can hardly keep their murmurs out:
Please you retire!
Cha. Take all the troops, Balfour!
Bal. There are some hundred thousand of the crowd.
Cha. Come with me, Strafford! You’ll not fear, at least!
Straf. Balfour, say nothing to the world of this!
I charge you, as a dying man, forget
You gazed upon this agony of one . . .
Of one . . . or if . . . why, you may say, Balfour.
The King was sorry: ’tis no shame in him:
Yes, you may say he even wept, Balfour.
And that I walked the lighter to the block
Because of it. I shall walk lightly, sir!
Earth fades, heaven breaks on me: I shall stand next
Before God's throne: the moment's close at hand
When man the first, last time, has leave to lay
His whole heart bare before its Maker, leave
To clear up the long error of a life
And choose one happiness for evermore.
With all mortality about me, Charles,
The sudden wreck, the drear of violent death—
What if, despite the opening angel-song,
There penetrate one prayer for you?—Be saved
Through me! Bear witness, no one could prevent My death! Lead on! ere he awake—best,
now!
All must be ready: did you say, Balfour,
The crowd began to murmur? They'll be kept
Too late for sermon at St. Athuliiin's!
Now! But tread softly—children are at play
In the next room. Proceed! I follow—
(Enter Lady Carlisle, with many Attendants)
Lady Car. Balfour, come here.
Follow me, Strafford, and be saved! The King?
[To the King.] Well— as you ordered, they are ranged without.
The convoy... [saying the King's state.]
[To STRAFFORD.] You know all, then! Why, I thought
It looked best that the King should save you,
—Charles
Alone; 'tis a shame that you should owe me right.
Or no, not shame! Strafford, you'll not feel shame.
At being saved by me?
Hol. All true! Oh Strafford,
She saves you! all her deed! this lady's deed!
And is the boat in readiness? You, friend,
Are Billingsley, doubt—speak to her,
Strafford!
See how she trembles, waiting for your voice!
The world's to learn its bravest story yet.
Lady Car. Talk afterward! Long nights in France enough,
To sit beneath the vines and talk of home.
Straf. You love me, child? Ah, Strafford can be loved
As well as Vane! I could escape, then?
Lady Car. Haste!
Advance the torches, Bryan!
Straf. I will die.
They call me proud: but England had no right,
When she encountered me—her strength to name—
To find the chosen foe a craven. Girl,
I fought her to the utterance, I tell,
I am hers now, and I will die. Beside,
The lookers-on! Eliot is all about.
This place, with his most uncomplaining brow.
Lady Car. Strafford!
Straf. I think if you could know how much
I love you, you would be repaid, my friend?
Lady Car. Then, for my sake?
Straf. Even for your sweet sake.
I stay.
Hol. For their sake?
 Straf. To bequeath a stain?

Leave me! Girl, humor me and let me die!
Lady Car. Bid him escape—wake, King!
Bid him escape!
 Straf. True, I will go! Die and forsake the King?
I'll not draw back from the last service,
Lady Car. Strafford!
Straf. And, after all, what is disgrace to me?
Let us come, child! That it should end this way!
Lead then, but I feel strangely: it was not
To end this way.
Lady Car. Lean—lean on me!
 Straf. My King!
Oh, had he trusted me—his friend of friends!
Lady Car. I can support him, Hollia!
Straf. Not this way!
This gate— I dreamed of it, this very gate.
Lady Car. It opens on the river: our good boat
Is moored below, our friends are there.
Straf. The same:
Only with something ominous and dark,
Fatal, inevitable.
Lady Car. Strafford! Strafford!
Straf. Not by this gate! I feel what will be there!
I dreamed of it, I tell you: touch it not!
Lady Car. To save the King, Strafford, to save the King!
[As STRAFFORD opens the door, Pym is discovered with HAMPSHIRE, VANE, etc. STRAFFORD falls back: Pym follows slowly and contemplates him.]
Pym. Have I done well? Speak, England!
Whose sole sake
I still have labored for, with disregard
To my own heart— for whom my youth was made
Barren, my manhood waste, to offer up
Her sacrifice—this friend, this Wentworth here—
Who walked in youth with me, loved me, it may be,
And whom, for his forsaking England's cause,
I hunted by all means trusting that she
Would sanctify all means even to the block
Which waits for him. And saying this, I feel
No bitterer pang than first I felt, the hour
I swore that Wentworth might leave us, but I
Would never leave him: I do leave him now,
I tender up my charge (be witness, God!) To England who imposed it, I have done
Her bidding—poorly, wrongly,—it may be,
With ill effects— for I am weak, a man:
Still, I have done my best, my human best,
Not faltering for a moment. It is done.
And this said, if I say... yes, I will say
I never loved but one man—David not
More Jonathan! Even thus, I love him now:
And look for my chief portion in that world
Where great hearts led astray are turned again,
Soon it may be, and, certes, will be soon:
My mission over, I shall not live long.
Av. here I know I talk— I dare and must,
Of England, and her great reward, as all
I look for there; but in my innermost heart,
Believe, I think of stealing quite away.
To walk once more with Wentworth — my youth's friend
Purged from all error, gloriously renewed,
And Eliot shall not blame us. Then indeed...
This is no meeting, Wentworth! Tears increase
Too hot. A thin mist — is it blood? — enwraps
The face I loved once. Then, the meeting be!

Straf. I have loved England too; we'll meet then, Pym;
As well die now! Youth is the only time
To think and to decide on a great course:
Manhood with action follows; but 'tis dreary
To have to alter our whole life in age —
The time past, the strength gone! As well die now.
When we meet, Pym, I'd be set right — not now!

Best die. Then if there's any fault, fault too Dies, smothered up. Poor gray old little Land
May dream his dream out, of a perfect Church,
In some blind corner. And there's no one left.
I trust the King now wholly to you, Pym!
And yet, I know not: I shall not be there:
Friends fail — if he have any. And he's weak,
And loves the Queen, and... Oh, my fate is nothing —

Nothing! But not that awful head — not that!
Pym. If England shall declare such will to me...

Straf. Pym, you help England! I, that am to die,

What I must see! 'tis here — all here! My God,
Let me but gasp out, in one word of fire,
How thou wilt plague him, satiating hell!

What? England that you help, become through you
A green and putrefying charnel, left
Our children... some of us have children, Pym —

Some who, without that, still must ever wear
A darkened brow, an over-serious look,
And never properly be young! No word? What if I curse you? Send a strong curse forth Clothed from my heart, lapped round with horror till
She's fit with her white face to walk the world
Searing kind natures from your cause and you —
Then to sit down with you at the board-head,
The gathering for prayer... O speak, but speak!

... Creep up, and quietly follow each one home,
You, you, you, be a nesting care for each
To sleep with, — hardly meaning in his dreams,
She gnaws so quietly, — till, lo he starts,
Gests off with half a heart eaten away!
Oh, shall you 'scape with less if she's my child?
You will not say a word — to me — to Him?
Pym. If England shall declare such will to me...

Straf. No, not for England now, not for Heaven now...

See, Pym, for my sake, mine who kneel to you! There, I will thank you for the death, my friend!
This is the meeting: let me love you well!
Pym. England, — I am thine own! Dost thou exact
That service? I obey thee to the end.

Straf. O God, I shall die first — I shall die first!

SORDELLO

Browning began Sordello in 1837, interrupted his work to write the earlier parts of Bells and Pomegranates, but resumed it and completed it in 1840, when it was published by Moxon. In 1863, when reprinting the poem, Browning dedicated it as below to M. Milson, and in his dedication wrote practically a preface to the poem.

TO J. MILSAND, OF DIJON

Dear Friend. — Let the next poem be introduced by your name, therefore remembered along with one of the deepest of my affections, and so repay all trouble it ever cost me. I wrote it twenty-five years ago for only a few, counting even in these on somewhat more care about its subject than they really had. My own faults of expression were many: but with care for a man or book such would be surmounted. and without it what avails the faultlessness of either? I blame nobody, least of all myself, who did my best then and since; for I lately gave time and pains to turn my work into what the many might — instead of what the few must — like; but after all, I imagined another thing at first, and therefore leave as I find it. The historical decoration was purposely of no more importance than a background requires; and my stress lay on the incidents in the development of a soul; little else is worth study. I, at least, always thought so; you, with many known and unknown to me, think so; others may one day think so; and whether my attempt remain for them or not, I trust, though away and past it, to continue ever yours,

R. B.

London, June 9, 1863.
Concerning this revised edition he wrote to a friend: —

"I do not understand what — can mean by saying that Sordello has been 'rewritten.' I did certainly at one time intend to rewrite much of it, but changed my mind, — and the edition which I reprinted was the same in all respects as its predecessors — only with an elucidatory heading to each page, and some few alterations, presumably for the better, in the text, such as occur in most of my works. I cannot remember a single instance of any importance that is rewritten, and I only suppose that — has taken project for performance, and set down as 'done'

what was for a while intended to be done."

For the sake of such elucidation as these head-lines give, they are introduced here as side-notes.

What else should tempt them back to taste our air
Except to see how their successors fare?
My audience! and they sit, each ghostly man
Striving to look as living as he can,
Brother by breathing brother; thou art set.
Clear-witted critic, by — but I'll not fret
A wondrous soul of them, nor move death's spleen
Who loves not to unlock them. Friends! I mean Few living, many
Chiefly for love — suppose not I reject dead.
Judicious praise, who contrary shall peep,
Some fit occasion, forth, for fear ye sleep,
To glean your bland approvals. Then, appear.
Verona! stay — thou, spirit, come not near Shelley's
Now — not this time desert thy parting,
clumsy place
Veronaap To scare me, thus employed, with pears
that pure face!
I need not fear this audience, I make free
With them, but then this is no place for thee!
The thunder-phrase of the Athenian, grown
Up out of memories of Marathon,
Would echo like his own sword's grinding sreech
Braying a Persian shield, — the silver speech
Of Sidney's self, the stary paladin,
Turn intense as a trumpet sounding in
The knights to tilt. — wert thou to hear! What heart
Have I to play my puppets, bear my part
Before these worthies?

Lo, the past is hurled
In twain: up-thrust, out-staggering on the world,
Subsiding into shape, a darkness rears
Its outline, kindles at the core, appears Verona.
'Tis six hundred years and more
Since an event. The Second Friedrich wore
The purple, and the Third Honoree fill'd
The holy chair. That autumn eve was still'd:
A last remains of sunset dimly burn'd
O'er the far forests, like a torch-flame turn'd
By the wind back upon its bearer's hand
In one long flare of crimson; as a brand,
The woods beneath lay black. A single eye
From all Verona cared for the soft sky.
But, gathering in its ancient market-place,
Talked group with restless group; and not a face
But wrath made livid, for among them were Death's stanch purveyors, such as have in care
To feast him. Fear had long since taken root
In every breast, and now these crushed its fruit.
The ripe hate, like a wine: to note the way
It worked while each grew drunk! Men grave and gray

BOOK THE FIRST

Who will, may hear Sordello's story told;
His story? Who believes me shall behold
The man, pursue his fortunes to the end,
Like me: for as the friendless-people's friend
A Quixotic
Spied from his hill-top once, despite the
in Attemps.
And dust of multitudes, Pentapolin
Named o' the Naked Arm, I single out
Sordello, compassed murkyly about
With rage of six long sad hundred years.
Only believe me. Ye believe?
Appears

Verona... Never, I should warn you first,
Of my own choice had this, if not the worst
Yet not the best expedient, served to tell
A story I could bodily forth so well
By making speak, myself kept out of view,
The very man as he was wont to do,
And leaving you to say the rest for him.
Since, though I might be proud to see the dim
Abysmal past divide its hateful surge,
Letting of all men this one man emerge
Because it pleased me, yet, that moment past,
I should delight in watching first to last
His progress as you watch it, not a whit
More in the secret than yourselves who sit Fresh-chapletted to listen. But it seems
Your setters-forth of unexampled themes,
Makers of quite new men, producing them,
Would best chalk broadly on each vesture's hem
The wearer's quality; or take their stand,
Motly on back and pointing-pole in hand,
Beside him. So, for once I face ye, friends,
Why the Summoned together from the world's Poet himself ad-
Dropped down from heaven or east dresses his up from hell,
audience — To hear the story I propose to tell.
Confess now, poets know the dramatist's trick,
 Catching the dead, if fate denies the quick,
And shaming her; 'tis not for fate to choose
Silence or song because she can refuse
Real eyes to glisten more, real hearts to ache
Less oft, real browns turn smoother for our sake:
I have experienced something of her spite;
But there's a realm wherein she has no right
And I have many lovers. Say, but few Friends fate accords me? Here they are: now view
The host I must! Many a lighted face
Foul with no vestige of the grave's disgrace;
Stood, with set eyelids, rocking to and fro,

How her

Letting the silent luxury trickle slow

Guelfs are

About the hollows where a heart should be;

But the young gulped with a delicious glee

Some foretaste of their first debauch in blood

At the fierce news: for, be it understood,

Envoys apprised Verona that her prince

Count Richard of Saint Boniface, joined since

A year with Azzo, Este’s Lord, to thrust

Tamello Saltinguerra, prime in trust

With Ecelin Romano, from his seat

Ferrara,—overzealous in the feat

And stumbling on a peril unawares,

Was captive, transfused in his proper snare,

They phrase it, taken by his own intrigue.

Why they entreat the

Lombard

League,

Of fifteen cities that affect the Pope,

For Azzo, therefore, and his fellow-hope

Of the Guelf cause, a glory overcast!

Men’s faces, late agape, are now aghast,

‘Prone is the purple pavis; Este makes

Mirth for the devil when he undertakes

To play the Ecelin; as if it cost

Merely your pushing-by to gain a post

Like his! The patron tells ye. once for all,

There be sound reasons that preferment fall

On our beloved’?

“Duke o’ the Roed, why not? ’

Shouted an Estian, “grudge ye such a lot

The hill-cat boasts some cunning of her own,

Some stealthy trick to better beasts unknown,

That quick with prey enough her hunger blunts,

And feeds her fat while gants the lion hunts.”

“Tarlello,” quoth an envoy, “as in wane

Dwell at Ferrara. Like an osprey fain

To fly but forced the earth his couch to make

Far inland, till his friend the tempest wake,

Waits he the Kaiser’s coming; and as yet

That fast friend sleeps, and he too sleeps; but let

Only the billow freshen, and he snuffs

The arossed hurricane ere it engulfs

The sea it means to cross because of him,

Sinketh the breeze? His hopesick eye grows dim;

Creep closer on the creature! Every day

Strengthens the Pontiff; Ecelin, they say,

Doses now at Oliero, with dry lips

Telling upon his perished finger-tips

How many ancestors are to depose

Here be Satan’s Viceroy when the doze

Deposits him in hell. So, Guelfs rebuilt

Their houses: not a drop of blood was spilt

When Cino Boccinimpone chanced to meet

Bucceo Virtu—God’s wafer, and the street

Is narrow! Tutti Santi, think, a-swarn

With Ghibellins, and yet he took no harm!

This could not last. Off Saltinguerra went

To Padua, Podestà, with pure intent,

Said he, ‘my presence, judged the single bar

To permanent tranquility, may jar

No longer!’—so! his back is fairly turned?

The pair of goodly palaces are burned,

The gardens ravaged, and our Guelfs laugh, drunk

A week with joy. The next, their laughter sunk

In sobs of blood, for they found, some strange way,

Old Saltinguerra back again—I say,

Old Saltinguerra in the town once changed

fortune at

Ferrara: Blood fellock-high beneath him.

Azzo fled;

Who ‘scapest the carnage followed; then the dead

Were pushed aside from Saltinguerra’s throne,

He ruled once more Ferrara, all alone,

Till Azzo, stunned awhile, revived, would pounce

Coupled with Boniface, like lynx and ounce,

On the gorged bird. The bargers ground their teeth

To see troop after troop encamp beneath

I’ the standing corn thick o’er the scanty patch

It took so many patient months to snatch

Out of the marsh; while just within their walls

Men fed on men. At length Tarrello calls

A parley: ‘let the Count wind up the war!

Richard, light-hearted as a plunging star,

Agrees to enter for the kindest end

Ferrara, flanked with fifty chosen friends,

No horse-boy more, for fear your timid sort

Should fly Ferrara at the bare report,

Quietly through the town they rode, jog-jog;

‘Ten, twenty, thirty,— curse the catalogue

Of burnt Guelf houses! Strange, Tarrello shows

Not the least sign of life!’—whereat arose

And my Venemose? My troops and I?

Receive us, was your word? ’ So jogged they on,

Nor laughed their host too openly: once gone

Into the trap!”

Six hundred years ago!

Such the time’s aspect and peculiar woe

(Yoursefls may spell it yet in chronicles.

Albeit the worm, our busy brother, drills

His sprawling path through letters inadvertently

Made fine and large to suit some abbot’s eye)

When the new Hohenstaufen dropped the mask,

Flung John of Brienne’s favor from his casque,

Forswore crusading, had no mind to leave

Saint Peter’s proxy leisure to retrieve

Losses to Otho and to Barbarossa,

Or make the Alps less easy to reoccupy;

And, thus confirming Pope Honorius’ fear,

Was excommunicate that very year.

“the triple-bearded Tenton come to life!”

Groaned the Great League; and, arming for the strife,

For the times grew

Wide Lombardy, on tiptoe to begin stormy

Took up, as it was Guelph or Ghibellin, again.

Its cry; what cry?

“The Emperor to come!”

His crowd of feudatories, all and some,

That leapt down with a crash of swords, spears,

shields,

One fighter认清 his fellow, to our fields,

Scattered anon, took station here and there,

And carried it, till now, with little care—

Cannot but cry for him; how else rebuke

Us longer? Cliffs, an earthquake suffered just

In the mid-sea, each domineering crest
From its old interests, and nowise changed
By its new neighborhood; perchance the vaunt
Of Otho, "my own Este shall supplant
Your Este," come to pass. The sire led in
A son as cruel; and this Ecelin
Had sons, in turn, and daughters sly and tall
And curling and compliant; but for all
Romano (so they styled him) threw, that neck
Of his so pinched and white, that hungry check
Proved 'twas some fiend, not him, the man's flinch went
To feed: whereas Romano's instrument,
Famous Taurillo Salmingnerra, said
I' the world, a tree whose boughs were slit the bole
Successively, why should not he shed blood
To further a design? Men understood
Living was pleasant to him as he were
His careless surcoat, glanced some massive o'er,
Prop'ed on his truncheon in the public way,
While his lord lifted written hands to pray,
Lost at Oliero's convent.

Our chronicles, commenced when some old monk
Found it intolerable to be sunk
(Vexed to the quick by his revolving cell)
Quite out of summer while alive and well:
Ended when by his mat the Prior stood,
Mid busy promptings of the brotherhood,
Striving to coax from his deserted brains
The reason Father Porphyry took pains
To blot those ten lines out which used to stand
First on their charter drawn by Hildebrand.

For aught that's seen or heard until we shut
The smother in, the lights, all noises but strange

Such a recess should lurk behind a range
Of banquet-rooms? Your finger — thus — you push
A spring, and the wall opens, would you rush
Upon the banqueters, select your prey,

Nor any . . . does that one man sleep whose brow

Which might save such another three can wrest
From out (conceive) a certain chokeweed grown
Since o'er the waters, twine and tangle thrown
Too thick, too fast accumulating round,
Too sure to over-riot and confound
Ere long each brilliant islet with itself.
Unless a second shock save shoal and shelf,
Whirling the sea-drift wide: alas, the bruised
And swulled wreck! Sunlight to be diffused
For that! Sunlight, 'neath which, a scum at first,
The mill-stones fibres of our chokeweed nurs
Dispread themselves, mauling the troubled main.
And, shattered by those rocks, took hold again,
So kindly blazed it — that same blaze to brood
O'er every cluster of the multitude
Till hazing new clasps, ties, filaments,
An emulate exchange of pulses, vents
Of nature into nature; till some growth
Unfamed yet, exuberantly clothe
The Ghil-

A surface solid now, continuous, one:
"The Pope, for us the People, who wash the Gaels!" The People, carries on the People

To keep that Kaiser off and dwell with us!"
See you?
Or say, Two Principles that live
Each fitting by its Representative.
"Hill-eat" — who called him so? — the grace-fullest
Adventurer, the ambiguous stranger-guest
Of Lombardy — sleek but that muffling fur
Those talons to their sheath! whose velvet purr
Sooths jealous neighbors when a Saxon scout — Arpo o Yoland, is it? — one without
A country or a name, presumes to couch
Beside their noblest; until men avouch
That, of all Houses in the Trevisan,
Count Conrad descries no fitter, rear or van,
How Ecco! They laughed as they enrolled
Than Ecel! Their name on the page of those,
Godego's lord, — Ramon, Marostica,
Cartiglion, Bassano, Loria.
And every sheep-cote on the Sunlian's feast!
No laughter when his son, "the Lombard Chief"
Forswoth, as Barbarossa's path was bent
To Italy along the Vale of Trent;
Welcomed him at Roneglio! Sadness now —
The hamlets nested on the Tyrol's brow,
The Asulian and Eogan-an hills,
The Bieharn and the Julian, sadness fills
Them all, for Ecelin vouchsafes to stay
Among and care about them; day by day
Choosing this pinnacle, the other spot,
A castle building to defend a cot,
A cot built for a castle to defend,
Nothing but castles, castles, nor an end
To boasts how mountain ridge may join with ridge
By sunken gallery and soaring bridge.
He takes, in brief, a figure that beseems
The grisliest nightmare of the Church's dreams,
— A Signory firm-rooted, unestranged
The dying lamp-flame sinks and rises o'er?
What woman stood beside him? not the more
Is he unfastened from the earnest eyes
Because that arras fell between! Her wise
And holling words are yet about the room,
Her presence wholly poured upon the gloom.
Down even to her vesture's creeping stir.
And so reclines he, saturate with her.
Until an outcry from the square beneath
Pierces the charm: he springs up, glad to breathe,
Above the cunning element, and shakes
The stupor off as (look you) morning breaks.
On the gay dress, and, near concealed by it,
The lean frame like a half-burnt taper, lit
First at some marriage-feast, then laid away
Till the Armenian bridgroom's dying day,
In his wool wedding-robe.
For he — for he,
Gate-vein of this hearts' blood of Lombardy,
(If I should falter now) — for he is thine!
Sordello, thy forerunner, Florentine!
A herald-star I know thou didst absorb
Relentless into the consummable orb
That scared it from its right to roll along
A sempiternal path with dance and song.
Fulfilling its allotted period,
Serenest of the progeny of God —
Who yet resigns it not! His darling stoops
With no quenched lights, despounds with no blank troops
Of disenfranchised brilliances, for, blect
Utterly with thee, its shy element
Like thine upburneth prosperos and clear.
Still, what if I approach the august sphere
Named now with only one name, dissentwine
That under-current soft and argentine
From its fierce mate in the majestic mass
Leavened as the sea whose fire was mixt with glass
In John's transcendent vision, — launch once more
That lustre? Dante, pace of the shore
Where glutted hell disgorgeth fielliest gloom,
Unbitten by its whispering sulphur-spume
Or whence the grievous and obscure waters slope
Into a darkness quieted by hope;
Phoeber of amaranths grown beneath God's eye
In gracious twilights where his chosen lie, —
I would do this! If I should falter now!

In Mantua territory half is slough,
Half pine-forest tree; maples, scarlet oaks
Dante; his birthplace.
Bred o'er the river-beds; even Minchino chokes
With sand the summer through: but 'tis morass
In winter up to Mantua walls. There was,
Some thirty years before this evening's coil,
One spot reclaimed from the surrounding spoil,
Goito; just a castle built amid
A few low mountains; firs and larches hid
Their main d-files, and rings of vineyard bound
The rest. Some captured creature in a pound,
Whose artless wonder quite precludes distress,
Secure beside in its own loveliness.
So peered with airy head, below, above,
The castle at its toils, the lapwings love
To glean among at grape-time. Pass within.
A maze of corridors contrived for sin,
Dusk winding-stairs, dim galleries got past,
You gain the immost chambers, gain at last
A maple-panelled room; that haze which seems Floating about the panel, if there gleams
A sunbeam over it, will turn to gold
And in light-graven characters unfold
The Arab's wisdom everywhere; what shade
Marred them a moment, those slim pillars made,
Cut like a company of palms to prop
The roof, each kissing top entwined with top,
Leaning together; in the carver's mind
Some knot of bacchanauls, flushed cheek combined
With straining forehead, shoulders purpled, hair
Diffused between, who in a goat-skin bear
A vintage; graceful sister-palms! But quick
To the main wonder, now. A vault, see; thick
Black shade about the ceiling, though
A Vault inside the Castle at Goito
Upon a marvel in the midst. Nay, stoop —
A dullish gray-streaked embossed font, a group
Round it, — each side of it, where'er one sees, —
Upholds it; shrinking Caryatides
Of just-tinged marble like Eve's filled flesh
Beneath her maker's finger when the fresh
First pulse of life shot brightening the snow.
The font's edge burdens every shoulder, so
They muse upon the ground, eyelids half closed; some,
With meek arms behind their backs disposed
Some, crossed above their bosoms, some, to veil
Their eyes, some, propping chin and cheek so pale,
Some, hanging slack an utter helpless length
Dead as a buried vestal whose whole strength
Goes when the grate above shuts heavily.
So dwell these noiseless girls, patient to see
Like priestesses because of sin impure
Penanced forever, who resigned endure,
Having that once drunk sweetness to the dregs.
And every eye, Sordello's visit begs
Pardon for them: constant as eve he came
To sit beside each in her turn, the same
As one of them, a certain space: and awe
Made a great indistinctness till he saw
And what
Sunset slant cheerful through the Sordello battress-chinks, would see
there.
Gold seven times globed; surely our maiden shrinks
And a smile starts her as if one faint grain
Her load were lightened, one shade less the stain
Obscured her forhead, yet one more head slip
From off the rosary whereby the crypt
Keeps count of the contritions of its charge?
Then with a step more light, a heart more large,
He may depart, leave her and every one
To linger out the penance in mute stone.
Ah, but Sordello? 'Tis the tale I mean
To tell you.

In this castle may be seen,
On the hill-toms, or underneath the vines,
Or eastward by the mound of firs and pines
That shrouds not Mantua, still in loneliness,
A slender boy in a loose page's dress,
Sordello: do but look on him awhile
Watching: "It is an earnest with an earnest smile
The noisy flock of thievish birds at work
Among the yellowing vineyards; see him lurk
("Tis winter with its sullenst storms
His boyhood in Beside that arm's length of bordered the domain of Eecin.
On tiptoe, lifting in both hands a light
Which makes you warrior's visage flutter bright
— Ecclo, dismal father of the brood,
And Eecin, close to the girl he wooed,
Auria, and their Child, with all his wives
From Agnes to the Trianon that survives,
Lady of the castle, Adelaide. His face
— Look, now he turns away! Yourselves shall trace

The delicate nostril swerving wide and fine,
A sharp and restless lip, so well combine
With that calm brow— a soul fit to receive
Delight at every sense; you can believe
Sordello foremost in the regal class
Nature has broadly severed from her mass
Of men, and framed for pleasure, as she frames
Some happy bands, that have luxurious names.
For loose fertility; a footfall there:
Suffices to upturn to the warm air
Half-germinating spices; mere decay
Produces richer life; and day by day
New pollen on the lily-petal grows,
And still more labyrinthine buds the rose.
You recognize at once the finer dress
Of flesh that amply lets in loveliness
At eye and ear, while round the rest is furled
As though she would not trust them with her world.

A veil that shows a sky not near so blue,
And lets but half the sun look fervid through.

How a poet's soul comes into being.

Bay. Beyond its beauty, till exceeding love
Becomes an aching weight; and, to remove
A curse that haunts such natures to preclude
Their finding out themselves can work no good
To what they have not made it very best
By their endeavor, they are roused to invest
The lifeless thing with life from their own soul,
Availing it to purpose, to control,
To dwell distinct and have peculiar joy
And separate interests that may employ
That beauty fitly, for its proper sake.
Nor rest they here; fresh births of beauty wake
Fresh homage, every grade of love is past,
With every mode of loveliness; then cast
Inferior idols off their borrowed crown
Before a coming glory. Up and down
Runs arrowy fire, while earthly forms combine
To throb the secret forth; a touch divine—
And the scaled eyelash owns the mystic rod;
Visibly through his garden walketh God.

What do these things mean?— For nature,

A need to blend with each external charm.
Bury themselves, the whole heart wide and warm,—
In something not themselves; they would be long
To what they worship— stronger and more strong
Thus prodigally fed— which gathers shape
And feature, soon imprisons past escape;
The votary framed to love and to submit
Nor ask, as passionate he kneels to it,
Whence grew the idol's empery, so runs
A legend; light and birth are moons and suns.
Flowing through space a river and alone,
Till chaos burst and blank the spheres were strown

Hither and thither, foundering and blind:
When into each of them rushed light— to find
Itself no place, foiled of its radiant chance,
Let such forego their just inheritance!
For there's a class that eagerly looks, too,
On beauty, but, unlike the gentler crew,
Proclaims each new revelation born a twin
With a distinctest consciousness within,
Referring still the quality, now first
Revealed, to their own soul— its instinct nursed
In silence, now remembered better, shown
More thoroughly, but not the less their own;
A dream come true; the special exercise
How poets Of any special function that implies class at The being fair, or good, or wise, or—length— strong,
Dormant within their nature all along—
Whose fault? So, homage, other souls direct
Without, turns inward, “How should this defect
Thee, soul?” they murmur; “wherefore strength be quelled
Because, its trivial accidents withheld,
Organs are missed that clog the world, inert.
Wanting a will, to quicken and exert,
Like thine— existence cannot satiate,
Cannot surprise? Laugh thou at envious fate.
Who, from earth's simplest combination stampt
With individuality— unenrhalt
By living its faint elemental
Just yearn to beheight its completest essence, rise
With grandeur, unafraid to the last.
For honor.

Equal to being all!”
In truth? Thou hast
Life, then— wilt challenge life for us; our race
Is vindicated so, obtains its place;
In thy ascent, the first of us; whom we
May follow, to the meanest, finally.
Or shame—
With our more bounded wills?
Ah, but to find
A certain mood enervate such a mind,
Counsel it shudder in the solitude
Thus reached, nor, stooping, task for mankind's good
Its nature just as life and time accord
"— Too narrow an arena to reward
Empire— the world's occasion worthless since
Not absolutely fitted to evince
Its mastery! Or if yet worse befall,
And a desire possess it to put all
That nature forth, forego our straitened sphere
Contain it, — to display completely here
The mastery another life should learn.
Thrusting in time eternity’s concern,—
So that Sordello . . .
Which
Fool, who spied the mark may the Gods avert
Already as he loiters? Born just
With the new century, beside the glow
And efflorescence out of barbarism;
Witness a Greek or two from the abyss
That stray through Florence-town with studious air,
Calming the chisel of that Pisian pair?
If Nicola should carve a Christus yet!
While at Siena is Guidone set,
Forehead on hand; a painful birth must be Matured ere Saint Eufemia’s sanctity
Or transept gather fruits of one great gaze
At the moon: look you! The same orange haze,
The same blue stripe round that—and, in the midst,
Thy spectral whiteness, Mother-maid, who didst Pursue the dizzy painter!
Woe, then, worth
Any officious babble letting forth
The leprous confirmed and minions
To spirit lodged in a contracted house!
Go back to the beginning, rather; blend It gently with Sordello’s life; the end Is piteous, you may see, but much between Pleasant enough. Meantime, some pyx to screen
The full-grown pest, some lid to shut upon
The gobelin! So they found at Babylon,
(Companions, mad Lucrece and sage Antonine)
Sacking the city, by Apollo’s shrine,
In rummaging among the rarities,
A certain coffer; he who made the prize
Opened it greedily; and there out caroled Just such another plague, for half the world Was stung. Crawl in then, lag, and coach asquint.
Keeping that blotty bosom thick in spot
Until your time is ripe! The coffer-lid Is fastened, and the coffer safely hid
Under the Lysonian’s choicest gifts of gold.
Who will may hear Sordello’s story told,
And how he never could remember when He dwelt not at Goito. Calmly, then,
From Sordello, now in childhood,
Gilded his youth away; beyond the glades
Of the fir-forest border, and the rim
Of the low range of mountain, was for him
No other world: but this appeared his own
To wander through at pleasure and alone.
The castle too seemed empty; far and wide Might he disport; only the northern side Lay under a mysteries interdict—
Sight, just enough remembered to restrict
His ram roving to the corridors, the vault
Where those font-bearers expiate their fault,
The maple-chamber, and the little nooks
And nests, and breezy parapet that looks
Over the woods to Mantua: there he strolled
Some foreign women-servants, very old,
Tended and crept about him—all his clue To the world’s business and embroiled ado
Distant a dozen hill-tops at the most.
The delight of Sordello in his drowsy Paradise;
his child-
ish fancy,
The day’s adventures for the day Distant—
Its constant tribute of perceptions strange.
With sleep and stir in healthy interchange,
Suffice, and leave him for the next at ease
Like the great palmer-worm that strips the trees,
Eats the life out of every luscious plant,
And, when September finds them sere or scant, Puts forth two wondrous winglets, alters quite, And bies him after unfeigned delight.
So fed Sordello, not a shard dishevelled; As ever, round each new discovery, wreathed Luxuriantly the fancies infantine
His admiration, bent on making fine
Its novel friend at any risk, would fling In gay profusion forth; a fickle king,
Confessed those minions!—eager to dispense So much from his own stock of thought and sense
As might enable each to stand alone
And serve him for a fellow; with his own,
Joining the qualities that just before
Had grace some older favorite. Thus they wore
A fluctuating halo, yesterday
Set flicker and to-morrow fchced away,— Those upland objects each of separate name,
Each with an aspect never twice the same,
Waxing and waning as the new-born host Of fancies, like a single night’s hoar-frost,
Which could Gave to familiar things a face gortesque;
blow out
a great Only, preserving through the mad burlesque bubble,
A grave regard. Conceive! the Bubbling earliest on the log-house thatch
The day those archers wound along the vines— Related to the Chief that left their lines
To climb with clanking step the northern stair Up to the solitary chambers where Sordello never came. Thus thrall reached thrall;
He o’er-festooning every interval,
As the adventurous spider, making light Of distance, shoots her threads from depth to
From barbaric to battlement: so flung Fantasies forth and in their centre swing Our architect, — the breezy morning fresh Above, and merry, — all his waving mesh Laughing with lucid dew-drops rainbow-edged.
This world of ours by tacit pact is pledged To laying such a spangled fabric low Whether by gradual brush or gallon blow.
But its abundant will was balked here: doubt Being Rose tardily in one so fended about secure From most that nurtures judgment.
while care and pain:
Judgment, that dull expedient we were fain,
Less favored, to adopt betimes and force Stead us, diverted from our natural course
Of joys—contrive some yet amid the dearth,
Vary and render them, it may be, worth
Most we forego. Suppose Sordello hence
Selfish enough, without a moral sense
However feeble; what informed the bay
Others desired a portion in his joy?
Or say a grateful chance broke woof and warp
A heron's nest beat down by March winds sharp,
A fawn breathless beneath the precipice,
A bird with unsold breast and unfilmed eyes
Warm in the brake—could these undue the trance
Lapping Sordello? Not a circumstance
That makes for you, friend Naddo! Eat fern-seed
And peer beside us and report indeed
It your word, "genius" dawned with thrones and stings
And the whole fiery catalogue, while springs,
Summers and winters quietly came and went.
Time put at length that period to content, by right the world should have imposed: berett
Of its good offices, Sordello, left
To study his companions, managed rip
Their fringe off, learn the true relationship,
Core with its crust, their nature with his own:
Amid his wild-wood sights he lived alone.
As if the poppy felt with him! Though he Partook the poppy's red effrontery
Till Autumn spoiled their flowering quite with rain.
And, turbanless, a coarse brown rattling crane
Lay bare. That's gone: yet why remonse, for that,
His disenchaned tribunaries—flat
Perhaps, but scarce so utterly forlorn.
Their simple presence might not well be borne.
Whose parley was a transport once: recall
The poppy's gifts; it haunts you, after all,
A poppy:—why distrust the evidence
Of each soothed satisfied and healthy sense?
But it
The new-born judgment answered,
comes
"little boots
and new-
Beholding other creatures' attributes
born
And having none!" or, say that it judgment
sufficed,
"Y-e, could one but possess, one's self," (enticed Judgment) "some special office!" Naught beside Serves you? "Well then, be somehow justifi ed
For this ignoble wish to circumscribe
And concentrate, rather than swell, the tribe
Of actual pleasures: what, now, from without Effects it?—proves, despite a lurking doubt,
Mere sympathy sufficient, trouble spared?
That, tasting joys by proxy thus, you fared Decides
The better for them?" Thus much that he needs sympathizers.
And true; if sure of naught beside, most sure
Of its own truth at least; nor may endure
A crowd to see its face, that cannot know
How hot the pulses throb their heart below.
While its own helplessness and utter want
Of means to worthy be ministrant
To what it worships, do but fan the more
Its flame, exult the idol far before
Itself as it would have it ever be.
Souls like Sordello, on the contrary,
Coerced and put to shame, retaining will,
Care little, take mysterious comfort still,
But look forth tremblingly to ascertain
If others judge their claims not urged in vain,
And say for them their stilted thoughts aloud.
So, they must ever live before a crowd:
"Vanity," Naddo tells you.

Whence contrive
A crowd, now? From these women just alive,
That archer-troop? Firth glided—not alone
Each painted warrior, every girl of stone,
Nor Adelaide (bent double o'er a scroll,
One maiden at her knees, that eye, his soul
Shook as he stumbled through the arras'd
glooms
On them, for, 'mid quaint robes and weird perfumes,

Started the mengre Tuscan up,—her eyes,
The maiden's, also, bluer with surprise)

—But the entire out-world: whatever, scraps
And snatches, song and story, dreams perhaps.

Conscrated the world's offices, and he
Had hitherto transferred to flower or tree,
Not counted a befitting heritage
Each of its own right, singly to engage
Some man, no other,—such now dared to stand Alone. Strength, wisdom, grace on every hand
Soon disengaged themselves, and he discerned
A sort of human life: at least, was turned

He there-

Lord, liege-man, valvassor and suze-such a company: Ere he could choose, surrounded him; a stuff
To work his pleasure on; there, sure enough:
But as for gazing, what shall fix that gaze?

Are they to simply testify the ways
He, who convoked them sends his soul along
With the cloud's thunder or a dove's brood-song?

—While they live each his life, boast each his
Each of which,

Peculiar dower of bliss, stand each leading its own

In some one point where something life,
dearest loved
Is easiest gained—far worthier to be proved
Than aught he envies in the forest-wights!
No simple and self-evident delights,
but mixed desires of unimagined range,
Contrasts or combinations, new and strange.

Ik some perhaps, yet plainly recognized
By this, the sudden company—loves prized
By those who are to prize his own amount
Of loves. Once care because such make account,
Allow that foreign recognitions stamp
The current value, and his crowd shall vamp
Him counterfeits enough; and so their print
Be on the piece 'tis gold, attests the mint.
And “good,” pronounce they whom his new appeal
Is made to, if their casual print conceal—
This arbitrary good of theirs o’ergress.
What he has lived without, nor felt the loss—
Qualities strange, ungainly, wearisome,
—What matter? So must speech expand the dumb.

Part-sigh, part-smile with which Sordello, late
Whom no poor woodland-sights could satiate,
Betakes himself to study hungrily.
Just what the puppets his crude fantasy
Supposes notabelle—popes, kings, priests, knights,—
May please to promulgate for appetites;
Accepting all their artificial joys.
Not as he views them, but as he employs
Each shape to estimate the other’s stock
Of attributes, wherein—A marshalled flock
Of authorized enjoyments—he may spend Himself, be men, now, as he used to blend
With tree and flower—may more entirely, else
'Twere mockery: for instance, "How excels
My life that chieftain’s?" (who apprized the youth
Eecil, here, becomes this month, in truth,
Imperial Vieux?) "Turns he in his tent Remissly? Be it so—my head is bent
Deliciously amid my girls to sleep.
What if he stalks the Trentine-pass? You steep
I climbed an hour ago with little toil:
We are alike there. But can I, too, foil
The Gueii’s paid stabber, carelessly afford
Saint Mark’s a spectacle, the sleight o’ the sword
Baffling the treason in a moment?" Here
No rescue! Poppy he is none, but peer
To Eecil, assuredly: his hand,
Fashioned no otherwise, should wield a brand
With Eecil’s success—try, now! He soon
Was satisfied, returned as to the moon
From earth; left each abortive boy’s attempt
Has quali—For feats, from failure happily ex-

Accomplish it! Are they not older still—Not grown up men and women? ‘Tis beside
Only a dream; and though I must abide.
With dreams now, I may find a thorough vent
For all myself, acquire an instrument
For acting what these people act; my soul
Hunting a body out may gain its whole
Desire some day!" How else express chagrin
And resignation, show the hope stol in
With which he let sink from an aching wrist
The rough-hewn ash-bow? Straight, a gold shaft hissed
Into the Syrian air, struck Malek down
Superbly! "Crosses to the breach! God’s Town
Is gained him back!" Why bend rough ash-bows more?
Thus lives he: if not careless as before,
Comfni rated: for one may anticipate,
Rehearse the future, he prepared when fate

Shall have prepared in turn real men whose names
Startle, ready places of enormous names,
Este abandons and Eecil at home.
To worship him,—Mantua, Verona, Rome
To witness it. Who grudges time so spent?
Rather test qualities to heart’s content—
Summon them, thrice selected, near and far—
Compress the starriest into one star,
So, only to 'And grasp the whole at once!'
be appropi—rized in Accordingly; from rank to rank,
fancy, like wind
His spirit passed to winnow and divide;
Back fell the simpler phantasms; every side
The strong clave to the wise; with either chassèd
The beauteous; so, till two or three amassed
Mankind's boseomingnesses, and reduced
Themselves eventually, graces loosed,
Strengths lavished, all to heighten up One Shape
Whose potency no creature should escape.
Can it be Friedrich of the bowmen’s talk?
Surely that grape-juice, bubbling at the stalk,
Is some gray searching Sarasenic wine
The Kaiser quaffs with the Miramoln—
Those swarthy hazel-clusters, seamed and chapped,
Or lillibets russet-sheathed and velvet-capped.
Are dates plucked from the bough John Brienne sent.
To keep in mind his sluggish armament
Of Cannn:—Friedrich’s, all the pomp and fierce
Demenean! But harsh sounds and sights trans-

And prac—Whose looks enjoin, whose lightest tivid on words are spells deed

Has thunder for its slave; but where’s the need
Of thunder if the stricken multitude
Heartens, arrested in its angriest mood,
While songs go up exulting, then dispread,
Dispart, disperse, lingering overhead
Like an escape of angels? "Tis the time,
Nor much unlike the words his women croon
Smilingly, colorless and faint-designed
Each, as a worn-out queen’s face some remind
Of her extreme youth’s love-tales. "Eglamor
Made that!" Half minstrel and half emperor,
What but ill objects vexed him? Such he slew.
The kinder sort were easy to subdue
By those ambrosial glances, dulcet tones;
And these a gracious hand advanced to thrones
Beneath him. Wherefore twist and torture this,
Striving to name afresh the antique bliss.
Instead of saying, neither less nor more,
He means Had he discovered, as our world beto be per-fore, feet—say, Apollo? That shall be the name;
Apollo; nor bid
Me rag by rag expose how patchwork hid
The youth — what thefts of every clime and day
Contributed to purify the array
He climbed with (June at deep) some close
Mid chatter of its million pebbles sheen,
Over which, singing soft, the tunnel slipped
Elate with rains into whose streamlet dipped
He foot, yet trod, you thought, with unwet

Though really on the stubs of living rock
Ages ago it creenelled; vines for roof,
Lindens for wall; before him, aye aloof,
Flittered in the cool some azure damsel-fly,
Born of the simmering quiet, there to die.
Emerging whence, Apollo still, he spied
Mighty descents of forest; multiplied
Tuft on tuft, here, the frolic myrtle-trees,
There girdled the grave maple stools at ease,
And, proud of its observer, straight the wood
Tried old surprises on him; black it stood
A sudden barrier (t was a cloud passed o'er)
So dead and dense, the timet brute no more
Must pass; yet presently (the cloud dispatched)
Each clump, beheld, was glistening detached
A shrub, oak-boles shrunk into flax-stems?
Yet could not he denounce the stratagem
He said thro', till, hours thence, aloft would hang
White summer-lightnings; as it sunk and sprung
To measure, that whole palpitating breast
Of heaven, 't was Apollo, nature prest
At eve to worship.

Time stole: by degrees
The Pythons perish off; his votaries
Sink to respectful distance; songs redeem
Their pains, but briefer; their dismissals seem Emphatic; only girls are very slow
To disappear — his Deians! Some that glow
Of the instant, more with earlier loves to wrench
Away remains to quell, disdains to quench:
Alike in one material circumstance
All soon or late adore Apollo! Glance
The bevy through, divine Apollo's choice,
And Apollo. His Durante? "Who secure Count Romano's Richard's voice day and
In Este's counsels, good for Este's casts
As our Taurello," say his failed friends,
"By granting him our Palma!" — the sole child.

They mean, of Agnes Fate who beguiled
Ecelin, years before this Adelaid
Wedded and turned him wicked: "but the maid
Rejects his suit," those sleepy women boast.
She, scorning all beside, deserves the most Sordello: so, conspicuous in his world
Of dreams sat Palma. How the tresses curled
Into a sunspun swell of gold and wound
About her like a glory! even the ground
Was bright as with spilt sunbeams; breathe not, breathe
Not! — poised, see, one leg doubled underneath
Its small foot buried in the dimpling snow.
Rests, but the other, listlessly below.
O'er the couch-side swings feeling for cool air.

The vein-streaks swollen a richer violet where
The languid blood lies heavily; yet calm
On her slight prop, each flat and outspread palm,
As but suspended in the act to rise
By consciousness of beauty, whence her eyes
But when turn with so frank a triumph, for will this
While she dreams she turns
Apollo's gaze in the pine glooms,
truth?

That's worst! Because the pre-appointed age
Approaches. Fate is tardy with the stage
And crowd she promised. Lean he grows and pale,
Though restless at rest. Hardly avail
Fancies to soothe him. Time steals, yet alone
He tarries here! The earnest smile is gone.
How long this might continue matters not;
For the — Forever, possibly; since to the spot
Time is None come: our lingering Taurello ripped, and quits
he ready. Mantua at last, and light our lady fits
Back to her place disburdened of a care.
Strange — to be constant here if he is there!
Is it distrust? Oh, never! for they both
Good Ecelin alike, Romano's growth
Is daily manifest, with Azzo dian
And Richard wavering: let but Friedrich come,
Find matter for the minstrelsy's report!
Lured from the Isle and its young Kaiser's court
To sing us a Messissa morning up,
And, double rilet of a drinking cup,
Sparkle along to ease the land of drouth,
Northward to Provence that, and thus far south
The other. What a method to apprise
Neighbors of births, espousals, ills-quiés!
Which in their very tongue the Troubadour
Records; and his performance makes a tour,
For Trouveres bear the miracle about,
Explain its cunning to the vulgar rout,
Until the Fornidable House is famed
Over the country — as Taurello aimed,
Who introduced, although the rest adopt,
The novelty. Such games, her absence stopped,
Begin afresh now. Adé laide, rechuse
No longer, in the sight of day pursues
Her plans at Mantua: whence an accident
Which, breaking on Sordello's mixed content,
Opened, like any flash that cures the blind,
The veritable business of mankind.

BOOK THE SECOND

The woods were long austere with snow: at last
Pink leaflets budded on the beech,
Fink leaflets budded on the beech, and fast fancy
Larches, scattered through pine-tree
solitudes.
Brightened, "as in the slumbrous heart o' the woods,
Our buried year, a witch, grew young again
To placid incantations, and that stain
About were from her caldron, green smoke bent
With those black pines" — so Eglamor gave vent
To a chance fancy. Whence a just rebuke
From his companion; brother Naddo shook
The solemnest of brows; "Beware," he said,
"Of setting up conceits in nature's stead!"
Forth wandered our Sordello. Naught so sure
As that to-day's adventure will secure
Palma, the visioned lady — only pass
O'er yon damp mound and its exhausted grass,
Under that brake where sundawn teeds the stalks
Of withered fern with gold, into those walks
Of pine and take her! Buoyantly he went,
Again his stooping forehead was besprent
With dew-drops from the skirring ferns. Then wide
Opened the great morass, shot every side
With flashing water through and through;
as-shine,
Thick steaming, all alive. Whose shape div-
vine,
Quivered i' the farthest rainbow-vapor, glanced Athwart the flying herons? He advanced,
But wary; though Mineo leaped no more,
Each footfall burst up in the marshy-floor
A diamond jet: and if he stopped to
Rose-litchen, or most the leeches quick,
And circling blood-worms, minnow, newt or loach,
A sudden pond would silently encroach
This way and that. On Palma passed. The verge
Of new wood was gained. She will emerge
Flushed, now, and panting, — crowds to see, — will own
She loves him — Boniface to hear, to groan,
To leave his suit! One screen of pine-trees still Opposes; but — the startling spectacle —
Manta, this time! Under the walls — a crowd
Indeed, real men and women, gay and loud
Rounded a pavilion. How he stood!

When

No prophecy had come to pass: his youth and brightest bursts. In its prime now — and where was homage poured

Upon Sordello? — born to be adored,
And suddenly discovered weak, scarce made
To cope with any, cast into the shade
By this and this. Yet something seemed to prick
And tingle in his blood; a slight — a trick —
And much would be explained. It went for naught —
The best of their endowments were ill bought
With his identity: may, the conceit;
That this day's roving led to Palma's feet
Was not so vain — list! The word, "Palma!"

Steal.
Aside, and die, Sordello; this is real,
And this — abjure!

What next? The curtains see
Dividing! She is there; and presently
He will be there — the proper You, at length —
In your own cherished dress of grace and strength:
Most like, the very Boniface!

Not so,
It was a showy man advanced; but though
A glad cry welcomed him, then every sound
Sank and the crowd disposed themselves around,

— "This is not he," Sordello felt; while, "Place
For the best Troubadour of Boniface!"

Holloed the Jongleurs, — "Eglamor, whose lay Concludes his patron's Court of Love to-day!"

Obsequious Naddo strung the master's lute
With the new lute-string, "Elys," named to suit
At a Court: the song: he stealthily at watch, the of Love a master

Biting his lip to keep down a great smile

Of pride: then up he struck. Sordello's brain
Swam; for he knew a sometime debauch again;
So, could supply each foolish gap and chasm
The minstrel left in his enthusiasm,
Mistaking its true version — was the tale
Not of Apollo? Only, what avail
Luring her down, that Elys an he pleased,
If the man dared no further? Has he ceased?
And, lo, the people's frank applause half done,
Sordello was beside him, had begun
(Spite of indignant twitchings from his friend
The Trouvère: the true lay with the true end,
Taking the other's names and time and place
For his. On flew the song, a giddy race.
Sordello, After the flying story; word made beforePal-
ma, can —
Out word, rhyme — rhyme; the lay
quers him,
could barely keep
Pace with the action visibly rushing past;
Both ended. Back fell Naddo more agast
Than some Egyptian from the harassed bull
That wheeled abrupt and, bellowing, fronted full
His plague, who spied a scarab 'neath the tongue,
And found 't was Apis' flank his heasty prong
Insulted. But the people — but the cries,
The crowding round, and proffering the prize!
For he had gained some prize. He seemed to shrink
Into a sleepy cloud, just at whose brink
One sight withheld him. There sat Adelaide,
Silent; but at her knees the very maid
Of the North Chamber, her red lips as rich
The same pure fleshy hair; one welt of which,
Golden and great, quite touched his cheek as of her
She leant, speaking some six words and no more.
He answered something, anything; and she Unbound a scarf and laid it heavily
Upon him, her neck's warmth and all. Again
Moved the arrested magic; in his brain
Noises grew, and a light that turned to glare,
And greater glare, until the intense flare
Engulfed him, shut the whole scene from his sense.
And when he woke 't was many a furlong thence,
At home; the sun shining his ruddy wont;
The customary birds'shrimp; but his front
Receives Was crowned — was crowned! Her the prize,
scented scarf around
His neck! Whose gorgeous vesture heaps the ground?
A prize? He turned, and peeringly on him
Brooded the women-faces, kind and dim,
Ready to talk — "The Jongleurs in a trop
Had brought him back, Naddo and Squarcilupe-
And Tagliafer: how strange! a childhood spent
In taking, well for him, so brave a bent!
Since Eglinor, "they heard, "Was dead with quote.
And Palma chose him for her minstrel."

Sordello rose— to think, now; hitherto
He had perceived. Sure, a discovery grew
Out of it all! Best live from first to last
The transport o'er again. A week he passed,
Sucking the sweet out of each circumstance,
From the bard's outburst to the luminous trance
Bounding his own achievement. Strange! A
man
Recounted an adventure, but began
Imperfectly; his own task was to fill
The framework up, sing well what he sung till,
Supply the necessary points, set loose
As many incidents of little use
— More imbecile the other, not to see
Their relative importance clear as he!
But, for a special pleasure in the act
Of singing — had he ever turned, in fact,
From Elys, to sing Elys? — from each fit
Of rapture to contrive a song of it?
True, this snatch or the other seemed to wind
Into a treasure, helped himself to find
A beauty in himself; for, see, he soared
By means of that mere snatch, to many a hoard
Of fancies; as some falling cone bears soft
The eye along the fir-tree spire, aloft
To a dove's nest. Then, how divine the cause
Why such performance should exact applause
From men, if they had fancies, too? Did fate
Decree they found a beauty separate
In the poor snatch itself? — "Take Elys, there,
— Her head that's sharp and perfect like a pear,
So close and smooth are laid the few fine locks
Colored like honey oozed from topmost rocks
Sun-blanced the livelong summer" — if they heard
Just those two rhymes, assented at my word,
And loved them as I love them who have run
These fingers through those pale locks, let the
man
Into the white cool skin—who first could clutch.
Then praise — I needs must be a god to such,
Or what it some, above themselves, and yet
How had Beneath me, like their Eglinor, been superior to
An impress on our gift? So, men
Eglinor? believe
And worship what they know not, nor receive Delight from. Have they fancies — slow, perchance,
Not on their back, which indistinctly glance
Until, by son, each floating part be linked
To each, and all grow palpable, distinct?"
He pondered this.

Meanwhile, sounds low and drear
Stole on him, and a noise of footsteps, near
And nearer, while the underwood was pushed
Aside, the larches grazed, the dead leaves
Crushed
At the approach of men. The wind seemed laid
Only, the trees shrank slightly and a shade
Came o'er the sky although 'twas mid-day yet:

You saw each half-shut downcast floweret
Flutter — "a Roman bride, when they'd dispart
Her unbound tresses with the Sabine dart,
Holding that famous rape in memory still,
Felt creep into her curls the iron chill,
And looked thus," Eglinor would say — indeed
This is "Tis Eglinor, no other, these precedent

Far from the scene of one's forlorn self;
To sleep!" Join'd Naddo, who in person led Jongleurs and Trouvères, chanting at their head,
A beauty company; for, sooth to say,
Our heagen Troubadour had seen his day.
Old worshippers were something shamed, old friends
Nigh weary; still the death proposed amends
"Let us but get them safely through my song
And home again!" quoth Naddo.

All along,
This man (they rest the bier upon the sand)
—This calv corpse with the loose flowers in his hand.
Eglinor, lived Sordello's opposite.
For him indeed was Naddo's notion right,
And verse a temple-worship vague and vast.
A ceremony that withdrew the last
Opposing bolt, loosed back the lingering veil
Which hid the holy place: should one so frail
Stand there without such effort? or repine
If much was blank, uncertain at the shrine
He kneit before, till, soothed by many a rite,
The power responded, and some sound or sight
Grew up, his own forever, to be fixed,
One who belonged to what he loved,
Mixed
With his own life, unloosed when he should please,
Having it safe at hand, ready to use
All pain, remove all trouble; every time
He loosed that fancy from its bonds of rhyme,
(like Perseus when he loosed his naked love)
Faltering; so distinct and far above
Himself; these fancies! — 'He, no genius rare,
Transfiguring in fire or wave of air
At will, but a poor gnome that, cloistered up
In some rock-chamber with his agate cup,
His topaz rod, his seed-pearl, in these few
And their arrangement finds enough to do
For his best art. Then, how he loved that art!
The calling him a man apart
From men — one not to care, take counsel for Cold hearts, comfortless faces — (Eglinor
Was meanest of his tribe); since verse, the gift,
Was his, and men, the whole of them, must shift
Without it, e'en content themselves with wealth
And pomp and power, snatching a life by stealth.
So, Eglinor was not without his pride!
Loving his
The sorriest hat which crowns art and rewarded by
While other birds are jocund, has one
it,
time
When moon and stars are blinded, and the prime
Of earth is his to claim, nor find a peer;
And Eglinor was noblest poet here.
He well knew, 'mid those April woods, he cast
Conceits upon in plenty as he passed,
That Naddo might suppose him not to think Entirely on the coming triumph: wink
At the one weakness! "T was a fervid child,
That song of his; no brother of the guild
Had e'er conceived its like. The rest you know,
The exaltation and the overthrow:
Our poet lost his purpose, lost his rank,
His life — to that it came. Yet envy sank
Within him, as he heard Sordello out,
And, for the first time, shouted — tried to shout
Like others, not from any zeal to show
Pleasure that way: the common sort did so.
What else was Egla'mor? who, bending down
As they, placed his beneath Sordello's crown.
Printed a kiss on his successor's hand,
Left one great tear on it, then joined his band
— In time; for some were watching at the door:
Who knows what envy may effect? "Give o'er,
Nor charm his lips, nor craze him!" (here one sued
And disengaged the withered crown) — "Beside
His crown? How prompt and clear those verses rang
To answer yours! nay, sing them!" And he sang Them calmly. Home he went; friends used to wait
His coming; zealous to congratulate;
But, to a man. — so quickly runs report, —
Could do no less than leave him, and escort
His rival. That eve, then, bred many a thought:
What must his future life be? was he brought
So low, who stood so lofty this spring morn?
At length he said, "Best sleep now with my soar,
And by to-morrow I devise some plain
Expedient!" So, he slept, nor woke again.

They found as much, those friends, with what

About Sordello's paradise, his roves
Among the hills and vales and plains and groves,
Wherein, no doubt, this lay was roughly cast,
Polished by slow degrees, completed last
To Egla'mor's discomfiture and death.
Such form the chanters now, and, out of breath,
They lay the beaten man in his abode,
Naddo reciting that same huckless ode,
Doeful to hear, Sordello could explore
By means of it, however, one step more
In joy; and, mastering the round at length,
Learn to live in weakness as in strength,
When from his covert forth he stood, addressed
Egla'mor, bade the tender ferns invest,
Primaveral pines o'ercanopy his couch,
And, most of all, his fame — shall I avouch
Egla'mor heard it, dead though he might look,
And laughed as from his brow Sordello took
The crown, and laid on the bard's breast, and said

It was a crown, now, fit for poet's head? —
— Continue, as the blade quite fruitless fell,
A plant they bare, yielding a three-leaved bell
Which white at the heart ere noon, and ails
Till evening; evening gives it to her gales

To clear away with such forgotten things
As are an eyesore to the morn: this brings
Him to their mind, and bears his very name.
Egla'mor So much for Egla'mor. My own

May.
Beneath a flowering laurel thickest lay Sordello; and new sprinkle of white stars
That smell fainter of wine than Massie jars
Dug up at Baisc, when the south wind shed
The ripest, made him happier; filleted
And robed the same, only a lute beside Lay on the turf. Before him far and wide
The country stretched: Goito slept behind
— The castle and its covert, which confined
Him with his hopes and fears; so fain of old
To leave the story of his birth untold.
At intervals, 'spite the fantastic glow
Of his Apollo-life, a certain low
And watchful whisper, wending through the bless,
Admonished, no such fortune could be his.
All was quite false and sure to fade one day:
The cloiseljee drew he round him his array
Of brilliance to expel the truth. But when
A reason for his difference from men
Surprised him at the grave, he took no rest
While aught of that old life, superfully dressed
Down to its meanest incident, remained
A mystery: alas, they soon explained
Away Apollo! and the tale amounts
To this: when at Vivaresi both her counts
Who be Banished the Vivaresi kith and kin, really was,
Those Maltraversi hung on Ecelin, and
why
Revised him as he followed; he for at Goito, spite
Must fire their quarter, though that selfsame
night
Among the flames young Ecelin was born
Of Adelaide, there too, and barely torn
From the roused populace hard on the rear,
By a poor archer when his chi'i-itan's fear
Grew high; into the thick Elec'ro's leant.
Saved her, and died; no creature left except
His child to thank. And when the full escape
Was known — how men impaled from chine to nape
Unlucky Prata, all to pieces spurned
Bishop Pestore's concubines, and burned
Taurello's entire household, flesh and fell,
Missing the sweeter prey — such courage well
Might claim reward. The orphan, ever since,
Sordello, had been nurtured by his prince
Within a blind retreat where Adelaide —
—for, once this notable discovery made,
The past at every point was understood)
— Might harbor easily when times were rude,
When Azzo schemed for Palma, to retrieve
That pledge or Agnes Este — forth to leave
Mantua inguarded with a vigilant eye,
While there Taurello rode am'g'ot sly
He who could have no motive now to moil
For his own fortunes since their utter spoil
— As it were worth while yet want the report
To disengage himself from her. In short
Apollo vanished; a mean youth, just named
His lady's minstrel, was to be proclaimed
How shall I phrase it?—Monarch of the World!

For, on the day when that array was

Thine, so little, would he chuse to be so much:

Forever, and in place of one a slave

To longings, wild indeed, but longings save

In dreams as wild, suppressed— one daring not

Assume the mastery such dreams allot,

Until a magical equipment, strength,

Grace, wisdom, decked him too, he chose at length.

Content with unproven wits and failing frame.

In virtue of his simple will, to claim

That mastery, no less—to do his best

With means so limited, and let the rest

Is clear: why needs Sordello square his course

Merrily thus.

He thoroughly read o'er
His truchman Naddo's missive: six times more,
Praying him visit Mantua and supply
A famished world.

The evening star was high
When he reached Mantua, but his fame arrived
Before him: friends applauded, foes convined,
And Naddo looked an angel, and the rest.
Angels, and all these angels would be best
Supremely by a song — the thrice-renowned Goito-manufacture. Then he found

He spoke! In the past life, what might be singing's use?
Just to delight his Delians, whose praise

That praise, enticed Apollo: dreams abjured,
No overleaping means for ends — take both
For granted or take neither! I am loth

Of warriors, statesmen, ere it can extort
Its poet-soul — that's, after all, a freak

With our herd's stupid sterleng happiness
So plainly incompatible that — yes —
Yes — should a son of his improve the breed
And turn out poet, he were cursed indeed!
"Well, there's Goito and its woods anon,
If the worst happen: best go stony on
Now!" thought SordeUlo.

Never quite reach what struck the people so,
As from the theater of their time he drew its elements successively to view,
Followed all actions backward on their course.
And catching up, unmindful at the source,
Such a strength, such a weakness, added then
A touch or two, and turned them into men.

Virtue took form, nor vice refused a shape;
Here heaven opened, there was hell agape,
As Saint this simpered past in sanctity,
Sinner the other flared portentous by
A greedy people. Then why stop, surprised
At his success? The scheme was realized
Too suddenly in one respect: a crowd
Praising, eyes quick to see, and lips as loud
To speak, delicious homage to receive,
The woman's breath to feel upon his sleeve,
Who said, "But Anafest — why asks he less
Than Lucio, in your verses? how confess,
It seemed too much but yestereve!" — the youth,
Who bade him earnestly, "Avoe the truth!
You love Bianca, surely, from your song;
I knew I was unworthy!" — soft or strong,
In poured such tributes ere he had arranged
Ethereal ways to take them, sorted, changed.

Armor was hammered out, in time to be Approved beyond the Roman panoply
Melted to make it, — boots not. This obtained
With some ado, no obstacle remained
To using it; accordingly he took
An action with its actors, quite forsook
Himself to live in each, returned anon
With the result — a creature, and, by one
And one, proceeded leisurely to equip
Its limbs in harness of his workmanship.

"Accomplished! Listen, Mantuan!" Fond essay!

Piece after piece that armor broke away,
Because perceptions whole, like that he sought
To clothe, reject so pure a work of thought
As language : thought may take perception's place
But hardly co-exist in any case,
Being its mere presentment — of the whole
By parts, the simultaneous and the sole
By the successive and the many. Lacks
The crowd perception? painfully it tacks
Thought to thought, which Sordello, needing such,
Has rent perception into: it's to clutch
And reconstruct — his office to diffuse,
Destroy: as hard, then, to obtain a Muse
As to become Apollo. "For the rest,
Even if some wondrous vehicle expressed
The whole dream, what import-unsee in me
So to express it, who myself can be

And I with the old praise — far go, fare worse!"

A few adhering rivets loosed, upsprings
The angel, sparkles off his mail, which rings
Whirled from each delicate limb it warps,
So might Apollo from the sudden corpse
Of Hyacinth have cast his luckless quots,
He set to celebrating the exploits
Of Montfort o'er the Mountains.

Then came
The world's revenge: their pleasure, now his aim
Merely, — what was it? "Not to play the fool
So much as learn our lesson in your school!"

Replied the world. He found that, every time
He gained applause by any ballad-lyre,
His auditory recognized no jot
As he intended, and, mistaking not
Him for his meanest hero, n'er was dume
Sufficient to believe him—all, at once.
His will... conceive it caring for his will!
— Mantuans, the main of them, admiring still
It as a mere singer, ugly, stunted, weak,
Had Montfort at completely (so to speak)
His fingers' ends; while past the praise-tide swep't
To Montfort, either's share distinctly kept:
The true need for true merit — his abates
What is the world's recognition worth? The Mantuans, after all, that he should care
About their recognition, ay or no?
In spite of the convention months ago,
Why blink the truth? was not he forced to help

This same ungrateful audience, every whelp
Of Naddeo's litter, make them pass for peers
With the bright band of old Goito's years,
As erst he toiled for flower or tree? Why, there

Sat Palma! Adelaide's funerary hair
Embellished the next corner. Ay, he strewed
A fairy dust upon that multitude,
Although he feigned to take them by them- selves;
His giants dignified those puny elves,
Sublime their faint applause. In short, he found Himself still footing a delusive round,
Remote as ever from the self-display
He meant to compass, hampered every way
By what he hoped assistance. Wherefore then Continue, make believe to find in men
A use he found not?

Weeks, months, years went by,
And lo, Sordello vanished utterly,
Sundered in twain; each spectral part at strife
With each: one jarred against another life;

As pitiful, forsooth, beside the prize
To drop on him some no-time and acquit
His constant faith the Poet-half's to wit —
That waiving any compromise between
No joy and all joy kept the hunger keen
Beyond most methods — of incurring scoff
From the Man-portion — not to be put off
With self-reflections by the Poet's scheme,
Though 'er so bright. Who sauntered forth

Immeasurable gifts, astounding claims.
But just his sorry self? who yet might be

Fondling, in turn of fancy, verse: the Art
Developing his soul a thousand ways —
Potent, by its assistance, to amaze
The multitude with majesties, convince.
Each sort of nature, that the nature's prince
Accosted it. Language, the makeshift, grew
Into a braves't of expedients, too;
Apollo, seemed it now, perverse had thrown
Quiver and bow away, the lyre alone
Sufficed. While, out of dream, his day's work went
To tune a crazy tenon or servent —
So hampered him the Man-part, thrust to judge
Between the hard and the bard's audience, grudgingly
A minute's toil that missed its due reward!

As well you hid That sense of power, you have! True bards believe All able to achieve what they achieve — That is, just nothing — in one point aside Profounder simpletons than all beside. Oh, ay! The knowledge that you are a bard Must constitute your prime, your sole reward!"

So prattled Naddo, bust of the tribe Of genius-haunted — how shall I describe What grubs or nips or rubs or rips — your louse For love, your flea for hate, magnanimous, Their criticisms Picking a sustenance from wear and give small comfort: By implements it sedulous employs To undertake, lay down, mete out, o'er-tosie Sordello? Fifty creepers to elude At once! They settled stanchly; shame ensued; Behold the monarch of mankind succumb To the last fool who turned him round his thumb, As Naddo styled it! 'T was not worth oppose The matter of a moment, gainsay those He aimed at getting rid of; better think Their thoughts and speak their speech, secure to sink Back expeditiously to his safe place, And chew the cud — what he and what his race Were really, each of them. Yet even this Conformity was partial. He would miss Some point, brought into contact with them ere Assured in what small segment of the sphere Of his existence they attended him; Whence blunders, falsehoods rectified — a grim List — slur it over! How? If dreams were tried, His will swayed sickly from side to side, Nor merely neutralised his waking act But tended even in fancy to distract The intermediate will, the choice of means, He lost the art of dreaming; Mantuan scenes Supplied a saron, say, he sang before, Handsomely reckless, full to running o'er Of gallantries; 'abjure the soul, content With body, thence-for!' Scarcely had he bent Himself in dream thus low, when matter fast Cried out, he found, for spirit to contrast And task it duly; by advances slight, The simple stuff becoming composite. Count Lori grew Apollo — best recall His face, that one. Then would some rough peasant, Paul, Like those old Ecelin confers with, glance His gay apparel o'er; that countenance Gathered his shattered fancies into one, And, body clean abolished, soul alone Sufficed the gray Panician; by and by, And his To balance the ethereality, own degradation was complete. From Adelaide. Missing the mother-bee, Her mountain-hive Romano swarmed; at once A rustle-forth of daughters and of sons Blackened the valley. "I am sick too, old, Half-crazed I think; what good's the Kaiser's gold To such an one? God help me! for I catch My children's greedy sparkling eyes at watch — 'He bears that double breastplate on,' they say, 'So many minutes less than yesterday!" Beside, Monk Hilary is on his knees, Now, sworn to kneel and pray till God shall please Exact a punishment for many things You know, and some you never knew; which brings To memory, Azzo's sister Beatrich And Richard's Giglia are my Alberic's And Ecelin's betrothed; the Count himself Must get my Palma: Ghibellin and Guelf Mean to embrace each other." So began Adelaide's Romano's mission to his fighting death: man, what hap — Taurello — on the Tuscan's death, pensAT: away With Friedrich sworn to sail from Naples' bay Next month for Syria. Never thunder-clap Out of Vesuvius' throat, like this mishap Startled him. "That accursed Viencia! I Absent, and she selects this time to die! Ho, fellows, for Viencia!" Half a score Of horses ridden dead, he stood before Romano in his reeking spurs; too late — "Boniface urged me, Este could not wait." The chieftain simmered; "let me die in peace — Forget me! Was it I who craved increase Of rule? Do you and Friedrich plot your worst Against the Father: as you found me first So leave me now. Forgive me! Palma, sure, Is at Goito still. Retain that lure — Only be pacified!"

The country rang With such a piece of news: on every tongue, How Ecelin's great servant, enraged off, Had done a lord's day's service so, caught duff The green and yellow, and recover breath At Mantua, whither, — since Râuide's death, The girlish slip of a Sicilian bride From Otho's house, he carried to reside At Mantua till the Ferrarese should pile A structure worthy her imperial style, The gardens raise, the statues there enshrine, She never lived to see — although his line Was ancient in her archives and she took A pride in him, that city, nor forsook Her child when he forsook himself and spent A prowess on Romano surely meant For his own growth — whither he never resorts If wholly satisfied to trust reports With Ecelin, So, forward in a race Were shows to greet him. "Take a friend's advice," Quoth Naddo to Sordello, "nor be rash Because your rivals nothing can abash Some folks! demn that we pronounced you best To sound the great man's welcome; 'tis a test, Remember! Strojavacca looks asquit,

The soldier, and he cannot choose but sing:
So, a last shift, quits Mantua—slow, alone:
Out of that aching brain, a very stone,
Song must be struck. What occupies that front?

Just how he was more awkward than his wont
The night before, when Naddo, who had seen
Taurello on his progress, praised the men
For dignity no crosses could affect—
Such was a joy, and might not he detect
A satisfaction if established joys
Were proved imposture? Poetry annoys
Its utmost: wherefore fret? Verses may come
Or keep away! And thus he wand'red, dumb
Till evening, when he paused, thoroughly spent,
On a blind hill-top; down the gorge he went,
Yielding himself up as to an embrace.
The moon came out; like features of a face,
A querulous fraternity of panes,
Sad blackthorn clumps, leafless and grovelling vines
Also came out, made gradually up.
The picture; 'twas Goito's mountain-cup

To wear his soul away in discontent,
Brooding on fortune's malice. Heart and brain
Swelled; he expanded to himself again,
As some thin seedling spice-tree starved and trail,
Pushing between cat's head and ibis' tail
Crusted into the porphyry pavement smooth,
Suffered remain just as it sprung, to soothe
The Soldier's pining daughter, never yet
Well in her chilly green-glazed minaret,—
When rooted up, the sunny day she died,
And flung into the common court beside
Its parent tree. Come home, Sordello! Soon
Was he low muttering, beneath the moon,
Of sorrow saved, of quiet evermore,
Since from the purpose, he maintained before,
Only resulted wailing and hot tears.

Sees but Ah, the slim castle! dwindled of failure in late years, all done
But more mysterious; gone to ruin since, — trails
Of vine through every loop-hole. Naught avails
The night as, torch in hand, he must explore
The maple chamber: did I say, its floor
Was made of intersecting cedar beams?
Worn now with gaps so large, there blew cold streams
Of air quite from the dungeon; lay your ear
Close and 'tis like, one after one, you hear
In the blind darkness water drop. The nests
And nooks retain their long ranged vesture

Empty and smelling of the iris root
The Tuscan grated o'er them to recruit
Her wasted wits. Palm was gone that day,
Said the remaining women. Last, he lay
Beside the Carian group reserved and still.
The Body, the Machine for Acting Will,
Had been at the commencement proved unfit;
That for Demonstrating, Reflecting it,
Mankind—no fitter: was the Will Itself
In fault?

His forehead pressed the moonlit shelf

Then, raising it, he thought, with a long smile,

Next day, no poet! "Wherefore?" asked
Taurello, when the dance of Jongleurs, masked
As devils, ended; "don't a song come next?"
The master of the pageant looked perplexed
Till Naddo's whisper came to his relief.
"His Highness knew what poets were; in brief.
Had not the tetchy race prescriptive right
To peevishness, caprice? or, call it spite,
One must receive their nature in its length
And breadth, expect the weakness with the strength!"

-- So phrasing, till, his stock of phrases spent.
The easy-natured soldier smiled assent.
Settled his partly person, smoothed his chin,
And nodded that the bull-haunt might begin.

BOOK THE THIRD

And the font took them: let our laurels lie!
Braid moonflower now with mystic trifoly
Because once more Goito gets, once more,
Sordello to itself! A dream is o'er,
And the suspended life begins anew;
Quiet those throbbing temples, then, subdue
Nature That cheek's distortion! Nature's may strict embrace, triump: Putting aside the past, shall soon therefore efficac
Its print as well—factitious humors grown
Over the true—loves, hatreds not his own—
And turn him pure as some forgotten vest
Woven of painted byssus, silkiest
Tufting the Tyrrhene whelk's pearl-sheeted lip,
Left walter where a trireme let it slip
I' the sea, and vexed a satrap; so the stain
O' the world forsakes Sordello, with its pain.
Its pleasure: how the furt loosening escapes.
Cloud after cloud! Mantua's familiar shapes
Die, fair and foul div. fading as they fit.
Men, women, and the pathos and the wit,
Wise speech and foolish, deeds to smile or sigh
For, good, bad, seemly or ignoble, die.
The last face glances through the eglantines.
The last voice murmurs, 'twixt the blossomed vines.

Of Men, of that machine supplied by thought
To compass self-perception with, he sought
By forcing half himself—an insane pulse
Of a god's blood, on clay it could convulse.

Never transmute—on human sights and sounds,
To watch the other half; irksome boudnary
It ebbs from to its source, a fountain sealed.

Fore'er—Better sure be unrevealed
Than part revealed: Sordello well or ill
Is finished: then what further use of Will Point in the prime idea not realized.

An oversight? inordinately prized,
No less, and pampered with enough of each
Delight to prove the whole above its reach.

'To need become all natures, yet retain
The law of my own nature—to remain
Myself, yet yearn... as if that chestnut, think,
Should yearn for this first larch-bloom crisp and pink.

Or those pale fragrant tears where zeephyrs in March wounds along the fretted pine-tree branch!

Will and the means to show will, great and small,
Material, spiritual,—abjure them all
Save any so distinct, they may be left.

Just as I first was fashioned would I be!

Nor, moon, is it Apollo now, but me
For her Thou visitest to comfort and then
'alone, then—Swim thou into my heart, and there
Again, since I possess thee!—nay, thus shunt mine eyes
And know, quite know, by this heart's fall and rise
When thou dost bury thee in clouds, and when Outstandest: wherefore practise upon men
To make that plainer to myself?"—Slide here

Over a sweet and solitary year
Wasted; or simply notice change in him—
How eyes, once with exploring bright, grew dim
And satiate with receiving. Some distress
Was caused, too, by a sort of consciousness
Under the imbecility;—naught kept
That down; he slept, but was aware he slept,
So, frustrated: as who brainick made pact
First with the overhanging cataract
To deafen him, yet still distinguished plain
His own blood's measured clicking at his brain.

To finish. One declining Autumn day
Few birds about the heaven chill and gray,
No wind that cared trouble the tacit woods—
He sauntered home complacently, their moods
According, his and nature's. Every spark
Was found Of Mantua life was trodden out; so
And is lost. dark
The embers, that the Troubadour, who sung
Hundreds of songs, forgot, its trick his tongue.
Its craft his brain, how either brought to pass
Singing at all: that faculty might class
With any of Apollo's now. The year
Began to find its early promise seen
As well. Thus beauty vanishes; thus stone
Outlingers flesh: nature's and his youth gone,
They left the world to you, and wished you joy,
When, stopping his benevolent employ,
A pressage shuddered through the welling; harsh
The earth's remonstrance followed. "I was the marsh
Gone of a sudden. Minicio, in its place,
Laughed, a broad water, in next morning's face,
And, where the mists broke up immense and white
I the steady wind, burned like a spilth of light
Out of the crashing of a myriad stars.
And here was nature, bound by the same bars
Of fate with him!"

Must perish once and perish utterly.
Not any strollings now at even-close
Down the field-path, Sordello! by thorn-rows
Alive with lamp-lies, swimming spots of fire
And d.e., outlining the black eypress's spire
She waits you at, Elys, who heard you first
Woo her, the snow-month through, but ere she durst

Her eyes were on the ground; it is July, strong
Now; and because white dust-clouds overwhelm
The woodside, here or by the village elm
That holds the moon, she meets you, somewhat pale.

But letting you lift up her coarse flax veil
And whisper: the damp little hand in yours
Of love, heart's love, your heart's love that endures
Till death. Tush! No mad mixing with the rout

Of haggard rubials wandering about
The hot torchlit wine-scented island-house
Where Friedrich holds his wickedest carouse.
Parading, to the gay Palermans.

To teach it by a self-revelation, deemed Life's very use, so long! Whate'er seemed Progress to that, was pleasure; aught that

My reaching it — no pleasure. I have laid
The ladder down; I climb not; still aloft
The platform stretches! Blisses strong and Never of what they promised could I get

Over-poetical for poetry.
Pearl-white, you poets liken Palma's neck;
And yet what spoils an orient like some speck

Themselves within Ferrara, ere, as King
Of Lombardy, he’d glad descend there, wage
Old warfare with the Pontiff, disengage
His barons from the burghers, and restore
The rule of Charlemagne, broken of yore
By Hildebrand.

Sordello sat and Palma: little speech
by obeying
At first in that dim closet, face with Palma: face

Exchanging quick low laughter; now would rush
Word upon word to meet a sudden flush,

Till in burst one of Palma’s retinue ;
"Now, Lady!" gasped he. Then arose the
Two
And leamed into Verona’s air, dead-still,
A balcony lay black beneath until
One, mind a gush of torches, gray-haired men
Came on it and harangued the people: then
Seal-like that people surging to and fro
Shouted, "Hale forth the carroch — trumpets, ho,
A flourish! Run it in the ancient grooves!
Back from the bell! Hammer — whom behooves May hear the League is up! Peal — learn who list,
Verona means not first of towns break tryst
To-morrow with the League!"

Enough. Now turn —
Over the eastern expressive: discern!
Is any beacon set a-glimmer?

Rang
The air with shouts that overpowered the clang
Of the incessant carroch, even: "Haste —
The candle’s at the gateway! ere it waste.
Each soldier stand beside it, armed to march
With Tiso Sampier through the eastern arch!"
Ferrara’s succored, Palma!

Once again
They sat together; some strange thing in train
To say; so difficult was Palma’s place
In taking, with a way fastidious grace
Like the bird’s flutter ere it fix and feed.
But when she felt she held her friend indeed
Safe, she threw back her curls, began implant

The blood of Ecelin. Nor he surprised
If, while Sordello fain had captive led Nature, in dream was Palma subjected
To some out-soul, which dawned not though she pined
Delaying till its advent, heart and mind,
Their life. "How dared I let expand the force
Within me, till some out-soul, whose resource
It grew for, should direct it?" Every law
Of life, its every fitness, every flaw,
Must One determine whose corporeal shape
Would be no other than the prime escape
And revelation to me of a Will
Orb-like o’ershadowed and inscrutable
Above, save at the point which, I should know,
Shone that myself, my powers, might overflow
So far, so much; as now it signified
Which earthly shape it henceforth chose my guide,
Whose mortal lip selected to declare
Its oracles, what fleshly garb would wear
— The first of intimations, whom to love;
The next, how love him. Seemed that orb,
above
The castle-covert and the mountain-close.
Slow in appearing, — if beneath it rose
Cravings, aversions. — did our green precinct
Take pride in me, at unawares distinct
With this or that endowment, — how, repressed
At once, such jetting power shrank to the rest!
Was I to have a chance touch spill me, leave
My spirit thence unfitted to receive
The consummating spell? — that spell so near
Moreover! ‘Wants he not the waking year?
His almond-blossoms must the honey yield
By this; to welcome him, fresh ruffles stripe
The thawed ravines; because of him, the wind
Walks like a herald. I shall surely find Him now!"
"And chief, that earnest April morn
Of Richard’s Love-courts, was it time, so worn
A reverse. And white my cheek, so idly my face,
And blood heat,

Strange Ferrara in its drowning flats,
And you and your Taurello yonder! — what's Romano's business there ?
An hour's concern
To cure the inward Chief — induce return
As heartened from those overmeaning eyes,
Wound up to persevere, — his enterprise
Marked out anew, its exigent of wit
Apportioned, — she at liberty to sit
And scheme against the next emergence, I —
To coveet her Taurello-sprite, made fly

He buried it in Adelaide's deep grave,

From the dead past and straight revived it all,
Making me see how first Romano waxed,
Wherefore he waned now, why, if I relaxed
My grasp (even I) would drop a thing effete.
Frayed by itself, unequal to complete
Its course, and counting every step astray
by the intervention way of Salin-
Stable, a Lombard House now — why guerra: start back
Into the very outset of its track?
This patching principle which late allied
Our House with other Houses. — what beside Concerned the apparition, the first Knight
Who followed Conrad hither in such plight
His utmost wealth was summed in his one steed?
For Ecelo, that prowler, was decreed
A task, in the beginning, to be
To him another task can be to us;
But did the weather-beaten thief despair
When first our crystal cincture of warm air,
That binds the Trevisan, — as its spice-belt
(Crusad- rs say) the tract where Jesus dwelt, —
Furtive he pierced, and Este was to face —
Despaired Suponian strength of Lombard
grace?
Tried he at making surer aught made sure,
Maturing what already was nature?
No; his heart prompted Ecelo, 'Confront
Este, inspect yourself. What's nature? Wont.
Discard three-parts your nature, and adopt
Who rem. The rest as an advantage?' Old edied ill

wrought
The man who first grew Podestà by Ecelin, among
The Vicentines, no less than, while there sprung
His palace up in Padua like a threat,
Their noblest spied a grace, unnoticed yet
In Conrad's crew. Thus far the object gained Roman was established — has remained —
For are you not Italian, truly peers
With Este? "Azzo" better soothes our ears
Than "Alberic"? or is this lion's crime
From over-mounts' (this yellow hair of mine)
'So weak a graft on Agnes Este's stock?"
(Thus went he on with something of a mock)
Wherefore recoil, then, from the very fate
Conceded you, refuse to imitate
Your model farther? Este long since left
Being mere Este: as a blade its heft.
Este required the Pope to further him:
And you, the Kaiser — whom your father's whim
Foregoes or, better, never shall forego
If Palma dare pursue what Ecello
Commenced, but Ecello desists from: just
As Adelaide of Susa could intrust
Her donative, — her Fiemont given the Pope,
Her Alpine-pass for him to shut or ope
"Twixt France and Italy, — to the superb
Matilda's perfecting, — so, lest aught eurb
Our Adela: — her great counter-project for Giving her Trentine to the Emperor.
With passage here from Germany, — shall you
Take it, — my slender poddling talent, too!" —
Urged me Taurello with his half-smile.

As Patron of the scattered family
Conveyed me to his Mantua, kept in bruit
Azzo's alliances and Richard's suit
Until, the Kaiser excommunicate,
"Nothing remains," Taurello said, "but wait
Some rash procedure: Palma was the link,
As Agnes' child, between us, and they shrink
And had a From losing Palma: judge if we project for her Your father's method, your inherit-

He. The day I was betrothed to Boniface
At Padua by Taurello's self, took place
The outrage of the Ferrarese: again,
The day I sought Verona with the train
Agreed for — by Taurello's policy
 Conjuring Richard of the fault, since we Were present to annul or to confirm, —
 Richard, whose patience had outstayed its term.
Quitted Verona for the siege.

What glory may engird Sordello's brow
Through this? A month since at Oliero slunk
All that was Ecellin into a monk;
But how could Saltinguerra so forget
His liege of thirty years as grudge even yet
One effort to recover him? He sent Forthwith the tidings of this last event
To Ecelin — declared that he, despite
The recent folly, recognized his right
To order Saltinguerra: 'Should he wring
Its uttermost advantage out, or fling
This chance away? Or were his sons now head
O' the House?" Through me Taurello's mis-
Conviting expedite;
My father's answer will by me return.
Behold! 'For him,' he writes, 'no more concern
With strife than for, his children, with fresh plots
Of Friedrich. Old engagements out he blows
For aye: Taurello shall no more subserv
Nor Ecellin impose." Lest this unnerve
Taurello at this juncture, slack his grip
Of Richard, suffer the occasion slip —
I, in his sons' default who, mating with Este, forsake Romano as the thritt its mainstay for that firmland, sea makes head
Against I stand, Romano, — in their stead
Assume the station they desert, and give
Still, as the Kaiser's representative,

And Palma's fled.
Though no affirmative disturbs the head,
A dying lamp-flame sinks and rises o'er,
Like the aighted planet Polixx wore.
Unf, morn breaking, he resolves to be
Gate-vein of this heart's blood of Lombardy.
Soul of this body — to wield this aggregate
Of souls and bodies, and so conquer fate.
Though he should live — a centre of disgust
Even — apart, core of the outward crust
He vivifies, assimilates. For thus
I bring Sordello to the rapturous

Founded by Gaulish Brunns, legends tell:

A head like the first chamberer's who peered
A-top the Capitol, his face on flame
With triumph, triumphing till Manlius came.

And I awake the flesh
O'er the lagune, being at Venice,
at Venice, Note,
In just such songs as Eglamour (say) wrote
With heart and soul and strength, for he believed
Himself achieving all to be achieved
By singer — in such songs you find alone
Completeness, judge the song and singer one,
And either purpose answered, his in it
Or its in him: while from true works (to wit
Sordello's dream-performances that will Never be more than dreamed) escapes there still
Some proof, the singer's proper life was 'neath
The life his song exhibits, this a sheath
To that; a passion and a knowledge far
Transcending these, majestic as they are,
Smouldered; his lay was but an episode
In the bard's life: which evidence you owed
To some slight weariness, some looking-off
Or start away. The childish skitt or scoff
In Charlemagne,' (his poem, dreamed divine
In every point except one silly line
About the restful daughters) — what may lurk
In that? "My life commenced before this work,"

(So I interpret the significance Of the bard's start aside and look askance) —
"My life continues after: on I fare
With no more stopping, possibly, no care
To note the undermine, the why
And watching, his own
Life sometimes, But, silent, shall I cease to live?
Alas
For you! who sigh, 'When shall it come to pass
We read that story? How will he compress
The future gains, his life's true business,
Into the better lay which — that one flout,
H owe' er inopportune it be, let's out —
Engrosses him already, though professes
To meditate with us eternal rest,
And partnership in all his life has found ?""
'T is but a sailor's promise, weather-bound:
"Strike sail, slip cable, here the bark be moored
For once, the awning stretched, the poles assured!
Noontide above; except the wave's crisp dash.
Or buzz of colibri, or tortoise' splash,
The margin's silent: out with every spoil
Made in our tracking, coil by mighty coil,
This serpent of a river to his head
I' the midst! Admire each treasure, as we spread
The bank, to help us tell our history
Aright: give ear, endeavor to desery
The groves of giant rushes, how they grew
Like demons' endless tresses we sailed through,
What mountains yawned, forests to give us vent
Opened, each doleful side, yet on we went
Till . . . may that beetle (shake your cap) attest
The springing of a land-wind from the West !"
— Wherefore? Ah yes, you frollick it to-day!
To-morrow, and, the pageant moved away
Down to the poorest tent-pole, we and you.
Part company: no other may pursue
Eastward your voyage, be informed what fate intends, if triumph or decline await
The tempter of the everlasting steppe.
I muse this on a ruined palace-step
At Venice: why should I break off, nor sit
Longer upon my step, exhaust the fit
England gave birth to? Who's adorable Enough reclaim a — no Sordello's Will Alack! be queen to me? That Bassinese
Busted among her smoking fruit-boats? These Perhaps from our delicious Asolo
Who twinkle, pigeons o'er the portico
Not prettier, land June lilies into sheaves
To deck the bridge-side chapel, dropping leaves
Because it Soiled by their own loose gold-meal? is pleasant
Ah, beneath to be
The cool arch stoops she, brownest young,
Check! Her wreath
Endures a month — a half month — if I make
A queen of her, continue for her sake
Sordello's story? Nay, that Pavian girl
Splashes with barker legs where a live whirl
In the dead black Giudecca proves sea-weed
Drifting has sucked down three, four, all indeed
Save one pale-red striped, pale-blue turbaned
Post
For gondolas.
You sad dishevelled ghost
That pluck at me and point, are you advised
I breathe? Let stay those girls (e'en her disgraced — Jewels?) the locks that love no crownet like
Their native field-buds and the green wheat-spike.
So fair! — who left this end of June's turmoil,
Shook off, as might a lily its gold soil,
Pomp, save a foolish gem or two, and free
In dream, came join the peasants o'er the seas,
Look they too happy, too tricked out? Confess
There is such niggard stock of happiness
To share, that, do one's uttermost, dear wretch,
One labors intellectually to stretch
Would but
It o'er you so that mother and chil-
suffering humanity
May equitably haunt the sumpter-cloth!
Divide the robe yet farther: be content
With seeing just a score pre-eminent
Through shreds of it, acknowledged happy wights.
Engrossing what should furnish all, by rights!
For, these in evidence, you clearlier claim
A like garb for the rest, — grace all, the same
As these my peasants. I ask youth and strength
And health for each of you, not more — at length
Grown wise, who asked at home that the whole race
Might add the spirit's to the body's grace,
And all be dizzened out as chiefs and bards.
But in this magic weather one discards
Much old requirement. Venice seems a type
Of Life—twixt blue and blue extends, a stripe,
As Life, the somewhat, hangs 'twixt maught and might:
'T is Venice, and 't is Life — as good you ought
To spare me the Piazza's slippery stone
Or keep to the unchoked canals alone,
As hinder Life the evil with the good.
Which make up Living, rightly understood.
Which only, do finish something? Peasants,
'gestigate queens, to tasks
Take them, made happy by whatever like this, means.
Parade them for the common credit, vouch
That a luckless residue, we send to crouch
In corners out of sight, was just as framed
For happiness, its portion might have claimed
As well, and so, obtaining joy, had stalked
Fastuous as any! — such my project, balked
Already; I hardly venture to adjust
The first rag, when you find me. To mistrust
Me! — nor unreasonably. You, no doubt,
Have the true knack of tiring suitors out
With those thin lips on trouble, lashless eyes
Invertebrately tear-shot — there, be wise,
Mistress of mine, there, there, as if I meant
You insult! — shall your friend (not slave) be shent
For speaking home? Beside, care-bit erased
Broken-up beautees ever took my taste
Supremely; and I love you more, far more Than her I looked should foot Life's temple-floor.
Years ago, leagues at distance, when and where
A whisper came, "Let others seek! — thy care
And doubled compensations. Should be thy mistress, and into one them,
face
The many faces crowd?' " Ah, had I, judge,
Or no, your secret? Rough apparel — grudge
All ornaments save tag or tassel worn
To hint we are not thoroughly forlorn —
Sloch bonnet, unloop mantle, careless go
Along (that's said-bit, but it must be so)
Through Venice, sing now and now glance aside,
Aught desultory or undignified.
Then, ravishingest lady, will you pass
Or not each formidable group, the mass
Before the Basilic that last gone by,
God's great day of the Corpus Domini.
And, wistfully foregoing proper men,
Come timid up to me for alms? And then
The luxury to hesitate, feign do
Some unexampled grace! — when, whom but
you
Dare I bestow your own upon? And hear
Further before you say, it is to sneer
I call you ravishing; for I regret
Little that she, whose early foot was set
Forth as she'd plant it on a pedestal.
Now, if the silent city, seems to fail
Toward me — no wrath, only a lip's unrest
To quiet, surcharged eyelids to be pressed
Dry of their tears upon my bosom. Strange Such sad chance should produce in thee such change.
My love! Warped souls and bodies! yet God spoke
Of right-hand, foot and eye — selects our yoke,
Sordello, as your poetship may find
So, sleep upon my shoulder, child, nor mind
Their foolish talk; we'll manage reinstate
Your old worth; ask moreover, when they prate
Of evil men past hope, " Don't each contrive,
Despite the evil you abuse, to live? —
Keeping, each losel, through a maze of lies.
His own conceit of truth? to which he hies
By obscure windings, tortuous, if you will,
But to himself not inaccessible;
He sees truth, and his lies are for the crowd
Who cannot see; some fancied right allowed
His vilest wrong, empowered the losel clutch
One pleasure from a multitude of such As those. Denied him," Then assert, "All who desist men appear

"All men think all men stupider than they,
Since, save themselves, no other comprehends
The complicated scheme to make amends
— Evil, the scheme by which, through Ignorances.
Good labors to exist." A slight advance, —
Merely to find the sickness you die through,
And naught beside! but if one can't eschew
One's portion in the common lot, at least
One can avoid an ignorance increased
Tenfold by dealing out hint after hint
How naught were like dispensing without sin
The water of life — so easy to dispense
Beside, when one has proved the centre whence Commotion's born — could tell you of it all!
— Meant to fasten on my madrigal
Of the mugwort that conceals a dewdrop safe!" —
What, dullard! we and you in smoothing chase
Babes, baldheads, stumbled thus far into Zin
The Horrid, getting neither out nor in,
A hungry sun above us, sands that bung
Our throats, — each homedary fols a tongue.
Each camel churns a sick and frothy chap.

And sonnets on the earliest ass that spoke.

And seeing somewhat of man's state,—has been,
For the worst of us, to say they so have seen;
For the better, what it was they saw; the best

That Plara spent his youth in a grim town
Whose cramped ill-featured streets huddled about
The minister for protection, never out
Of its black belfry's shade and its bells' roar.

Indeed?
Thus far advanced in safety then, proceed!
And having seen too what I saw, he hold

When at some future no-time a brave band
Sees, using what it sees, then shake my hand
In heaven, my brother! Meanwhile where's the hurt
Of keeping the Makers-see on the alert,
At whose defection mortals stare aghast
As though heaven's bounteous windows were slammed fast
Incontinent? Whereas all you, beneath,
Should scowl at, bruse their lips and break their teeth
Who ply the pulleys, for neglecting you:
And therefore have I moulded, made anew
A Man, and give him to be turned and tried,
Be angry with or pleased at.
On your side,
Have ye times, places, actors of your own?

Try them upon Sordello when full-grown,

And then — ah then! If Hercules first parched
His foot in Egypt only to be marched
A sacrifice for Jove with pamp to suit,
What chance have I? The demigod was mute
Till, at the altar, where time out of mind
Such guests became oblations, chaplets twined
His forehead long enough, and he began
Slaving the slayers, nor escaped a man.
Take not affront, my gentle audience! whom
No Hercules shall make his hecatomb,
Believe, nor from his brows your chaplet rend —
That's your kind suffrage, yours, my patron
friend,
Whose great verse blares unintermittent on
Like your own trumpeter at Marathon, —
You who, Plataan and Salamin being scant,
Put up with Erma for a stimulant —
And did well, I acknowledged, as he loomed
Over the midland sea last month, presumed
Long, lay demolished in the blazing West.
At eve, while towards him tilting cloudlets pressed
Like Persian ships at Salamin, Friend, wear
A crest proud as desert while I declare
Had I a flawless ruby fit to wring
Tears of its color from that painted king
Who lost it, I would, for that smile which went
To my heart, flung it in the sea, content,

What if
Wearing your verse in place, an amulet
Brighten, Sovereign against all passion, wear
Who knows? and fret!

My English Eye-bright, if you are not glad
That, as I stopped my task awhile, the sad
Dishevelled form, wherein I put mankind
To come at times and keep my pact in mind.
Renewed me, — hear no crickets in the hedge,
Nor let a glowworm spot the river's edge
At home, and may the summer showers gush
Without a warning from the missel thrust!
So, to our business, now — the fate of such
As find our common nature — overmuch
Despised because restricted and unfit
To bear the burden they impose on it —
Ching when they would discard it; craving strength
To leap from the allotted world, at length
They do not, — flounder on without a term.
Each a god's germ, doomed to remain a germ
In unexpanded infancy, unless . . .
But that's the story — dull enough, confess!
There might be fitter subjects to allure;
Still, neither misconceive my portraiture
Nor undervalue its adornments quaint:
What seems a trifle perchance may prove a saint.
Ponder a story ancient now transit,
Then say if you condemn me or acquit.

Xanthus himself this nephew 't was, they shut
Twist boards and sawed asunder, Polykarz,
Soft Charicle, next year no wheel could warp
To swear by Caesar's fortune, with the rest
Were ranged; through whom the gray disciple pressed,
Busily blessing right and left, just stopped
To put one infant's curls, the hangman eloped
Soon after, reached the portal. On its hinge
The door turns and he enters: what quick twinge
Ruins the smiling mouth, those wide eyes fix
Whereon, why like some spectral candlestick's Branch the disciple's arms? Dead swooned he, woke
Auon, heaved sigh, made shift to gasp, heart broke.

Get thee behind me, Satan! Have I toiled
To no more purpose? Is the gospel failed
Here too, and o'er my son's, my Xanthus' hearth,

Ah, Xanthus, am I to thy roof bennailed?

And you shall hear Sordello's story told.

BOOK THE FOURTH

Meantime Ferrara lay in rufeful case;
The lady-city, for whose sole embrace
Her pair of suitors struggled, felt their arms
A brawny mischief to the fragile charms
They tugged for — one discovering that to

Her tresses twice or thrice about his wrist
Secured a point of vantage — one, how best
He'd parry that by planting in her breast
His elbow spoke — each party too intent upon, with
For noticing how'er the battle went, fered much, The conqueror would but have a corpse to kiss.

"May Boniface be duly damned for this!"
How'd some old Ghibellin, as up he turned,
From the wet heap of rubbish where they burned
His horse, a little skull with dazzling teeth:
"A boon, sweet Christ — let Salguerrera see the
In hell forever, Christ, and let myself
Be there to laugh at him!"—moaned some young Guef
Stumbling upon a shrivelled hand nailed fast
To the charred lintel of the doorway, last
His father stood within to bid him speed.
The thourghoutmers were overrun with weed
—Docks, quickgrass, loathly mallow no man plants.
The stranger, none of its inhabitants
Whichever crept out of doors to taste fresh air of the parties was
And ask the purpose of a splendid victor.
Admitted on a morning; every town
Of the East League was come by envoy down
To treat for Richard’s ransom: here you saw
The Vicenite, here snowly oxen draw
The Paduan carroch, its vermilion cross
On its white field. A-tiptoe o’er the fossé
Looked Legate Montelungo wistfully
After the flock of steeples he might spy
In Este’s time, gone (doubts he) long ago
To mend the ramparts: sure the laggards know
The Pope’s as good as here! They paced the streets
More soberly. At last, “Taurello greets
The League,” announced a pursuivant,—“will match
Its courtesy, and labors to dispatch
At earliest Tito, Friedrich’s Pretor, sent
On pressing matters from his post at Trent,
With Maimard Count of Tyrol,—simply waits
Their going to receive the delegates.”
“Tito!” Our delegates exchanged a glance.
And, keeping the main way, admired askance
The lazy enclaves of outlandish birth,
Couched like a king each on its bank of earth—
Arbalist, manzanel and catapult;
While stationed by, as waiting a result.
Lean silent gangs of mercenaries ceased
Working to watch the strangers. “This, at least,
Were better spared; he scarce presumés gainsay
The League’s decision! Get our friend away
And profit for the future: how else teach
Fools by their errors to stray within claw’s reach
The Salincirras’s final gape he blown?
Those mere convulsive scratches find the bone,
Who bade him bloody the spent osprey’s nare?”
The carroches halted in the public square.
Pomons of every blazon once a-faint.
Men prattled, freerid that the crested gaunt
How
White ostrich with a horse-shoe in Guef’s hearken
Critics was missing, and whoever chose
Guef’s work
“Eccelin” boldly out: so,—“Eccelin
Needed his wife to swallow half the sin
And sickness by himself: the devil’s whelp,
He styles his son, dwindles away, no help
From conserves, your fine triple-carded froth
Of virgin’s blood, your Venise piper-broth—
Eh! Jubilante!1 "—“Peace! no little word
You utter here that’s not distinctly heard
Up at Otiero: he was absent sick
When we besieged Bassano—who, i’ the thick
O’ the work, perceived the progress Azzo made,
Like Eccelin, through his witch Adelaide?

She managed it so well that, night by night,
At their bed-foot stood up a soldier-sprite,
First fresh, pale by-and-by without a wound,
And, when it came with eyes filmed as in swoond,
They knew the place was taken.”—“Ominous
That Ghibellins should get what cautious
Old Redbeard sought from Azzo’s sire to wrench
Vainly; Saint George contrived his town a trench
O’ the marshes, an impermeable bar.”

“—Young Eccelin is meant the tutelar
Of Padua, rather; veins embrace upon
His hand like Brenta and Bacciugion.
What now?—“The founts! God’s bread, touch not a plank!
A crawling hell of carrion—every rank
As usual—Choke full!—found out just now to ally ener—Cino’s cost—
getic in
The same who gave Taurello up for this case,
lost.
And, making no account of fortune’s freaks,
Refused to budge from Padua then, but sneaks
Back now with Concorezza—’trust! they drag
Their carroch to Sun Vitale, plant the flag
On his own palace, so adroitly razed
He knew it not; a sort of Guef folk gazed
And laughed apart; Cino disliked their air—
Must pluck up spirit, show he does not care—
Seats himself on the tank’s edge—will begin
To hum, za, za, Cavailer Eccelin—
A silence; he gets warmer, clinks to chime,
Now both feet plough the ground, deeper each time,
At last, za, za, and up with a fierce kick
Comes his own mother’s face caught by the thick
Gray hair about his spur!”

Which means, they lift
The covering, Salincirra made a shift
To stretch upon the truth; as well avoid
Further disclosures; leave them thus employed.
Our dropping Autumn morning clears space,
And poor Ferrara puts a softened face
On her misfortunes. Let us scale this tall
Huge foursquare line of red brick garden-wall
Eastbound within by trees of every How, passing sort
On three sides, slender, spreading, through long and short;
the rare
garden,
Each grew as it contrived, the poplar
rammed,
The fig-tree reared itself,—but stark and erumpd.
Made fools of, like tamed lions: whence, on the edge.
Running wix trunk and trunk to smooth one ledge
Of shade, were shrubs inserted, warp and woof,
Which smoothed up that variance. Scale the roof
Of solid tops, and o’er the slope you slide
Down to a grassy space level and wide,
Here and there dotted with a tree, but trees
Of rarer leaf, each foreigner at ease,
Set by itself; and in the centre spreads
Borne upon three uneasy leopards’ heads,
A layer, broad and shallow, one bright spirite
Of water luminous in. The walls begirt
With trees leave off on either hand; pursue
Your path along a wondrous avenue
Those walls about on, heaped of gleamy stone,
With aloes keening everywhere, gray-grown
From many a Moorish summer: how they wind
Out of the tissues! likelier to bind
The building into these rusted crumps which drop
Already in the eating sunshine. Stop,
You fleeting shapes above there! Ah, the pride
Or else despair of the whole country-side!
A range of statues, swarming o'er with wasps,
Salmon.
God, goddess, woman, man, the races
Greek rough-rasps tried for
In crumbling Naples marble — meant a purpose,
to look
Like those Messina marbles Constantia took Delight in, or Taurello's self conveyed
To Mantua for his mistress, Adelaide,
A certain font with carvatures
Since cloistered at Goito; only, these
Are up and doing, not abashed, a troop
Able to right themselves — who see you, stoop
Their arms o'er the instant after you! Unplucked by this or that, you pass; for they conduct
To terrace raised on terrace, and, between,
Creatures of brighter mould and braver mien
Than any yet, the choicest of the Isle.
No doubt. Here, left a sullen breathing-while,
Up-gathered on himself the Figh-ter stood
For his last fight, and, wiping treacherous
blood
Out of the eyelids just held ope beneath
Those shading fingers in their iron sheath,
Steadied his strengths amid the buzz and stir
Of the dusky hideous amphitheatre
At the announcement of his over-match
To wind the day's diversion up, dispatch
The pertinacious Gaul; while, limbs one heap,
The Slave, no breath in her round mouth, watched leap
Dart after dart forth, as her hero's car
Close dizzyly the solid of the war
— Let coil about his knees for pride in him.
We reach the farthest terrace, and the grim
San Pietro Palace stops us.
Such the state
Of Salinguerra's plan to enslave
Sicilian marvels, that his girlish wife
Retrude still might lead her ancient life
In her new home: whereat enlarged so much
Neighbors upon the novel princely touch
He took, — who here imprisons Boniface.
Here must the Envoys come to see for grace;
And here, emerging from the labyrinth
Below, Sordello paused beside the plinth
Of the door-pillar.
Sordello
He had really left pouder
Verona for the cornfields (a poor theft seen and famous morass) where Este's camp heard, was made.
The Envoys' march, the Legate's cavalcade
— All had been seen by him, but scarce as when —
Eager for cause to stand aloof from men
At every point save the fantastic tie
Acknowledged in his boyish sophistry,
He made account of such. A crowd, — he meant
To task the whole of it; each part's intent
Concerned him therefore; and, the more he prayed,
The less became Sordello satisfied
With his own figure at the moment. Sought
He respite from his task? Described he might Nestled in the anticipated sight
Of all these heroes upon all delight?
This phalanx, as of myriad points combined,
Whereby he still had imaged the mankind
His youth was passed in dreams of rivalling,
His age — in plans to prove at least such thing
Had been so dreamed, — which now he must impress
With his own will, effect a happiness
By theirs, — supply a body to his soul
Thence, and become eventually whole
With them as he had hoped to be without — Finds in
Made these the mankind he once men no
raved about?
machine
Because a few of them were notable,

sake,
As well
Expect to find Taurello's triple line
Of trees a single and prodigious pine,
Real pines rose here and there; but, close among,
Thrust into and mixed up with pines, a throng
Of shrubs, he saw, — a nameless common sort
Of past in dreams, left out of the report
And hurried into corners, or at best
Admitted to be fancied like the rest.
Reckon that morning's proper chiefs — how few!
And yet the people grew, the people grew,
Grew ever, as it the many there indeed,
More left behind and most who should succeed,
Simply in virtue of their months and eyes,
Petty enjoyments and huge miseries, —
Mingled with, and made veritably great.
Those chiefs; he overlooked not Mainard's state
Nor Concorezzi's station, but instead
Of stopping there, each dwindled to be head
Of infinite and absent Tyrolese
Or Paduans; starting all the more, that these Seemed passive and disposed of, uncared for,
Yet doubtless on the whole (like Eglamor)
Smiling; for if a wealthy man decays
And out of store of robes must wear, all days,
One tattered suit, alike in sun and shade,
'Tis commonly some tarnished gay brocade
Fit for a feast-night's flourish and no more:
Nor otherwise poor Misery from her store
Of looks is fine upgather, keep unfurled
For common wear as she goes through the world,
The faint remainder of some worn-out smile
Meant for a feast-night's service merely. While Crowd upon crowd rose on Sordello thus, — Crows no way interfering to discuss
Much less dispute, life's joys with one employed
In envying them, — or, if they might enjoyed,
Where lingered something indefinable
In every look and tone, the mirth as well
As woe, that fixed at once his estimate
Of the result, their good or bad estate;
But a
Old memories returned with new thing
with effect:
life of its And the new body, ere he could sus-
own, cept,
Cohered, mankind and he were really fused.
The new self seemed impatient to be used
By him, but utterly another way
Than that anticipated: strange to say,
They were too much below him, more in thrall
Than he, the adjunct than the principal.
What booted scattered units? — here a mind
And there, which might repay his own to find,
And stamp, and use? — a few, howe’er august,
If all the rest were groveling in the dust?
No: first a mighty equilibrium, sure,
Should he establish, privilege procure.
For all, the few had long possessed! He felt
An anxious craving still —
While he was occupied with Mantuan chants, Befuddled him think of men, and take their wants,
Such as he now distinguished every side,
As his own want which might be satisfied, —
And, after that, think of rare qualities
Of his own soul demanding exercise.
It followed naturally, through no claim
On their part, which made virtue of the aim
At serving them, on his, — that, past retrieve.
He felt now in their toils, theirs, — nor could he Wonder how, in the eagerness to rule,
Impress his will on mankind, he (the fool?)
Had never even entertained the thought
That this last arrangement might be fraught
With incidental good to them as well,
And rights
And that mankind’s delight would inhabit to help to swell ignored by his own. So, if he sighed, as for
him,
Because the merry time of life must fleet,
’T was deeper now, — for could the crowds re-
repeat
Their poor experiences? His hand that shook
Was twice to be deplored. "The Legate, look!
With eyes, like fresh-blown thrush-eggs on a thread,
Paint-blue and loosely floating in his head,
Large tongue, moist open mouth; and this long while
That owner of the idiotic smile
A fault he serves them!"
Is now.
He fortunately saw in time anxious to his fault however, and since the of-repair,
Once prime
Includes the secondary — best accept
Both offices; Taurello, its adept,
Could teach him the preparatory one,
And how to do what he had fancied done
Long previously, ere take the greater task.
How rend the first these people happy? — Ask
The people’s friends: for there must be one
good.
One way to it — the Cause! — he understood
The meaning now of Palma; why the jar
Else, the ado, the trouble wide and far
Of Guelfs and Ghibellins, the Lombard hope
And Rome’s despair? — ’twixt Emperor and Pope
The confused shifting sort of Eden tale —
Hardihood still recurring, still to fail —
That foreign interloping mend, this free
And native overbrooding deity
Yet a dire fascination o’er the palms
The Kaiser ruined, troubling even the calms

Of paradise — or, on the other hand,
Since he the Pontiff, as the Kaisers under-prehends its one snake-like cursed of God to love
full extent, the ground,
Whose heavy length breaks in the noon profound
Some saving tree — which needs the Kaiser, dressed
As the dislodging angel of that pest,
Yet than:— that pest bedrooped, that head, full
fold,
With corrosive dower of dyes. "Behold
The scene, so to speak, and master-spring
Of the contest! — which of the two Powers shall bring
Men good — perchance the most good — ay, it
may
Be that! — the question, which best knows the way."

And hereupon Count Mainard strutted past
Out of San Pietro; never seemed the last
Of archers, slingers: and our friend began
To recollect strange modes of serving man,
Arbalist, catapult, brake, manganel.
And more." The way of theirs may, — who can tell? —
Need perfecting," said he: "let all be solved
At once! Taurello ’tis, the task devolved
On late — confront Taurello!"

And at last
He did confront him. Scarcely an hour had past
When forth Sordello came, older by years
Than at his entry. Unexampled tears
Oppressed him, and he staggered off, blind, mute
And deaf, like some fresh-mutilated brute,
Into Ferrara — not the empty town
That morning witnessed: he went up and down
Streets whence the veil had been stripped by shred,
So that, in place ofuddling with their dead
Indoors, to answer Salingerra’s ends,
Townstolk make shift to crawl forth, sit like friends
With any one. A woman gave him choice
Of her two daughters, the infantile voice
Of the dimpled knee, for half a chain, his troat
Was clasped with; but an archer knew the coup.
Its blue eyes and eight lilies. bade beware
One dogging him in concert with the pair
Though thrumming on the sleeve that hid his knife.

Night set in early, autumn dews were rife.
They kindled great fires while the Leaguers’ mass
Began at every carrock — he must pass
Between the kneading people. Presently
The carrock of Verona caught his eye
With purple trappings; silently he bent
Over its fire, when voices violent
Began. "Affirm not whom the youth was like
That struck me from the porch; I did not strike
Again: I too have chestnut hair; my kin
And would Hate Azzo and stand up for Ece-tain have "helped. Here, minstrel, drive bad thoughts some way, away! Sing! Take My glove for guerdon!" And for that man’s sake
He turned: "A song of Eglamor!" — scarce
He turned:
When, "Our Sordello's rather!"—all exclaimed:
"Is not Sordello famonest for rhyme?"
He had been happy to deny, this time,
Profess as heretofofe the acheing head
And failing heart,—suspect that in his stead
Some true Apollo had the charge of them,
Was champion to reward or to condemn,
So his intolerable risk might shift
Or share itself; but Nadde's precious gift
Of gifts, he owned, he cared! At the close
"I made that," said he to a youth who rose
As if to hear: 'twas Palma through the band
Conducted him in silence by her hand.

Back now for Saltingnerra. Tito of Trent
Gave place to Palma and her friend; who went
In turn at Montelungo's visit — one
After the other were they come and gone, —
These spokesman for the Kaiser and the Pope,
This incarnation of the People's hope,
Sordello, — all the say of each was said;
And Saltingnerra sat, himself instead.
Or these to talk with, langued musing yet,
'T was a dream vast presence-chamber roughly set
In order for the morning's use; full face,
The Kaiser's ominous sign-mark had first place,
The crowned grim twy-necked eagle, coarsely-blacked
With ochre on the naked wall; nor lacked
Romano's green and yellow either side;
But the new token Tito brought had tried
The Legate's patience — May, if Palma knew
What Saltingnerra almost meant to do
Until the sight of her restored his lip
A certain half-smile, three months' chieftainship
Had banished! Afterward, the Legate found No change in him, nor asked what baffle he wound
And unwound carelessly. Now sat the Chief
But Saltingnerra is silent as when our couple left, whose brief
Encounter wrought so opportune ef-occupied; —
In thoughts he summoned not, nor would reject,
Though time 'twas now if ever, to pause — fix
On any sort of ending: wiles and tricks
Exhausted, judge! his charge, the crazy town.
Just managed to be hindered crashing down
His last sound troops ranged — care observed to post
His best of the maimed soldiers innermost
So much was plain enough, but somehow struck
Him not before. And now with this strange luck
Of Tito's news, rewarding bright address
So well, what thought he of? — how the success
With Friedrich's rescript there would either lsh
Old Ecelin's scarples, bring the manly flush
To his young son's white cheek, or, last, exempt
Himself from telling what there was to tempt? —
No: that this minstrel was Romano's last Resembling Sordello minus the Sor-dello monosyllables —
The whole! — that minstrel's thirty thing else —
years just spent
In doing naught, their notablest event
This morning's journey hither, as I told —
Who yet was lean, outworn and really old,
A stammering awkward man that scarce dared raise
His eye before the magisterial gaze
And Saltingnerra with his tears and hopes
Of sixty years, his Emperors and Popes,
Cares and contrivances, yet, you would say.
'T was a youth nonchlatantly looked away
Through the embrasure northward 'peth the sick
Expostulating trees — so agile, quick How he! And graceful turned the head on the was made — broad chest in body Encaised in pliant steel, his constant and spirit, vest,
Whence split the sun off in a spray of fire
Across the room; and, loosened of its tire
Of steel, that head let breathe the comedy brown
Large massive locks discolored as if a crown
Enchased them, so frayed the basnet where
A sharp white line divided clean the hair;
Glossy above, glossy below, it swept Curling fine about a brow thus kept calm, laid coat upon coat, marble and sound:
This was the mystic mark the Tuscan found,
Mused of, turned over books about. Square-
aced,
No lion more; two vivid eyes, encaised
In hollows filled with many a shade and streak
Setting from the bold nose and bearded cheek.
Nor might the half-smile reach them that deformed
A lip supremely perfect else — unwarmed,
Unwidened, less or more; indifferent
Whether on trees or men his thoughts were bent.
Thoughts rarely, after all, in trim and train
As now a period was fulfilled again:
Of such, a series made his life, compressed
In each, one story serving for the rest —
And what — how his life-streams rolling arrived had been at last his career
At the barrier, whence, were it one overpast.
They would emerge, a river to the end, —
Gathered themselves up, paused, bade fate be-
friend,
Took the leap, hung a minute at the height.
Then fell back to oblivion infinite:
Therefore he smiled. Beyond stretched garden-grounds
Where late the adversary, breaking bounds,
Had gained him an occasion. That above,
That eagle, testified he could improve
Effectually. The Kaiser's symbol lay
Beside his rescript, a new budge by way
Of baldric; while, — another thing that marred
Alike emprise, achievement and reward, —
Ecelin's massive was conspicuous too.

What past life did those flying thoughts pursue?
As his, few names in Mantua half so old;
But at Ferrara, where his sires enrolled
It latterly, the Adelard sparse
No pains to rival them: both factions shared
Ferrara, so that, counted out, 'twould yield
A product very like the city's shield.
Half black and white, or Ghisellin and Guelf
As after Salingueria styled himself
And Este, who, till Marchesalla died,
(Last of the Adeladi) — never tried
His fortune there; with Marchesalla's child
Would pass — could Blacks and Whites be recon-

Aided,
And young Tarrello wed Linnetta — wealth
And sway to a sole grasp, Each treat by stealth
Already: when the Guelhs, the Ravenesse
Arrive, assault the Pietro quarter, seize Linnetta, and are gone! Men's first dismay
Abated somewhat, hurries down, to lay
The after indication, Boniface,
This Richard's father. "Learn the full disgrace
Averted, ere you blame us Guelhs, who rate
Your Salin'gueria, your sole potentate
That might have been, 'mongst Este's valvases

Ay, Azzo's — who, not privy to, abhors
Our step; but we were zealous." Azzo's then
To do with! Straight a meeting of old men:
"Old Salin'gueria dead, his heir a boy,
What if we change our ruler and decoy
The Lombard Eagle of the azure sphere
With Italy to build in, fix him here,
Settle the city's troubles in a trice?
For private wrong, let public good suffice!"
The original, in line, young Salin'gueria's staunch-

Talied of the townsmen making him
his fortunes,
Gave him a goshawk, and affirmed there was Rare sport, one morning, over the green grass
A mile or so. He sauntered through the plain,
Was restless, fell to thinking, turned again
In time for Azzo's entry with the bride;
Count Boniface rode smirking at their side;
"She brings him half Ferrara," whispers flew,
"And all Ancona! If the stripping knew!"
Anon the stripping was in Sicily
Where Heinrich ruled in right of Constance; he
Was gracious nor his guest impeded;
Each other and the others. So it fell,
One Spring, when Azzo, thoroughly at ease,
Had near forgotten by what precise degrees
He crept at first to such a downy seat,
The Count trudged over in a special heat
To bid him of God's love dislodge from each
Of Salin'gueria's palaces, — a breach
Might yawn else, not so readily to shut,
For who was just arrived at Mantua but
The younger, sword on thigh and tuft on chin,
Which he was in the Pistoro, and the like! Next news,
 — way to re-

rieve,
Do any of Ferrara's dames befit
His wife of Heinrich's very blood; a band
Of foreigners assemble, understand
Garden-constructing, level and surround,
Build up and bury in. A last news crowned
The consternation: since his infant's birth,
He only waits they end his wondrous girth
Of trees that link San Pietro with Tona,
To visit Mantua. When the Podesta
Ecelin, at Vicenza, called his friend
Tarrello thither, what could be their end
But to restore the Ghibellins' late Head,
The Kaiser helping? He with most to dread

From vengeance and reprisal, Azzo, there
With Boniface beforehand, as aware
Of plots in progress, gave alarm, expelled
Both plotters: but the Gielhs in triumph yelled
Too hastily. The burning and the flight,
And how Tarrello, occupied that night
With Ecelin, lost wife and son, I told:
Now a — Not how he bore the blow, refresh of tained his hold,
family de-

Given friends safe through, left enemy.
O' the fray, and hardly seemed to care at first:
But afterward men heard not constantly
Of Salin'gueria's House so sure to be!
Though Azzo simply gained by the event
A shifting of his plagues — the first, content
To fall behind the second and estrange
So far his nature, suffer such a change
That in Romano sought his wife and child
And for Romano's sake seemed reconceived
To losing individual life, which shrunk
As the other prospered — mortised in his trunk;
Like a dwarf palm which wanton Arabs foil
Of bearing its own proper wine and oil,
By grafting into it the strangler-vine,
Which sacks its heart out, sly and serpentine,
Till forth one vine-palm feathers to the root,
And red drops moisten the insipid fruit.
Once Adelaide set on. — the subtle mate
Of the weak soldier, urged to emulate
The Church's valiant women deed for deed,
And paragon her namesake, win the need
O' the great Matilda, — soon they overbore
The rest of Lombardy, — not as before
By an instinctive truculence, but patched
The Kaiser's strategy until it matched
The Pontiff's, sought old ends by novel means.
"Only, why is it Salin'gueria screens
Himself behind Romano? — him we bade
Enjoy our shine 't the front, not seek the shade!"
 — Asked Heinrich, somewhat of the tardiest
To compare with Otho, a Philip acquiesced
At once in the arrangement; reasoned, plied
His friend with offers of another bride,
A statelier function — fruitlessly: 't was plain
He sank Tarrello through some weakness
Into a second
sed":

Obscure. And Otho, free to judge of personage, both.

Ecelin the unready, harsh and loth,
And this more plausible and facile wight
With every point a-sparkle — chose the right,
Admiring how his predecessors harped
On the wrong man: "thus," quoth he, "wits are warped
By outsides!" Carelessly, meanwhile, his life
Suffered its many turns of peace and strife
In many lands — you hardly could surprise
The man; who shamed Sordello (recognize!) In this as much beside, that, unconcerned
What qualities were natural or earned,
With no ideal of grace, as they came
He took them, singularly well the same —
Speaking the Greek's own language, just because

Your Greek eludes you, leave the least of flaws
In contracts with him; while, since Arab lore
Holds the stars' secret — take one trouble more
And master it! 'Tis done, and now deter
Who may the Tuscan, once Jove trim'd for her,
From Friedrich's path? — Friedrich, whose pilgrimage
The same man puts aside, whom he'll engage
To leave next year John Brienme in the lurch,
Come to Bassano, see Saint Francis' church
And judge of Guido the Bolognian's piece
Which, lend Taurello credit, rivals Greece
— Angels, with aureoles like golden quotes
Pitched home, appraising EceHin's exploits.
For elegance, he strung the angelot,
With the Made's rhymes thereto; for prowess, appropriate:
Tito, last siege, from crest to crupper:— why?
Detail you thus a varied mastery
But to show how Taurello, on the watch
For men, to read their hearts and thereby catch
Their capabilities and purposes,
Displayed himself so far as displayed these:
While our Sordello only cared to know
About men as means whereby he'd show
Himself, and men had much or little worth
According as they kept in or drew forth
That self; the other's choicest instruments
Surmised him shallow.

Meantime, malcontents
Dropped off, town after town grew wiser.

"How
Change the world's face?" asked people; "as
'tis now
It has been, will be ever: very fine
Subjecting things profane to things divine,
In talk! This continemey will fatigue
The vigilance of Este and the League!
The Ghiblins gain on us!" — as it happened.
Old Azzo and old Boniface, entrapped
By Ponte Alto, both in one month's space
Slept at Verona: either left a brace
Of sons — but, three years after, either's pair
Lost Guglielmo and Aldobrand its heir:
Azzo remained and Richard — all the stay
Of Este and Saint Boniface, at bay.

But EceHin, he set
As it were. Then, either EceHin in front.
On or his brain altered — not o' the falling,
proper mould.
For new appliances his old palm-stock
Endured no influx of strange strengths. He'd rock
As in a drunkeness, or chuckle low
As proud of the completeness of his woe.
Then weep real tears: — now make some mad onslaught
On Este, heedless of the lesson taught
So painfully — now cringe for peace, sue peace
At price of past gain, bar of fresh increase
To the fortunés of Romano. Up at last
Rose Este, down Romano sank as fast.
And men remarked these freaks of peace and war
Happened while Salinguerra was afar:
Whence every friend besought him, all in vain,
To use his old adherent's wits again.
Not he! who had advisers in his sons,
Could plott himself, nor needed any one's Advice: "T was Adelaide's remaining stanza
Prevented his destruction root and branch
Forthwith; but when she died, doom fell, for gay
He made alliances, gave lands away
To whom it pleased accept them, and withdrew Forever from the world. Taurello, who
Was summoned to the convent, then refused
A word at the wicket, patience thus abused,
Promptly threw off all like his imbecile
Ally's yoke, and his own frank, foolish smile.
Soon a few movements of the happier sort
Changed matters, put him in men's report
As heretofore; he had to fight, beside,
And that became him ever. So, in pride salinguerra
And flushing of this kind of second youth,
He dealt a good-will blow. Este in truth
Lay prone — and men remembered, somewhat late,
A laughing old outrageous stifled hate
He bore to Este — how it would outbreak
At times spite of disguise, like an earthquake
In sunny weather — as that noted day
When with his hundred friends he tried to slay
Azzo before the Kaiser's face: and how,
On Azzo's calm refusal to allow
A liegeman's challenge, straight he too was calmed:
As if his hate could bear to lie embalmed,
Bricked up, the moody Pharaoh, and survive
All intermediate rumblings, to arrive
At earth's catastrophe — t was Este's crash,
Not Azzo's he demanded, so, no rash
Procedure! Este's true antagonist
Rose out of EceHin: all voices whist.
All eyes were sharpened, wits predicted. He
'T was, leaned in the embrasure absentley,
Why and Amused with his own efforts, now,
how, is let to trace out in
With his steel-sheathed forefinger soldiery.
Friedrich's face:
I' the dust: but as the trees waved sere, his smile
Deepened, and words expressed its thought ere while.

"Ay, fairly housed at last, my old compere
That we should stick together, all the year I kept Vincenza! — How old Boniface,
Old Azzo caught us in its mark-places:
He by that pillar, I at this, — caught each
In mid swing, more than fury of his speech.
Ezizing the rabble on to disavow
Allegiance to their Marquis — Bacchus, how
They boasted! EceHin must turn their drudge,
Nor, if released, will Salinguerra grudge
Paying arrears of tribute due long since —
Bacchus! My man could promise then, nor wince.
The bones-and-muscles! Sound of wind and limb.
Spoke he the set excuse I framed for him:
And now he sits me, sla ering and mate,
Intent on chafing each starved purple foot
Bombed out past aching with the altar slab.
Will no vein thrust there when some monk shall blab

Spitefully to the circle of bald scalps,
Eclen, he said, "Friedrich's affirmed to be our side for the Alps' is a monk — Eh, brother Lactanee, brother now, Anaclet?

Sworn to ahjure the world, its fume and fret,
God's own now? — Drop the dormantary bar,
Endoll the scanty gray serge scapular
Twice 'er the cowl to muffle memories cat! So!
But the midnight whisper turns a shout,
Eyes wink, months open, pulses circulate
In the stone walls: the past, the world you hate
Is with you, ambush, open field — or see
The surging flame — we fire Vicenza — glee!
Follow, let Pilio and Bernardo chafe!
Bring up the Mantuans — through San Biagio — safe!

Ah, the mad people waken? Ah, they writh
And reach us? If they block the gate? No
Can pass — keep back, you Bassanese! The edge,
Use the edge — shear, thrust, hew, melt down the wedge,
Let out that black of those black upturned eyes!
Hell — are they sprinkling fire too? The blood fries
And hisses on your brass gloves as they tear
Those upturned faces choking with despair.
Brave! — Sudder through the reeking gate?
"How now?" — You six had charge of her?" And then the vow
Comes, and the foam spirits, hair's plucked, till one shricks
(I hear it) and you fling — you cannot speak —
Your gold-flowered basnet to a man who haled
The Adelaide he dared scarce view unveiled
This morn, naked across the fire: how crown
The archer that exhausted lays you down
Your infant, smiling at the flame, and dies?
While one, while mine...

"Bacchus! I think there lies
More than one corpse there" (and he paced the room)

"— Another eider somewhere: 't was my doom
Beside, my doom! If Adelaide is dead,
I live the same, this Azzo lives instead
Of that to me, and we pull, any how,

Recoil? that's naught; if the recoiler leaves
His name for me to fight with, no one grieves:
But he must interfere, forsooth, unlock
His cloister to become my stumbling-block

The reverences that subject us! Count

Would climb! Just such a bloated sprawler

I noted in Messina's castle-court
The day I came, when Heinrich asked in sport
If I would pledge my faith to win him back
His right in Lombardy: "for, once bid pack
Maraunders," he continued, 'in my stead
You rule, Taurrello!' and upon this head
Laid the silk glove of Constance — I see her
Teo, mantled head to feet in miniver,
Retrende following!

"I am absolved
From further tell: the oupery devolved
On me, 't was Tito's word: I have to lay
For once my plan, pursue my plan my way,
Prompt nobody, and render an account
Taurrello to Taurrello! Nay, I mount.
To Friedrich: he conceives the post I kept,
— Who did true service, able or inept,
Who's worthy guerdon, Eclen or I.
Me guerdoned, counsel follows: would he vie
With the Pope really? Azzo, Boniface
Compose a right-arm Hohenstaufen's race

How easy 't were to twist, once out of joint,
The socket from the bone: my Azzo's stare
Me went! for I, the idle strap to wear.

Hatching with Azzo superb treachery,
To root my pines up and then poison me.

Beside,
Another life's ordained me: the world's tide
Rolls, and what hope of parting from the press
Of waves, a single wave through weariness
Gently lifted aside, laid upon shore?
My life must be lived out in foam and roar.
No question. Fifty years the province held
Taurrello; troubles raised, and troubles quelled,
He in the midst — who leaves this quaint stone place.
These trees a year or two, then not a trace
Of him! How obtain hold,etter men's tongues

Like this poor minstrel with the foolish songs—
To which, despite our bustle, he is linked?
— Flowers one may tease, that never grow extinct.

Ay, that patch, surely, green as ever, where
I set Her Moorish lentisk, by the stair,
To overawe the aches; and we trod.

These flowers, how call you such? — into the sod:
A stately foreigner — a world of pain
To make it thrive, arrest rough winds — all vain!
It would decline; these would not be destroyed:
And now, where is it? where can you avoid
The flowers? I frighten children twenty years Longer! — which way, too, Eccelin appears
To thwart me, for his son’s besotted youth
Gives promise of the proper tiger-tooth:
They feel it at Vicenza! Fate, fate, fate,
My fine Taurello! Go you, pronunclate
Friedrich’s decree, and here’s shall agrandize
Young Eccelin — your Prefect’s badge! a prize

The suppo... Too precious, certainly.

The question: “How now? Compete most intensely with my old comrade? shuffle from their seats
His children? Paltry dealing! Don’t I know Eccelin? now, I think, and years ago!
What’s changed — the weakness? did not I compound
For that, and undertake to keep him sound
Despite it? Here’s Taurello handkerking
After a boy’s preferment — this plaything
To carry, Bacchus!” And he laughed.

Remark

Why schemes wherein cold-blooded men embark
Prosper, when your enthusiastic sort
Fail: while these last are ever stopping short —
So much they should — so little they can do!
The careless tribe see nothing to pursue
If they desist; meantime their scheme succeeds.

Thoughts were caprices in the course of deeds
Methodic with Taurello; so, he turned,
Enough amused by fancies fairly earned
Of Fate’s horror-struck submitted neck,
And Richard, the cowed braggart, at his beck,
Being consigned to his own petty but immediate toiled
with mere doubt
If he could pacify the League with vengeance.

Conceding Richard; just to this was brought
That interval of vain discursive thought!
As, shall I say, some Ethiop, past pursuit
Of all enslavers, dips a shackled foot
Baptized to the blood, into the drowsy black
Enormous watercourse which guides him back
To his own tribe again, where he is king;
And breathes because he guesses, numbering
The yellow poison-wattles on the pond
Of the first lizard wrested from its couch
Under the shine (whose skin, the while he strips
To cure his nostril with, and festered lips,
And eyeballs bloodshot through the desert-blast)
That he has reached its boundary, at last

May breathe; — thinks o’er enchantments of the South
Sovereign to plague his enemies, their mouth,
Eyes, nails, and hair; but, these enchantments tried
In fancy, puts them soberly aside
For truth, projects a cool return with friends,
The likelihood of winning more amends.
Ere long; thinks that, takes comfort silently,
Then, from the river’s brink, his wrongs and he,
Hugging revenge close to their hearts, are soon
Off-striding for the Mountains of the Moon.

Midnight: the watcher nodded on his spear,
Since clouds dispersing left a passage clear
For any meagre and discolored moon
To venture forth; and such was peering soon
Above the harassed city — her close lanes
Closer, not half so tapering her fanes,
As though she shrank into herself to keep
What little life was saved, more safely. Heap
By heap the watch-fires mouldered, and beside
The blackest spoke Sordello and replied
Palma with none to listen. "'Tis your cause:
Sordello, What makes a Ghibellin? There
Ghibellins should be laws —

'What? — Remember how your youth escaped!
You, Sordello, trust,
To you for manhood, Palma; tell me just
As any child! — there must be laws at work
Explaining this. Assure me, good may lurk
Under the bad, — my multitude has part
In your designs, their welfare is at heart
With Salingnerra, to their interest.
Refer the deeds he dwelt on, — so divest
Our conference of much that scared me. Why
Affect that heartless tone to Tito? I
Esteemed myself, yes, in my inmost mind
This morn, a recreant to my race — mankind
Overlooked till now: why boast my spirit’s force,
— Such force denied its object? why divorce
These, then admire my spirit’s flight the same
As though it bore up, helped some half-forbidding flame
Else quenched in the dead void, to living space?
That orb cast off to chaos and disgrace.
Why vaunt so much my unencumbered dance,
Making a few’s facilities enhance
Its marvel? But I from Taurello, one
Of happier fate, and all I should have done,
He does; the people’s good being paramount
With him, their progress may perhaps account
For his abiding still; whereas you heard
The talk with Tito — the excess preferred
For burning those five hostages, — and broached
By way of blind, as you and I approached,
I do believe.’’

She spoke: then he, "My thought
Plainlier expressed! All to your profit —

Meantime of these, of conquests to achieve
For them, of wretchedness he might relieve
And what

While profiting your party, Azzo, Guelfs, appreciates
Supports a cause: what cause? Do neither.

Guelfs pursue
Their ends by means like yours, or better?"

The Guelfs were proved alike, men weighed
And deed with deed, blaze, blood, with blood
And blaze,
Morn broke: "Once more, Sordello, meet its gaze
Proudly — the people's charge against thee fails
In every point, while either party quails!
These are the busy ones: be silent thou!
Two parties take the world up, and allow
No third, yet have one principle, subsist
By the same injustice; whose shall enlist
With either, ranks with man's inveterate foes.
So there is one less quarrel to compose:
The Guelf, the Ghibellin may be to curse
I have done nothing, but both sides do worse
Than nothing. Nay, to me, forgotten, reft
Of insight, lapped by trees and flowers, was left
The notion of a service — ha? What lur'd
Me here, what mighty aim was I assured
Must move Taurello? What if there remained
A cause, intact, distinct from these, ordained distinct from
One pressed, before them here, a watcher, to suggest
The subject for a ballad: "They must know
The tale of the dead worthy, long ago
Consul of Rome — that's long ago for us,
Minstrels and bowmen, idly squabbling thus
In the world's corner — but too late no doubt,
For the brave time he sought to bring about.
— Not know Crescentius Nomen-tantus?" Then
Roman Crescent-tius
Sordello disavowed it, how they used
Whenever their Superior introduced
A novice to the Brotherhood — ("for I
Was just a brown-sleeve brother, merrily
Appointed too," quoth he, "till Innocent
Bade me relinquish, to my small content,
My wife or my brown sleeves") — some brother
spoke
Freer rights of Crescentius, to revoke
The edict issued, after his demise,
Which blotted fame alike and effigies,
All out except a floating power, a name
Including, tending to produce the same
Great act. Rome, dead, forgotten, lived at least
Within that brain, though to a vulgar priest
And a vile stranger, — two not worth a slave
Of Rome's, Pope John, King Otho, — fortune gave
The rule there: so, Crescentius, haphly dressed
In white, called Roman Consul for a jest,
Taking the people at their word, forth stepped
As upon Brutus' heel, nor ever kept
Rome waiting, — stood erect, and from his brain
Gave Rome out on its ancient place again.
Ay, bad proceed with Brutus’ Rome, Kings styled
Themselves mere citizens of, and, beguiled

Into great thoughts thereby, would choose the gem
Out of a hopfull, spoil their diadem
— The Senate's cypher was so hard to scratch!
He flashes like a phanal, all men catch
The flame, Rome's just accomplished! when returned
Otho, with John, the Consul's step had spurned,
And Hingo Lord of Este, to redress
The wrongs of each. Crescentius in the stress
Of adverse fortune bent. "They crucified
Their Consul in the Forum; and abide
For since such slaves at Rome, that I — (for I
Was once a brown-sleeve brother, merrily
Appointed) — I had option to keep wife
Or keep brown sleeves, and managed in the strife Lose both. A song of Rome!"

And Rome, indeed,
Robed at Goito in fantastic weed,
The Mother-City of his Mantuan days,
Looked an established point of light whence rays
Traversed the world; for, all the clustered homes
Beside of men, seemed bent on being Rome
In their degree; the question was, how each
Should most resemble Rome, clean out of reach.
Nor, of the Two, did either principle
How it, in a "Struggle to change" — but to possess the reintegration of
Guelf Rome or Ghibellin Rome.
Rome,
Let Rome advance!
Rome, as she struck Sordello's ignorance
— How could he doubt one moment? Rome's the Cause!
Rome of the Pandects, all the world's new laws —
Of the Capitol, of Castle Angelo;
New structures, that inordinately glow,
Subdued, brought back to harmony, made ripe
By many a relic of the archetypal
Extant for wonder; every uptilted church
That hoped to leave old temples in the lurch,
Corrected by the Theatre forlorn
That, — as a mundane shell, its world late
born, —
Lay and o’ershadowed it. These hints combined,
Be typified Rome typifies the scheme to put man-
the-tri-kind unf of
One more in full possession of their mankind?
"Let us have Rome again! On me it lights
To build up Rome — on me, the first and last:
For such a future was endured the past!"
And thus, in the gray twilight, forth he sprang
To give his thought consistency among
The very People — let their facts avail
Finish the dream grown from the archer's tale.

BOOK THE FIFTH

Is it the same Sordello in the dusk
As at the dawn? — merely a perished husk
Now, that rose a power fit to build

Ye runagates, and drop thou, arch by arch, Rome?
Yet before they quite disband—a whim—
Study mere shelter, now, for him, and him,
Nay, even the worst,—just house them! Any cave

That scurvy dumb-show and this pageant sheen—
These Romans and our rabble? Use thy wit!

He sat upon the terrace, plucked and threw
The powdery aloes-numps away, saw shift
Rome’s walls, and drop arch after arch, and drift
Mist-like afar those pillars of all stripe,
Mounds of all majesty. ’Thou archtype,

A calm as out of just-quelled noise; nor swerves

Why is it neither chain betrays a chin?
How coalesce the small and great? Alack,
For one thrust onward, fifty such fall back!
Do the peoples coupled there help Gregory

Who means to help must still support the lead
Hildebrand lifted — ‘why hast Thou,’ he groaned, ‘Imposed on me a burden, Paul had no need.
And Moses dropped beneath?’ Much done —
and yet
Doubtless that grandest task God ever set
On man, left much to do: at his arm’s wrench,
Charleseque’s scaffold fell; but pillars bleach
Merely, start back again — perchance have been Taken for buttresses: crash every screen,
Hammer the tenons better, and engage
A gang about your work, for the next age
Or two, of Knowledge, part by Strength and part
By Knowledge! Then, indeed, perchance may start
Sordello on his race — would time divulge
Such secrets! If one step’s awry, one budge
Calls for correction by a step we thought

Got over long since, why, till that is wrought.
No progress! And the scaffold in its turn
Becomes, its service o'er, a thing to spurn.
Meanwhile, if your half-dozen years of life
In store dispose you to forge the strife,
Who takes exception? Only bear in mind,
Ferrara's reached, Goito's left behind:
As you then were, as half yourself,
At least, as I desire you.

His sense, yet write no verses — you have but
To please yourself for law, and once could please
What once appeared yourself, by dreaming these
Rather than doing these, in days gone by.
But all is changed the moment you desire
Mankind as half yourself, — then, — fancy's trade
Ends once and always: how may half evade
The other half? men are found half of you.

Made moody music anguial of woe
From the pine barrier — "What if, now the scene

Draws to a close, yourself have really been Time having — You, plucking purples in Goito's been lost, — moss
choose quick! Like edges of a trabea hot to cross
Your consen-humor or dry aloes-shafts.
For fasces, at Ferrara — he, fate waits,
This very age, her whole inheritance
Of opportunities? Yet you advance
Upon the last! Since talking is your trade,
There's Saltinguerra left you to persuade:
Fail! then"
"No — no — which latest chance secure!"
Leaped up and cried Sordello: "this made sure,
The past were yet redefeasible; its work
Was — help the Guelphs, whom I, how'er it irk,
Thus help!" He shook the foolish aloc-hamn
Out of his doublet, paused, proceeded calm
He takes his first step as a Guelf:
To the appointed presence. The large head
Turned on its socket; "And your spokesman," said
The large voice, "is Escorte's sprout? Few such" — (so finishing a speech no doubt Addressed to Palma, silent at his side)
"— My sober counsels have diversified.
Escorte's son! good: forward as you may,
Our lady's minstrel with so much to say!"
The hesitating sunset floated back,
Rosalies traversed in the wanted track
The chamber, from the lattice o'er the girth
Of pines, to the huge eagle blacked in earth
Opposite, — outlined sudden, spurt to crest,
That solid Saltinguerra, and caressed
Palma's contour; — it was day looped back night's fall;
Sordello had a chance left spit of all.
And much he made of the convincing speech
Meant to compensate for the past and reach
Through his youth's daybreak of unprofit, quite
To his moon's labor, so proceed till night
Leisurely! The great argument to bind
Taurello with the Guelf Cause, body and mind.
— Can the consume rhetoric to that?"
Yet most Sordello's argument dropped flat
Through his accustomed fault of breaking yoke.
Disjoining him who felt from him who spoke.
Was't not a touching incident — so prompt
A rendering the world its just accompl.
Once proved its debtor? Who'd suppose, before
This proof, that he, Goito's god of yore.
At duty's instance could it mean himself
So memorably, dwindle to a Guelf?" Be sure, in such delicious flattery steeped,
His immust self at the out-portion peeped.
Thus occupied; then stole a glance at those Appealed to, curious if her color rose
Or his lip moved, while he discreetly urged
The need of Lombardy becoming purged
At soonest of her harons; the poor part
Abandoned thus, missing the blood at heart
And spirit in brain, unseasonably off
Elsewhere! But, though his speech was worthy scoff.
Good-humored Saltinguerra, famed for taet
And tongue, who, careless of his phrase, never lacked
The right phrase, and harangued Honorius dumb
At his accession,—looked as all fell plumb
To purpose and himself found interest
In every point his new instructor pressed —Left playing with the script's white wax seal
To scrutinize Sordello head and heel.
He means to yield assent sure? No, alas!
All he replied was, "What, it comes to pass
That poesy, sooner than politics,
Makes tawd young hair?" To think such speech could fix Tancredo.

Then a flash of bitter truth:
So fantasies could break and fratter youth
That he had long ago lost earnestness,
But to will to work, lost power to and to do are different:
The need of working! Earth was turned a grave:
No more occasions now, though he should crave
Just one, in right of superhuman toil,
To do what was undone, repair such spoil,
Alter the past—nothing would give the chance!
Not that he was to die; he saw askance
Protract the ignominious years beyond
To dream in—time to hope and time despond.
Remember and forget, be sad, rejoice
As saved a trouble; he might, at his choice,
One way or other, idle life ont. drop
He may
No few smooth verses by the way sleep on the — for prop, bed he has
A thyrsus, these sad people, all made.
Sholnd pick up, and set store by,—far from blame,
Plant o'er his hearse, convinced his better part
Survived him. "Rather ten men out the heart
O' the truth!"—Sordello muttered, and renewed
His propositions for the Multitude.
But Salinguerra, who at this attack
Had thrown great breast and muffing corselet back
To hear the better, smilingly resumed
His task; beneath, the carrach's warning boomed;
He must decide with Tito; courteously
He turned then, even seeming to agree
With his admonisher. "Assist the Pope,
Extend Guelf domination, fill the scope
O' the Church, thus based on All, by All, for All—
Change Secular to Evangelical"—
Echoing his very sentence: all seemed lost,
When suddenly he looked up, laughingly almost,
To Palma: "This opinion of your friend's—
For instance, would it answer Palma's ends?
Best, were it not, turn Guelf, submit our -thing;
(Here he drew out his baldric to its length)
—"To the Pope's Knowledge—let our captive slip,
Wide to the walls throw ope our gates, equip
Azzo with... what I hold here! Who'll subscribe
To a trite euvre or the munstril tribe
Henceforward? or pronounce, as Heinrich used,
'Spear-heads for battle, burr-heads for the house!'
—What constance, for his couplets, would promote Alcanno, from a parti-colored coat,
To holding her lord's stirrup in the wars.
Not that I see where cuplet-making jars
With common sense: at Mantua I had borne
This championed, better than their most forlorn
Of bull-baits,—that's indisputable!"

Brave! Whom vanity nigh slew, contempt shall save!
All's at an end: a Troubadour suppose
Mankind will class him with their friends or foes.

Next day no formulario more you saw

'Tis Knowledge, whither such perceptions tend:
They lose themselves in that, means to an end,

In whose great presence, therefore, his first strike
For their sake must not be ignobly fought;
All those, for once, approved of him, he thought,
Suspended their own vengeance, chose await
The issue of this strife to reinstate
Them in the right of taking it — in fact
He must be proved king ere they could exact
Vengeance for such king's defacement. Last,
A reason why the phrases flowed so fast
Was in his quite forgetting for a time
Himself in his amalgamation that the rhyme
Disguised the royalty so much: he there —
And Saltinguerra yet all unaware
Who was the lord, who liegeman!

On thine my spirit and incline obey
His lord, — my liegeman, — impotent to build
Another Rome, but hardly so unskilled
In what such builders should have been, as brook
One shame beyond the charge that I forsook
His function! Free me from that shame, I bend

Allow each chance, nor fruitlessly, recur —

The changes on this theme, the roof up-sprung,
The sad wallks of the presence-chamber died
Into the distance, or embowering vied
With far-away Gito's vine-frontier;
And crowds of faces — (only keeping clear
The rose-light in the midst, his vantage-ground
To fight their battle from) — deep clustered round
Sordello, with good wishes no mere breath,
Kind prayers for him no vapor, since, come death,
Come life, he was fresh-sinewed every joint,
Each bone new-marrowed as whom gods anoint
Though mortal to their resuence. Now let sprawl

Romano, - Bacchus! After all, what dearth
Of Ecclns and Alberics on earth?
Say there's a prize in prospect, must disgrace
Betide competitors, unless they style
Themselves Romano? Were it worth my while
To try my own luck! But an obscure place
Suits me - there wants a youth to bustle, a talk
And attentivize — some fight, more talk,
Most daunting badges — how, I might make clear
Since Friednich's very purposes lie here
Here, pity they are like to fife! For me,
With station fixed unceremoniously
Long since, small use contesting; I am but
The liege-man — you are born the lieges — shut
That gentle mouth now! or resume your kin
In your sweet self; were Palma Ecclns
For me to work with! Could that neck endure
This bauble for a cumbersome garniture,
She should . . . or might one bear it for her?
Stay
I have not been so flattered many a day
As by your pale friend — Bacchus! The least help
Would lick the hind's fawn to a lion's whelp:
His neck is broad enough — a ready tongue
Beside — too writhed — but, the main thing, young —
I could ... why, look ye!"

In mor. Across Sordello's neck: "This a door to Sordello, Makes you Romano's Head — becomes superb
On your bare neck, which would, on mine, disturb

The poulidron," said Taurello. A mad act,
Nor even dreamt about before — in fact,
Not when his sportive arm rose for the nonce —
But he had dallied overmuch, this once,
With power: the thing was done, and he, aware
The thing was done, proceeded to declare
(So like a nature made to serve, excel
In serving, only feel by service well)
That he would make Sordello that and more.
"As good a scheme as any. What's to pore
At in my face?" he asked — "ponder instead
This piece of news; you are Romano's Head!
One cannot slacken pace so near the goal,
With my Azzo to escape heart-ache
This time! For you there's Palma to espouse
For me, one crowning trouble ere I house
Like my compeer."

On which ensued a strange
And solemn visitation; there came change
Of every one of them; each looked on each:
Up in the midst a truth grew, without speech.
And when the giddiness sank and the haze

To disobey the Adelaide who scared
Her into vowing never to disclose

His blood at half-recital, she contrived.
To hide from him Taurello’s infant lived,
Lest, by revealing that, himself should mar
Romano’s fortunes. And, a crime so far,
Palma received that action; she was told

he said,
"Nor stir—should fate de offend him a shred
Of his son’s infamy? much less his youth!"
Laughingly all this! — "which to aid, in truth,
Himself, reserved on purpose, had not grown
Old, not too old—’t was best they kept alone
Till now, and never idly met till now;"
—Then, in the same breath, told Sordello how

He had our very Italy to keep
Or cast away, or gather in a heap
To garrison the better — ay, his word

Drive Trent upon Apulia" — at their pitch
Who spied the continents and islands which Grew mulberry-leaves and sickles, in the map —
Strange that three such confusions so should hap
To Palma, Dante spoke with in the clear
Amorous silence of the Swooning-sphere,
Cunizza, as he called her! Never ask
Of Palma more! She sat, knowing her task
Was done, the labor of it, — for, success
Concerned not Palma, passion's votaress
Triumph at height, and thus Sordello crowned —
Above the passage suddenly a sound
Stops speech, stops walk: back shrinks Tarello, bids
With large involuntary asking lids,
Palma interpret. — "Tis his own foot-stamp —
Your hand! His summons! Nay, this idle damp
Befits not!" Out they two reeled dizzily,
"Visconti's strong at Milan," resumed he,
In the old, somewhat insignificant way —
(Was Palma wont, years afterward, to say)
As though the spirit's flight, sustained thus far,
Dropped at that very instant.

Gone they are —
Palma, Taurello; Eglamor anon;
Eecelin. — only Nuddo's never gone!
— Labors, this moonrise, what the Master meant —
"Is Sforcahypo speckled? — parulent,
I'd say, but when was Providence put out?
He carries somehow handily about
His spite nor fouls himself!" Goito's vines

And we have done. Its virgin quite to death in the lone eve.

BOOK THE SIXTH

The thought of Eglanor's least like a thought,
At the close of a day or a night shrinks to nothing;
Must quail, forsooth, before a quiet sky
Or sea, too little for their quietude:
And, truly, somewhat in Sorrello's mood
Confirmed its sphericity, while eve slow sank
Down the near terrace to the farther bank,
And only one spot left from out the night
Glimmered upon the river opposite—
A breadth of watery heaven like a bay,
A sky-like space of water, ray for ray,
And star for star, one richness where they mixed—
As this and that wing of an angel, fixed.
Tunantinary splendors folded in
To die. Nor turned he till Ferrara's din
(Say, the monotonous speech from a man's lip
Who lets some first and eager purpose slip
In a new fancy's birth; the speech keeps on Though elsewhere its informing soul be gone)
Aroused him, surely offered succor: Fate
Pased with this eve; ere she precipitate
Herself,—best put off new strange thoughts awile,
That voice, those large hands, that portentous smile,—
What help to pierce the future as the past,
Lay in the plaining city?

And at last
The main discovery and prime concern,
All that just now imported him to learn,
Truth's self, like yonder slow moon to complete
Heaven, rose again, and, naked at his feet.
Lighted his old life's every shift and change.
Past procedure is of counter-effort; nor the range
Fattiest review, of each looked wrong except wherein it checked
Some other—which of these could he suspect,
Prying into them by the sudden blaze?
The real way seemed made up of all the ways—
Mood after mood of the one mind in him;
Tokens of the existence, bright or dim,
Of a transcendent all-embracing sense
Demanding only outward influence,
A soul, in Palma's phrase, above his soul,
Power to uplift his power,—such moon's control
Over such sea-depths,—and their mass had swept Onward from the beginning and still kept.

Its course: but years and years the sky above
Held none, and so, untasked of any love,
His sensiveness idled, now amort,
Alive now, and, to sulmerness or sport
Giv'n wholely up, disposed itself anew.
At every passing instagation, grew
And dwindled at caprice, in foam-showers spilt,
Wedge-like insisting, quivered now a gift
Shield in the sunshine, now a blinding race
Of whitest ripples o'er the reef—found place
For much display; not gathered up and hurled
Right from its heart, encompassing the world.
So had Sorrello been, by consequence,
Without a function: others made pretence
To strength not half his own, yet had some core
Within, submitted to some moon, before
Them still, superior still what'er their force,—
Were able therefore to fulfil a course.
Nor missed life's crown, authentic attribute.
To each who lives must be a certain fruit
Of having lived in his degree,—a stage,
Earlier or later in men's pilgrimage,
To stop at; and to this the spirits tend
Who, still discovering beauty without end,
Amass the scintillations, make one star
—Something unlike them, self-sustained.

And meanwhile muse the dream of being blest
By winning it to notice and invest
Their souls with alien glory, some one day

Or human intellect seem best, or each
Combine in some ideal form past reach;
On earth, or else some shade of these, some aim,
Some love, hate even, take their place, the same,
So to be served—all this they do not lose,
Waiting for death to live, nor idly choose
What must be Hell—a progress thus pursued
Through all existence, still above the food
That's offered them, still fain to reach beyond
The widened range, in virtue of their bond
Of soverignity. Not that a Palma's Love.

His time of action for, against, or with
Our world! I labor to extract the pith
Of this his problem grew, that even-tide,
Gigantic with its power of joy, beside
The world's eternity of impotence.
To profit though at his whole joy's expense.
For he can
"Make nothing of my day because enjoy him— Rather make more: instead of joy,

self, use grief
Before its novelty have time subside!
Wait not for the late savour, leave untried
Virtue, the craving honey-wine, quick squeeze
Vice like a biting spirit from the lees
Of life! 'Tongue let wrath, hatred, lust,
All tyrannies in every shape, be thrust
Upon this now, which time may reason out
As mischief, far from benefits, no doubt;
But long ere then Sorello will have slipped
Away; you teach him at Goito's crypt,
There's a blank issue to that fiery thrill.
Stirring, the few cope with the many, still:
So much of sand as, quiet, makes a mass
Unable to produce three tafts of grass,
Shall, troubled by the whirlwind, render void.
The whole-calming glebe's embower: be employed!
And 'e'en though somewhat smart the Crowd for this Contribute each his pang to make your bliss,
'Twixt one but one pang—one blood-drop to the bowl
Which brimful tempts the sluggish asp uncowl
At last, stains hardly the dull red cape,
And, kindling orbs gray as the unripe grape
Before, avails forthwith to disen trance
The portent, soon to lead a mystic dance
Among you! For, who sits alone in Rome?
Have those great hands indeed hewn out a home,
And set me there to live? Oh life, life-breath,
Life-blood,—ere sleep, come, travail, life ere death!
This life stream on my soul, direct, oblique,
But always streaming! Hindrances? They constitute.
Helps? such . . . but why repeat, my soul o'er-tops
Each height, then every depth profoundlier drops?
Enough that I can live, and would live! Wait
For some transruseant life reserved by Fate
To follow this? Oh, never! Fate, I trust.
The same, my soul to; for, as who flings dust,
Perchance so facile was the deed she checked
The void with these materials to affect
My soul diversely: these consigned mew
To naught by death, what marvel if she threw
A second and superlifer spectacle
Before me? What may serve for sun, what still Wander a moon above me? What else wind
About me like the pleasures left behind.
And how shall some new flesh that is not flesh
Cling to me? What's new laughter? Soothes the fresh Sleep like sleep? Fate's exhaustless for my sake.
In brave resource: but whether bids she slake
My thirst at this first rivulet, or count
No draught worth lip save from some rocky font
Above i the clouds, while here she's provident
Of pure lapislazuli pearl, the soft tree-tent
Guards, with its face of reate and sedge, nor fail
The silver globules and gold-sparkling grain
At bottom? Oh, 't were too absurd to slight
For the hereafter the to-day's delight!
Quench thirst at this, then seek next well-spring: wear
Home-lilies ere strange lotus in my hair!
Here is the Crowd, whom I with freest heart
Offer to serve, contented for my part
 Freed from To give life up in service, — only a problem—

Aught further of me? If men cannot choose
But set aside life, why should I refuse
The gift? I take it — I, for one, engage
Never to falter through my pilgrimage
Nor end it howling that the stock or stone
Were enviable, truly: I, for one,
Will praise the world, you style mere anteroom
To palace — be it so! shall I assume
— My foot the courtely gait, my tongue the trope,
My mouth the mockn, before the doors fly ope
One moment? What? with guardsmen row on row
Gay swarm of varlety that come and go,
Pages to dice with, waiting-girls unlace
The plackets of, pert claimants help displace,
Heart-heavy suitors get a rank for, — laugh
At you sleek parasite, break his own staff
'Cross Beetle-brow the Usher's shoulder,—why,
Admitted to the presence by and by,
Should thought of having lost these make me grieve
Among new joys I reach, for joys I leave?
Cool citrine-crystals, fierce pyromus-stone,
Are floor-work there? But do I let alone
That black-eyed peasant in the vestibule
Once and forever? — Floor-work? — No such fool!
Rather, were heaven to forestall earth, I'd say

'T was well for them; let me become aware
As they, and I relinquish life, too! Let
What masters life disclose itself! Forget
Vain ordinances. I have one appeal—
I feel, am what I feel, know what I feel;
So much is truth to me. What is, then? Since
One object, viewed diversely, may exclaim
Beauty and ugliness—this way attract,
That way repel,—why gloze upon the fact?
Why must a single of the sides be right?
What bids choose this and leave the opposite?
Where’s abstract Right for me?—in youth ens
With Right still present, still to be pursued,
Through all the interchange of circles, rife
Each with its proper law and mode of life,
Each to be dwelt at ease in: where, to sway
Absolute with the Kaiser, or obey
Implicit with his serf of flattering heart,
Or, like a sudden thought of God’s, to start
Up, Brutus in the presence, then go shout
That some should pick the unstrung jewels out—
Each, well?"

And, as in moments when the past
Gave partially enfranchisement, he cast
Himself quite through more secondary states
Of his soul’s essence, little loves and hates,
Because into the mid deep yearnings overlaid
there is a By these; as who should pierce hill, life beyond plain, grove, glade,
life,
And on into the very nucleus probe
That first determined there exist a globe.
As that were easiest, half the globe dissolved,
So seemed Sordello’s closing-truth evolved
By his flesh-half’s break up: the sudden swell
Of his expanding soul showed III and Well,
Sorrow and Joy, Beauty and Ugliness.
Virtue and Vice, the larger and the Less,
All qualities, in fine, recorded here.
Might be but modes of Time and this one sphere,
Urgent on these, but not of force to bind
Eternity, as Time—as Matter—Mind,
If Mind, Eternity, should choose assert
Their attributes within a Life: thus girt
With circumstance, next change beholds them

Quite otherwise—with Good and Ill distinct,
Joys, sorrows, tending to a like result
Contrived to render easy, difficult.
This or the other course of... what new bond
In place of flesh may stop their flight beyond
It’s new sphere, as that course does harm or good
To its arrangements. Once this understood,
As suddenly he felt himself alone.
Quite out of Time and this world: all was known.
What made the secret of his past despirit?
— Most imminent when he seemed most aware
Of his own self-sufficiency: made mad
By craving to expand the power he had,
And not new power to be expanded?—just
This made it; Soul on Matter being thrust,
Joy comes when so much Soul is wreaked in
Time
On Matter,—let the Soul’s attempt sublime
Matter beyond the scheme and so prevent
By more or less that deed’s accomplishment,
And Sorrow follows: Sorrow how avoid?
Let the employer match the thing employed,
Fit to the finite his infinity,
And thus proceed forever, in degree
And with Changed but in kind the same, still

Small, Great, are merely terms we bandy here;
Since to the spirit’s absoluteness all
Are like. Now, of the present sphere we call Life, are conditions; take but this among
Many: the body was to be so long
Youthful, no longer; but, since no control
Tied to that body’s purposes his soul,
She chose to understand the body’s trade
More than the body’s self—had fain conveyed
Her boundless, to the body’s bounded lot,
Hence, the soul permanent, the body not,— Scarce’ly its minute for enjoying here,—
The soul must needs instruct her weak compeer.
Run over its capabilities and writing
A joy hence, she held worth experiencing:
Which, from half discovered even,—lo,
The minute gone, the body’s power let go
Appointed to that joy’s accomplishment! Broke

Swayed earthwards, heavily to rise again—
The Small, a sphere as perfect as the Great
To the soul’s absoluteness. Meditate
Too long on such a morning’s clasher—chord
And the whole music it was framed afoot,—
The chord’s might half discovered, what should pluck
One string, his finger, was found palsy-struck.
And then no marvel if the spirit, shown
A saddest sight—the body lost alone
Through her officious proffered help, deprived
Of this and that enjoyment Fate contrived,—
Virtue, Good, Beauty, each allowed slip hence,
Vaingloriously were faint, for recoupment.
To stem in the rain even yet; protrude
The body’s term, supply the power it lacked
From her infinity, compel it learn
These qualities were only Time’s concern,

And take the single course prescribed before.
As the king-bird with ages on his plumes

But where deserve the Love that shall select
That course? Here is a soul whom, to affect,
Nature has plied with all her means, from trees
And flowers e'en to the Multitud!—and these,
Decides he save or no?—One word to end!
Ah, my Sordello, I this once befriend
And speak for you. Of a Power above you still
Which, utterly incomprehensible,
Is out of rivalry, which thus you can Love, though unloving all conceived
by man—
What need! And of—none the minutest duct
To that out-nature, naught that would instruct
And so let rivalry begin to live
But of a Power its representative
Who, being for authority the same,
Communication different, should claim
A course, the first chose but this last revealed
This Human clear, as that Divine concealed—
What utter need!
What has Sordello found?
Or can his spirit go the mighty round,
End where poor Eglamor begim? So, says
Old table, the two eagles went two ways
About the world; where, in the midst, they met.
Though on a shifting waste of sand, men set
Joy's temple. Quick, what has Sordello found?
For they approach—approach—that knows:—Palma? No, Salinguerra though in nail;

They mount, have reached the threshold, dash the veil
Aside—and you divine who sat there dead.
Under his foot the badge: still, Palma said,
A triumph lingering in the wide eyes.
Wider than some spent swimmer's if he spies
Help from above in his extreme despair.
And, head far back on shoulder thrust, turns there
With short quick passionate cry: as Palma pressed
In one great kiss, her lips upon his breast,
It beat.
By this, the hermit-bee has stopped
His day's toil at Goito: the new-cropped
Dead vine-leaf answers, now 'tis eve, he bit,
Twirled so, and filed all day: the mansion's fit,
God counselled for. As easy guess the word

Alas, my friend, alas Sordello, whom
Amon they laid within that old font-tomb,
And, yet again, alas!
And now is 't worth

How Salinguerra extricates himself

On its disposer, and Taurello passed
With foe and friend for an outstripping soul.
Nine days at least. Then, fairly reached the goal,—
He, by one effort, blotted the great hope
Out of his mind, nor further tried to cope
With Este, that mad evening's style, but sent Away the Legate and the League, content
No blame at least the brethren had incurred,
—Dispatched a message to the Monk, he heard
Patiently first to last, scarce shivered at,
Then curled his limbs up on his wolfskin mat.
And never spoke more,—informed the Ferrarese
He but retained their rule so long as these

And duller these, next year, as Guelfs withdrew

From temporary station to a track
That smited. News received of this acquit,
Friedrich did come to Lombardy: who missed
Taurello then? Another year: they took Vicenza, left the Marquis scarce a nook
For refuge, and, when hundreds two or three of Guelfs conspired to call themselves "The Free."
Opposing Alberic,—vile Bassanese,—
(Without Sordello!) — Ecclini at ease
Slaughtered them so observably, that oft
A little Salingemora looked with soft
Blue eyes up, asked his sire the proper age
To get appointed his proud nude's page.
More years passed, and that sire had dwindled down
To a mere showy turbulent soldier, grown
Better through age, his parts still in repose.

Was born: Sordello die at once for men?
The Chronicons of Mantua tired their pen
Telling how Sordello Prince Visconti saved
Mantua, and elsewhere notably behaved—
Who thus, by fortune ordering events,
Passed with posterity, to all intents,
For just the god he never could become.
As Knight, Bard, Gallant, men were never dumb
In praise of him: while what he should have been

Could be, and was not—the one step too mean
For him to take, we suffer at this day
Because of Ecclin had pushed away
Its chance ere Dante could arrive and take What least That step Sordello spurned, for the one way world's sake:

award He did much—but Sordello's chance
Sordello was gone,

Thus, had Sordello dared that step alone,
Apollo had been compassed—'twas a fit

He wished should go to him, not he to it
—As one content to merely be supposed
Singing or fighting elsewhere, while he dozed

Really at home—one who was chiefly glad
To have achieved the few real deeds he had,
Because that way assured they were not worth

Doing, so spared from doing them henceforth
—A tree that covets fruitage and yet tastes

Never itself, itself. Had he embraced
Their cause then, men had plucked Hesperian fruit

And, praising that, just thrown him in to boot

All he was anxious to appear, but scarce
Solicitous to be. A sorry farce

PIPPA PASSES

A DRAMA

Sordello did not prove commercially successful, and Browning was reluctant to go on publishing his poetry at his father's expense. "One day," Mr. Gosse says, "as the poet was discussing the matter with Mr. Edward Moxon, the publisher, the latter remarked that at that time he was bringing out some editions of the old Elizabethan dramatists in a comparatively cheap form, and that if Mr. Browning would consent to print his poems as pamphlets, using this cheap type, the expense would be very inconsiderable." Browning accepted the suggestion at once and began the issue of a cheap series of pamphlets, each sixteen octavo pages in double column, printed on poor paper and sold first for a sixpence each, the price afterward being raised to a shilling and then to half a crown. The series consisted of eight numbers under the general fanciful title Bells and Pomegranates. Apparently the passage in Exodus xxviii. 33, "And beneath upon the hem of it [the priest's robe] thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about," suggested the title, but as all sorts of speculations sprang up about its significance, Browning appended the following note to the eighth and final number of the series:

"Here ends my first series of Bells and Pomegranates, and I take the opportunity of explaining, in reply to inquiries, that I only meant by that title to indicate an endeavor towards something like an alteration, or mixture, of music with discourse, sound with sense, poetry with thought; which looks too ambitious, thus expressed, so the symbol was preferred. It is little to the purpose, that such is actually one of the most familiar of the many Rabbinical (and Patristic) acceptations of the phrase; because I confess that, letting authority alone, I suppose the bare words, in such juxtaposition, would sufficiently convey the desired meaning. 'Faith and good works' is another fancy, for instance, and perhaps no easier to arrive at; yet Giotto placed a pomegranate fruit in the hand of Dante, and Raffaello crowned his Theology (in the Camera della Segnatura) with blossoms of the same; as if the Bellari and Vasari would be sure to come after, and explain that it was merely 'simbolo delle buone opere — il qual Pomogranato fu però usato nelle vesti del Pontefice appresso gli Ebrei.'

"R. B."

The first number of Bells and Pomegranates contained Pippa Passes. It was published in 1841 and was introduced by the following dedicatory preface:

Two or three years ago I wrote a Play, about which the chief matter I much care to recollect at present is, that a Pittfull of good-natured people applauded it; ever since, I have been desirous of doing something in the same way that should better reward their attention. What follows, I mean for the first of a series of Dramatical Pieces, to come out at intervals; and I amuse myself by fancying that the cheap mode in which they appear, will for once help me to a sort of Pit-audience again. Of course such a work must go on no longer than it is liked; and to provide against a too certain and but too possible contingency, let me hasten to say now — what, if I were sure of success, I would try to say circumstantially enough at the close — that I dedicate my best intentions most admiringly to the Author of Ion — most affectionately to Sergeant Talfourd.

ROBERT BROWNING.

The phrases in the closing sentence were afterward used by Browning as a dedication when he discarded the advertisement in the collective editions of his poems.

INTRODUCTION

New Year's Day at Asolo in the Trevisan

A large mean airy chamber. A girl, Pippa, from the silk-mills, springing out of bed.

Day!
Faster and more fast,
O'er night's trim, day boils at last;
Boils, pure gold, o'er the cloud-cup's trim
Where spurring and suppressing it lay,
For not a froth-flake touched the rim
Of yonder gap in the solid gray
Of the eastern cloud, an hour away;
But forth one wavelet, then another, curled,
Till the whole sunrise, not to be suppressed,
Rose, red-dened, and its seething breast
Flickered in bounds, grew gold, then overflowed
the world.

Oh, Day, if I squander a wavelet of thee,
A mite of my twelve-hours' treasure,
The least of thy gazes or glances,
(As they grants than art bound to or gifts above measure)
One of thy choices or one of thy chances,
(As they tasks God imposed thee or freaks at thy pleasure)
— My Day, if I squander such labor or leisure,
Then shame fall on Asolo, mischief on me!

Thy long blue solemn hours serenly flowing,
Whence earth, we feel, gets steady help and good
Thy fitting sunshine-minutes, coming, going,
As if earth turned from work in gamesome mood
All shall be mine! But thou must treat me not
As prosperous ones are treated, those who live
At hand here, and enjoy the higher lot,
In readiness to take what thou wilt give,
And free to let alone what thou refusest;
For, Day, my holiday, if thou ill-usest
Me, who am only Pippa, old-year's sorrow,
Cast off last night, will come again to-morrow:
Whereas, if thou prove gentle, I shall borrow
Sufficient strength of thee for new-year's sorrow.
All other men and women that this earth
Belongs to, who all days alike possess,
Make general plenty rare particular dearth,
Get more joy one way, if another, less:
Thou art my single day, God lends to heaven
What were all earth else, with a feel of heaven.
—
Sole light that helps me through the year, thy sun's!
Try now! Take Asolo's Four Happiest Ones—
And let thy morning rain on that superb
Great haughty Ottilia; can rain disturb
Her Schalh's homage? All the while thy rain
Beats fiercest on her shrub-hose window-pane
He will but press the closer, breathe more warm
Against her cheek; how should she mind the storm?
And, morning past, if mid-day shed a gloom
O'er Jules and Phene,—what care bride and

Save for their dear selves? 'Tis their marriage-day:
And while they leave church and go home their way,
Hand clasping hand, within each breast would be Sunbeams and pleasure. All other spite of thee.
Then, for another trial, obscure thy eye
With mist,—will Luigi and his mother grieve—
The lady and her child, unmatched, forsooth,
She in her age, as Luigi in his youth,
For true content? The cheerful town, warm, close
And safe, the sooner that thou art morose,
Receives them. And yet once again, outbreak
In storm at night on Monsignor, they make Such stir about,—whom they expect from Rome
To visit Asolo, his brothers' home,
And say here masses proper to release
A soul from pain,—what storm dares hurt his peace?
Calm would he pray, with his own thoughts to ward
Thy thunder off, nor want the angels' guard.
But Pippa—just one such mischief would spoil
Her day that lightens the next twelvemonth's toil
At wearisome silk-winding, coil on coil!
And here I let time slip for naught!
Aha, you foolishly sunbeam, caught
With a single splash from my ever!
You that would mock the best pursuer,
Was my basin over-deep?
One splash of water ruins you asleep,
And up, up, fleet your brilliant bits
Wheeling and counterwheeling,
Reeling, broken beyond healing:
Now grow together on the ceiling!
That will task your wits,
Wherever it was quenched fire first, hoped to see
Morsel after morsel flee
As merrily, as giddily...
Meantime, what lights my sunbeam on,
Where settles by degrees the radiant cripple?
Oh, is it surely blown, my martagon?
New-blown and roody as St. Agnes' nipple,
Plump as the flesh-bunch on some Turk bird's tail!
Be sure if corals, branching 'neath the ripple
Of ocean, had there,—fairies watch unroll
Such turban-flowers; I say, such lamps disperse
Thick red flame through that dusk green universe!
I am queen of thee, floweret!
And each fleshly blossom
Preserve I not—safer
Than leaves that embower it.
(Or shells that embosom)
—From weevil and chafier?
Laughter through my pane then; solicit the bee;
Give him, be sure; and, in midst of thy glee,
Love thy queen, worship me!
Worship whom else? For am I not, this day,
Whate'er I please? What shall I please to-day?
My morn, noon, eve and night—how spend my day?
To-morrow I must be Pippa who winds silk,
The whole year round, to earn just bread and milk:
But, this one day, I have leave to go,
And play out my fancy's fullest games;
I may fancy all day — and it shall be so —
That I taste of the pleasures, am called by the names
Of the Happiest Four in our Asolo!

See! Up the hillside yonder, through the morning,
Some one shall love me, as the world calls love:
I am no less than Ottina, take warning!
The gardens, and the great stone house above,
And other house for shrubs, all glass in front,
Are mine; where Sebald steals, as he is wont,
To court me, while old Luca yet reposeth,
And therefore, till the shrub-house door uncloses,
I . . . what now? — give abundant cause for prate
About me — Ottina, I mean — of late,
Too bold, too confident she'll still face down
The spitefullest of talkers in our town,
How we talk in the little town below!
But love, love, love — there's better love, I know!
This foolish love was only day's first offer;
I choose my next love to defy the secoff:
For do not our Bride and Bridgroom sally
Out of Possagno church at noon?
Their house looks over Orcaoa valley:
Why should not I be the bride as soon
As Ottina? For I saw, beside,
Arrive last night that little bride —
Saw, if you call it seeing her, one flash
Of the pale snow-pure cheek and black bright tresses,
Blacker than all except the black eyelash;
I wonder she contrives those lids no dresses!
— So strict was she, the veil
Should cover close her pale
Pure cheeks — a bride to look at and scarce touch, Scarce touch, remember, Jules! For are not such
Used to be tended, flower-like, every feature,
As if one's breath would fray the lily of a creature?
A soft and easy life these ladies lead:
Whiteness in none were wonderful indeed.
Oh, save that bow its virgin dimness,
Keep that foot its lady primness,
Let those ankles never swerve
From their exquisite reserve,
Yet have to trip along the streets like me,
All but naked to the knee!
How will she ever grant her Jules a bliss
So startling as her real first infant kiss?
Oh, no — not envy, this!
— Not envy, sure! — for if you gave me
Leave to take or to refuse,
In earnest, do you think I'd choose
That sort of new love to enslave me?
Mine should have lapped me round from the beginning;
As little fear of losing it as winning:

Lovers grow cold, men learn to hate their wives,
And only parents' love can last our lives.
At eve the Son and Mother, gentle pair,
Commune inside our turret: what prevents
My being Luigi? While that mossy hair
Of lizards through the winter-time is stirred
With each to each imparting sweet intents
For this new-year, as brooding bird to bird —
(For I observe of late, the evening walk
Of Luigi and his mother, always ends
Inside our ruined turret, where they talk,
Calmer than lovers, yet more kind than friends)
— Let me be cared about, kept out of harm,
And schemed for, safe in love as with a charm;
Let me be Luigi! If I only knew
What was my mother's face — my father, too?
Nay, if you come to that, best love of all
Is God's; then why not have God's love befall
Myself as, in the palace by the Dome,
Monsignor? — who to-night will bless the home
Of his dead brother; and God bless in turn
That heart which beats, those eyes which mildly burn
With love for all men! I, to-night at least,
Would be that holy and beloved priest.

Now wait! — even I already seem to share
In God's love: what does New-year's hymn declare?

What other meaning do these verses bear?

All service ranks the same with God:
If now, as formerly he trod
Paradise, his presence fills
Our earth, each only as God wills
Can work — God's puppets, best and worst,
Are we; there is no last nor first.

Say not "a small event!" Why "small"?
Costs it more pain that this, ye call
A "great event," should come to pass,
Than that? Untwine me from the mass
Of deeds which make up life, one deed
Power shall fall short in or exceed!

And more of it, and more of it! — oh yes —
I will pass each, and see their happiness,
And envy none — being just as great, no doubt,
Useful to men, and dear to God, as they!
A pretty thing to care about
So mightily, this single holiday!
But let the sun shine! Wherefore repine?
— With thee to lead me, O Day of mine,
Down the grass path gay with dew,
Under the pine-wood, blind with boughs,
Where the swallow never flew
Nor yet ciana dared carouse
— [She enters the street.

1. MORNING

Up the Hillside, inside the Shrub-house. Luca's Wife, Ottina, and her Paramour, the German Sebald.

Sebald. [sings.] Let the watching lids wink!
Day's ablaze with eyes, think!
Deep into the night, drink!
Ottima. Night? Such may be your Rhineland nights, perhaps?
But this blood-red beam through the shutter’s chink
— We call such light, the morning: let us see!
Mind how you grope your way, though! How these tall
Naked geraniums struggle! Push the lattice
Behind that frame! — Nay, do I bid you?
Sebal.
It shakes the dust down on me! Why, of course
The slide-bolt catches. Well, are you content.
Or must I find you something else to spoil?
Kiss and be friends, my Sebal! Is’t full morning?
Oh, don’t speak then!
Seb.
Ay, thus it used to be!
Ever your house was, I remember, shut
Till mid-day; I observed that, as I strolled
On mornings through the vale here; country girls
Were noisy, washing garments in the brook.
Hinds drove the slow white oxen up the hills.
But no, your house was mute, would one eye!
And wisely: you were plotting one thing there,
Nature, another outside. I looked up —
Rough white wood shutters, rusty iron bars.
Silent as death, blind in a flood of light.
Oh, I remember! — and the peasants laughed
And said, "The old man sleeps with the young wife,"

This house was his, this chair, this window —
his.
Ott. Ah, the clear morning! I can see Saint Mark’s:
That black streak is the belfry. Stop: Vicenza
Should lie . . . there’s Padua, plain enough, that blue!
Look o’er my shoulder, follow my finger!
Seb. Morning?
It seems to me a night with a sun added.
Where’s dew, where’s freshness? That bruised plant, I bruised
In getting through the lattice yestereve,
Phoos as it did. See, here’s my elbow’s mark
I’d dust o’ the silly. —
Ott. Oh, shut the lattice, pray!
Seb. Let me lean out. I cannot scent blood
here,
Foul as the morn may be.
— There, shut the world out!
How do you feel now, Ottima? There, curse
The world and all outside! Let us throw off
This mask: how do you bear yourself? Let’s out
With all of it!
Ott. Best never speak of it.
Seb. Best speak again and yet again of it.
Till words cease to be more than words. "His blood,"
For instance — let those two words mean, "His blood"
And nothing more. Notice, I’ll say them now,
"His blood."
Ott. Assuredly if I repeated
The deed —
Seb. Repent? Who should repent, or why?

What puts that in your head? Did I once say
That I repented?
Ott. No; I said the deed . .
Seb. "The deed" and "the event" — just now it was
"Our passion’s fruit" — the devil take such cant!
Say, once and always, Luca was a wittol,
I am his cut-throat, you are . .
Ott. Here’s the wine;
I brought it when we left the house above.
And glasses too — wine of both sorts. Black?
White then?
Seb. But am not I his cut-throat? What are you?
Ott. There trudges on his business from the Duomo
Benet the Capuchin, with his brown hood
And bare feet; always in one place at church,
Close under the stone wall by the south entry.
I used to take him for a brown cold piece
Of the wall’s self, as out of it he rose
To let me pass — at first, I say, I used;
Now, so has that dumb figure fastened on me,
I rather should account the plastered wall
A piece of him, so chilly does it strike.
This, Sebal?
Seb. No, the white wine — the white wine!
Well, Ottima, I promised no new year
Should rise on us the ancient shameful way
Nor does it rise. Pour on! To your black eyes!
Do you remember last damned New Year’s day?
Ott. You brought those foreign prints. We looked at them
Over the wine and fruit. I had to scheme
To get him from the fire. Nothing but saying
His own set wants the proof-mark, roused him up
To hunt them out.
Seb. "Faith, he is not alive
To fondle you before my face.
Ott. Do you
Fondle me then! Who means to take your life
For that, my Sebal?
Seb. Hark you, Ottima!
One thing to guard against. We’ll not make much
One of the other — that is, not make more
Parade of warmth, childish officious coil,
Than yesterday: as if, sweet, I supposed
Proof upon proof were needed now, now first.
To show I love you — yes, still love you — love
you
In spite of Luca and what’s come to him
Sure sign we had him ever in our thoughts,
White sneering old reproachful face and all!
We’ll even quarrel, love, at times, as if
We still could lose each other, were not tied
By this: conceive you?
Ott. Love!
Seb. Not tied so sure!
Because though I was wrought upon, have struck
His insolence back into him — am I
So surely yours? — therefore forever yours?
Ott. Love, to be wise, (one counsel pays another,)
Should we have—months ago, when first we loved,
For instance that May morning we two stole
Under the green ascent of sycamores—
If we had come upon a thing like that Suddenly . . .

"Oh, why, not a thing!"—there again—"a thing!"

"Otti. Then, Venus' body, had we come upon
My husband Luca Gaddi's murdered corpse
Within there, at his couch-foot, covered close—
Would you have pored upon it? Why persist
In poring now upon it? For 'tis here
As much as there in the deserted house;
You cannot rid your eyes of it. For me,
Now he is dead! I hate him worse: I hate . . .
Dare you stay here? I would go back and hold
His two dead hands, and say, "I hate you worse, Luca, than . . ."

"Ott. Off, off—take your hands off mine.
'Tis the hot evening—off! oh, morning is it?

"Otti. There's one thing must be done; you know what thing.
Come in and help to carry. We may sleep
Anywhere in the whole wide house to-night.

"Seb. What would come, think you, if we let him lie
Just as he is? Let him lie there until
The angels take him! He is turned by this Off from his face beside, as you will see.

"Otti. This dusty pane might serve for looking-glass.
Three, four—four gray hairs! Is it so you said
A plait of hair should wave across my neck?
No—this way.

"Seb. Ottima, I would give your neck,
Each splendid shoulder, both those breasts of yours,
That this were undone! Killing! Kill the world,
So Luca lives again!—ay, lives to sputter
His husboml dotage on you—yes, and feign
Surprise that I return at eve to sup.

When all the morning I was loitering here—
Bail me dispatch my business and begone.
I would . . .

"Otti. See!

"Seb. No, I'll finish. Do you think
I fear to speak the bare truth once for all?
All we have talked of, is, at bottom, fine
To suffer; there's a recompense in guilt;
One must be venturesome and fortunate:
What is one young for, else? In age we'll sigh
Over the wild reckless wicked days flown over;
Still, we have lived: the vice was in its place.
But to have eaten Luca's bread, have worn
His clothes, have felt his money swell my purse—

Do lovers in romances sin that way?
Why, I was starving when I used to call
And teach you music, starving while you
Plucked me
These flowers to smell!

"Otti. My poor lost friend!

"Seb. He gave me
Life, nothing less: what if he did reproach
My perfidy, and threaten, and do more—
Had he no right? What was to wonder at?
He sat by us at table quietly:

Why must you lean across till our cheeks touched?
Could he do less than make pretence to strike?
'Tis not the crime's sake—I'd commit ten crimes
Greater, to have this crime wiped out, undone!
And you—O how feel you? Feel you for me?

"Otti. Well, then, I love you better now than ever.

And best (look at me while I speak to you)—
Best for the crime: nor do I grieve, in truth,
This mask, this simulated ignorance,
This affectation of simplicity,
Falls off our crime; this naked crime of ours
May not now be looked over: look it down!
Great? let it be great; but the joys it brought,
Pay they or no its price? Come: they or it!
Speak not! The past, would you give up the past?
Such as it is, pleasure and crime together?
Give up that noon I owned my love for you?
The garden's silence: even the single bee
Persisting in his toil, suddenly stopped,
And where he hid you only could surmise
By some campanula chalice set a-swing,
Who stammered—"Yes, I love you?"

"Seb. And I drew
Back; put far back your face with both my hands
Lest you should grow too full of me—your face
So seemed athirst for my whole soul and body!

"Otti. And when I ventured to receive you here
Made you steal hither in the mornings—

"Seb. When
I used to look up 'neath the shrub-house here,
Till the red fire on its glazed windows spread
To a yellow haze?

"Otti. Ah—my sign was, the sun
Inflamed the sere side of you chestnut-tree
Nipped by the first frost.

"Seb. You would always laugh
At my wet boots: I had to stride through grass
Over my ankles.

"Otti. Then our crowning night!

"Seb. The July night?

"Otti. The day of it too. Sebald!
When heaven's pillars seemed o'erbowed with heat,
Its black-blue canopy suffered descent
Close on us both, to weigh down each to each,
And smoother up all life except our life.
So lay we till the storm came.

"Seb. How it came!

"Otti. Buried in woods we lay, you recollect;
Swift ran the searching tempest overhead;
And ever and anon some bright white shaft
Burned through the pine-tree roof, here burned
And there,
As if God's messenger through the close wood screen
Plunged and rephrung his weapon at a venture,
Feeling for guilty thee and me: then broke
The thunder like a whole sea overhead—

"Seb. Yes!

"Otti. While I stretched myself upon you, hands
To hands, my mouth to your hot mouth, and shook
All my locks loose, and covered you with them —
You, Sebald, the same you!

Seb. Slower, Ottima!

Ott. And as we lay —

Seb. Less vehemently! Love me!
Forgive me! Take not words, mere words, to heart!
Your breath is worse than wine. Breathe slow, speak slow!

Do not lean on me!

Otti. Sebald, as we lay,
Rising and falling only with our pants,
Who said, "Let death come now! 'Tis right to die!
Right to be punished! Naught completes such bliss
But woe!" Who said that?

Ott. How did we ever rise?

Seb. I felt you
Taper into a point the ruffled ends
Of my loose locks 'twixt both your humid lips.

My hair is fallen now: knot it again!

Seb. I kiss you now, dear Ottima, now and now!

This way? Will you forgive me — be once more
My great queen?

Ott. Bind it thrice about my brow;

Crown me your queen, your spirit’s arbitrress,

Magnificent in sin. Say that!

Seb. I crown you
My great white queen, my spirit’s arbitrress,

Magnificent...

[From without is heard the voice of Pippa singing —

The year’s at the spring
And day’s at the morn;
Morning’s at seven;
The hillside’s dew-pearled;
The lark’s on the wing;
The snail’s on the thorn;
God’s in his heaven —
All’s right with the world!

[PIPPA passes.

Seb. God’s in his heaven! Do you hear that? Who spoke?

You, you spoke!

Ott. Oh — that little ragged girl!

She must have rested on the step: we give them
But this one holiday the whole year round.
Did you ever see our silk-mills — their inside? There are ten silk-mills now belong to you.
She stoops to pick my double heartsease...

She does not hear: call you out louder!

Seb. Leave me!

Go, get your clothes on — dress those shoulders!

Seb. Wipe off that paint! I hate you.

Ott. Sebald?

Seb. Miserable!

Seb. My God, and she is emptied of it now!

Ott. Outright now! — how miraculously gone

All of the grace — had she not strange grace once?

Why, the blank cheek hangs listless as it likes,
No purpose holds the features up together.

Only the cloven brow and puckered chin
Stay in their places: and the very hair,

That seemed to have a sort of life in it,

Drops, a dead web!

Ott. — That round great full-orbed face,

Where not an angle

Broke the delicious indolence — all broken!

Ott. To me — of me! Ungrateful, perjured cheat!

A coward too; but ingrate’s worse than all!

Beggar — my slave — a fawning, cringing lie!

Leave me! Betray me! I can see your drift!

A lie that walks and eats and drinks!

Seb. My God!

Those morbid olive faultless shoulder-blades — I should have known there was no blood beneath!

Ott. You hate me then? You hate me then?

Seb. To think

She would succeed in her absurd attempt,
And fascinate by sinning, show herself
Superior — guilt from its excess superior
To innocence! That little peasant’s voice

Has righted all again. Though I be lost,

I know which is the better, never fear,

Of vice or virtue, purity or lust,

Nature or trick! I see what I have done,

Entirely now! Oh I am proud to feel

Such torments — let the world take credit thence

I, having done my deed, pay too its price!

I hate, hate — curse you! God’s in his heaven!

Me! Me!

No, no, Sebald, not yourself — kill me!

Mine is the whole crime. Do but kill me then

Yourself — then — presently — first hear me speak!

I always meant to kill myself — wait, you!

Lean on my breast — not as a breast; don’t love me

The more because you lean on me, my own

Heart’s Sebald! There, there, both deaths presently!

Seb. My brain is drowned now — quite drowned: all I feel

Is... is, at swift-recurring intervals,

A hurry-down within me, as of waters

Loosened to smother up some ghastly pit:

There they go — whirls from a black fiery sea!

Ott. Not me — to him. O God, be merciful!

Talk by the way, while Pippa is passing from the hillside to Graven. Foreign Students of painting and sculpture, from Venice, assembled opposite the house of Jules, a young French student, at Passagen.

1st Student. Attention! My own post is beneath this window, but the pomegranate clump yonder will hide three or four of you with a little squeezing, and Schramm and his pipe must he flat in the balcony. Four, five who’s a defaulter? We want everybody, for Jules must not be suffered to hurt his bride when the jest’s found out.
2d Stud. All here! Only our poet's away—never having much meant to be present, moonstrike him! The airs of that fellow, that Giovacchino! He was in violent love with himself, and had a fair prospect of thriving in his suit, so unmoled was it,—when suddenly a woman falls in love with him, too; and out of pure jealousy he takes himself off to Trieste, immortal poem and all: whereato is this prophetic epitaph appended already, as Buihphocks assures me,—"Here a manmoth-poem lies. Foul'd to death by butterflies." His own fault, the simpleton! Instead of cramp couples, each like a knife in your entrails, he should write, says Bluhphocks, both classically and intelligibly.—Æsculapius, an Epic. Catalogue of the drugs: Hebe's plaister—One strip Cools your lip. Thabus's emission—One bottle Cures your throat. Mercury's balsus—One box Cures...

3d Stud. Subside, my fine fellow! If the marriage was over by ten o'clock, Jules will certainly be here in a minute with his bride.

2d Stud. Good! —only, so should the poet's muse have been universally acceptable, says Bluhphocks, et cambus nostris...; and Delia not better known to our literary dogs than the boy Giovacchino!

1st Stud. To the point, now. Where's Gottlieb, the new-comer? Oh,—listen, Gethieb, to what has called down this piece of friendly vengeance on Jules, of which we now assemble to witness the winding-up. We are all agreed, all in a tale, observe, when Jules shall burst out on us in a fury by and by: I am spokesman—the verses that are to deceive Jules bear my name of Lutwyche—but each professes himself alive insulted by this strutting stone-squarer, who came along from Paris to Munich, and thence with a crowd of us to Venice and Possagno here, but proceeds in a day or two alone again—oh, alone indubitably! —to Rome and Florence. He, forsooth, take up his portion with these dissolute, brutalized, heartless bunglers!—so he was heard to call us all. Now, is Schramm brutalized, I should like to know? And heartless?

Gott! It's a woman somewhat heartless; for, suppose Jules a coxcomb as much as you choose, still, for this mere coxcombr, you will have brushed off—what do folks style it?—the bloom of his life. Is it too late to alter? These love-letters now, you call his—I can't laugh at them.

4th Stud. Because you never read the sham letters of our inquity which drew forth these.

Gott. His discovery of the truth will be frightful.

4th Stud. That's the joke. But you should have joined us at the beginning: there's no doubt he loves the girl—loves a model he might hire by the hour!

Gott. See here! "He has been accustomed," he writes, "to have Canova's women about him, in stone, and the world's women beside him, in flesh; these being as much below, as those above, his soul's aspiration: but now he is to have the reality." There you laugh again! I say, you wipe off the very dew of his youth.

1st Stud. Schramm! (Take the pipe out of his mouth, somebody!) Will Jules lose the bloom of his youth?

Schramm. Nothing worth keeping is ever lost in this world: look at a blossom—it drops presently, having done its service and lasted its time; but fruits succeed, and where would be the blossom's place could it continue? As well affirm that your eye is no longer in your body, because its earliest favorite, whatever it may have first loved to look on, is dead and done with—as that any affection is lost to the soul when its first object, whatever happened first to satisfy it, is superseded in due course. Keep but ever looking, whether with the body's eye or the mind's, and you will soon find something to look on! Has a man done wondering at women?—there follow men, dead and alive, to wonder at. Has he done wondering at men?—there's God to wonder at: and the faculty of wonder may be, at the same time, old and tired enough with respect to its first object, and yet round and fresh sufficiently, so far as concerns its novel one. Thus.

1st Stud. Put Schramm's pipe into his mouth again! There, you see! Well, this Jules... a wretched friable—oh, I watched his disportings at Possagno, the other day! Canova's gallery—you know: there he marches first resolvedly past great works by the dozen without vouchsafing an eye: all at once he stops fall at the Psiche-fanciulla—cannot pass that old acquaintance without a nod of encouragement—"In your new place, beauty? Then behave yourself as well here at Munich—I see you!" Next he posts himself deliberately before the unfinished Pietà for half an hour without moving, till up he starts of a sudden, and thrusts his very nose into—I say, into— the group; by which gesture you are informed that precisely the sole point he had not fully mastered in Canova's practice was a certain method of using the drill in the articulation of the knee-joint—and that, likewise, has he mastered at length!—Good-by, therefore, to poor Jules, whose gallery no longer needs details; his successor Jules, the predestinated novel thinker in marble!

5th Stud. Tell him about the women: go on to the women!

1st Stud. Why, on that matter he could never be supercilious enough. How should we be other (he said) than the poor devils you see, with those debasing habits we cherish? He was not to walk in that mire, at least: he would wait, and love only at the proper time, and meanwhile put up with the Psiche-fanciulla. Now, I happened to hear of a young Greek—real Greek girl at Malamocco; a true Islander, do you see, with Alciphron's "hair like sea-moss"—Schramm knows!—white and quiet as an apparition, and fourteen years old at farthest—

a daughter of Natalia, so she swears—that nag Natalia, who helps us to models at three lire an hour. We selected this girl for the heroine of our jest. So first, Jules received a scented letter—somebody had seen his Tydeus at the Academy, and my picture was nothing to it: a profound admirer bade him persevere—would make herself known to him ere long. (Paolina, my little friend of the Fenice, transcribes divinely.) And in due time, the mysterious correspondent gave certain hints of her peculiar charms—the pale cheeks, the black hair—whatever, in short, had struck us in our Malamocco model: we retained her name, too—Phene, which, by interpretation, sea-eagle. Now, think of Jules finding himself distinguished from the herd of us by such a creature! In his very first answer he proposed marrying his monstrel: and fancy us over these letters, two, three times a day, to receive and dispatch! I conected the main of it: relations were in the way—secrecy must be observed—in fine, would he wed her on trust, and only speak to her when they were indissolubly united? St—st—Here they come! 4th Stud. Both of them! Heaven's love, speak softly, speak within yourselves! 5th Stud. Look at the bridegroom! Half his hair in storm and half in calm,—patted down over the left temple,—like a frothy cup one blows on to cool it; and the same old bloise that he mundered the marble in.
2nd Stud. Not a rich vest like yours, Hannibal Scratiey!—rich, that your face may the better set it off.
4th Stud. And the bride! Yes, sure enough, our Phene! Should you have known her in her clothes? How magnificently pale!
Gott. She does not also take it for earnest, I hope?
1st Stud. Oh, Natalia's concern, that is! We settle with Natalia.
4th Stud. She does not speak—have evidently let out no word! The only thing is, will she equally remember the rest of her lesson, and repeat correctly all those verses which are to break the secret to Jules?
Gott. How he gazes on her! Pity—pity!
1st Stud. They go in: now, silence! You three,—not nearer the window, mind, than that pomegranate: just where the little girl, who a few minutes ago passed us singing, is seated!

II. NOON

Over Ormela. The house of Jules, who crosses its threshold with Phene: she is silent, on which Jules begins—

Do not die, Phene! I am yours now, you Are mine now; let fate reach me how she likes, If you 'twill not die: so, never die! Sit here— My work-room's single seat. I over-lean This length of hair and hirsute front; they turn Like an entire flower upward: eyes, lips, last Your chin—no, last your throat turns: 'tis their scent Pulls down my face upon you. Nay, look ever This one way till I change, grow you—I could Change into you, beloved!

You by me,
And I by you; this is your hand in mine,

And side by side we sit: all st true. Thank God!
I have spoken; speak you!
O my life to come!
My Tydeus must be carved that's there in clay; Yet how he carved, with you about the room?
Where must I place you? When I think that once
This room—full of rough black-work seemed my heaven
Without you! Shall I ever work again,
Get fairly into my old ways again,
Bid each conception stand while, trait by trait,
My hand transfers its lineaments to stone?
Will my mere fancies live near you, their truth—
The live truth, passing and repassing me,
Sitting beside me?

Now speak! Only first,
See, all your letters! Was't not well contrived?
Their hiding-place is Psyche's robe; she keeps Your letters next her skin: which drops out foremost?
Ah,—this that swam down like a first moonbeam
Into my world! Again those eyes complete Their melancholy survey, sweet and slow,
Of all my room holds: to return and rest
On me, with pity, yet some wonder too:
As if God bade some spirit plague a world,
And this were the one moment of surprise
And sorrow while she took her station, pausing
O'er what she sees, finds good, and must destroy!

What gazed you at? Those? Books, I told you of;
Let your first word to me rejoice them, too:
This mimion, a Cuthlus, writ in red,
Bistre and azure by Bessarian's scribe—
Read this line... no, shame—Hom'er's be the Greek
First breathed me from the lips of my Greek girl!
This Odyssey in coarse black vivid type
With faded yellow blossoms 'twixt page and page,
To mark great places with due gratitude;
"He said, and on Antinous directed A bitter shaft!... a flower bullots out the rest! Again upon your search? My statues, then!—
Ah, do not mind that—better that will look
When cast in bronze—an Alnaig Kaiser, that, Swart-green and gold, with truncheon based on hip.

This, rather, turn to! What, unrecognized?
I thought you would have seen that here you sit
As I imagined you,—Hippolyta.
Naked upon her bright Numidian horse.
Recall you this then? "Carve in bold relief"—
So you commanded —"carve, against I come.
A Greek, in Athens, as our fashion was,
Feasting, bay-filleted and thunder-free,
Who rises 'neath the lifted myrtle-branch.
Praise those who slew Hipparchus," cry the guests.
‘While o’er thy head the singer’s myrtle waves
As erst above our champion: stand up, all!’

See, I have labored to express your thought.
Quite round, a cluster of mere hands and arms
(Thrust in all senses, all ways, from all sides,
Only consented at the branch’s end
They streaked toward) serves for frame to a sole face.
The Praisers, in the centre: who with eyes
Sightless, so bend they back to light inside
His brain where visionary forms throng up,
Sings, minding not that palpitating arch
Of hands and arms, nor the quick drip of wine
From the drenched leaves o’erhead, nor crowns cast off,
Violet and parsley crowns to trample on —
Sings, pausing as the patron-ghosts approve,
Devoutly their unconquerable hymn.
But you must say a ‘well’ to that — say ‘well!’
Because you gaze — am I fantastic, sweet?
Gaze like my very life’s stuff, marble — marly
Even to the silence! Why, before I found
The real flesh Phene, I imured myself
To see, throughout all nature, varied stuff
For better nature’s birth by means of art:
With me, each substance tended to one form
Of beauty — to the human archetypal.
On every side occurred suggestive germs
Of that — the tree, the flower — or take the fruit,
Some rosy shape, continuing the peach,
Curved beewise o’er its bough; as rosy limbs.
Depending, nestled in the leaves; and just
From a cleft rose-peach the whole Dryadsprung.
But of the stuffs one can be master of,
How I divined their capabilities!
From the soft-ringed smoothing facile chalice
That yields your outline to the air’s embrace,
Half-softened by a halo’s pearly bloom;
Down to the crisp imperious steel, so sure.
To cut its own confined thought clean out
Of all the world. But marble! — neath my tools
More pliable than jelly — as it were
Some clear primordial creature dug from depths
In the earth’s heart, where itself breeds itself,
And whence all baser substance may be wrought;
Redine it off to air, you may, — condense it
Down to the diamond; — is not metal there.
When o’er the sudden speck my chisel trips?
Not flesh, but flame off flame I scale, approach.
Lay bare those blush veins of blood asleep?
Lurks flame in no strange windings where, surprised
By the swift implement sent home at once.
Flushes and glowing radiate and hover
About its track?

Phene? — what — why is this?
That whitening cheek, those still dilating eyes?
Ah, you will die — I knew that you would die!

There begins, on his having long remained silent.

Now the end’s coming: to be sure, it must Have ended sometime! Trush, why need I speak
Their foolish speech? I cannot bring to mind
One half of it, beside; and do not care

For old Natalia now, nor any of them.
Oh, you — what are you? — if I do not try
To say the words Natalia made me learn.
To please your friends, — it is to keep myself
Where your voice lifted me, by letting that Proceed: but can it? Even you, perhaps,
Cannot take up, now you have left all,
The music’s life, and me along with that.
No, or you would! We’ll stay, then, as we are:
Above the world.

You creature with the eyes!
If I could look forever up to them,
As now you let me. — I believe, all sin,
All memory of wrong done, suffering borne,
Would drop down, low and lower, to the earth
Whence all that’s low comes, and there touch and stay
— Never to overtake the rest of me.
All that, unspetted, reaches up to you,
Drawn by those eyes! What rises is myself,
Not me the shame and suffering; but they sink,
Are left, I rise above them. Keep me so,
Above the world!

But you sink, for your eyes
Are altering — altered! Stay — “I love you,
love” . . .
I could prevent it if I understood:
More of your words to me; wasn’t in the tone
Or the words, your power?

Or stay — I will repeat
Their speech, if that contents you! Only change
No more, and I shall find it presently.
Far back here, in the brain yourself filled up,
Natalia threatened me that harm should follow.
Unless I spoke their lesson to the end,
But harm to me, I thought she meant, not you.
Your friends. — Natalia said they were your friends
And meant you well. — because, I doubted it.
Observing (what was very strange to see)
On every face, so different in all else,
The same smile girls like me are used to bear.
But never men, men cannot stoop so low;
Yet your friends, speaking of you, used that smile.
That hateful smirk of boundless self-conceit
Which seems to take possession of the world
And make of God a tame confederate,
Purveyor to their appetites . . . you know!
But still Natalia said they were your friends,
And they assented though they smiled the more.
And all came round me. — that thin Englishman
With light lank hair seemed leader of the rest;
He held a paper — “What we want,” said he,
Ending some explanation to his friends —
“Is something slow, involved and mystical.
To hold Jules long in doubt, yet take his taste
And lure him on until, at innermost
Where he seeks sweetness’ soul, he may find
— this!
— As in the apple’s core, the noiseless fly:
For insects on the rind are seen at once,
And brushed aside as soon, but this is found
Only when on the lips or loathing tongue.”
And so he read what I have got by heart:
I’ll speak it. — “Do not die, love! I am yours” . . .

No — is not that, or like that, part of words
You're beginning by speaking? Strange to lose
What cost such pains to learn? Is this more right?

I am a painter who cannot paint;
In my life, a devil rather than saint;
In my brain, a poor crea-ture too:
No end to all I cannot do!
Yet do one thing at least I can
Love a man or hate a man
Supreme; thus my love began,
Through the Valley of Love I went,
In the loveliest spot to abide.
And just on the verge where I pitched my tent,
I found Hate dwelling beside.
(]et the Bridegroom ask what the painter meant,
Of his Bride, of the peerless Bride.)
And further, I traversed Hate's grove.
In the hatefilest nook to dwell;
But to where I flung myself prone, couched Love
Where the shadow threefold fell.
(The meaning—those black bird's-eyes above,
Not a painter's lip should tell)!

"And here," said he, "Jules probably will ask,
You have black eyes, Love,—you are, sure enough;
My peerless bride,—then do you tell indeed
What needs some explanation! What means this?"

And I am to go on, without a word—

So, I grew wise in Love and Hate.
From simple that I was of late.
Once, when I loved, I would enlace
Breast, eyelids, hands, feet, form and face
Of her I loved, in one embrace—
As if by mere love I could love immensely!
Once, when I hated, I would plunge
My sword, and wipe with the first drop
My foe's whole life out like a sponge—
As if by mere hate I could hate intensely!
But now I am wiser, know better the passion
How passion seeks aid from its opposite passion:
And if I see cause to love more, hate more—
Than ever man loved, ever hated before —
And seek in the Valley of Love
The nest, or the nook in Hate's Grove
Where my soul may surely reach—
The essence, taught less, of each,
The Hate of all Loves, the Love
Of all Loves, in the Valley or Grove —
I find them the very warders
Each of the other's borders.
When I love most, Love is disguised
In Hate: and when Hate is surprised
In Love, then I hate most: ask
How Love smiles through Hate's iron casque,
Hate glares through Love's roses-braided mask:—
And how, having hated thee,
I sought long and painfully
To reach thy heart, nor prick
The skin but pierce to the quick—
Ask this, my Jules, and be answered straight
By thy bride—how the painter Latwyche can hate! "

Jules interposes.
Lutwyche! Who else? But all of them, no doubt,
Hated me: they at Venice—presently.
Their turn, however! You I shall not meet:
If I dreamed, saying this would wake me.
Keep
What's here, the gold—we cannot meet again,
Consider! and the money was but meant
For two years' travel, which is over now,
All chance or hope or care or need of it.
This—and what comes from selling these, my casts
And books and medals, except . . . let them go
Together, so the produce keeps you safe
Out of Natalia's clutches! If by chance
For all's chance here! I should survive the gang
At Venice, root out all fifteen of them,
We might meet somewhere, since the world is wide.

[From without is heard the voice of Pippa, singing—

Give her but a least excuse to love me!
When—where—
How—can this arm establish her above me,
If fortune fixed her as my lady there,
There already, to eternally prove me?
"Hut?"—say! Kate the Queen;
But "Oh!" cried the maiden, binding her tresses.
"'Tis only a page that carols unseen,
Crumbling your hundreds their tresses!"

Is she wronged?—To the rescue of her honor,
My heart! Is she poor?—What costs it to be styled a donor?
Merely an earth to cleave, a sea to part,
But that fortune should have thrust all this upon her!
("Nay, list!"—bade Kate the Queen;
And still cried the maiden, binding her tresses.
"'Tis only a page that carols unseen,
Fitting her hawks their tresses!")

Jules resumes.
What name was that the little girl sang forth?
Kate? The Cornaro, doubtless, who renounced
The crown of Cyprus to be lady here
At Asolo, where still her memory stays.
And peasants sing how once a certain page
Pined for the grace of her so far above
His power of doing good to, "Kate the Queen—
She never could be wronged, be poor," he sighed,
"Need him to help her!"
Yes, a bitter thing
To see our lady above all need of us;
Yet so we look ere we will love; not I.
But the world looks so. If whoever loves
The blessing or the blast one, queen or page,
Why should we always choose the page a part?
Here is a woman with utter need of me,
I find myself queen here, it seems!

How strange!
Look at the woman here with the new soul.
Like my own Psyche, fresh upon her lips.
Pippa passes

Alit, the visionary butterfly,
Waiting my word to enter and make bright,
Or flutter off and leave all blank as first.
This body had no soul before, but slept
Or stirred, was beauteous or ungainly, free
From either foul with stain, as outward things
Fastened their image on its passiveness:
Now, it will wake, feel, live—or die again!
Shall to produce form out of unshaped stuff
Be Art—and further, to evoke a soul
From form be nothing? This new soul is mine!

Now, to kill Lutwyche, what would that do?—say
A wretched dunder, men willhoot to death
Without me, from their hooting. Oh, to hear
God's voice plain as I heard it first, before
They broke in with their laughter! I heard them
Henceforth, not God,
To Acona— Greece—some isle!
I wanted silence only; there is clay
 Everywhere. One may do whate'er one likes
In Art: the only thing is, to make sure
That-one does like it—which takes pains to know.
Scatter all this, my Phene—this mad dream!
What, what is Lutwyche, what Natalia's friends,
What the whole world except our love—my own,
Own Phene? But I told you, did I not.
Fare night we travel for your land—some isle
With the sea's silence on it? Stand aside—I do but break these patyry models up
To begin Art afresh. Meet Lutwyche, I—and
And save him from my statute meeting him?
Some unsuspected isle in the far seas!
Like a god going through his world, there stands
One mountain for a moment in the dusk,
Whole brotherhoods of cedars on its brow:
And you are ever by me while I gaze
—Are in my arms as now—as now—as now!
Some unsuspected isle in the far seas!
Some unsuspected isle in far-off seas!

Talk by the way, while Pippa is passing from Acona to the Turret. Two or three of the Austrian Potier looking with bluffs, in an English ragout, just in view of the Turret.

Bluffs, 1 So, that is your Pippa, the little girl who passed us singing? Well, your Bishop's Intendant's money shall be honestly earned:—now, don't make me that sour face because I bring the Bishop's name into the business; we know he can have nothing to do with such horrors; we know that he is a saint and all that a bishop should be, who is a great man beside. Oh, were but every worm a weep, Every fly a gryg, Every bough a Christmas fogul. Every tune a yeig! In fact, I have abjured all religions; but the last I inclined to was the Armenian: for I have travelled, do you see, and at Koenigsberg, Prussia Improper (so

1 "He maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust." styled because there's a sort of bleak hungry sun there; you might remark, over a venerable house-porch, a certain Chaldean inscription; and brief as it is, a mere glance at it used absolutely to change the mood of every bearded passenger. In they turned, one and all; the young and lightsome, with no irreverent pause, the aged and decrepit, with a sensible acracy: 'twas the grand Rabbi's abode, in short. Struck with curiosity, I lost no time in learning Syrian— (these are vowels, you do;—follow my stick's end in the mud—Célarnt, Dazri, Ferio!) and one morning presented myself, spelling-book in hand, a, b, c.—I picked it out letter by letter, and what was the purport of this miraculous posy? Some cherished legend of the past, you'll say—"How Moses booted—poussed Egypt's land with fly and locust," or—"How to Jonah sounded harshly, 'Get thee up and go to Tarshish,'" or—"How the angel meeting Balaam, Straight his ass returned a salam," In no wise! "Shackbrack—Boach—somebody or other—Isauch, Ke-er-ver, Pur-eu-sar and Ex-phant-ver of Stolen Goods!" So, talk to me of the religion of a bishop! I have renounced all bishops save Bishop Beveridge!—mean to live so—and die—as some Greek dog-sage, dead and merry, Helheard bound in Chariol's wherry, With food for both worlds, under and upper, Lupine-seed and Hecate's supper, And never an abolus... (though thanks to you, or this Intendant through you, or this Bishop through his Intendant—I possess a burning pocket-full of zwanzigers)... To pay the Stygian Ferry! 1st Policeman. There is the girl, then; go and deserve them the moment you have pointed out to us Signor Luigi and his mother. [To the rest.] I have been noticing a house yonder, this long while: not a shutter unclosed since morning!

Blup. Only, cannot you tell me something of this little Pippa, I must have to do with? One could make something of that name, Pippa—that is, short for Felippa: rhyming to Panurpe consults Herbippe—Believeth thou, King Agrippa? Something might be done with that name.

2d Pol. Put into rhyme that your head and a ripe muskmelon would not be dear at half a zwanziger! Leave this fooling, and look out; the afternoon's over or nearly so.

3d Pol. Where in this passport of Signor Luigi does our Principal instruct you to watch him so narrowly? There? What is there beside a simple signature? (That English fool's busy watching.)

2d Pol. Flourish all round—"Put all possible obstacles in his way;" oblong dot at the end—"Detain him till further advices reach you;" scratch at bottom—"Send him back on pretence of some impropriety in the above;"
We sit — I think my mind is touched, suspect
All is not sound: but is not knowing that,
What constitutes one sane or otherwise?
I know I am thus — so, all is right again,
I laugh at myself as through the town I walk,
And see men merry as if no Italy.
Were suffering; then I ponder — "I am rich,
Young, healthy: why should this fact trouble me,
More than it troubles these?" But it does trouble.

No, trouble's a bad word: for as I walk
There's springing and melody and giddiness.
And old quaint turns and passages of my youth,
Dreams long forgotten, little in themselves,
Return to me — whatever may amuse me:
And earth seems in a trance with me, and heaven
Accords with me, all things suspend their strife.
The very cicada laughs "There goes he, and there!
Feast him, the time is short; he is on his way
For the world's sake: feast him this once, our friend!

And in return for all this, I can trip
Cheerfully up the scaffold-steps. I go
This evening, mother!

Mother. But mistrust yourself —
Mistrust the judgment you pronounce on him!
Luigi. Oh, there I feel — am sure that I am right!

Mother. Mistrust your judgment then, of the mere means
To this wild enterprise: say, you are right,
How should one in your state e'er bring to pass
What would require a cool head, a cool heart,
And a calm hand? You never will escape.

Luigi. Escape? To even wish that, would spoil all.

The dying is best part of it. Too much
Have I enjoyed these fifteen years of mine,
To leave myself excuse for longer life:
Was not life pressed down, running o'er with joy,
That I might finish with it ere my fellows
Who, sparerier feasted, make a longer stay?
I was put at the board-head, helped to all
At first; I rise up happy and content.
God must be glad one loves his world so much,
I can give news of earth to all the dead
Who ask me: — last year's sunsets, and great stars
Which had a right to come first and see ebb
The crimson wave that drifts the sun away —
Those crescent moons with notched and burning rims
That strengthened into sharp fire, and there stood,
Impatient of the azure — and that day
In March, a double rainbow stopped the storm —
May's warm slow yellow moonlit summer nights —

Gone are they, but I have them in my soul!

Mother. (He will not go.)

Luigi. You smile at me? 'Tis true, —
Voluptuousness, grotesqueness, ghastliness,
Environ my devotedness as quaintly
As round about some antique altar wreathe
The rose festoons, goats' horns, and oxen's skulls.
Mother. See now: you reach the city, you must cross
His threshold — how?
Luigi. Oh, that's if we conspired!
Then would come pains in plenty, as you guess —
But guess not how the qualities most fit
For such an office, qualities I have,
Would little seduce me, otherwise employed,
Yet prove of rarest merit only here.
Every one knows for what his excellence
Will serve, but no one ever will consider
For what his worst defect might serve: and yet
Have you not seen me range our coprice yonder
In search of a distorted ash? — I find
The wry spoilt branch a natural perfect bow.
Fancy the three-sage, three-precautioned man
Arriving at the palace on my errand!
No, no! I have a handsome dress packed up —
White satin here, to set off my black hair;
In I shall march — for you may watch your life
out
Behind thick walls, make friends there to betray you;
More than one man spoils everything. March straight —
Only, no clumsy knife to fumble for,
Take the great gate, and walk (not saunter) on Through guards and guards — I have rehearsed it all
Inside the turret here a hundred times,
Don't ask the way of whom you meet, observe!
But where they cluster thickest is the door
Of doors; they'll let you pass — they'll never lab
Each to the other, he knows not the favorite,
Whence he is bound and what's his business now.
Walk in — straight up to him; you have no knife:
Be prompt, how should he scream? Then, out with you!
Italy, Italy, my Italy!
You're free, you're free! Oh mother, I could dream
They got about me — Andrea from his exile,
Pier from his dungeon, Gualtier from his grave!
Mother. Well, you shall go. Yet seems this patriotism
The easiest virtue for a selfish man
To acquire; he loves himself — and next, the world —
If he must love beyond, — but mought between:
As a short-sighted man sees naught midway
His body and the sun above. But you
Are my adored Luigi, ever obedient
To my least wish, and running o'er with love:
I could not call you cruel or unkind,
Once more, your ground for killing him! — then go!
Luigi. Now do you try me, or make sport of me?
How first the Austrians got these provinces... (If that is all, I'll satisfy you soon)
— Never by conquest but by cunning, for
That treaty whereby...
Mother. Well?
Luigi. (Sure, he's arrived,
The tell-tale cuckoo: spring's his confidant,
And he lets out her April purposes!
Or... better go at once to modern time.
He has... they have... in fact, I understand
But can't restate the matter; that's my boast:
Others could reason it out to you, and prove
Things they have made me feel,
Mother. Why go to-night?
Morn's for adventure. Jupiter is now
A morning-star. I cannot hear you, Luigi!
Luigi. "I am the bright and morning-star," said God—
And, "to such an one I give the morning-star."
The gift of the morning-star! Have I God's gift
Of the morning-star?
Mother. Chiara will love to see
That Jupiter an evening-star next June.
Luigi. True, mother. Well for those who live through June!
Great noontides, thunder-storms, all glaring poms
That triumph at the heels of June the god
Leading his revel through our leafy world.
Yes, Chiara will be here.
Mother. In June: remember,
Yourself appointed that month for her coming.
Luigi. Was that low noise the echo?
Mother. The night-wind,
She must be grown — with her blue eyes up turned
As if life were one long and sweet surprise;
In June she comes.
Luigi. We were to see together
The Titian at Treviso. There, again!
[From without is heard the voice of Pippa, singing —
A king lived long ago,
In the morning of the world,
When earth was higher heaven than now:
And the king's locks curled,
Disparting o'er a forehead full
As the milk-white space 'twixt horn and horn
Of some sacrificial bull —
Only calm as a babe new-born:
For he was got to a sleepy wool,
So safe from all decrepitude,
Ave with its bane, so sure gone by,
(The gods so loved him while he dreamed)
That, having lived thus long, there seemed
No need the king should ever die.
Luigi. No need that sort of king should ever die!
Among the rocks his city was:
Before his palace, in the sun,
He sat to see his people pass,
And judge them every one
From its threshold of smooth stone,
They halted him many a valley-thief,
Caught in the sheep-pens, robber-chief
Swarthy and shameless, beggar-cheat,
Spy-provoker, or rough pirate found
In the seasand left aground;
And sometimes cull about his feet,
With bleeding lip and burning cheek,
A woman, bitterest wrong to speak
Of one with sudden thickest brows:
And sometimes from the prison-house
The hungry priests a pale wretch brought,
Whothrough some chink had pushed and pressed
On knees and elbows, belly and breast,
Worm-like in every tempting—caught
He was by the very god.
Who ever in the darkness strode
Backward and forward, keeping watch
O'er his brazen bowls, such rogues to catch!
These, all and every one,
The king judged, sitting in the sun.

Luigi. That king should still judge sitting in the sun.

His counsellors, on left and right,
Looked anxious up, — but no surprise
Disturbed the king's old smiling eyes
Where the very blue had turned to white.
'Tis said, a Python scared one day
The breathless city, till he came.
With forkly tongue and eyes on flame,
Where the old king sat to judge always;
But when he saw the sweeping hair
Girl with a crown of berries rare
Which the god will hardly give to wear
To the maiden who singeth, dancing bare
In the altar-smoke by the pin-torch lights,
At his wondrous forest rites, —
Seeing this, he did not dare
Approach that threshold in the sun,
Assault the old king smiling there.
Such grace had kings when the world began!

[PIPPA passes.]

Luigi. And such grace have they, now that the world ends!

The Python at the city, on the throne
And brave men, God would crown for slaying him.

Lurk in by-corners lest they fall his prey.
Are crowns yet to be won in this late time,
Which weakness makes me hesitate to reach?
'T is God's voice calls: how could I stay?
Farewell!

Talk by the way, while PIPPA is passing from the Turret to the Bishop's Brother's House, close to the Duomo
S. Maria. Poor Girls sitting on the steps.

1st Girl. There goes a swallow to Venice —
the stout sea-farer!
Seeing those birds fly, makes me wish for wings.
Let us all wish; you, wish first!

2d Girl. I? This sunset
To finish.

3d Girl. That old — somebody I know.
Grayer and older than my grandfather.
To give me the same treat he gave last week —
Feeding me on his knee with fig-peckers.
Lampreys and red Breganze-wine, and numbing
The while some folly about how well I fare,
Let sit and eat my supper quietly:
Since had he not himself been late this morning
Detained at — never mind where—had he not . . .

"Oh, baggage, had I not!" —
2d Girl. How she can lie!

3d Girl. Look there — by the nails!

2d Girl. What makes your fingers red?

3d Girl. Dipping them into wine to write bad words with

On the bright table: how he laughed!

1st Girl. My turn.

Spring's come and summer's coming. I would wear
A long loose gown, down to the feet and hands.
With plaits here, close about the throat, all day;
And all night lie, the cool long nights, in bed;
And have new milk to drink, apples to eat,
Denzans and juminets, leather-coats ... ah, I should say.

This is away in the fields — miles!

3d Girl. Say at once:
You'd be at home: she'd always be at home!
Now comes the story of the farm among
The cherry orchards, and how April snowed
White blossoms on her as she ran. Why, too!
They've rubbed the chalk-mark out, how tall you were.

Twisted your starting's neck, broken his cage,
Made a dung-hill of your garden!

1st Girl. They destroy
My garden since I left them? well — perhaps
I would have done so; so I hope they have!
A fig-tree curled out of our cottage wall;
They called it mine. I have forgotten why,
I must have been there long ere I was born;
Cric — crie — I think I hear the wasps overhead
Pricking the papers strung to flutter there
And keep off birds in fruit-time — coarse long papers.
And the wasps eat them, prick them through and through.

3d Girl. How her mouth twitches! Where was I? — before
She broke in with her wishes and long gowns
And wasps — would I be such a fool! — Oh, here!

This is my way: I answer every one
Who asks me why I make so much of him —
If you say, "you love him" — straight "he'll not be gull'd!"

"He that seduced me when I was a girl
Thus high — had eyes like yours, or hair like yours,
Brown, red, white," — as the case may be: —
That pleases me!
See how that beetle burnishes in the path!
There sparkles he along the dust: and there, — your journey to that maize-tuft spoiled at least!

1st Girl. When I was young, they said if you killed one
Of those sunshiny beetles, that his friend
Up there, would shine no more that day nor next.

2d Girl. When you were young? Nor are you young, that's true.
How your plump arms, that were, have dropped away!
Why, I can span them. Cecco beats you still?
No matter, so you keep your curious hair.
I wish they'd find a way to dye our hair
Your color — any lighter tint, indeed.
Than black: the men say they are sick of black.
Black eyes, black hair!

4th Girl. Sick of yours, like enough.

Do you pretend you ever tasted lampreys
And ortolans? Giovita, of the palace
Engaged (but there's no trusting him) to slice me
Polenta with a knife that had cut up An ortolan.

2d Girl. Why, there! Is not that Pippa
We are to talk to, under the window,— quick!—
Where the lights are?
1st Girl. That she? No, or she would sing,
For the Intendant said . . .
2d Girl. Oh, you sing first!
Then, if she listens and comes close . . . I'll tell you.—
Singing that song the young English noble made,
Who took you for the purest of the pure,
And meant to leave the world for you — what fun!

2d Girl. [Sings.]
You'll love me yet! — and I can tarry
Your love's protracted growing:
June reared that bunch of flowers you carry.
From seeds of April's sowing,
I plant a heart full now; some seed
At least is sure to strike
And yield — what you'll not pluck indeed,
Not love, but, may be, like.

You'll look at least on love's remains,
A grave's one violet:
Your look! — that pays a thousand pains.
What's death? You'll love me yet!

3d Girl. [To Pippa who approaches.] Oh, you say come closer — we shall not eat you! Why, you seem the very person that the great rich handsome Englishman has fallen so violently in love with. I'll tell you all about it.

IV. NIGHT

Inside the Palace by the Droma. Monsignor, dismissing his Attendants.

Monsignor. Thanks, friends, many thanks! I chiefly desire life now, that I may recompense every one of you. Most I know something of already. What, a repast prepared? Benedetto beneficatur . . . ugh, ugh! Where was I? Oh, as you were remarking, Ugo, the weather is mild, very unlike winter-weather: but I am a Sicilian, you know, and shiver in your Julys here. To be sure, when 't was full summer at Messina, as we priests used to cross in procession the great square on Assumption Day, you might see our thickest yellow tapers twist suddenly in two, each like a falling star, or sink down on themselves in a gore of wax. But go, my friends, but go! [To the Intendant.] Not you, Ugo! [The others leave the apartment.] I have long wanted to converse with you, Ugo.

Intendant. Ugnecio—

Mon. . . . guccio Stefani, man! of Ascoli, Fermo and Fossombruno; — what I do need instructing about, are these accounts of your administration of my poor brother's affairs. Ugh! I shall never get through a third part of your accounts; take some of these dainties before we attempt it, however. Are you bashful to that degree? For me, a crust and water suffice.

Inten. Do you choose this esecial night to question me?

Mon. This night, Ugo. You have managed my late brother's affairs since the death of our elder brother: fourteen years and a month, all but three days. On the Third of December, I find him . . .

Inten. If you have so intimate an acquaintance with your brother's affairs, you will be tender of turning so far back; they will hardly bear looking into, so far back.

Mon. Ay, ay, ugh, ugh, — nothing but disappointments here below! I remark a considerable payment made to yourself on this Third of December. Talk of disappointments! There was a young fellow here, Jules, a foreign sculptor I did my utmost to advance, that the Church might be a gainer by us both; he was going on hopefully enough, and of a sudden he notifies me some marvellous change that has happened in his notions of Art. Here's his letter, — He never had a clearly conceived Ideal within his brain till to-day. Yet since his hand could manage a chisel, he has practised expressing other men's Ideals; and, in the very perfection he has attained to, he foresees an ultimate failure: his unconscious hand will pursue its prescribed course of old years, and will reproduce with a fatal expertness the ancient types, let the novel one appear never so palpably to his spirit. There is but one method of escape: confiding the virgin type to as chaste a hand, he will turn painter instead of sculptor, and paint, not carve, its characteristics, — strike out, I dare say, a school like Correggio: how think you, Ugo?

Inten. Is Correggio a painter?

Mon. Foolish Jules! and yet, after all, why foolish? He may — probably will — fail egregiously; but if there should arise a new painter, will it not be in some such way, by a poet now, or a musician (spirits who have conceived and perfected an Ideal through some other channel, transferring it to this, and escaping our conventional roads by pure ignorance of them; eh, Ugo? If you have no appetite, talk at least, Ugo!

Inten. Sir, I can submit no longer to this course of yours. First, you select the group of which I formed one, — next you thin it gradually, — always retaining me with your smile, — and so do you proceed till you have fairly got me alone with you between four stone walls. And now then? Let this farce, this chatter end now: what is it you want with me?

Mon. Ugo! Inten. From the instant you arrived, I felt your smile on me as you questioned me about this and the other article in those papers — why your brother should have given me this villa, that podere, — and your nod at the end meant, — what?

Mon. Possibly that I wished for no loud talk here. If once you set me coughing, Ugo! —

Inten. I have your brother's hand and seal to all I possess; now ask me what for! what service I did him ask me!
Mon. I would better not: I should rip up old disgraces, let out my poor brother's weaknesses. By the way, Maffeo of Forlì, (which, I forgot to observe, is your true name,) was the interdict ever taken off you for robbing that church at Cesena?

Inten. No, nor needs be: for when I murdered your brother's friend, Pasquale, for him...

Mon. Ah, he employed you in that business, did he? Well, I must let you keep, as you say, these viles and podere, for fear the world should find out my relations were of so indifferent a stamp? Maffeo, my family is the oldest in Messina, and century after century have my progenitors gone on polluting themselves with every wickedness under heaven: my own father...rest his soul!—I have, I know, a chapel to support that it may rest: my dear two dead brothers were,—what you know tolerably well; I, the youngest, might have rivalled them in vice, if not in wealth: but from my boyhood I came out among them, and so am not partaker of their plagues. My glory springs from another source; or if from this, by contrast only,—for I, the bishop, am the brother of your employers, Ugo. I hope to repair some of their wrong, however; so far as my brother's ill-gotten treasure reverts to me, I can stop the consequences of his crime: and not one solto shall escape me. Maffeo, the sword we quiet men spurn away, you shrewd knaves pick up, and commit murders with; what opportunities the virtuous forego, the villainous seize. Because, to pleasure myself apart from other considerations, my food would be mill-take, my dress sackcloth, and my couch straw,—am I therefore to let you, the off-scouring of the earth, seduce the poor and ignorant by appropriating a pomp these will be sure to think lessens the abominations so unaccountably and exclusively associated with it? Must I let villas and podere go to you, a murderer and thief, that you may beget by means of them other murderers and thieves?

No,—if my cough would but allow me to speak!—

Inten. What am I to expect? You are going to punish me?

Mon. Must punish you, Maffeo. I cannot afford to cast away a chance. I have whole centuries of sin to redeem, and only a month or two of life to do it in. How should I dare to say...

Inten. "Forgive us our trespasses"?

Mon. My friend, it is because I avow myself a very worm, sinful beyond measure, that I reject a line of conduct you would applaud perhaps. Shall I proceed, as it were, a-pardoning?—I?—who have no symptom of reason to assume that aught less than my strenuousest efforts will keep myself out of mortal sin, much less keep others out. No: I do trespass, but will not double that by allowing you to trespass.

Inten. And suppose the villas are not your brother's to give? is not yours to take? Oh, you are hasty enough just now!

Mon. 1, 2—No 3, 1: say, can you read the substance of a letter. No 3, I have received from Rome? It is precisely on the ground there mentioned, of the suspicion I have that a certain child of my late elder brother, who would have succeeded to his estates, was murdered in infancy by you, Maffeo, at the instigation of my late younger brother—that the Pontiff enjoins on me not merely the bringing that Maffeo to condign punishment, but the taking all pains, as guardian of the infant's heritage for the Church, to recover it parcel by parcel, howsoever, wheresoever, and wheresoever. While you are now grasping these fingers, the police are engaged in sealing up your papers, Maffeo, and the mere raising my voice brings my people from the next room to dispose of yourself. But I want you to confess quietly, and save me raising my voice. Why, man, do I not know the old story? The heir between the succeeding heir, and this heir's ruinful instrument, and their compot's effect, and the life of fear and bribes and ominous smiling silence? Did you throttle or stab my brother's infant? Come now!

Inten. So old a story, and tell it no better? When did such an instrument ever produce such an effect? Either the child smiles in his face; or, most likely, he is not fool enough to put himself in the employer's power so thoroughly: the child is always ready to produce—as you say—howsoever, wheresoever, and whenever.

Mon. Liar!

Inten. Strike me? Ah, so might a father chastise? I shall sleep soundly to-night at least, though the gallows await me to-morrow; for what a life did I lead! Carlo of Cesena reminds me of his connivance, every time I pay his annuity; which happens commonly thrice a year. If I remonstrate, he will confess all to the good bishop—you!

Mon. I see through the trick, caiffit! I would you spoke truth for once. All shall be sifted, however—seven times sifted.

Inten. And how my absurd riches encumbered me! I dared not lay them to above half my possessions. Let me be once unsomn myself, glorify Heaven, and die!

Sir, you are no brutal dastard idiot like your brother I frightened to death; let us understand one another. Sir, I will make away with her for you—the girl—here close at hand; not the stupid obvious kind of killing: do not speak—know nothing of her nor of me! I see her every day—saw her this morning: of course there is to be no killing; but at Rome the courteous perish off every three years, and I can entice her thither—have indeed begun operations already. There's a certain lusty blue-eyed florid-complexioned English knave, I and the Police employ occasionally. You assent, I perceive—no, that's not it—assent I do not say—but you will let me convert my present havings and holdings into cash, and give me time to cross the Alps? 'Tis but a little black-eyed pretty singing Filipina, gay silk-winding girl. I have kept her out of harm's way up to this present; for I always intended to make your life a plague to you with her. 'Tis as well settled once and forever. Some women I have procured will pass Blaphoeks, my handsome scoundrel, off for somebody; and once Pippa entangled! — you conceive? Through her singing? Is it a bargain?

[From without is heard the voice of Pippa, singing —

Overhead the tree-tops meet,
Flowers and grass spring 'neath one's feet;
There was naught above me, naught below,
My childhood had not learned to know:
For, what are the voices of birds.
—Ay, of and of beasts, — but words, our words,
Only so much more sweet?
The knowledge of that with my life began.
But I had so near made out the sun,
And counted your stars, the seven and one,
Like the fingers of my hand:
Nay, I could all but understand
Wherefore through heaven the white moon ravens;
And just when out of her soft fifty changes
No unfamiliar face might overtake me —
Suddenly God took me.

PIPPA.'s Chamber again. She enters it.

The bee with his comb,
The mouse at her dry,
The grab in his tomb,
While winter away;
But the fire-fly and hedge-shrew and lob-worm,
I pray,
How fare they?
Ha, ha, thanks for your counsel, my Zanze!
'Feast upon hampreys, quaff Breganzo' —
The summer of life so easy to spend,
And care for to-morrow so soon put away!
But winter hastens at summer's end,
And fire-fly, hedge-shrew, lob-worm, pray,
How fare they?
No bidding me then to . . . what did Zanze say?
'Pare your nails pearly, get your small feet shoes
More like' . . . (what said she?) — 'and less like canoes'!
How pert that girl was! — would be those pert
Impudent staring women! It had done me,
However, surely no such mighty hurt
To learn his name who passed that jest upon me!
No foreigner, that I can recollect.
Came, as she says, a month since, to inspect
Our silk-mills — none with blue eyes and thick rings
Of raw-silk-colored hair, at all events.
Well, if old Luca keep his good intents,
We shall do better, see what next year brings!
I may buy shoes, my Zanze, not appear
More destitute than you perhaps next year!
Blmph . . . something! I had caught the un

But for Monsignor's people's sudden chatter
Above us — bound to spoil such idle chatter
As ours: it were indeed a serious matter
If silly talk like ours should put to shame
The pious man, the man devoid of blame,
The . . . ah but — ah but, all the same,
No mere mortal has a right
To carry that exalted air;
Best people are not angels quite;
While — not the worst of people's doings scare
The devil; so there 's that proud look to spare!
Which is mere counsel to myself, mind! for
I have just been the holy Monsignor:
And I was you too, Luigi's gentle mother,
And you too, Luigi! — how that Luigi started
Out of the turret — doubtless departed
On some good errand or another,
For he passed just now in a traveller's trim,
And the sullen company that prowled
About his path, I noticed, scowled
As if they had lost a prey in him,
And I was Jules the sculptor's bride,
And I was Ottilia beside
And now what am I? — tired of fooling.
Day for folly, night for schooling!
New year's day is over and spent,
Ill or well. I must be content.
Even my lily's asleep, I vow;
Wake up — here's a friend I've plucked you! Can this flower a heart's ease now?
Something rare, let me instruct you,
Is this, with petals triply swollen,
Three times spotted, thrice the pollen;
While the leaves and parts that witness
Old proportions and their fitness,
Here remain unchanged, unmoved now;
Call this panjered thing improved now!
Suppose there's a king of the flowers
And a girl-show held in his bowers —
"Look ye, buds, this growth of ours,"
Says he, "Zanze from the Brenta,
I have made her gorge polenta
Till both cheeks are near as bonning
As her . . . name there's no pronouncing!
See this heightened color too,
For which she swilled Breganzo wine
Till her nose turned deep vermilion;
'T was but white when wild she grew,
And only by this Zanze's eyes
Of which we could not change the size,
The magnitude of all achieved
Otherwise, may be perceived."

Oh what a drear dark close to my poor day!
How could that red sun drop in that black cloud?
Ah Pippa, morning's rule is moved away,
Dispensed with, never more to be allowed!
Day's turn is over, now arrives the night's,
Oh lark, be day's apostle.
To mavis, merle and thrushle,
Bid them their betters jostle
From day and its delights!
But at night, brother owlet, over the woods,
Toll the world to thy chantry;
Sing to the bats' sleek sisterhoods
Full complines with gallantry:
Then, owls and bats,
KING VICTOR AND KING CHARLES

A TRAGEDY

This was No. II. of Bells and Pomegranates and was issued in 1842, though it appears to have been written before the publication of L'Impe des Passés. The following is the advertisement prefixed to the tragedy when first published and always afterward retained.

"So far as I know, this tragedy is the first artistic consequence of what Voltaire termed "a terrible event without consequences;" and although it professes to be historical, I have taken more pains to arrive at the history than most readers would thank me for particularizing; since acquainted, as I will hope them to be, with the chief circumstances of Victor's remarkable European career—nor quite ignorant of the sad and surprising facts I am about to reproduce, a tolerable account of which is to be found, for instance, in Abbe Roman's Récit, or even the fifth of Lord Orrery's Letters from Italy— I cannot expect them to be versed, nor desirous of becoming so, in all the detail of the memoirs, correspondence, and relations of the time. From these only may be obtained a knowledge of the fiery and audacious temper, unscrupulous selfishness, profound dissimulation, and singular fertility in resources, of Victor—the extreme and painful sensibility, prolonged impiety of powers, earnest good purpose and vacillating will of Charles—the noble and right woman's manliness of his wife—and the ill-considered rascality and subsequent better-advised rectitude of D'Ormea. When I say, therefore, that I cannot but believe my statement (combining as it does what appears correct in Voltaire and plausible in Condorcet) more true to person and thing than any it has hitherto been my fortune to meet with, no doubt my word will be taken, and my evidence spared as readily.

PERSONS

VICTOR AMORES, first King of Sanlunia.
CHARLES ÈMANUEL, his son, Prince of Piedmont.
POLYEZENA, wife of Charles.
D'ORMEA, minister.

FIRST YEAR, 1730. — KING VICTOR

PART I

SCENE. — The Council Chamber of Rivoli Palace, near Turin, communicating with a Hall at the back, an Apartment to the left, and another to the right of the stage.

TIME. 1730-31.

CHARLES, POLYXENA.

POLYXENA. My beloved,

All must clear up; we shall be happy yet:

This cannot last forever—oh, may change

To-day or any day!

Char. — May change? Ah yes—

May change.

Pol. Endure it, then.

Char. No doubt a life

Like this drag on, now better and now worse;

My father may. . . may take to loving me;

And he may take D'Ormea closer yet
To counsel him;—may even cast off her

— That bad Sebastian; but he also may

. . . Or no. Polyxena, my only friend,

He may not force you from me?

Pol. Now, force me
From you!—me, close by you as if there gloomed.
No Sebastians, no D’Ormeas on our path—
At Rivoli or Turin, still at hand,
Arch-counsellor, prime confidant... force me!
Cha. Because I felt as sure, as I feel sure
We chesp hands now, of being happy once.
Young was I, quite neglected, nor concerned
By the world’s business that encrossed so much
My father and my brother: if I peered
From out my privacy,—amid the crash
And blaze of nations, domineered those two.
’Twas war, peace—France our foe, now—England, friend—
In love with Span—at feud with Austria!—
Well—I wondered, laughed a moment’s laugh for pride
In the chivalrous couple, then let drop
My curtian—“I am out of it,” I said—
When... Pol. You have told me, Charles.
Cha. Polyxena—When suddenly,—a warm March day, just that!
Just so much sunshine as the cottage child
Basks in delighted, while thecottager
Takes off his bonnet, as he ceases work,
To catch the more of it—and it must fall
Heavily on my brother! Had you seen
Philip—the lion-featured! not like me!
Pol. I know—
Cha. And Philip’s month yet fast to mine,
His dead cheek on my cheek, his arm still round
My neck,—they bade me rise, "for I was heir
To the Duke," they said, "the right hand of the Duke;"
Till then he was my father, not the Duke.
So... let me finish... the whole intricate World’s-business their needy boy was born to, I Must conquer,—ay, the brilliant thing he was
I of a sudden must be: my faults, my follies,...
All bitter truths were told me, all at once,
To end the sooner. What I simply styled
Their over-looking me, had been contempt:
How should the Duke employ himself, forsooth,
With such an one, while lordly Philip rode By him their Turin through? But he was punished,
And must put up with me! —Twas sad enough
To learn my future portion and submit,
And then the wear and worry, blame on blame!—
For, spring-sounds in my ears, spring-smells about,
How could I but grow dizzy in their pent
Dim palace-rooms at first?—My mother’s look
As they discussed my insignificance,
She and my father, and I sitting by,—
I bore; I knew how brave a son they missed;
Philip had gayly run state-papers through,
While Charles was spelling at them painfully!
But Victor was my father spite of that.
"Duke Victor’s entire life has been," I said,—
"Imemorable efforts to one end;
And on the point now of that end’s success,
Our Ducal turning to a Kingly crown,
Where’s time to be reminded ’tis his child
He spurns?"—And so I suffered—scarcely suffered,
Since I had you at length!

Pol. To serve in place
Of monarch, minister and mistress, Charles!
Cha. But, once that crown obtained, then was’t not like
Our lot would alter? —“When he rests, takes breath,
Glances around, sees who there’s left to love—
Now that my mother’s dead, sees I am left—
Is it not like he’ll love me at the last?”
Well, Savoy turns Sardinia; the Duke’s King:
Could I—precisely then—could you expect
His harshness to redouble? These few months
Have been...have been...Polyxena, do you
And God conduct me, or I lose myself!
What would he have? —What is it they want with me?
Him with this mistress and this minister,
—You see me and you hear him; judge us both!

Pronounce what should I do, Polyxena!
Pol. Endure, endure, beloved! Say you not
He is your father? —All’s so incident
To novel sway! —Beside, our life must change:
Or you’ll acquire his kingly art, or he’ll find
Harshness a sorry way of teaching it.
I hear this—not that there’s so much to bear.
Cha. You bear? —Do not I know that you, through bound
To silence for my sake, are perishing
Piecemeal beside me? And how otherwise
When every creephole from the hideous Court
Is stopped; —the Minister to dog me, here—
The Mistress posted to entrap you, there!
And thus shall we grow old in such a life;
Not careless, never estranged,—but old: to alter
Our life, there is so much to alter!

Pol. —Come
Is it agreed that we forego complaint
Even at Turin, yet complain we here
At Rivoli?—’Twere wiser you announced
Our presence to the King. —What’s now afoot
I wonder? —Not that any more ’s to dread
Than every day’s embarrassment: but guess
For me, why train so fast suspended train
On the high-road, each gayer still than each!
I noticed your Archbishop’s pursuivant,
The sable cloak and silver cross; such pomp Bodes... what now, Charles? Can you conceive?

Cha. —Not I.
Pol. A matter of some moment
Cha. —There’s our life!
Which of the group of loiterers that stare
From the lime-avenue, divines that I—
About to figure presently, he thinks,
In face of all assembled — am the one
Who knows precisely least about it?

Pol. —Tush!
D’Ormeas’s contrivance!

Cha. —Ay, how otherwise
Should the young Prince serve for the old King’s foil?
So that the simplest courtier may remark
'Twere idle raising parties for a Prince
Content to linger the court's laughing-stock.
Something, 'tis like, about that weary business
[Pointing to papers he has laid down, and which Polynesia examines.]
Not that I comprehend three words, of course,
After all last night's study.

Pol. The faint heart!
Why, as we rode and you rehearsed just now
Its substance... (that's the folded speech I mean, Concerning the Reduction of the Fiefs)
What would you have? — I fancied while you spoke,
Some tones were just your father's.

Cha. Flattery!
Pol. I fancied so: — and here lurks, sure enough,
My note upon the Spanish Claims! You've mastered
The fief-speech thoroughly: this other, mind,
Is an opinion you deliver, — stay,
Best read it slowly over once to me;
Read — there's bare time; you read it firmly — loud.
Rather loud, looking in his face, — don't sink
Your eye once — ay, thus! "If Spain claims"
... begin
Just as you look at me!

Cha. At you! Oh truly,
You have I seen, say, marshalling your troops,
Dismissing councils, or, through doors ajar,
Head sunk on hand, devoured by slow chagrin.
Then radiant, for a crown had all at once
Seemed possible again! I can behold
Him, whose least whisper gives my spirit fast,
In this sweet brow, naught could divert me from
Save objects like Sebastian's shameless lip,
Or worse, the clipped gray hair and dead white
face
And dwindling eye as if it ache'd with guile, D'Ormea wears... (As he kisses her, enter from the King's apartment
D'Ormea.]
I said he would divert
My kisses from your brow!
D'Ormea. [Aside.] Here! So, King Victor
Spoke truth for once: and who's ordained, but I,
To make that memorable? Both in call.
As he declared! Were 't better gnash the teeth,
Or laugh outright now?

Cha. [to Pol.] What's his visit for?
D'O. [Aside.] I question if they even speak

Pol. [to Cha.] Face the man! He'll suppose you fear him else.
[Aloud.]
The Marquis bears the King's command, no doubt?

D'O. [Aside.] Precisely! — If I threatened him, perhaps?
Well, this at least is punishment enough!
Men used to promised punishment would come,
Cha. Deliver the King's message, Marquis?
D'O. [Aside.] Ah —
So anxious for his fate? [Aloud.] A word,
my Prince,
Before you see your father — just one word
Of counsel!

Cha. Oh, your counsel certainly!
Polyxena, the Marquis counsels us!
Well, sir? Be brief, however!

D'O. What? You know
As much as I? — preceded me, most like,
In knowledge! So! ("Tis in his eye, beside—
His voice: he knows it, and his heart's on flame
Already!) You surmise why you, myself,
Del Borgo, Spavna, fifty nobles more,
Are summoned thus?

Cha. Is the Prince used to know,
At any time, the pleasure of the King,
Before his minister? — Polyxena,
Stay here till I conclude my task: I feel
Your presence (smile not) through the walls, and take
Fresh heart. The King's within that chamber?

D'O. [Passing the table whereon a paper lies, exclaims, as he glances at it] "Spain!"

Pol. [Aside to Cha.] Tarry awhile: what ails the minister?

D'O. Madam, I do not often trouble you.
The Prince loathes, and you scorn me — let that pass!
But since it touches him and you, not me,
Bid the Prince listen!

Pol. [to Cha.] Surely you will listen:
— Deceit? — Those fingers crumbling up his vest?

Cha. Deceitful to the very fingers' ends!
D'O. [who has approached them, overlooks the other paper CHARLES continues to hold].
My project for the Fiefs! As I supposed!
Sir, I must give you light upon those measures
For this is mine, and that I spied of Spain,
Mine too!

Cha. Release me! Do you gloze on me
Who bear in the world's face (that is, the world)
You make for me at Turin, your contempt?
— Your measures? — When was not a hateful task
D'Ormea's imposition? I leave my robe!
What post can I bestow, what grant concede?
Or do you take me for the King?

D'O. Not I!
Not yet for King, — not for, as yet, thank God,
One in . . . shall I say a year, a month?
Ay! — shall be wretcheder than ever was slave
In his Sardinia, — Europe's spectacle.
And the world's by-word! What? The Prince aggrieved
That I excluded him our counsels? Here
[Touching the paper in Charles's hand]
Accept a method of extorting gold
From Savoy's nobles, who must wring its worth
In silver first from tillers of the soil,
Whose hinds again have to contribute brass.
To make up the amount: there's counsel, sir,
My counsel, one year old; and the fruit, this —
Savoy's become a mass of misery
And wrath, which one man has to meet — the King;
You're not the King! Another counsel, sir!
Spain entertains a project (here it lies)
Which, guessed, makes Austria offer that same
King
Thus much to baffle Spain; he promises;
Then comes Spain, breathless lest she be forestralled,

Her offer follows; and he promises . . .

Chu. — Promises, sir, when he has just agreed
To Austria's offer?

D'O. That's a counsel, Prince!

But past our foresight, Spain and Austria choosing
To make their quarrel up between themselves
Without the intervention of a friend!

Produce both treaties, and both promises . . .

Chu. How?

D'O. Prince, a counsel! And the fruit of
that?

Both parties covenant afresh, to fall
Together on their friend, hit out his name,
Abolish him from Europe. So, take note,
Here's Austria and here's Spain to fight against,
And what sustains the King but Savoy here,
A miserable people mad with wrongs?
You're not the King!

Chu. Polyxena, you said
All would clear up: all does clear up to me.

D'O. Clear up! 'T is no such thing to envy, then?

You see the King's state in its length and breadth?

You blame me now for keeping you aloof
From consults and the fruit of counsels? Wait
Till I explain this morning's business!

Chu. [Aside.] No —

Stoop to my father, yes, — D'Ormea, no:
— The King's son, not to the King's counselor!

I will do something, but at least retain
The credit of my deed! [.loud.] Then it is
this

You now expressly come to tell me?

D'O. This

To tell! You apprehend me?

Chu. Perfectly.

Further, D'Ormea, you have shown yourself,
For the first time these many weeks and months,
Disposed to do my bidding?

D'O. From the heart!

Chu. Acquaint my father, first, I wait his pleasure:

Next . . . or, I'll tell you at a fitter time.

Acquaint the King!

D'O. [Aside.] If I 'scape Victor yet!

First, to prevent this stroke at me: if not, —
Then, to avenge it! [To Chu.] Gracious sir,
I go.

[shox.]

Chu. God! I forbore! Which more offends, that man
Or that man's master? Is it come to this?
Have they supposed (the sharpest insult yet)
I needed e'en his intervention? No!
No — dull am I, conceded, — but so dull,
Scarce! Their step decides me.

Pol. How decides?

Chu. You would be freed D'Ormea's eye and hers?
— Could fly the court with me and live content?
So, this it is for which the knights assemble!

The whispers and the closeting of late,
The savageness and insolence of old,
— For this!

Pol. What mean you?

Chu. How? You fail to catch
Their clever plot? I missed it, but could you?
These last two months of care to inculeate
How dull I am, — D'Ormea's present visit
To prove that, being dull, I might be worse
Were I a King — as wretched as now dull —
You recognize in it no winding up
Of a long plot?

Pol. Why should there be a plot?

Chu. The crown's secure now; I should shame the crown —

An old complaint; the point is, how to gain
My place for one more fit in Victor's eyes,
His mistress the Sebastian's child.

Pol. In truth?

Chu. They dare not quite dethrone Sardinia's Prince:

But they may despise on my dulness till
They sting me into even praying them
Grant leave to hide my head, reign my state,
And end the coil. Not see now? In a word,
They'd have me tender them myself my rights
As one incapable; — some cause for that.
Since I delayed thus long to see their drift!
I shall apprise the King he may resume
My rights this moment.

Pol. Pause! I dare not think

So ill of Victor.

Chu. Think no ill of him!

Pol. Nor think him, then, so shallow as to Suffer

His purpose be divided thus easily,

And yet — you are the last of a great line;
There's a great heritage at stake; new days
Seemed to await this newest of the realms

Of Europe: — Charles, you must withstand

this!

Chu. Ah!

You dare not then renounce the splendid court

For one whom all the world despises? Speak!

Pol. My gentle husband, speak I will, and

truth.

Were this as you believe, and I once sure
Your duty lay in so renown'd rule,
I could . . . could? Oh what happiness it

were

To live, my Charles, and die, alone with you!

Chu. I grieve I asked you. To the presence, then!

By this, D'Ormea acquaints the King, no

doubt,

He fears I am too simple for mere hints,
And that no less will serve than Victor's month
Demonstrating in council what I am.
I have not breathed, I think, these many years!

Pol. Why, it may be! — if he desire to wed
That woman, call legitimate her child.

Chu. You see as much? Oh, let bis will have way!

You'll not repent confiding in me, love?

There's many a brighter spot in Piedmont, far,
Than Rivoli. I'll seek him: or, suppose

You hear first how I mean to speak my mind?
Loudly and firmly both, this time, be sure!
I yet may see your Rhine-land, who can tell?
Once away, ever then away! I breathe, Prit. And I too breathe.
Cha. Come, my Polyxena!

KING VICTOR

PART II

Enter King Victor, bearing the regalia on a cushion, from banquet: He cries loudly —
D'Ormea! — for patience fails me, treading thus
Among the obscure trains I have laid, — my knights Safe in the hall here — in that anteroom. My son, D'Ormea, where? Of this, one touch — [Laying down the crown. This fireball to these mute black cold trains — then Outbreak enough! [Contemplating it.] To lose all, after all! This, glancing o'er my house for ages — shaped, Brave meteor, like the crown of Cyprus now, Jerusalem, Spain, England, every change The braver, — and when I have clutched a prize My ancestry died wan with watching for, To lose it! — by a slip, a fault, a trick Learnt to advantage once and not unlearned When past the use, — "just this once more" (I thought) "Use it with Spain and Austria happily, And then away with trick!" An oversight I'd have repaired thrice over, any time These fifty years, must happen now! There's At length; and I, to make the most of peace, Ventured my project on our people here, As needing not their help: which Europe knows, And means, cold-blooded, to dispose herself [Apart from plausibilities of war] To crush the new-made King — who ne'er till now Fears her. As Duke, I lost each foot of earth And laughed at her; my name was left, my sword Left, all was left! But she can take, she knows. This crown, herself conceded . . . That's to try, Kind Europe! — My career's not closed as yet. This boy was ever subject to my will, Timid and tame — the fitter! — D'Ormea, too What if the sovereign also rid himself Of thee, his prime of parasites? I delay! D'Ormea! (As D'Ormea enters, the King seats himself.) My son, the Prince — attends he? D'Or. Sir. He does attend. The crown prepared! — it seems That you persist in your resolve. Victor. Who's come? The chancellor and the chamberlain? My knights?

D'Or. The whole Annunziata. If, my liege. Your fortune had not tottered worse than now . . . Vic. Del Borgo has drawn up the schedules? mine — My son's, too! Excellent! Only, beware Of the least blunder, or we look but fools. First, you read the Annulment of the Oaths; Del Borgo follows . . . no, the Prince shall sign: Then let Del Borgo read the Instrument: On which, I enter. D'Or. Sir, this may be truth; You, sir, may do as you affect — may break Your engine, me, to pieces; try at least. If not a spring remain worth saving? Take My counsel as I've counselled many times! What if the Spaniard and the Austrian threat? There's England, Holland, Venice — which ally Select you? Vic. Aha! Come, D'Ormea, — "truth" Was on your lip a minute since. Allies? I've broken faith with Venice, Holland, Eng- land — As who knows if not you? D'Or. But why with me? Break faith — with one ally, your best, break faith? Vic. When first I stumbled on you, Marquis — 't was At Mondovi — a little lawyer's clerk . . . D'Or. Therefore your soul's ally! who brought you through Your quarrel with the Pope, at pains enough — Who simply echoed you in these affairs On whom you cannot therefore visit these Affairs' ill fortune — whom you trust to guide You safe yes, on your soul! through these affairs! Vic. I was about to notice, had you not Prevented me, that since that great town kept With its chieftain D'Ormea's satchel stuffed And D'Ormea's self sufficiently recluse. He missed a sight, — my naval armament When I burned Toulon. How the skiff exults Upon the galliot's wave! — rises its height, Overtops it even; but the great wave bursts, And hell-deep in the horrible profound Buries itself the galliot: shall the skiff Think to escape the sea's black trough in turn? Apply this: you have been my minister — Next me, above me possibly: — sad post, Huge care, abundant lack of peace of mind; Who would desiderate the eminence? You gave your soul to get it; you'd yet give Your soul to keep it, as I mean you shall, D'Ormea! What if the wave ebbed with me? Whereas it casts you to another crest; I toss you to my son; ride out your ride! D'Or. Ah, you so much despise me! Vic. You, D'Ormea? Nowise: and I'll inform you why. A king Must in his time have many ministers, And I've been rash enough to part with mine. When I thought proper. Of the tribe, not one ( . . . Or wait, did Pianezze? . . . ah, just the same!) Not one of them, ere his remonstrance reached The length of yours, but has assured me (com-
Standing much as you stand, — or nearer, say,
The door to make his exit on his style!
— I should repent of what I did. D'Ormeas.
Be candid, you approached it when I bade you Prepare the schedules! But you stopped in time.
You have not so assured me; how should I
Despise you then?
(Enter Charles.)
Vic. [Changing his tone.] Are you instructed?
Do.
My order, point by point! About it, sir!
D'O. You so despise me! [Aside.] One last stay remains —
The boy's discretion there.
[To Cha.] For your sake, Prince,
I pleaded, wholly in your interest,
To save you from this fate!
Cha. [Aside.] Must I be told
The Prince was supplicated for — by him?
Vic. [To D'O.] Apprise Del Borgo, Spava,
and the rest,
Our son attends them; then return.
D'O. One word!
Cha. [Aside.] A moment's pause and they would drive me hence,
I do believe!
D'O. [Aside.] Let but the boy be firm!
Vic. You disobey?
Cha. [To D'O.] You do not obey
Me, at least. Did you promise that or no?
D'O. Sir, I am yours: what would you
Yours am I!
Cha. When I have said what I shall say,
't is like
Your face will ne'er again disgust me. Go!
Through you, as through a breach of glass, I see.
And for your conduct, from my youth till now,
Take my contempt! You might have spared me much.
Secured me somewhat, nor so harmed yourself:
That's over now. Go, ne'er to come again!
D'O. Asson, the father — father, as the son!
My wits! My wits!
[Vic. [Seated.] And you, what meant you, pray,
Speaking thus to D'Ormeas?
Cha.
Let us not
Waste words upon D'Ormeas! Those I spent
Have half unvisited what I came to say,
His presence vexes to my very soul.
Vic. One called to manage a kingdom, Charles, needs heart
To bear up under worse annoyances
Than seems D'Ormeas — to me, at least.
Cha. [Aside.] Ah, good!
He keeps me to the point! Then be it so.
[Aside.] Last night, sir, brought me certain papers these
To be reported on, — your way of late.
Is it last night's result that you demand?
Vic. For God's sake, what has night brought forth? Pronounce
The . . . what's your word? — result!
Cha.
Sir, that had proved
Quite worthy of your sneer, no doubt: — a few
Lame thoughts, regard for you alone could wring,
Lame as they are, from brains like mine, be-Low.
As 'tis, sir, I am spared both toil and sneer.
These are the papers.
Vic. Well, sir? I suppose
You hardly burned them. Now for your result!
Cha. I never should have done great things,
of course,
But . . . oh my father, had you loved me more!
Vic. Loved? [Aside.] Has D'Ormeas played me false, I wonder?
[Aside.] Why, Charles, a king's love is diffused
— yourself
May overlook, perchance, your part in it.
Our monarchy is absolvist now
In Europe, or my troubles thrown away,
I love, my mode, that subjects each and all
May have the power of loving, all and each.
Their mode: I doubt not, many have their sons
To trifle with, talk soft to, all day long:
I have that crown, this chair, D'Ormeas, Charles!
Cha. 'Tis well I am a subject then, not you.
Vic. [Aside.] D'Ormeas has told him everything.
[Aside.] Aha,
I apprehend you: when all's said, you take
Your private station to be prized beyond
My own, for instance?
Cha. — Do and ever did
So take it: 'tis the method you pursue
That grieves . . .
Vic. These words! Let me express, my friend,
Your thoughts. You penetrate what I supposed
Secret. D'Ormeas plies his trade betimes!
I purpose to resign my crown to you.
Cha. To me?
Vic. Now. — in that chamber.
Cha. You resign
The crown to me?
Vic. And time enough, Charles, sure?
Confess with me, at four-and-sixty years
A crown's a load. I covet quiet once
Before I die, and summoned you for that,
Cha. 'Tis I will speak: you ever hated me,
I bore it, — have insulted me, borne too —
Now you insult yourself; and I remember
What I believed you, what you really are,
And cannot bear it. What? My life has passed
I under your eye, tormented as you know, —
Your whole sagacities, one after one,
At leisure brought to play on me — to prove me
A fool, I thought and I submitted; now
You'd prove . . . what would you prove me?
Vic. This to me?
I hardly know you!
Cha. Know me? Oh indeed
You do not! Wait till I complain next time
Of my simplicity! — for here's a sage
Knows the world well, is not to be deceived,
And his experience and his Machiavels,
D'Ormeas, teach him — what? — that I this while
Have envied him his crown! He has not smiled,
I warrant, — has not eaten, drunk, nor slept,
For I was plotting with my Princess yonder!
Who knows what we might do or might not do?
Go now, be polite, astound the world!
That sentry in the ante-chamber — may,
The valet who disposed this precious trap

"Wanting to the crown.

That was to take me — ask them if they think
Their own sons envy them their posts! — Know me!

Vie. But you know me, it seems: so, learn, in brief.

My pleasure. This assembly is convened . . .

Cha. Tell me, that woman put it in your head!
You were not sole contriver of the scheme,
My father!

Vie. Now observe me, sir! I jest
Seldom — on these points, never. Here, I say,
The knights assemble to see me concede,
And you accept, Sardinia's crown.

Cha. Farewell!
'T were vain to hope to change this; I can end it.
Not that I cease from being yours, when sunk
Into obscurity: I'll die for you,
But not annoy you with my presence. Sir,
Farewell! Farewell! (Enter D'Ormea.)

D'O. [Aside.] Ha, sure he's changed again —
Means not to fall into the cunning trap!
Then, Victor, I shall yet escape you. Victor!

Vie. [Suddenly placing the crown upon the head of Charles.] D'Ormea, your king!

[To Cha.] My son, obey me! Charles,
Your father, clearer-sighted than yourself.
Decides it must be so. "Faith, this looks real!
My reasons after; reason upon reason
After: but now, obey me! Trust in me!

By this, you save Sardinia, you save me!

Why, the boy swoons! [To D'O.] Come this side!

D'O. [Is Charles turns from him to Victor.] You persist?

Vie. Yes. I conceive the gesture's meaning.
"Faith,

He almost seems to hate you: how is that?
Be reassured, my Charles! Is't over now?

Then, Marquis, tell the new King what remains
To do! A moment's work. Del Borgo reads
The Act of Abdication out, you sign it,
Then I sign; after that, come back to me.

D'O. Sir, for the last time, pause!

Vie. Five minutes longer
I am your sovereign, Marquis. Hesitate —
And I'll so turn those minutes to account
That . . . Av, you recollect me! [Aside.]
Could I bring

My foolish mind to undergo the reading
That Act of Abdication:

[As Charles motions D'Ormea to precede him.
Thanks, dear Charles!]

Vie. A novel feature in the boy. — indeed
Just what I feared he wanted most. Quite right.

This earnest tone: your truth, now for effect!
It answers every purpose: with that look.

That voice, — I hear him: "I began no treaty."

He speaks to Spain. "Nor ever dreamed of this
You show me; this I from my soul regret;
But if my father signed it, bid not me

Dishonor him — who gave me all, beside;"

And, "true," says Spain, "'t were harsh to visit that Upon the Prince." Then come the nobles
Trouping:

"I grieve at these exactions — I had cut
This hand off ere impose them; but shall I
Undo my father's deed?" — and they confer:

"Doubtless he was no party, after all;
Give the Prince time!"

Av, give us time, but time!
Only, he must not, when the dark day comes
Refer our friends to me and trustrare all.

We'll have no child's play, no desponding fits,
No Charles at each cross turn entreating Victor
To take his crown again. Guard against that!

(Enter D'Ormea.)

Long live King Charles!

No — Charles's counsellor!
Well, is it over, Marquis? — Did I jest?

D'O. "King Charles!" What then may you be?

Vie. Anything!
A country gentleman that, cured of bustle,
Now beats a quick retreat toward Chambery,
Would hunt and hawk and leave you noisy folk
To drive your trade without him. I'm Count Remont —

Count Tende — any little place's Count!

D'O. Then Victor, Captain against Catnait
At Staffarde, where the French beat you; and Duke

At Turin, where you beat the French; King late

Of Savoy, Piedmont, Montferrat, Sardinia.
— Now, "any little place's Count —

Vie.

D'O. Breaker of vows to God, who crowned you first:

Breaker of vows to man, who kept you since;
Most profligate to me who outraged God
And man to serve you, and am made pay crimes
I was but privy to, by passing thus
To your inconstant son — who, well you know,
Must — (when the people here, and nations there)
Cla
dor for you the main delinquent, slipped
From King to — 'Count of any little place')!
Must needs surrender me, all in his reach, —
I, sir, forgive you: for I see the end
See you on your return — (you will return) —
To him you trust, a moment . . .

Vie.

Trust him? How?
My poor man, merely a prime-minister.
Make me know where my trust errs!
D'O.

In his fear,
His love, his — but discover for yourself
What you are weakest, trusting in!

Vie.

Ah,
D'Ormea, not a shrewder scheme than this
In your repertory? You know old Victor —
Vain, choleric, inconstant, rash — (I've heard Talkers who little thought the King so close) —
Felicous now, were 't not, to provoke him
To clean forget, one minute afterward,
His solemn act, and call the nobles back
And pray them give again the very power
He has abjured? — for the dear sake of what?
Vengeance on you, D'Ormea! No; such am I, Count Tende or Count anything you please. — Only, the same that did the things you say, and, among other things you say not, used your finest fibre, meanest muscle, — you I used, and now, since you will have it so, leave to your fate — mere lumber in the midst, you and your works. Why, what on earth beside?

Are you made for, you sort of ministers? D'O. Not left, though, to my fate! Your witless son

Has more wit than to load himself with lumber: He foils you that way, and I follow you. V(ic). Stay with my son — protect the weaker side!

D'O. Ay, to be tossed the people like a rag, and flung by them for Spain and Austria's sport.

Abolishing the record of your part

In all this perfidy! V(ic). Prevent, beside, My own return!

D'O. That's half prevented now! 'T will go hard but you find a wondrous charm In exile, to discredit me. The Alps,

Silk-mills to watch, vines asking vigilance — Hounds open for the stag, your hawk's a-wing — Brave days that wait the Louis of the South, Italy's Janus!

V(ic). So, the lawyer's clerk Won't tell me that I shall repent!

D'O. You give me full leave to ask if you repent?

V(ic). Whene'er sufficient time's elapsed for that, you judge!

[Shouts inside, 'King Charles!' D'O. Do you repent?

V(ic). [After a slight pause.] I've kept them waiting? Yes!

Come in, complete the Abdication, sir! [They go out. (Enter Polyxena.)

Pol. A shout! The sycophants are free of Charles! Oh, is not this like Italy? No fruit Of his or my distempered fancy, this, But just an ordinary fact! Beside, Here they've set forms for such proceedings; Victor Imprisoned his own mother: he should know, If any, how a son's to be deprived Of a son's right. Our duty's palpable, N'éer was my husband for the wily king And the unworthy subjects: be it so! Come you safe out of them, my Charles! Our life Grows not the broad and dazzling life, I dreamed Might prove your lot: for strength was shot in you None guessed but I — strength which, untrammeled once, Had little shamed your vaunted ancestry — Patience and self-devotion, fortitude, Simplicity and utter truthfulness — All which, they shout to lose!

So, now my work Begins — to save him from regret. Save Charles

Regret? — the noble nature! He's not made Like these Italians: 'tis a German soul. (Charles enters crowned.)

Oh, where's the King's heir? Gone: — the Crown-prince? Gone: — Where's Savoy? Gone! — Sardinia? Gone! But Charles Is left! And when my Rhine-land bowers arrive, If he looked almost handsome yester-twilight As his gray eyes seemed widening into black Because I praised him, then how will he look? Farewell, you stripped and whitened mulberry-trees Bound each to each by lazy ropes of vine!

Now I'll teach you my language: I'm not forced To speak Italian now, Charles? [She sees the crown.] What is this? Answer me — who has done this? Answer! Cha. He! I am King now.

Pol. Oh worst, worst, worst of all! Tell me! What, Victor? He has made you King?

What's he then? What's to follow this? You, King?

Cha. Have I done wrong? Yes, for you were not by! Pol. Tell me from first to last.

Cha. Hush — a new world Brightens before me; he is moved away — The dark form that eclipsed it, he subsides Into a shape supporting me like you, And I, alone, tend upward, more and more Tend upward: I am grown Sardinia's King.

Pol. Now stop: was not this Victor, Duke of Savoy At ten years old?

Cha. He was.

Pol. And the Duke spent, Since then, just four-and-fifty years in toil To be — what? Cha. King.

Pol. Then why unking himself? Cha. Those years are cause enough.

Pol. The only cause? Cha. Some new perplexities.

Pol. Which you can solve Although he cannot? Cha. He assures me so.

Pol. And this he means shall last — how long? Cha. How long? Think you I fear the perils I confront? He's praising me before the people's face — My people!

Pol. Then he's changed — grown kind, the King?

Where can the trap be? Cha. Heart and soul I pledge! My father, could I guard the crown you gained. Transmit as I received it, — all good else Would I surrender?

Pol. Ah, it opens then
Before you, all you dreaded formerly?
You are rejoiced to be a king, my Charles?
Cha. So much to dare? The better,—much to dread.
The better: hold. I'll adventure though alone.
Triumph or die, there's Victor still to witness
Who dies or triumphs,—either way, alone!
Pol. Once I had found my share in triumph,
Charles,
Or death.
Cha. But you are I! But you I call
To take, Heaven's proxy. vows I tendered
Heaven
A moment since. I will deserve the crown!
Pol. You will, [Aside.] No doubt it were a glorious thing
For any people, if a heart like his Ruled over it. I would I saw the trap.
(Enter Victor.)
'Tis he must show me.
Vic. So, the mask falls off
An old man's foolish love at last. Spare thanks!
I know you, and Polyxena I know.
Here's Charles — I am his guest now — does he bid me
Be seated? And my light-haired blue-eyed child
Must not forget the old man far away
At Chambery, who dozes while she reigns.
Pol. Most grateful shall we now be, talking least
Of gratitude — indeed of anything
That hinders what yourself must need to say
To Charles.
Cha. Pray speak, sir!
Vic. Faith. not much to say;
Only what shows itself, once 'tis the point
Of sight. You're now the King; you'll comprehend Much you may oft have wondered at,—the shifts.
Dissimulation, wiliness I showed,
For what's our post? Here's Savoy and here's Piedmont,
Here's Montferrat — a breadth here, a space there—
To o'er-sweep all these, what's one weapon
worth?
I often think of how they fought in Greece
(Or Rome, which was it? You're the scholar, Charles!) You made a front-thrust? But if your shield
too
Were not adroitly planted, some shrewd knave
Reached you behind; and him foiled, straight if thong
And handle of that shield were not cast loose,
And you enabled to outstrip the wind.
Fresh foes assailed you, either side; 'scape these,
And reach your place of refuge — even then, in odds
If the gate opened unless breath enough
Were left in you to make its lord a speech.
Oh, you will see!
Cha. No: straight on shall I go,
Truth helping; win with it or die with it.
Vic. Faith, Charles, you're not made
Europe's fighting-man!
The barrier-guarder, if you please. You clutch
Hold and consolidate, with envious France
This side, with Austria that, the territory
I held — ay, and will hold... which you shall Despite the couple! But I've surely earned
Exemption from these weary politics,
The privilege to prattle with my son
And daughter here, though Europe wait the while.
Pol. Nay, sir,—at Chambery, away forever,
As soon you will be, 'tis farewell we bid you:
Turn these few fleeting moments to account!
'T is just as though it were a death.
Vic. [Aside.] Is the trap there?
Cha. Ay, call this parting — death!
Pol. The sacred your memory becomes,
If I misrule Sardinia, how bring back
My father?
Vic. I mean...
Pol. [who watches Victor narrowly this while]. Your father does not mean
You should be ruling for your father's sake:
It is your people must concern you wholly Instead of him. You mean this, sir? (He drops
My hand!)
Cha. That people is now part of me.
Vic. About the people! I took certain measures
Some short time since... Oh, I know well,
you know
But little of my measures! These affect
The nobles; we've resumed some grants, imposed
A tax or two: prepare yourself, in short,
For clour in on that score. Mark me: you yield
No jot of aught entrusted you!
No jot
You yield!
Cha. My father, when I took the oath,
Although my eye might stray in search of yours,
I heard it, understood it, promised God
What you require. Till from this eminence
He move me, here I keep, nor shall concede
The meanest of my rights.
Vic. [Aside.] The boy's a fool!
— Or rather, I'm a fool: for, what's wrong here?
To-day the sweets of reigning: let to-morrow
Be ready with its bitters.
(Enter D'Ormea.)
There's beside
Somewhat to press upon your notice first,
Cha. Then why delay it for an instant, sir?
That Spanish claim perchance?... And, now you speak.
— This morning, my opinion was mature,
Which, boy-like, I was bashful in producing
To one I ne'er am like to fear in future!
My thought is formed upon that Spanish claim.
Vic. Betimes indeed. Not now, Charles! You require
A host of papers on it.
D'Or. [Coming forward.] Here they are.
[To Cha.] I, sir, was minister and much beside
Of the late monarch; to say little, him
I served: on you I have, to say e'en less.
No claim. This case contains those papers:—

I tender you my office.

Vic. (Hastily.) Keep him, Charles! There's reason for it — many reasons: you

Distrust him, nor are so far wrong there,—but

He's mixed up in this matter — he'll desire

To quit you, for occasions known to me:

Do not accept those reasons: have him stay!

Pol. [Aside.] His minister thrust on us!

Cha. [To D'O.] Sir, believe,

In justice to myself, you do not need

To en this commending: howsoever might seem

My feelings toward you, as a private man.

They quit me in the vast and nutried field

Of action. Though I shall myself (as late

In your own hearing I engaged to do)

Preside over my Sardinia, yet your help

Is necessary. Think the past forgotten

And serve me now!

D'O. I did not offer you

My service — would that I could serve you, sir!

As for the Spanish matter . . .

Vic. But dispatch

At least the dead, in my good daughter's phrase,

Before the living! Help to house me safe

Ere with D'Ormea you set the world agape!

Here is a paper — will you overlook

What I propose requiring for my needs?

I get as far from you as possible:

Here's what I reckon my expenditure.

Cha. [Reading.] A miserable fifty thousand crowns!

Vic. Oh, quite enough for country gentle-

men!

Beside, the exchequer happens . . . but find

out

All that, yourself!

Cha. [Still reading.] "Count Tende" —

what means this?

Vic. Me: you were but an infant when I burst

Through the defile of Tende upon France.

Had only my allies kept true to me!

No matter. Tende's, then, a name I take

Just as . . .

D'O. — The Marchioness Sebastian takes

The name of Spigno.

Cha. Vic. [To D'O.] Fool! All that

Was for my own detailing. [To Cha.] That anon!

Cha. [To D'O.] Explain what you have said, sir!

D'O. I supposed

The marriage of the King to her I named,

Profundly kept a secret these few weeks,

Was not to be one, now he's Count.

Pol. [Aside.] With us

The minister — with him the mistress!

Cha. [To Vic.] No —

Tell me you have not taken her: that woman

To live with, past recall!

Vic. And where's the crime . . .

Pol. [To Cha.] True, sir, this is a matter

past recall

And past your cognizance. A day before,

And you had been compelled to note this —

now

Why note it? The King saved his House from shame:

What the Count did, is no concern of yours,

Cha. [After a pause.] The Spanish claim,

D'Ormea!

Vic. Why, my son,

I took some ill-advised . . . one's age, in fact.

Spoils everything: though I was overreached,

A younger brain, we'll trust, may extricate

Sardinia readily. To-morrow, D'Ormea,

Inform the King!

D'O. [Without regarding Victor, and leisurely.] Thus stands the case with Spain:

When first the Infant Carlos claimed his proper

Succession to the throne of Tuscany . . .

Vic. I tell you, that stands over! Let that rest!

There is the policy!

Cha. [To D'O.] Thus much I know,

And more — too much. The remedy?

D'O. Of course!

No glimpse of one.

Vic. No remedy at all!

It makes the remedy itself — time makes it.

D'O. [To Cha.] But if . . .

Vic. [Still more hastily.] In fine, I shall take care of that:

And, with another project that I have . . .

D'O. [Turning on him.] Oh, since Count

Tende means to take again

King Victor's crown —

Pol. [Throwing herself at Victor's feet.]

E'en now retake it, sir!

Oh, speak! We are your subjects both, once more!

Say it — a word effects it! You meant not,

Nor do mean now, to take it: but you must!

'Tis in you — in your nature — and the shame's

Not half the shame 't would grow to afterwards!

Cha. Polyxena!

Pol. A word recalls the knights —

Say it! — What's promising and what's the past?

Say you are still King Victor!

D'O. The Count repents, in brief!

[Victor rises.]

Cha. With such a crime

I have not charged you, sir!

Pol. Charles turns from me!

SECOND YEAR, 1731. — KING CHARLES

PART I

Enter Queen Polyxena and D'Ormea. — A pause.

Pol. And now, sir, what have you to say?

D'O. Count Tende . . .

Pol. Affirm not I betrayed you; you resolve

On uttering this strange intelligence

— Nay, put yourself to find me ere I reach

The capital, because you know King Charles

Tarries a day or two at Evian baths
Behind me:—but take warning, here and thence. Nothing heard! in the royal ear.
I listen, if I listen—not your friend.
Explicitly the statement, if you still
Persist to urge it on me, must proceed:
If I am not made for aught else.

D'O. Good! Count Tende...
Pol. 1. who mistrust you, shall acquaint
King Charles,
Who even more mistrusts you.

D'O. Does he so?
Pol. Why should he not?

D'O. Ay, why not? Motives, seek
Your virtuous people, motives! Say, I serve
God at the devil’s bidding—will that do?
I’m proud: our people have been pacified.
Really I know not how—

By truthfulness,

D'O. Exactly; that shows I have naught to do
With pacifying them. Our foreign perils
Also exceed my means to stay: but here
‘Tis otherwise, and my pride’s piqued. Count Tende Completes a full year’s absence: would you,
madam,
Have the old monarch back, his mistress back,
His measures back? I pray you, act upon
My counsel, or they will be—I

Pol. When?

D'O. Let’s think.

Home-matters settled—Victor’s coming now;
Let foreign matters settle—Victor’s here
Unless I stop him; as I will, this way.

Pol. [Reading the papers he presents.] If this should prove a plot (twixt you and Victor? You Seek annoyances to give the pretext
For what you say you fear?

D'O. Oh, possibly!
I go for nothing. Only show King Charles
That thus Count Tende purposes return,
And style me his inviter, if you please!

Pol. Half of your tale is true; most likely, the Count
Seeks to return: but why stay you with us?
To aid in such emergencies.

Keep safe
Those papers: or, to serve me, leave no proof
I thus have counselled! When the Count returns,
And the King abdicates, ‘twill steal me little
To have thus counselled.

Pol. The King abdicates! D’O. He’s good, we knew long since—wise, we discover—
Firm, let us hope:—but I’d have gone to work
With him away. Well! [Enter Charles without] In the Council Chamber?
D’O. All’s lost!
Pol. Oh, surely not King Charles! He’s changed—
That’s not this year’s care-burdened voice and step:
*Tis last year’s step, the Prince’s voice!

Enter Charles—D’Ormea retiring a little.
Cha. Now wish me joy, Polyxena! Wish it me

The old way! [She embraces him.

There was too much cause for that!
But I have found myself again. What news?
At Turin? Oh, if you but felt the load
I’m free of—free! I said this year would end
Or it, or me— but I am free, thank God!

Pol. How, Charles?

Cha. You do not guess? The day I found
Sardinia’s hideous coil, at home, abroad,
And how my father was involved in it,—
Of course, I vowed to rest and smile no more
Until I cleared his name from obloquy.
We did the people right—‘t was much to gain
That point, redress our nobles’ grievance, too—
But that took place here, was no urging shame.
All must be done abroad,—if I abroad
Appeased the justly-angered Powers, destroyed
The scandal, took down Victor’s name at last
From a bad eminence. I then might breathe
And rest! No moment was to lose. Behold
The proud result—a Treaty, Austria, Spain Agree to—

D'O. [Aside.] I shall merely stipulate
For an experienced headman.

Cha. Not a soul
Is compromised: the blotted past’s a blank:
Even D’Ormea escapes unquestioned. See!
I reached me from Vienna; I remained
At Evian to dispatch the Count his news;
’Tis gone to Chambery a week ago—
And here am I: do I deserve to feel
Your warm white arms around me?

D’O. [Coming forward.] He knows that?
Cha. What, in Heaven’s name, means this?
He knows that matters
Are settled at Vienna? Not too late!
Plainly, unless you post this very hour
Some man you trust (say, me) to Chambery
And take precautions I acquaint you with,
Your father will return here.

Cha. Are you crazed, D’Ormea? Here? For what? As well return
To take his crown!

D’O. He will return for that.

Cha. [To Pol.] You have not listened to this man?

Pol. He spoke
About your safety—and I listened.

Cha. [To D’O.] What
Apprised you of the Count’s intentions?

D’O. His heart, sir; you may not be used to read
Such evidence however; therefore read

[Pointing to Polyxena’s papers.
My evidence.

Cha. [To Pol.] Oh, worthy this of you!
And of your speech I never have forgotten,
Though I professed forgetfulness; which haunts me
As if I did not know how false it was;
Which made me toil unconsciously thus long
That there might be no least occasion
For aught of its prediction coming true!
And now, when there is left no least occasion
To instigate my father to such crime —
When I might venture to forget (I hoped)
That speech and recognize Polyxena —
Oh worthy, to revive, and tenfold worse,
That plague! D'Ormea at your ear, his slanders
Still in your hand! Silent?
Pol. As the wronged are.
Cha. And you, D'Ormea, since when have you presumed
To spy upon my father? I conceive
What that wise paper shows, and easily,
Since when?
D'O. The when and where and low belong
To me. 'Tis sad work, but I deal in such.
You oftentimes serve yourself; I'd serve you here:
Use makes me not so squeamish. In a word,
Since the first hour he went to Chambery,
Of his seven servants, five have I subdued.
Cha. You hate my father?
D'O. Oh, just as you will!
[Looking at Polyxena.]
A minute since, I loved him; hate him, now!
What matter? — if you ponder just one thing:
Has he that treaty? — he is setting forward
Already. Are your guards here?
Cha. Well for you
They are not! [To Pol.] Him I knew of old,
but you —
To hear that pickthanal, further his designs!
[To D'O.]
Guards? — were they here, I'd bid them, for your trouble,
 Arrest you.
D'O. Guards you shall not want. I lived
The servant of your choice, not of your need.
You never greatly needed me till now
That you discard me. This is my arrest.
Again I tender you my charge — its duty
Would bid me press you read those documents.
Here, sir! [Offering his badge of Office.]
Cha. [Taking it.] The papers also! Do you think
I dare not read them?
Pol. Read them, sir!
Cha. They prove,
My father, still a month within the year
Since he so solemnly consigned it me,
Means to resume his crown? They shall prove that,
Or my best dungeon... .
D'O. 'Tis vacant, I surmise, by this.
Cha. You prove
Your words or pay their forfeit, sir. Go there!
Polyxena, one chance to read the veil
Thickening and blackening 'twixt us two! Do say,
You'll see the falsehood of the charges proved!
Do say, at least, you wish to see them proved
False charges — my heart's love of other times!
Pol. Ah, Charles!
Cha. [To D'O.] Preced me, sir!
D'O. And I'm at length
A martyr for the truth! No end, they say,
Of miracles. My conscious innocence!
(As they go out, enter — by the middle door, at which he pauses — Victor.)

Vic., Sure I heard voices? No. Well, I do be!
To make at once for this, the heart o' the place.
The old room! Nothing changed! So near my seat, D'Ormea? [Pushing away the stool which is by the King's chair.]
I want that meeting over first,
I know not why. Tush, he, D'Ormea, slow
To temper me, the apple knave? That burst
Of spite so eased him! He 'll inform me... .
What?
Why come I hither? All's in rough: let all Remain rough. There's full time to draw back
— ay,
There's might to draw back from, as yet; whereas,
If reason should be, to arrest a course
Of error — reason good, to interpose
And save, as I have saved so many times,
Our House, admonish my son's giddy youth.
Relieve him of a weight that proves too much —
Now is the time, — or now, or never.
[Faith,
This kind of step is pitiful, not due
To Charles, this stealing back — hither, because He's from his capital! Oh Victor! Victor!
But thus it is. The age of crafty men
Is loathsome; youth contrives to carry off
Dissimulation; we may intersperse
Extenuating passages of strength,
Ardor, vivacity and wit — may turn
Even guile into a voluntary grace:
But one's old age, when graces drop away
And leave guile the pure staple of our lives —
Ah, loathsome!
Not so — or why pause I? Turin
Is mine to have, were I so minded, for
The asking: all the army's mine — I've wit-nessed
Each private fight beneath me; all the Court's Mine too; and, best of all, D'Ormea's still D'Ormea mine and mine. There's some grace cling-ing yet,
Had I decided on this step, ere midnight
I'd take the crown.
No. Just this step to rise
Exhausts me. Here am I arrived: the rest
Must be done for me. Would I could sit here
And let things right themselves, the masque mummasque
Of the old King, crownless, gray hair and hot blood,
The young King, crowned, but calm before his time,
They say, — the eager mistress with her taunts, —
And the sad earnest wife who motions me
Away — ay, there she knelt to me! Even yet
I can return and sleep at Chambery
A dream out. Rather shake it off at Turin.
King Victor! Say: to Turin — yes, or no?
'Tis this relentless noonday-lighted chamber.
Lighted like life but silent as the grave,
That disconcerts me. That's the change must strike.
No silence last year! Some one throng doors wide;
(Those two great doors which scrutinize me now)
And out I went, 'mid crowds of men — men talking,
Men watching if my lip fell or brow knit.
I
Men saw me safe forth, put me on my road:
That makes the misery of this return.
Oh had a battle done it! Had I dropped,
Haling some battle, three entire days old,
Hither and thither by the forehead — dropped
In Spain, in Austria, best of all, in France —
Soured on its horns or underneath its hoofs.
When the spent monster went upon its knees.
To pad and push the prostrate wretch — I, Victor.
Sole to have stood up against France, beat down
By inches, brayed to pieces finally.
In some vast unimaginable charge,
A flying hell of horse and foot and guns.
Over me, and all's lost, forever lost,
There's no more Victor when the world wakes up!
Then silence, as of a raw battlefield,
Throughout the world. Then after as whole days
After, you catch at intervals faint noise
Through the stiff crust of frozen blood — there creeps
A rumor forth, so faint, no noise at all,
That a strange old man, with face outworn for wounds,
Is stumbling on from frontier town to town,
 Begging a petition that may help him find
His Turin out; what scorn and laughter follow
The coin you fling into his cap! And last,
Some bright morn, how men crowd about the midst
O' the market-place, where takes the old king breath
Ere with his crutch he strike the palace-gate
Wide ope!
To Turin, yes or no — or no?
(Re-enter Charles with papers.)

Cha. Just as I thought! A miserable false-hood
Of hirelings discontented with their pay
And longing for estrangement! A few
Testy expressions of old age that thinks
To keep alive its dignity o'er slaves
By means that suit their natures.
[Tearing them.] Thus they shake
My faith in Victor!
[Turning, he discovers Victor.]

Vic. [After a pause.] No at Evian, Charles? What's this? Why do you run to close the doors?
No welcome for your father?

(Aside.)

Cha. Not his voice!
What would I give for one imperious tone
Of the old sort! That's gone forever.

Vic. Must I ask once more...

Cha. No — I concede it, sir.
You are returned for... true, your health declines;
True, Chambery's a bleak unkindly spot;
You'd choose one fitter for your final lodge
Veneria, or Moncaglier — ay, that's close
And I concede it.

Vic. I received advice
Of the conclusion of the Spanish matter.
Dated from Evian Baths...

Cha. And you forbore
To visit me at Evian, satisfied
The work I had to do would fully task
The little wit I have, and that your presence
Would only disconcert me —

Vic. Charles?

Cha. — Me, set
Forever in a foreign course to yours,
And...

Sir, this way of wile were good to catch,
But I have not the slightest of it. The truth!
Though I sink under it! What brings you here?

Vic. Not hope of this reception, certainly,
From one who'd scarce assume a stranger made
Of speech, did I return to bring about
Some awfullest calamity!

Cha. — You mean,
Did you require your crown again! Oh yes,
I should speak otherwise! But turn not that
To jesting! Sir, the truth! Your health declines?
Is anything deficient in your equipage?
Wisely you seek myself to make complaint,
And foil the malice of the world which laughs
At petty discontent; but I shall care
That not a soul knows of this visit. Speak!

Vic. [Aside.] Here is the grateful much-professing son
Prepared to worship me, for whose sole sake
I think to waive my plans of public good!

[Aside.] Nay, Charles, if I did seek to take once more
My crown, were so disposed to plague myself,
What would be warrant for this bitterness?
I gave it — grant I would resume it — well?
Cha. I should say simply — leaving out the why
And how — you made me swear to keep that crown:
And as you then intended...

Vic. Fool! What way
Could I intend or not intend? As man,
With a man's will, when I say "I intend,"
I can intend up to a certain point,
No farther. I intended to preserve
The crown of Savoy and Sardinia whole;
And if events arise demonstrating
The way, I hoped should guard it, rather like
To lose it...

Cha. Keep within your sphere and mine!
It is God's province we usurp on, else,
Here, blindfold through the maze of things we walk
By a slight clue of false, true, right and wrong;
All else is rambling and presumption. I
Have sworn to keep this kingdom: there's my truth.

Vic. Truth, boy, is here, within my breast;
and in
Your recognition of it, truth is, too;
And in the effect of all this tortuous dealing
With falsehood, used to carry out the truth,
In its success, this falsehood turns, again,
Truth for the world! But you are right: these themes
Are over-subtle. I should rather say
In such a case, frankly, — it fails, my scheme:
I hoped to see you bring about, yourself,
What I must bring about. I interpose
On your behalf — with my son's good in sight —
To hold what he is nearly letting go,
Confirm his title, add a grace perhaps.
There's Sicily, for instance, — granted me
And taken back, some years since: till I give
That island with the rest, my work's half done.
For his sake, therefore, as of those he rules...
Cha. Our sakes are one; and that, you could not say,
Because my answer would present itself
Forthwith: a year has wrought an age's
change.
This people's not the people now, you once
Could benefit; nor is my policy
Your policy.
Vic. [With an outburst.] I know it! You undo
All I have done — my life of toil and care!
I left you this the absolutest rule
In Europe: do you think I sit and smile.
Bid you throw power to the populace —
See my Sardinia, that has kept apart,
Join in the mad and democratic whirl,
Where to I see all Europe haste full tide?
England casts off her kings; France mimics
England:
This realm I hoped was safe! Yet here I talk,
When I can save it, not by force alone,
But bidding plagues, which follow sons like you,
Fasten upon my disobedient

[Recollecting himself.] Surely
I could say this — if minded so — my son?
Cha. You could not. Bitter curses than your curse
Have I long since denounced upon myself.
If I missed my power, In fear of these
I entered on those measures — will abide
By them: so, I should say, Count Tende...

Vic. No!
But no! But if, my Charles, your — more than old —
Half-foolish father urged these arguments,
And then confessed them futile, but said plainly
That he forgot his promise, found his strength
Fail him, had thought at savage Chambery
Too much of brilliant Turin, Rivoli here,
And Susa, and Veneria, and Superga —
Pined for the pleasant places he had built
When he was fortunate and young —
Cha. My father!
Vic. Stay yet! — and if he said he could not die
Deprived of bampes he had put aside,
He deemed, forever — of the Crown that binds
Your brain up, whole, sound and impregnable,
Creating kingliness — the Sceptre too,
Whose mere wind, should you wave it, back would beat
Invaders — and the golden Ball which throbs
As if you grasped the palpitating heart
Indeed o' the realm, to mould as choose you
may!
If I must totter up and down the streets
My sires built, where myself have introduced
And fostered laws and letters, sciences.
The civil and the military arts!
Stay, Charles! I see you letting me pretend
To live my former self once more — King Victor.
The venemous yet politic : they style me
Again, the Father of the Prince: friends wink
Good-humoredly at the delusion you
So sedulously guard from all rough truths
That else would break upon my dotage! —
You —
Whom now I see preventing my old shame —
I tell not, point by cruel point, my tale —
For is it not in your breast your brow is hid?
Is not your hand extended? Say you not...
(Enter D'Ormea, leading in Polyeucte.)
Pol. [Advancing and withdrawing Charles cha. — to Victor.]
In this conspiracy even, he would say
(Though with a moistened eye and quivering lip)
The suppliant is my father. I must save
A great man from himself, nor see him fling
His well-earned fame away: there must not follow
Ruin so utter, a break-down of worth
So absolute: no enemy shall learn,
He thrust his child twixt danger and himself,
And, when that child somehow stood danger
out,
Stole back with serpent wiles to ruin Charles — Body, that's much, — and soul, that's more
— and realm,
That's most of all! No enemy shall say...
D'O. Do you repent, sir?
Vic. [Resuming himself.] D'Ormea! This is well!
Worthily done, King Charles, craftily done!
Judiciously you post these, to o'erhear
The little your importunate father thrusts
Himself on you to say! — Ah, they'll correct
The amiable blind fanatic
You show in answering his peevish suit.
What can he need to sue for? Thanks,
D'Ormea!
You have fulfilled your office: but for you,
The old Count might have drawn some few more livres
To swell his income! Had you, lady, missed
The moment, a permission might be granted
To buttress up my ruinous old pile!
But you remember properly the list
Of wise precepts I took when I gave Nearly as much away — to reap the fruits
I should have looked for!
Cha. Thanks, sir: degrade me,
So you remain yourself! Adieu!
Vic. I'll not
Forget it for the future, nor presume
Next time to slight such mediators! Nay —
Had I first moved them both to intercede,
I might secure a chamber in Moncaglier
— Who knows?
Cha. Adieu!
Vic. You bid me this adieu
With the old spirit?
Adieu! Charles — Charles!
Adieu! (Victor goes.)

Cha. You were mistaken, Marquis, as you hear!
'Twas for another purpose the Count came.
The Count desires Monsieur. Give the order! D'O. [Let us in.] Your minister has lost your confidence, Assenting late, for his own purposes.

Count Tende would . . .

Cha. [Flinging his budge back.] Be still the minister!

And give a loose to your insulting joy;
It irks me more thus stilled than expressed:
Loose it! D'O. There's none to loose, alas! I see
I never am to die a martyr.

Cha. No praise, at least, Polyxena — no praise!

KING CHARLES

PART II

D'Orme seated, folding papers he has been examining.
This at the last effects it: now, King Charles Or else King Victor — that's a balance: but now,
D'Orme the arch-culprit, either turn O' the scale — that's sure enough. A point to solve,

My masters, moralists, what'er your style! When I discover why I push myself into a pitfall you'd pass safely by; impart to me among the rest! No matter. Prompt are the righteons ever with their rede To us the wrongful: lesson them this once! For safe among the wicked are you set, D'Orme! We lament life's brevity, Yet quarter e'en the three-score years and ten. Nor stick to call the quarter roundly "life."

D'Orme was wicked, say, some twenty years; A tree so long was stunted; afterward, What if it grew, continued growing, till No fellow of the forest equalled it?

'T was a stump then; a stump it still must be: While forward saplings, at the outset checked, In virtue of that first sprout keep their style Amid the forest's green fraternity. Thru I shoot up to surely get lopped down And bound up for the burning. Now for it! (Enter Charles and Polyxena with Attendants.)

D'O. [Rises.] Sir, in the due discharge of this my office —

This enforced summons of yourself from Turin, And the disclosure I am bound to make To-night; — there must already be, I feel, So much that wounds . . .

Cha. Well, sir?
D'O. — That I, perchance.

May utter also what, another time, Would irk much, — it may prove less irksome now.

Cha. What would you utter?

D'O. That I from my soul
Grieve at to-night's event: for you I grieve,
You grieve for . . .
Cha. Tush, another time for talk!

My kingdom is in imminent danger?
D'O. Let The Count communicate with France — its King,
His grandson, will have Henry's aid for this. Though for no other war.

Cha. First for the levies:
What forces can I muster presently?

D'O. [D'Orme delivers papers which Charles inspects.]

Cha. Good — very good. Montorio . . .
how is this?

— Equips me double the old complement
Of soldiers?

D'O. Since his land has been relieved From double impost, this he manages:
But under the late monarch . . .

Cha. Peace! I know.

Count Spava has omitted mentioning What proxy is to head these troops of his.
D'O. Count Spava means to head his troops himself.

Something to fight for now; "Whereas," says he, "Under the sovereign's father" . . .

Cha. It would seem
That all my people love me.

D'O. Yes.

[To Polyxena while Charles continues to inspect the papers.

A temper

Like Victor's may avail to keep a state;
He terrifies men and they fall not off:
Good to restrain; best, if restraint were all.
But, with the silent circle round him, ends
Such sway: our King's begins precisely there.
For to suggest, impel and set at work.
Is quite another function. Men may slight,
In time of peace, the King who brought them peace;

In war, — his voice, his eyes, help more than fear.

They love you, sir!
Cha. [To Attendants.] Bring the regalia forth!

Quit the room! And now, Marquis, answer me!

Why should the King of France invade my realm?

D'O. Why? Did I not acquaint your Majesty
An hour ago?
Cha. I choose to hear again
What then I heard.
D'O. Because, sir, as I said, your father is resolved to have his crown At any risk; and, as I judge, calls in The foreigner to aid him.
Cha. And your reason
For saying this?
D'O. [Aside.] Ay, just his father's way! [To Cha.] The Count wrote yesterday to your forces' Chief.

Rhembinder — made demand of help —
D'O., Oh, as for that, St. George, President of Chambery's senators, Is hatching treason! still [More troubled.] Sir, Count Camiaine Is brother to your father's wife! What's here? Arrest the wife herself?

Chu. You seem to think A venial crime this plot against me. Well? D'O. [who has read the last paper]. Wherefore am I thus ruined? Why not take My life at once? This poor formality Is, let me say, unworthy you! Prevent it You, madam! I have served you, am prepared For all disgraces: only, let disgrace Be plain, be proper—proper for the world To pass its judgment on 'twixt you and me! Take back your warrant, I will none of it! Chu. Here is a man to talk of fickleness! He stakes his life upon my father's falsehood; I bid him . . .

D'O. 'Not you! Were we trebly false, You do not bid me . . .

Chu. 'Is't not written there? I thought so: give— I'll set it right.

D'O. Is it there? Oh yes, and plain—arrest him now—drag here Your father! And were all six times as plain, Do you suppose I trust it?

Chu. Just one word! You bring him, taken in the act of flight. Or else your life is forfeit.

D'O. Ay, to Turin I bring him, and to-morrow?

Chu. Here and now! The whole thing is a lie, a hateful lie, As I believed and as my father said, I knew it from the first, but was compelled To circumvent you; and the great D'Ormea, That baffled Alberoni and tricked Cescia, The miserable sower of such discord "Twixt sire and son, is in the toils at last. Oh I see! you arrive—this plan of yours, Weak as it is, torrents sufficiently. A sick old peevish man—wringings hasty speech, An ill-considered threat from him; that's noted;

Then out you ferret papers, his amusement In lonely hours of lassitude—examine The day-by-day report of your paid spies— And hack you come; all was not ripe, you find, And, as you hope, may keep from ripening yet, But you were in bare time! Only, 'twere best I never saw my father; these old men Are potent in excuses: and meanwhile, D'Ormea's the man I cannot do without!

Chu. Ah, no question! You against me too! You'd have me eat and drink and sleep, live, die, With this lie coiled about me, choking me! No, no, D'Ormea! You venture life, you say, Upon my father's perfidy; and I

Have, on the whole, no right to disregard The chains of testimony you thus wind About me; though I do—do from my son.
Discord it: still I must authorize
These measures, and I will. Perugia! [Many Officers enter.]

Count—
You and Solar, with all the force you have,
Stand at the Marquis’ orders: what he bids,
Implicitly perform! You are to bring
A traitor here; the man that’s likeliest one
At present, fronts me; you are at his beck
For a full hour! he undertakes to show
A fouler than himself, — but, failing that,
Return with him, and, as my father lives,
He dies this night! The clemency you blame
So oft, shall be revoked — rights exercised,
Too long abused. [To D’Ormea.] Now, sir, about the work!
To save your king and country! Take the warrant!
D’O. You hear the sovereign’s mandate. Count Perugia?
Obey me! As your diligence, expect
Reward! All follow to Montagu!

[Poluxenia goes.]

Cha. [In great anguish, D’Ormea! He goes, lit up with that appalling smile!]
At least you understand all this?

Pol. These means
Of our defence — these measures of precaution?
Cha. It must be the best way: I should have else
Wither’d beneath his scorn.

Pol. What would you say?
Cha. Why, do you think I mean to keep
The crown, Poluxenia?

Pol. You then believe the story
In spite of all — that Victor comes?

Cha. Believe it? I know that he is coming — feel the strength
That has upheld me leave me at his coming!
’T was mine, and now he takes his own again.
Some kinds of strength are well enough to have;
But who’s to have that strength? Let my crown go!
I meant to keep it; but I cannot — cannot !
Only, he shall not taunt me — he, the first... see if he would not be the first to taunt me
With having left his kingdom at a word,
With letting it be conquered without stroke.
With... no — no — t is no worse than when he left!
I’ve just to bid him take it, and, that over.
We’ll fly away — fly, for I loathe this Turin,
This Rivoli, all titles loathe, all state.
We’d best go to your country — unless God
Send I die now! [To Poluxenia.] Charles, hear me! And again
Shall you be my Poluxenia — you’ll take me
Out of this woe! Yes, do speak, and keep speaking!
I would not let you speak just now, for fear
You’d counsel me against him: but talk, now,
As we two used to talk in blessed times;
Bid me endure all his caprices; take me
From this mad post above him!

Pol. We are undone, but from a different cause,
All your resources, down to the least guard,
Are at D’Ormea’s beck. What if, the while,
He act in concert with your father? We
Indeed were lost. This lonely Rivoli
Where find a better place for them?
Cha. [Pacing the room.] And why
Does Victor come? To undo all that’s done,
Restore the past, prevent the future! Seat
His mistress in your seat, and place in mine
... Oh, my own people, whom will you find there.
To ask of, to consult with, to care for.
To hold up with your hands? Whom? One that’s false.
False — from the head’s crown to the foot’s sole, false!
The best is, that I knew it in my heart
From the beginning, and expected this,
And hated you, Poluxenia, because
You saw through him, though I too saw through him,
Saw that he meant this while he crowned me, while
He prayed for me, — nay, while he kissed my brow,
I saw —

Pol. But if your measures take effect,
D’Ormea true to you?
Cha. Then worst of all!
I shall have loosed that callous wretch on him!
Well may the woman taunt him with his child —
I, eating here his bread, clothed in his clothes,
Seated upon his seat, let slip D’Ormea
To outrage him! We talk — perchance he tears
My father from his bed; the old hands feel
For one who is not, but who should be there;
He finds D’Ormea! D’Ormea too finds him!
The crowded chamber when the lights go out —
Closed doors — the horrid scuffle in the dark —
The accursed prompting of the minute! My guards!
To horse — and after, with me — and present!

[Seeing his hand.] King Charles!
Pause here upon this strip of time
Allotted you out of eternity!
Crows are from God: you in his name hold
yours.
Your life’s no least thing, were it fit your life
Should be abused along with rule; but now,
Keep both! Your duty is to live and rule —
You, who would vulgarly look fine enough
In the world’s eye, deserting your soul’s charge,
Ay, you would have men’s praise, this Rivoli
Would be illumined! While, as ’t is, no doubt,
Something of stain will ever rest on you;
No one will rightly know why you refused
To abdicate: they’ll talk of deeds you could
Have done, no doubt, — nor do I much expect
Future achievement will blot out the past,
Envelop it in haze — nor shall we two
Live happy any more. ’T will be, I feel,
Only in moments that the duty’s seen
As palpably as now: the months, the years
Of painful indistinctness are to come.
While daily must we tread these palace-rooms
Pregnant with memories of the past; your eye
May turn to mine and find no comfort there,
Through fancies that beset me, as yourself,
Of other courses, with far other issues,
We might have taken this great night: such bear,
As I will hear! What matters happiness?
Duty! There's man's one moment: this is yours!

[Putting the crown on his head, and the sceptre in his hand, she places him on his seat: a long pause and silence.

(Enter D'Ormea and Victor, with Guards.)

Vic. At last I speak; but once—that once, to you!
'T is you I ask, not these your varletry,
Who's King of us?

Cha. [From his seat.] Court Tent .
Vic. What yours spies
Assert I ponder in my soul, I say—
Here to your face, amid your guards! I choose
To take again the crown whose shadow I gave—
For still its potency surrounds the weak
White locks their felon hands have discomposed.
Or I'll not ask who's King, but simply, who Withholds the crown I claim? Deliver it!
I have no friend in the wide world: nor France
Nor England cares for me: you see the sum
Of what I can avail. Deliver it!

Cha. Take it, my father!
And now say in turn,
Was it done well, my father—sure not well,
To try me thus! I might have seen much cause
For keeping it—too easily seen cause!
But, from that moment, e'en more woefully
My life had pined away, than pine it will,
Already you have much to answer for.
My life to pine is nothing,—her sunk eyes
Were happy once! No doubt, my people think
I am their King still . . . but I cannot strive!
Take it!

Vic. [One hand on the crown Charles offers,
the other on his neck.] So few years give it quietly,
My son! It will drop from me. See you
not?
A crown's unlike a sword to give away—
That, let a strong hand to a weak hand give!
But crowns should slip from palsied brows to heads
Young as this head: yet mine is weak enough,
E'en weaker than I know. I seek for phrases
To vindicate my right. 'T is of a piece!
All is alike gone by with me—who beat
Once D'Orleans in his lines—his very lines!
To have been Eugene's comrade, Louis's rival,
And now . . .

Cha. [Putting the crown on him, to the rest.]
The King speaks, yet none kneels, I
think!
Vic. I am then King! As I became a King

Despite the nations, kept myself a King,
So I die King, with Kingship dying too
Around me! I have lasted Europe's time!
What wants my story of completion? Where Must needs the damning break show? Who mistrusts
My children here—tell they of any break
'Twixt my day's sunrise and its fiery fall?
And who were by me when I died but they?
D'Ormea there!

Cha. What means he? Ever there!
Charles—how to save your story! Mine must go!
Say—say that you refused the crown to me!
Charles, yours shall be my story! You im-mured
Me, say, at Rivoli. A single year
I spend without a sight of you, then die,
That will serve every purpose—tell that tale
The world!

Cha. Mistrust me? Help!
Vic. Past help, past reach!
'Tis in the heart—you cannot reach the heart:
This broke mine, that I did believe, you,
Charles,
Would have denied me and disgraced me.

Pol. Charles
Has never ceased to be your subject, sir!
He reigned at first through setting up yourself
As pattern: if he e'er seemed harsh to you,
'T was from a too intense appreciation
Of your own character: he acted you—
Ne'er for an instant did I think it real,
Nor look for any other than this end.
I hold him worlds the worse on that account;
But so it was.

Cha. [To Pol.] I love you now indeed!
[To Vic.] You never knew me!

Vic. Hardly till this moment,
When I seem learning many other things
Because the time for using them is past.
If 't were to do again! That's idle wished,
Truthfulness might prove policy as good
As guile. Is this my daughter's forehead?

Yes:—
I've made it fitter now to be a queen's
Than formerly; I've ploughed the deep lines
there
Which keep too well a crown from slipping off.
No matter. Guile has made me King again.
Louis—'twas in King Victor's time:—long
since,
When Louis reigned and, also, Victor reigned,
How the world talks already of us two!
God of eclipse and each discolored star.
Why do I linger then?

Ha! Where lurks he?
D'Ormea! Nearer to your King! Now stand!
[Collecting his strength as D'Ormea approaches.
You lied, D'Ormea! I do not repent. [Dies}
CAVALIER TUNES

I. MARCHING ALONG

KENTISH Sir Byng stood for his King,
Bidding the crop-headed Parliament swing:
And, pressing a troop unable to stoop
And see the rogues flourish and honest folk droop,
Marched them along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song.

God for King Charles! Pym and such carles
To the Devil that prompts 'em their treasonous carles!
Cavaliers, up! Lips from the cup,
Hands from the pasty, nor bite take nor sup
Till you're—

CHORUS. — Marching along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song.

Hampden to hell, and his obsequies' knell,
Serve Hazlerig, Fiennes, and young Harry as well!
England, good cheer! Rupert is near!
Kentish and loyalists, keep we not here.

CHO. Marching along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song?

Then, God for King Charles! Pym and his snarls
To the Devil that pricks on such pestilent carles!
Hold by the right, you double your might;
So, onward to Nottingham, fresh for the fight,

CHO. — March we along, fifty-score strong,
Great-hearted gentlemen, singing this song!

II. GIVE A ROUSE

King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

Who gave me the goods that went since?
Who raised me the house that sank once?
Who helped me to gold I spent since?
Who found me in wine you drank once?

CHO. — King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

To whom used my boy George quaff else,
By the old fool's side that begot him?
For whom did he cheer and laugh else,
While Noll's damned troopers shot him?

CHO. — King Charles, and who'll do him right now?
King Charles, and who's ripe for fight now?
Give a rouse: here's, in hell's despite now,
King Charles!

III. BOOT AND SADDLE

Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!
Rescue my castle before the hot day
Brightens to blue from its silvery gray.

CHO. — Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

Ride past the suburbs, asleep as you'd say;
Many's the friend there, will listen and pray
"God's luck to gallants that strike up the lay"

CHO. — Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

Forty miles off, like a roebuck at bay,
Flouts Castle Brancenbeth the Roundheads array:
Who laughs, "Good fellows ere this, by my say.

CHO. — Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

Who? My wife Gertrude; that, honest and gay,

Laughs when you talk of surrendering, "Nay! I've better counsellors; what counsel they?

CHO. — Boot, saddle, to horse, and away!

DRAMATIC LYRICS

The third number of Bells and Pomegranates, published in 1842, contained a collection of short poems under the general head of Dramatic Lyrics. When Browning made his first collective edition, he redistributed all his groups of poems, retaining this title and making it cover some of the poems included in the original group, but many more first published under other headings. The arrangement here given is that adopted finally by Browning. "Such Poems," he says, "as the majority in this volume (Dramatic Lyr-
THE LOST LEADER

Browning was beset with questions by people asking if he referred to Wordsworth in this poem. He answered the question more than once, as an artist would: the following letter to Rev. A. B. Grosart, the editor of Wordsworth’s Prose Works, sufficiently states his position.

“DEAR MR. GROSART,—I have been asked the question you now address me with, and as duly answered it. I can’t remember how many times; there is no sort of objection to one more assurance or rather confession, on my part, that I did in my hasty youth presume to use the great and venerable personality of Wordsworth as a sort of painter’s model; one from which this or the other particular feature may be selected and turned to account; had I intended more, above all, such a boldness as portraying the entire man. I should not have talked about ‘handfuls of silver and bits of ribbon.’ These never influenced the change of politics in the great poet, whose defection, nevertheless, accompanied as it was by a regular face-about of his special party, was to my juvenile apprehension, and even mature consideration, an event to deplore. But just as in the tapestry on my wall I can recognize figures which have struck out a fancy, on occasion, that though truly enough thus derived, yet would be preposterous as a copy, so, though I dare not deny the original of my little poem, I altogether refuse to have it considered as the ‘very effigies’ of such a moral and intellectual superiority.

Just for a handful of silver he left us,
Just for a rikkaud to stick in his coat—
Found the one gift of which fortune bereft us,
Lost all the others she lets us devote;
They, with the gold to give, doled him out silver,
So much was theirs who so little allowed:
How all our copper had gone for his service!
Rags—were they purple, his heart had been proud!
We that had loved him so, followed him, honored him,
Lived in his mild and magnificent eye,
Learned his great language, caught his clear accents,
Made him our pattern to live and to die!
Shakespeare was of us, Milton was for us,
Burns, Shelley, were with us.—they watch from their graves!
He alone breaks from the van and the freemen,
—He alone sinks to the rear and the slaves!

We shall march prospering,—not through his presence;
Songs may inspirit us,—not from his lyre;
Deeds will be done,—while he boasts his quiescence,
Still bidding crouch whom the rest bade aspire:
Blot out his name, then, record one lost soul more,
One task more declined, one more footpath untrod,
One more devils’-triumph and sorrow for angels,
One wrong more to man, one more insult to God!
Life’s night begins: let him never come back to us!
There would be doubt, hesitation and pain,
Forced praise on our part—the glimmer of twilight.
Never glad confident morning again!
Best fight on well, for we taught him—strike gallantly.
Mence our heart ere we master his own;
Then let him receive the new knowledge and wait us,
Pardoned in heaven, the first by the throne!

“HOW THEY BROUGHT THE GOOD NEWS FROM GHENT TO AIX”

Browning wrote to an American inquirer about this poem: “There is no sort of historical foundation for the poem about ‘Good News from Ghent.’ I wrote it under the bulwark of a vessel, off the African coast, after I had been at sea long enough to appreciate even the fancy of a gallop on the back of a certain good horse ‘York,’ then in my stable at home. It was written in pencil on the fly-leaf of Bartoli’s Simboli, I remember.”

THROUGH THE METIDJA TO ABD-EL-KADR

'T was moonset at starting; but while we drew near Lokeren, the cocks crew and twilight dawned clear;
At Boom, a great yellow star came out to see;
At Duffield, 't was morning as plain as could be;
And from Mecheln church-steeple we heard the half-chime,
so Joris broke silence with, "Yet there is time!"

At Aershot, up leaped of a sudden the sun,
And against him the cattle stood black every one.
To stare through the mist at us galloping past,
And I saw my stout galopper Roland at last,
With resolute shoulders, each butting away
The haze, as some bluff river headland its spray:

And his low head and crest, just one sharp ear
bent back
For my voice, and the other pricked out on his track;
And one eye's black intelligence,—ever that glance
O'er its white edge at me, his own master, askance!
And the thick heavy spume-flakes which eye and anon
His fierce lips shook upwards in galloping on.

By Hasselt, Direk groaned; and cried Joris,
"Stay spur!"
Your Roos galloped bravely, the fault 's not in her,
We'll remember at Aix"—for one heard the quick wheeze
Of her chest, saw the stretched neck and staggering knees,
And sunk tail, and horrible heave of the flank,
As down on her haunches she shuddered and sank.

So, we were left galloping, Joris and I,
Past Louza and past Tongres, no cloud in the sky;
The broad sun above laughed a pitiless laugh,
'Neath our feet broke the brittle bright stubble like chaff;
Till over by Dalhem a dome-spire sprang white,
And "Gallop," gasped Joris, "for Aix is in sight!"

"How they'll greet us!"—and all in a moment
Rolled neck and croup over, lay dead as a stone;
And there was my Roland to bear the whole weight
Of the news which alone could save Aix from her fate,
With his nostrils like pits full of blood to the brim,
And with circles of red for his eye-sockets' rim.
Then I cast loose my buffcoat, each holster let fall,
Shook off both my jack-boots, let go belt and all,
Stood up in the stirrup, leaned, patted his ear,
Called my Roland his pet-name, my horse without peer;
Clapped my hands, laughed and sang, any noise, bad or good,
Till at length into Aix Roland galloped and stood.

And all I remember is—friends flocking round
As I sat with his head 'twixt my knees on the ground;
And no voice but was praising this Roland of mine.
As I poured down his throat our last measure
Which (the burgesses voted by common consent)
Was no more than his due who brought good news from Ghent.

THROUGH THE METIDJA TO ABD-EL-KADR

As I ride, as I ride,
With a full heart for my guide,
So its tide rocks my side,
As I ride, as I ride.
That, as I were double-eyed,
He, in whom our Tribes confide,
Is descried, ways unsnared,
As I ride, as I ride.

As I ride, as I ride
To our Chief and his Allied,
Who dares chide my heart's pride
As I ride, as I ride?
Or are witnesses denied—
Through the desert waste and wide
Do I glide unespied
As I ride, as I ride?

As I ride, as I ride,
When an inner voice has cried,
The sands slide, nor abide
(As I ride, as I ride)
'Ner each visioned homicide
That came vaunting, has he lied?)
To reside—where he died,
As I ride, as I ride.

As I ride, as I ride,
Ne'er has spur my swift horse plied,
Yet his hide, streaked and pied,
As I ride, as I ride,
Shows where sweat has sprang and dried,
—Zebra-footed, ostrich-thighed—
How has vied stride with stride
As I ride, as I ride!

As I ride, as I ride,
Could I loose what Fate has tied,
Ere I prided, she should hide
(As I ride, as I ride)
All that's meant me—satisfied
When the Prophet and the Bride
Stop veins I'd have subsided
As I ride, as I ride!
NATIONALITY IN DRINKS

The first two of this group, under the titles Claret and Tokay, were published in Hood's Magazine, June, 1844, at the request of Richard Monckton Milnes, who was editing the magazine during Hood's illness. The third, first entitled Beer, was called out by the description of Nelson's coat at Greenwich, given by the captain of the vessel in which Browning was sailing to Italy.

I

My heart sank with our Claret-flask,
Just now, beneath the heavy sedges
That serve this pond's black face for mask;
And still at yonder broken edges
O' the hole, where up the bubbles glisten,
After my heart I look and listen.

Our laughing little flask, compelled
Through depth to depth more bleak and shady;
As when, both arms beside her held,
Feet straightened out, some gay French lady
Is caught up from life's light and motion,
And dropped into death's silent ocean!

II

— Up jumped Tokay on our table,
Like a pygmy castle-warrior,
Dwarfish to see, but stout and able,
Arms and accoutrements all in order;
And fierce he looked North, then, wheeling South,
Blew with his hugh a challenge to Drought,
Cocked his flap-hat with the tosspot-feather,
Twisted his thumb in his red moustache,
Jingled his huge brass spurs together,
Tightened his waist with its Buda sash,
And then, with an impudence naught could best,
Shrugged his hump-shoulder, to tell the holder,
For twenty which knaves he should laugh but the holder;
And so, with his sword-bill gallantly jutting,
And dexter-hand on his haunch abutting,
Went the little man, Sir Ausbruch, strutting!

III

— Here's to Nelson's memory!
'Tis the second time that I, at sea,
Right off Cape Trafalgar here,
Have drunk it deep in British Beer.
Nelson forever — any time,
Am I his to command in prose or rhyme!
Give me of Nelson only a touch,
And I save it, be it little or much:
Here's one our Captain gives, and so
Down at the word, by George, shall it go!
He says that at Greenwich they point the be HOLDER
To Nelson's coat, "still with tar on the shoulder:

For he used to lean with one shoulder digging,
Jigging, as it were, and zig-zag-zigging
Up against the mizen-rigging!"

GARDEN FANCIES

These two poems also appeared in Hood's Magazine, July, 1844.

I. THE FLOWER'S NAME

Here's the garden she walked across,
Arm in my arm, such a short while since:
Hark, now I push its wicket, the moos
Hinders the hinges and makes them wince!
She must have reached this shrub ere she turned,
As back with that murm ur the wicket swung;
For she laid the poor snail, my chance foot
Spared,
To feed and forget it the leaves among.

Down this side of the gravel-walk
She went while her robe's edge brushed the box;
And here she paused in her gracious talk
To point me a moth on the milk-white phlox.
Roses, ranged in valid row,
I will never think that she passed you by!
She loves you, noble roses, I know;
But yonder, see, where the rock-plants lie!

This flower she stopped at, finger on lip,
Stroked over, in doubt, as settling its claim;
Till she gave me, with pride to make no slip,
Its soft meandering Spanish name:
What a name! Was it love or praise?
Speech half-asleep or song half-awake?
I must learn Spanish, one of these days,
Only for that slow sweet name's sake.

Roses, if I live and do well,
I may bring her, one of these days,
To fix you fast with as fine a spell,
Fit you each with his Spanish phrase;
But do not detain me now; for she fingers
There, like sunshine, over the ground,
And ever I see her soft white fingers
Searching after the bud she found.

Flower, you Spaniard, look that you grow not,
Stay as you are and be loved forever!
Bud, if I kiss you 'tis that you blow not.
Mind, the shut pink mouth opens never!
For while it pouts, her fingers wrestle,
Twinkling the andacions leaves between,
Till round they turn and down they nestle —
Is not the dear mark still to be seen?

Where I find her not, beauties vanish;
Whither I follow her, beauties flee;
Is there no method to tell her in Spanish
June's twice June since she breathed it with me?

Come, bud, show me the least of her traces,
Treasure my lady's lightest footfall!
— Ah, you may flout and turn up your faces —
Roses, you are not so fair after all!
HI. SIBRANDUS SCHAFNABURGENSIS

Plague take all your pedants, say I!
He who wrote what I hold in my hand,
Centuries back was so good as to die,
Leaving this rubbish to clamber the hand;
This, that was a book in its time.
Printed on paper and bound in leather,
Last month in the white of a matin-prime,
Just when the birds sang all together.

Into the garden I brought it to read.
And under the arbutus and laurustin
Read it, so help me grace in my need,
From title-page to closing line.
Chapter on chapter did I count,
As a curious traveller counts Stonehenge;
Added up the mortal amount;
And then proceeded to my revenge.

Yonder's a plum-tree with a crevice
An owl would build in, were he but sage;
For a lap of moss, like a fine pont-levis
In a castle of the Middle Age.
Joins to a lip of gum, pure amber;
When he'd be private, there might he spend
Hours alone in his lady's chamber;
Into this crevice I dropped my friend.

Splash, went he, as under he ducked,
— At the bottom, I knew, rain-drippings stagnate;
Next, a handful of blossoms I plucked
To bury him with, my bookshelf's magnate;
Then I went in-doors, brought out a loaf,
Half a cheese, and a bottle of Chablis;
Lay on the grass and forgot the eaf
Over a jolly chapter of Rabelais.

Now, this morning, betwixt the mess
And gum that locked our friend in limbo,
A spider had spun his web across,
And sat in the midst with arms akimbo:
So, I took pity, for learning's sake,
And, de profundis, acceputis artis,
Cantate! quoth I, as I got a rake;
And up I fished his delectable treatise.

Here you have it, dry in the sun,
With all the binding all of a blister,
And great blue spots where the ink has run,
And reddish streaks that wink and glister
O'er the page so beautifully yellow:
Oh, well have the droppings played their tricks!
Did he guess how toadstools grow, this fellow?
Here's one stuck in his chapter six!

How did he like it when the live creatures
Tickled and tossed and browsed him all over,
And worm, slug, eft, with serious features,
Came in, each one, for his right of trover?
— When the water-beetle with great blind deaf face
Made of her eggs the stately deposit.

And the next borrowed just so much of the preface
As titled in the top of his black wife's closet?
All that life and fun and romping,
All that frippery and twisting and coupling,
While slowly our poor friend's leaves were swamping
And clasps were cracking and covers suppling!
As if you had carried sour John Knox
To the play-house at Paris, Vienna or Munich,
Fastened him into a front-row box,
And danced off the ballet with trouders and tunic.

Come, old martyr! What, torment enough is it?
Back to my room shall you take your sweet self.
Good-bye, mother-beetle; husband-et, sufficient!
See the snug niche I have made on my shelf!
A's book shall prop you up, B's shall cover you.
Here's C to be grave with, or D to be gay.
And with E on each side, and F right over you.
Dry-rot at ease till the Judgment-day!

SOLILIOQUY OF THE SPANISH CLOISTER

When first printed in Bells and Pomegranates, this poem was the second of a group of two bearing the general title Camp and Cloister, the first of the two being Incident of the French Camp.

GRE-RR — there go, my heart's abhorrence!
Water your damned flower-pots, do!
If hate killed men, Brother Lawrence,
God's blood, would not mire you kill
What? your myrtle-bush wants trimming?
Oh, that rose has prior claims
Needs its leaden vase filled trimming?
Hell dry you up with its flames!

At the meal we sit together:
Salve tibi! I must hear.
Wise talk of the kind of weather,
Sort of season, time of year:
Not a plentiful cork-crap: scarcely
Dare we hope oak-galls, I doubt;
What's the Latin name for "parsley"?
What's the Greek name for Swine's Snout?

Whew! We'll have our platter burnished,
Laid with care on our own shelf,
With a fine-new spoon we're furnished,
And a goblet for ourself,
Rinsed like something sacrificial
Ere 'tis fit to touch our chaps—
Marked with L for our initial—
(He-he! There's his lily snaps!)

Saint, forsooth! While brown Dolores
Squats outside the Convent bank
With Sanchicha, telling stories,
Steeping tresses in the tank,
Blue-black, lustrous, thick like horsehairs.
— Can't I see his dead eye glow,
Bright as 't were a Barbary corsair's?
(That is, if he 'd let it show!)

When he finishes refection,
Knife and fork he never lays
Cross-wise, to my recollection,
As do I, in Jesu's praise.
I the Trinity illustrate,
Drinking watered orange-pulp —
In three sips the Arian frustrate;
While he drains his at one gulp.

Oh, those melons! If he's able
We 're to have a feast! so nice!
One goes to the Abbot's table,
All of us get each a slice.
How go on your flowers? None double?
Not one fruit-sort can you spy?
Strange! — And I, too, at such trouble
Keep them close-nipped on the sly!

There's a great text in Galatians,
Once you trip on it, entails
Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
One sure, if another fails:
If I trip him just a-dying,
Sure of heaven as sure can be,
Spin him round and send him flying
Off to hell, a Manichee?

Or, my scrofulous French novel
On gray paper with blunt type!
Simply glance at it, you grovel
Hand and foot in Belial's gripe:
If I double down its pages
At the woeful sixteenth print,
When he gathers his green-gages,
Ope a sieve and slip it in't?

Or, there's Satan! — One might venture
Pledge one's soul to him, yet leave
Such a flaw in the indenture
As he'd miss till, past retrieve,
Blasted lay that rose-acacia
We're so proud of! Hymn, Zyz, Hymn . . .
'St, there's Vespers! Plena gratia,
Aee, Virgo! — Gr-r-r — you swine!

THE LABORATORY

ANCien Régime

Published first in Hood's Magazine, June, 1841. In Bells and Pomegranates it was grouped with The Confessional under the title France and Spain.

Now that I, tugging thy glass mask tightly,
May gaze through these faint smokes curling whitley.
As thou pliest thy trade in this devil's-smithy —
Which is the poison to poison her, prithee?

He is with her, and they know that I know
Where they are, what they do: they believe my tears flow

While they laugh, laugh at me, at me fled to the dear
Empty church, to pray God in, for them! — I am here.

Grind away, moisten and mash up thy paste,
Powder at thy powder, — I am not in haste!
Better sit thus, and observe thy strange things.
Than go where men wait me and dance at the King's.

That in the mortar — you call it a gum?
Ah, the brave tree whence such gold oozings
come!
And yonder soft phial, the exquisite blue,
Sure to taste sweetly, — is that poison too?

Had I but all of them, thee and thy treasures,
What a wild crowd of invisible pleasures!
To carry pure death in an earring, a casket,
A signet, a fan-mound, a filigree basket!

Soon, at the King's, a mere lozenge to give,
And Pauline should have just thirty minutes to live.
But to light a pastille, and Elise, with her head
And her breast and her arms and her hands, should drop dead!

Quick — is it finished? The color's too grim!
Why not soft like the phial's, enticing and dim?
Let it brighten her drink, let her turn it and stir,
And try it and taste, ere she fix and prefer!

What a drop! She's not little, no minion like
me!
That's why she ensnared him: this never will free
The soul from those masculine eyes, — say,
"no!"
To that pulse's magnificent come-and-go,

For only last night, as they whispered, I brought
My own eyes to bear on her so, that I thought Could I keep them one half minute fixed, she would fail
Shrivelled; she fell not; yet this does it all!

Not that I bid you spare her the pain;
Let death be felt and the proof remain:
Brand, burn up, bite into its grace —
He is sure to remember her dying face!

Is it done? Take my mask off! Nay, be not mournose:
It kills her, and this prevents seeing it close:
The delicate droplet, my whole fortune's fee!
If it hurts her, beside, can it ever hurt me?

Now, take all my jewels, gorge gold to your fill,
You may kiss me, old man, on my mouth if you
will!
But brush this dust off me, lest horror it brings Ere I know it — next moment I dance at the King's!
THE CONFESSIONAL

SPAIN

It is a lie — their Priests, their Pope,
Their Saints, their ... all they fear or hope
Are lies, and lies — there! through my door
And I am all, and walls and floor.

You think Priests just and holy men!
Before then put me in this den
I was a human creature too.
With flesh and blood like one of you.
A girl that laughed in beauty’s pride
Like lilies in your world outside.

I had a lover — shame avow it!
This poor wretched body, grim and gaunt,
Was kissed all over till it burned.
By lips the truest, love e’er turned
His heart’s own tint; one night they kissed
My soul out in a burning mist.

So, next day when the accustomed train
Of things grew round my sense again,
"That is a sin," I said: and slow
With downcast eyes to church I go,
And pass to the confession-chair,
And tell the old mild father there.

But when I falter Beltrán’s name,
"Ha!" quoth the father; "much I blame
The sin; yet wherefore idly grieve?"
Despair not — strenuously retrieve!
Nay, I will turn this love of thine
To lawful love, almost divine;

"For he is young, and led astray,
This Beltrán, and he schemes, men say,
To change the laws of church and state;
So, thine shall be an angel’s fate,
Who, ere the thunder breaks, should roll
Its cloud away and save his soul.

"For, when he lies upon thy breast,
Thou mustst demand and he possess
Of all his plans, and next day steal
To me, and all those plans reveal,
That I and every priest, to purge
His soul, may fast and use the scourge."

That father’s beard was long and white,
With love and truth his brow seemed bright:
I went back, all on fire with joy.
And, that same evening, haste the boy
Tell me, as lovers should, heart-free,
Something to prove his love of me.

He told me what he would not tell
For hope of heaven or fear of hell;
And I lay listening in such pride!
And, soon as he had left my side,
Tripped to the church by morning-light
To save his soul in his despite.

I told the father all his schemes,
Who were his comrades, what their dreams;
"And not make haste," I said, "to pray
The one spot from his soul away;
To-night he comes, but not the same
Will look!" At night he never came.

Nor next night: on the after-morn,
I went forth with a strength new-born.
The church was empty; something drew
My steps into the street; I knew
It led me to the market-place.
Where, lo, on high, the father’s face!

That horrible black scaffold dressed,
That stapled block ... God sink the rest!
That head strapped back, that blinding vest,
Those knotted hands and naked breast,
Till near one busy hangman pressed.
And, on the neck these arms caressed ...

No part in aught they hope or fear!
No heaven with them, no hell! and here,
No earth, not so much space as pens
My body in their worst of dens.
But shall bear God and man my cry,
Lies — lies, again — and still, they lie!

CRISTINA

In Bells and Pomegranates, this poem was the second of a group headed Queen Worship,
the first being Rudel and The Lady of Tripoli.

She should never have looked at me
If she meant I should not love her!
There are plenty ... men, you call such,
I suppose ... she may discover
All her soul to, if she pleases.
And yet leave much as she found them:
But I’m not so, and she knew it.
When she fixed me, glancing round them.

What? To fix me thus meant nothing?
But I can’t tell (there’s my weakness)
What her look said! — no vile cant, see.
About “need to strew the blackness
Of some lone shore with its pearl-seed,
That the sea feeds” — no “strange yearning
That such souls have, most to lavish
Where there’s chance of least returning.”

Oh, we’re sunk enough here, God knows!
But not quite so sunk that moments,
Sure, though seldom, are denied us.
When the spirit’s true endowments
Stand out plainly from its false ones,
And apprise it if pursuing
Or the right way or the wrong way,
To its triumph or undoing.

There are flashes struck from midnights,
There are fire-flames noontide kindle,
Whereby piled-up honors perish.
Whereby swollen ambitions dwindle.
While just this or that poor impulse,
Which for once had play unspoiled,
Seems the sole work of a lifetime,
That away the rest have trifled.

Doubt you if, in some such moment,
As she fixed me, she felt clearly,
Ages past the soul existed,
Here an age 'tis resting merely.
And hence fleets again for ages,
While the true end, sole and single,
It stops here for is, this love-way,
With some other soul to mingle?

Else it loses what it lived for,
And eternally must lose it:
Better ends may be in prospect,
Deeper blisses (if you choose it),
But this life's end and this love-bliss
Have been lost here. Doubt you whether
This she felt as, looking at me,
Mine and her souls rushed together?

Oh, observe! Of course, next moment,
The world's honors, in derision,
Trampled out the light forever:
Never fear but there's provision
Of the devil's to quench knowledge
Lest we walk the earth in rapture!
—Making those who catch God's secret
Just so much more prize their capture!

Such am I; the secret 's mine now!
She has lost me, I have gained her;
Her soul's mine: and thus, grown perfect,
I shall pass my life's remainder.
Life will just hold out the proving
Both our powers, alone and blended:
And then, come the next life quickly!
This world's use will have been ended.

THE LOST MISTRESS

All's over, then: does truth sound bitter
As one at first believes?
Hark, 'tis the sparrows' good-night twitter
About your cottage caves!

And the leaf-buds on the vine are woolly,
I noticed that, to-day:
One day more bursts them open fully
—You know the red turns gray.

To-morrow we meet the same then, dearest?
May I take your hand in mine?
Mere friends are we, — well, friends the merest
Keep much that I resign:

For each glance of the eye so bright and dark
Though I keep with heart's endeavor, —
Your voice, when you wish the snowdrops back,
Though it stay in my soul forever! —

Yet I will but say what mere friends say,
Or only a thought stronger:
I will hold your hand but as long as all may,
Or so very little longer!

EARTH'S IMMORTALITIES

FAME

See, as the prettiest graves will do in time,
Our poet's want the freshness of its prime;
Spite of the sexton's browsing horse, the sods
Have struggled through its binding osier rods;
Headstone and half-smoke footstone lean away,
Wanting the brick-work promised by-and-by;
How the minute gray lichens, plate o'er plate,
Have softened down the crisp-cut name and date!

LOVE

So, the year's done with!
(Love me forever?)
All March begun with,
April's endeavor;
May-wreaths that bound me
June needs must sever;
Now snows fall round me,
Quenching June's fever—
(Love me forever?)

MEETING AT NIGHT

This and its companion piece were published originally simply as Night and Morning.

The gray sea and the long black land;
And the yellow half-moon large and low;
And the startled little waves that leap
In fiery ringlets from their sleep,
As I gain the cove with pushing prow,
And quench its speed i' the shalmy sand.

Then a mile of warm sea-scented beach;
Three fields to cross till a farm appears;
A tap at the pane, the quick sharp scratch
And blue spurt of a lighted match,
And a voice less loud, through its joys and fears,
Than the two hearts beating each to each!

PARTING AT MORNING

Round the cape of a sudden came the sea,
And the sun looked over the mountain's rim;
And straight was a path of gold for him,
And the need of a world of men for me.

SONG

Nay but you, who do not love her,
Is she not pure gold, my mistress?
Holds earth aught — speak truth — above her?
Aught like this tress, see, and this tress,
And this last fairest tress of all,
So fair, see, ere I let it fall?

Because you spend your lives in praising;
To praise, you search the wide world over:
Then why not witness, calmly gazing,
If earth holds anguish — speak truth — above her?
Above this tress, and this, I touch
But cannot praise, I love so much!

A WOMAN'S LAST WORD

Let's contend no more, Love,
Strive nor weep:
All be as before, Love,
— Only sleep!
What so wild as words are?
I and thou
In debate, as birds are,
Hawk on bough!
See the creature strolling
While we speak!
Hush and hide the talking,
Check on cheek!
What so false as truth is,
False to thee?
Where the serpent's tooth is Shun the tree —

Where the apple reddens
Never pry —
Lest we lose our Edens,
Eve and I.

Be a god and hold me
With a charm!
Be a man and fold me
With thine arm!

Teach me, only teach, Love!
As I ought
I will speak thy speech, Love,
Think thy thought —
Meet, if thou require it,
Both demands,
Laying flesh and spirit
In thy hands.

That shall be to-morrow,
Not to-night:
I must bury sorrow
Out of sight:
— Must a little weep, Love,
(Evil shall I)
And so fall asleep, Love,
Loved by thee.

EVELYN HOPE

Beautiful Evelyn Hope is dead!
Sit and watch by her side an hour.
That is her book-shelf, this her bed;
She plucked that piece of geranium-flower,
Beginning to die too, in the glass;
Little has yet been changed, I think:

The shutters are shut, no light may pass
Save two long rays through the hinge's chink.

Sixteen years old when she died!
Perhaps she had scarcely heard my name;
It was not her time to love; beside,
Her life had many a hope and aim,
Duties enough and little cares,
And now was quiet, now as stirred,
Till God's hand beckoned unawares —
And the sweet white brow is all of her.

Is it too late then, Evelyn Hope?
What, your soul was pure and true,
The good stars met in your horoscope,
Made you of spirit, fire and dew —
And, just because I was thrice as old
And our paths in the world diverged so wide,
Each was taught to each, must I be told?
We were fellow mortals, taught beside?

No, indeed! for God above
Is great to grant, as mighty to make,
And creates the love to reward the love;
I claim you still, for my own love's sake!
_Delayed it may be for more lives yet,
Through worlds I shall diverge so wide,
Much is to learn, much to forget
Ere the time be come for taking you.

But the time will come, — at last it will,
When, Evelyn Hope, what meant (I shall say)
In the lower earth, in the years long still,
That body and soul so pure and gay?
Why your hair was amber, I shall divine,
And your mouth of your own geranium's red —
And what you would do with me, in fine,
In the new life come in the old one's stead.

I have lived: I shall say! so much since then,
Given up myself so many times,
Gained me the gains of various men,
Ransacked the ages, spoiled the climes;
Yet one thing, one, in my soul's full scope,
Either I missed or itself missed me:
And I want and find you, Evelyn Hope!
What is the issue? let us see!

I loved you, Evelyn, all the while!
My heart seemed full as it could hold;
There was place and to spare for the frank young smile,
And the red young mouth, and the hair's young gold.
So, hush, — I will give you this leaf to keep:
See, I shut it inside the sweet cold hand!
There, that is our secret: go to sleep!
You will wake, and remember, and understand.

LOVE AMONG THE RUINS

Where the quiet-colored end of evening smiles
Miles and miles
On the solitary pastures where our sheep
Half-asleep
Tinkle homeward through the twilight, stray or stop
As they crop—
Was the site once of a city great and gay,
(So they say)
Of our country's very capital, its prince
Ages since
Held his court in, gathered councils, wielding far Peace or war.

Now,—the country does not even boast a tree,
As you see,
To distinguish slopes of verdure, certain rills
From the hills
Intersect and give a name to, (else they run Into one,)
Where the domed and dashing palace shot its spires
Up like fires
O'er the hundred-gated circuit of a wall
Bounding all,
Made of marble, men might march on nor be pressed,
Twelve abreast.

And such plenty and perfection, see, of grass
Never was!
Such a carpet as, this summer-time, o'erspreads
And embeds
Every vestige of the city, guessed alone,
Stock or stone—
Where a multitude of men breathed joy and woe
Long ago;
Last of glory pricked their hearts up, dread of shame
Struck them tame;
And that glory and that shame alike, the gold
Bought and sold.

Now,—the single little turret that remains
On the plains,
By the caper overrooted, by the gourd
Overscored,
While the patching housedeck's head of blossom winks
Through the chinks—
Marks the basement whence a tower in ancient time
Sprang sublime,
And a burning ring; all round, the chariots traced
As they raced,
And the monarch and his minions and his dames
Viewed the games.

And I know, while thus the quiet-colored eye
Smiles to leave
To their folding, all our many-tinkling fleece
In such peace,
And the slopes and rills in undistinguished gray
Melt away—
That a girl with eager eyes and yellow hair
Waits me there
In the turret whence the charioteers caught soul
For the goal.

When the king looked, where she looks now, breathless, dumb
Till I come.

But he looked upon the city, every side,
Far and wide,
All the mountains topped with temples, all the glades
Colonnades,
All the causeys, bridges, aqueducts,—and then,
All the men!

When I do come, she will speak not, she will stand,
Either hand
On my shoulder, give her eyes the first embrace
Of my face,
Ere we rush, ere we extinguish sight and speech
Each on each.

In one year they sent a million fighters forth
South and North,
And they built their gods a brazen pillar high
As the sky,
Yet reserved a thousand chariots in full force—
Gold, of course.

Oh heart! oh blood that freezes, blood that burns!
Earth's returns
For whole centuries of folly, noise and sin!
Shut them in,
With their triumphs and their glories and the rest!
Love is best.

A LOVERS' QUARREL

Oft, what a dawn of day!
How the March sun feels like May!
All is blue again
After last night's rain,
And the South dries the hawthorn-spray.
Only, my Love's away!
I'd as lief that the blue were gray.

Runnels, which rilles swell,
Must be dancing down the dell,
With a foaming head
On the beryl bed.
Paven smooth as a hermit's cell;
Each with a tale to tell,
Could my Love but attend as well.

Dearest, three months ago!
When we lived blockéd-up with snow,—
When the wind would edge
In and in his wedge,
In, as far as the point could go—
Not to ouringle, though,
Where we loved each the other so!

Laughs with so little cause!
We devised games out of straws,
We would try and trace
One another's face
In the ash, as an artist draws;
Free on each other's saws.
How we chattered like two church dams!
See a word, how it severeth!
Oh, power of life and death
In the tongue, as the Preacher saith!

Woman, and will you cast
For a word, quite off at last
Me, your own, your You,
Since, as truth is true,
I was You all the happy past—
Me do you leave aghast
With the memories We amassed?

Love, if you knew the light
That your soul casts in my sight,
How I look to you
For the pure and true,
And the beauteous and the right,—
Bear with a moment's spite
When a mere mote threats the white!

What of a hasty word?
Is the fleshly heart not stirred
By a worm's pin-prick
Where its roots are quick?
See the eye, by a fly's-foot blurred —
Ear, when a straw is heard
Scratch the brain's coat of curl!

Foul be the world or fair
More or less, how can I care?
'T is the world the same
For my praise or blame,
And endurance is easy there.
Wrong in the one thing rare—
Oh, it is hard to bear!

Here 's the spring back or close,
When the almond-blossom blows;
We shall have the word
In a minor third,
There is none but the cuckoo knows:
Heaps of the guelder-rose!
I must bear with it, I suppose.

Could but November come,
Were the noisy birds struck dumb
At the warning slash
Of his driver's-lash —
I would laugh like the valiant Thumb
Facing the castle glum
And the giant's fee-faw-fum!

Then, were the world well stripped
Of the gear wherein equipped
We can stand apart,
Heart dispense with heart.
In the sun, with the flowers unpinched,
— Oh, the world's hangings ripped,
We were both in a bare-walled crypt!

Each in the crypt would cry
"But one freezes here! and why?
When a heart, as chill,
At my own would thrill
Back to life, and its fires out-fly?
Heart, shall we live or die?
The rest... settle by and by!"
Is it ever hot in the square? There's a fountain to spout and splash!
In the shade it sings and springs; in the shine such foambows flash
On the horses with curling fish-tails, that prance and paddle and pass
Round the lady atop in her conch—fifty gazers do not abash,
Though all that she wears is some weeds round her waist in a sort of sash.

All the year long at the villa, nothing to see
Through you linger,
Except you cypress that points like death's lean lifted forefinger.
Some think fireflies pretty, when they mix it the corn and mingle,
Or thrid the stinking hemp till the stalks of it seem a tingle.

Late August or early September, the stunning cicada is shrill,
And the bees keep their tiresome whine round the resinous firs on the hill.
Enough of the seasons, I spare you the months of the fever and chill.

Ere you open your eyes in the city, the blessed church-bells begin:
No sooner the bells leave off than the diligence rattles in;
You get the pick of the news, and it costs you never a pin.
By and by there's the travelling doctor gives pills, lets blood, draws teeth;
Or the Pulcinello-trumpet breaks up the market beneath.

At the post-office such a scene-picture—the new play, piping hot!
And a notice how, only this morning, three liberal thieves were shot.
Above it, behold the Archbishop's most fatherly of rebukes,
And beneath, with his crown and his lion, some little new law of the Duke's!
Or a sonnet with flowery marge, to the Reverend Don So-and-so,
Who is Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarcha, Saint Jerome, and Cicero.

"And more over," (the sonnet goes rhyming),
"the skirts of Saint Paul has reached,
Having preached us those six Lent-lectures more unmooting than ever he preached."

Noon strikes—here sweeps the procession! Our Lady borne smiling and smart
With a pink gauze gown all spangles, and seven swords stuck in her heart!
Bang-chang-chang goes the drum, tootle-tootle the fife;
No keeping one's haunches still: it's the greatest pleasure in life.

But bless you, it's dear—it's dear! fowls, wine, at double the rate.
They have clapped a new tax upon salt, and what oil pays passing the gate
It's a horror to think of. And so, the villa for me, not the city!
Beggars can scarcely be choosers: but still—aah, the pity, the pity!

Look, two and two go the priests, then the monks with cowls and sandals.
And the penitents dressed in white shirts,
holding the yellow candles:
One, he carries a flag up straight, and another
a cross with handles.
And the Duke's guard brings up the rear,
for the better prevention of scandals:

BANG—CHANG—CHANG goes the drum, tootle—tootle—the life,
Oh, a day in the city-square, there is no such pleasure in life!

A TOCCATA OF GALUPPI

Published in Men and Women in 1835. An American author, visiting Browning and his wife at Casa Guidi in 1847, wrote of their occupinations: "Mrs. Browning," he said, "was still too much of an invalid to walk, but she sat under the great trees upon the lawn-like hills side near the convent, or in the seats of the dusky convent chapel, while Robert Browning at the organ chased a fugue, or dreamt out upon the twilight keys a faint throbbing toccata of Galuppi.

On Galuppi, Baldassare, this is very sad to find!
I can hardly misconceive you; it would prove me deaf and blind;
But although I take your meaning, 'tis with such a heavy mind!

Here you come with your old music, and here's all the good it brings.
What, they lived once thus at Venice where the merchants were the kings,
Where St. Mark's is, where the Doges used to weed the sea with rings?
Ay, because the sea's the street there; and
't isarched by... what you call Shylock's bridge with houses on it, where they kept the carnival:
I was never out of England—it's as if I saw it
all.

Did young people take their pleasure when the sea was warm in May?
Balls and masks began at midnight, burning over to mid-day.
When they made up fresh adventures for the morrow, do you say?

Was a lady such a lady, cheeks so round and lips so red,
On her neck the small face bountiful, like a bellflower on its bed.
O'er the breast's superb abundance where a man might base his head?

Well, and it was graceful of them—they'd break talk off and afford

She, to bite her mask's black velvet—he, to finger on his sword.

While you sat and played Toccatas, stately at the clavichord?

What? Those lesser thirds so plaintive, sixths diminished, sigh on sigh,
Told them something? Those suspensions, those solutions—"Must we die?"
Those commiserating sevenths—"Life might last! we can but try!"

"Were you happy?" — "Yes." — "And are you still as happy?" — "Yes. And
you?"

— "Then, more kisses!" — "Did I stop them, when a million seemed so few?"

Hark, the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!

So, an octave-struck the answer. Oh, they praised you, I dare say!
"Brave Galuppi! that was music! good alike
at grave and gay!
I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play!"

Then they left you for their pleasure: till in due time, one by one.
Some with lives that came to nothing, some with deeds as well undone,
Death stepped tacitly and took them where they never see the sun.

But when I sit down to reason, think to take my stand nor swerve.
While I triumph o'er a secret wrung from nature's close reserve,
In you come with your cold music till I creep through every nerve.

Yes, you, like a ghostly cricket, creaking where a house was burned:
"Died and ashes, dead and done with, Venice
spent what Venice earned.
The soul, doubtless, is immortal—where a soul
can be discerned.

"Yours for instance: you know physics, something of geology,
Mathematics are your pastime; souls shall rise
in their degree;
Butterflies may dread extinction, souls shall rise
in their degree;
"As for Venice and her people, merely born
to bloom and drop,
Here on earth they bore their fruitage, mirth
and folly were the crop:
What of soul was left, I wonder, when the kissing had to stop?

"Dust and ashes!" So you creak it, and I want the heart to scold.
Dear dead women, with such hair, too—what's become of all the gold
Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old.
OLD PICTURES IN FLORENCE

The morn when first it thunders in March,
The cel in the pond gives a leap, they say:
As I leaned and looked over the brood arch
Of the wild cherry in its warm March day,
No flash snapped, no dumb thunder roiled
In the valley beneath where, white and wide
And washed by the morning water-gold,
Florence lay out on the mountain-side.

River and bridge and street and square
Lay mine, as much at my beck and call,
Through the live translucent bath of air,
As the sights in a magic crystal ball.
And of all I saw and of all I praised,
The most to praise and the best to see,
Was the startling bell-tower Giotto raised:
But why did it more than startle me?

Giotto, how, with that soul of yours,
Could you play me false who loved you so?
Some sights if a certain heart endures
Yet it feels, I would have your fellows know!
'Faith, I perceive not why I should care
To break a silence that suits them best,
But the thing grows somewhat hard to bear
When I find a Giotto join the rest.

On the arch, where olives overhead
Print the blue sky with twig and leaf,
(That sharp-curl'd leaf which they never shed)
'Twixt the doves, I used to lean in chief,
And mark through the winter afternoons,
By a gift God grants me now and then.
In the mild decline of these suns like moons,
Who walked in Florence, besides her men.

They might chirp and chaffer, come and go
For pleasure or profit, her men alive—
My business was hardly with them, I trod,
But with empty cells of the human hive;
—With the chapter-room, the cloister-porch,
The church's apsis, aisle or nave,
Its crypt, one fingers along with a torch,
Its face set full for the sun to shave.

Wherever a fresco peels and drops,
Wherever an outline weakens and waners
Till the latest life in the painting stops,
Stands One whom each finder pulse-tick pairs:
One, wishful each scrap should clutch the brick,
Each tinge not wholly escape the plaster,
—A lion who dies of an ass's kick.
The wronged great soul of an ancient Master.

For oh, this world and the wrong it does!
They are safe in heaven with their backs to it,
The Mike and Raphaelis, you know and buzz
Round the works of, you of the little wit!
Do their eyes contract to the earth's old scope,
Now that they see God face to face,
And have all attained to be poets, I hope?
'Tis their holiday now, in any case.

Much they reck of your praise and you!
But the wronged great souls — can they be quit
Of a world where their work is all to do,
Where you style them, you of the little wit,
Old Master This and Early the Other,
Not dreaming that Old and New are fellows:
A younger succeeds to an elder brother,
Da Vincis derive in good time from Dellos.

And here where your praise might yield returns,
And a handsome word or two give help,
For the toiling and moiling, and then, sic transit!
Happier the thrifty blind-folk labor,
With upturned eye while the hand is busy,
Not siding a glance at the coin of their neighbor!
'Tis looking downward that makes one dizzy.

"If you knew their work you would deal your dole,"
May I take upon me to instruct you?
When Greek Art ran and reached the goal,
Thus much had the world to boast in fr Rctu —
The Truth of Man, as by God first spoken,
Which the actual generations garble,
Was re-asserted, and Soul (which Limbs betoken)
And Limbs (Soul informs) made new in marble.

So you saw yourself as you wished you were.
As you might have been, as you cannot be:
Earth here, rebuked by Olympus there;
And grew content in your poor degree
With your little power, by those statues' godhead,
And your little scope, by their eyes' full sway,
And your little grace, by their grace embodied,
And your little date, by their forms that stay.

You would fain be kinglier, say, than I am?
Even so, you will not sit like Theseus.
You would prove a model? The Son of Priam
Has yet the advantage in arms' and knees' use.
You're wron — can you slay your snake like Apollo?
You're grieved — still Niobe's the grander!
You live — there's the Racers' frieze to follow:
You die — there's the dying Alexander.

So, testing your weakness by their strength,
Your meagre charms by their rounded beauty,
Measured by Art in your breadth and length,
You learned — to submit is a mortal's duty.
When I say "you" 't is the common soul,
The collective, I mean: the race of Man
That receives life in parts to live in a whole,
And grow here according to God's clear plan.

Growth came when, looking your last on them all,
You turned your eyes inwardly one fine day
And cried with a start—What if we so small
Be greater and grander the while than they?
Are they perfect of lineament, perfect of stature?
In both, of such lower types are we
Precisely because of our wider nature;
For time, theirs—ours, for eternity.

Today's brief passion limits their range;
It seethes with the morrow for us and more.
They are perfect—how else? they shall never change:
We are faulty—why not? we have time in store.
The Artificer's hand is not arrested
With us; we are rough-hewn, nowise polished:
They stand for our copy, and, once invested
With all they can teach, we shall see them abolished.

"T is a life-long toil till our lump be heaven—
The better! What's come to perfection perishes.

Things learned on earth, we shall practise in heaven:
Works done least rapidly, Art most cherishes.
Thyself shalt afford the example, Giotto!
Thy one work, not to decrease or diminish,
Done at a stroke, was just (was it not?) "O!"
Thy great Campanile is still to finish.

Is it true that we are now, and shall be hereafter.
But what and where depend on life's minute?
Hails heavenly cheer or internal laughter
Our first step out of the gulf or in it?
Shall Man, such step within his endeavor,
Man's face, have no more play and action
Than joy which is crystallized forever,
Or grief, an eternal petrifaction?

On which I conclude, that the early painters,
To cries of "Greek Art and what more wish you?"
Replied, "To become now self-acquainters,
And paint man, man, whatever the issue!"
Make new hopes shine through the flesh they fray.
New tears aggrandize the rags and tatters:
To bring the invisible full into play!
Let the visible go to the dogs—what matters?"

Give these, I exhort you, their guerdon and glory
For daring so much, before they well did it.
The first of the new, in our race's story.
Beats the last of the old; 't is no idle quid dit.
The worthies began a revolution.

Which if on earth you intend to acknowledge, Why, honor them now! (ends my allocution)
Nor confer your degree when the folk leave college.

There's a fancy some lean to and others hate—
That, when this life is ended, begins
New work for the soul in another state,
Where it strives and gets weary, losses and wins:
Where the strong and the weak, this world's congeries,
Repeat in large what they practised in small,
Through life after life in unimitated series:
Only the scale's to be changed, that's all.

Yet I hardly know. When a soul has seen
By the means of Evil that God is best,
And, through earth and its noise, what is heaven's serene,
When our faith in the same has stood the test—
Why, the child grown man, you burn the rod,
The uses of labor are surely done;
There remaineth a rest for the people of God:
And I have had troubles enough, for one.

But at any rate I have loved the season
Of Art's spring-birth so dim and dewy;
My sculptor is Nicolo the Pisani,
My painter—who but Cimabue?
Nor ever was man of them all indeed,
From these to Ghiberti and Ghirlandajo.
Could say that he missed my critic-meed,
So, now to my special grievance—heigh-ho!

Their ghosts still stand, as I said before,
Watching each fresco flaked and rasped,
Blocked up, knocked out, or whitewashed o'er:
—No getting again what the church has grasped!
The works on the wall must take their chance;
"Works never conceded to England's thick chime!"
(I hope they prefer their inheritance
Of a bucketful of Italian quick-time.)

When they go at length, with such a shaking
Of heads over the old delusion, sadly
Each master his way through the black streets taking,
Where many a lost work breathes though badly—
Why don't they bethink them of who has merited?
Why not reveal, while their pictures dree
Such doom, how a captive might be out-ferreted?
Why is it they never remember me?

Not that I expect the great Bigordi,
Nor Sandro to hear me, chivalric, hellicose;
Nor the wronged Lippino: and not a word I say of a scrap of Frà Angelico's:
But are you too fine, Taddeo Gaddi,
To grant me a taste of your intonaco.
Some Jerome that seeks the heaven with a sad eye?
Not a churlish saint, Lorenzo Monaco?
Could not the ghost with the close red cap,
My Pollajo, the twice a craftsman,
Save me a sample, give me the hap
Of a muscular Christ that shows the draughtsman?
No Virgin by him the somewhat petty,
Of finical touch and tempera crumbly —
Could not Alessio Baidovietti
Contribute so much, I ask him humbly?

Margheritone of Arezzo,
With the grave-clothes garb and swaddling barret,
(Why pause up mouth and beak in a pet so,
You bald old saturnine poll-clawed parrot?)
Not a poor glimmering Crucifixion,
Where in the foreground kneels the donor?
If such remain, as is my conviction,
The hoarding it does you but little honor.

They pass; for them the panels may thrill,
The tempera grow alive and tinglish;
Their pictures are left to the mercies still
Of dealers and stealers, Jews and the English.
Who, seeing mere money's worth in their prize,
Will sell it to somebody calm as Zeno
At naked Hugh Art. and in eccasies
Before some clay-cold vile Carlino!

No matter for these! But Giotto, you,
Have you allowed, as the town-tongues babble it —
Oh, never! it shall not be counted true —
That a certain precious little table
Which Buonarroti eyed like a lover —
Was buried so long in oblivion's womb
And, left for another than I to discover,
Turns up at last! and to whom? — to whom?

I, that have haunted the dim San Spirito,
(Or was it rather the Ognissanti?)
Patient on altar-step planting a weary toe —
Nay, I shall have it yet! Debru amanti!
My Koh-i-noor — or (if that's a platitude)
Jewel of Giamschid, the Persian Sofi's eye;
So, in anticipative gratitude,
What if I take up my hope and prophesy?

When the hour grows ripe, and a certain doard
Is pitched, no parcel that needs invoicing,
To the worse side of the Mont St. Gothard,
We shall begin by way of rejoicing;
None of that shooting the sky (blank cartrigade),
Nor a civic guard, all phantoms and lacquer,
Hunting Radetzky's soul like a partridge
Over Morello with squib and cracker.

This time we'll shoot better game and bag 'em hot —
No mere display at the stone of Dante,
But a kind of sober Witnagmot
(Ex: "Casa Guidi," quaed video ante)
Shall ponder, once Freedom restored to Florence,
How Art may return that departed with her,
Go, hated house, go each trace of the Loreaine's,
And bring us the days of Orgagna litter!

How we shall prologize, how we shall perorate,
Utter fit things upon art and history,
Feel truth at blood-heat and falsehood at zero rate,
Make of the want of the age no mystery;
Contrast the fructuous and sterile eras,
Show — monarchy ever its uncouth cub licks
Out of the bear's shape into Chimera's,
While Pure Art's birth is still the republic's.

Then one shall propose in a speech (curs Tuscan)
Exurgate and sober, with scarcely an "assino."

To end now our half-told tale of Cambuscus.
And turn the bell-tower's alt to altissimo:
And fine as the heak of a young beccacce
The Campanile, the Duomo's fit ally,
Shall soar up in gold full fifty braeuc,
Completing Florence, as Florence Italy.

Shall I be alive that morning the scaffold
Is broken away, and the long-pent fire,
Like the golden hope of the world, unbluffed
Springs from its sleep, and up goes the spire
While "God and the People" plain for its motto,
Thence the new triolor flaps at the sky?
At least to foresee that glory of Giotto
And Florence together, the first am I!

"DE GUSTIBUS —"

Your ghost will walk, you lover of trees,
(If our loves remain)
In an English lane,
By a cornfield-side a-flutter with poppies,
Hark, those two in the hazel coppice —
A boy and a girl, if the good fates please,
Making love, say —
The happier they!
Draw yourself up from the light of the moon,
And let them pass, as they will too soon,
With the beanflowers' boon,
And the blackbird's tune,
And May, and June!

What I love best in all the world
Is a castle, precipice-encircled,
In a gash of the wind-grieved Apennine.
Or look for me, old fellow of mine,
(If I get my head from out the mouth
O'd the grave, and lose my spirit's bands,
And come again to the land of lands!)
In a sea-side house to the farther South,
Where the baked cicala dies of drouth,
And one sharp tree — 'tis a cypress — stands
By the many hundred years red-rusted,
Rough iron-spiked, ripe fruit-o'ercursted,
My sentinel to guard the sands
To the water's edge.
For, what expands
Before the house, but the great opaque
Blue breadth of sea without a break?
While, in the house, forever crumbles
Some fragment of the frescoed walls,
From blisters where a scorpion sprawls.
A girl bare-footed brings, and tumbles
Down on the pavement, green-flesh melons.
And says there 's news to-day — the king
Was shot at, touched in the liver-wing,
Goes with his Bourbon arm in a sling;
— She hopes they have not caught the felons,
Italy, my Italy!
Queen Mary's saying serves for me —
(When fortune's malice Lost her, Calais)
Open my heart and you will see
Graved inside of it, "Italy,"
Such lovers old are I and she;
So it always was, so shall ever be!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM ABROAD

This and following poem were first published along with Becc, which bore the name
Here's to Nelson's Memory, under the general heading Home-Thoughts from Abroad. The final member of the group, Home-Thoughts, from the Sea, was written under the same circumstances as the poem, How They brought the Good News from Ghent to Aix.

Oh, to be in England
Now that April's there,
And whoever wakes in England
Sees, some morning, unaware,
That the lowest boughs and the brush-wood sheaf
Round the elm-tree bole in tiny leaf,
While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
In England — now!

And after April, when May follows,
And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallowed
Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
Leans to the field and scatters on the clover
Blossoms and dewdrops — at the bent spray's edge
— That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
Lest you should think he never could recapture
The first fine careless rapture!
And though the fields look rough with hoary dew,
All will be gay when noon tide wakes anew
The buttercups, the little children's dower —
Far brighter than this gaudy melon-flower!

HOME-THOUGHTS, FROM THE SEA

Nobly, nobly Cape Saint Vincent to the North-west died away;
Sunset ran, one glorious blood-red, seeking into Cadiz Bay;
Blush 'mid the burning water, full in face Trafalgar lay;
In the dimmest Northeast distance dawned Gibraltar grand and gray;
"Here and here did England help me; how can I help England?" — say.

Whoso turns as I, this evening, turn to God to praise and pray,
While Jove's planet rises yonder, silent over Africa.

SAUL

The first nine sections of this poem were printed under the same title in No. VII. of Bells and Pomegranates, in 1845. The poem as enlarged was published in Men and Women in 1855.

Said Abner, "At last thou art come! Ere I tell, ere thou speak, Kiss my cheek, wish me well!" Then I wished it, and did kiss his cheek.
And he: "Since the King, O my friend, for thy countenance sent,
Neither drunken nor eaten have we; nor until from his tent
Thou return with the joyful assurance the King liveth yet,
Shall our lip with the honey be bright, with the water be wet.
For out of the black mid-tent's silence, a space of three days,
Not a sound hath escaped to thy servants, of prayer nor of praise,
To betoken that Saul and the Spirit have ended their strife,
And that, faint in his triumph, the monarch sinks back upon life.

"Yet now my heart leaps, O beloved! God's child with his dew
On thy gracious gold hair, and those lilies still living and blue
Just broken to twine round thy harp-strings, as if no wild heat
Were now raging to torture the desert!"

Then I, as was meet,
Knelt down to the God of my fathers, and rose on my feet,
And ran o'er the sand burnt to powder. The tent was unlooped;
I pulled up the spear that obstructed, and under I stooped;
Hands and knees on the slippery grass-patch, all withered and gone,
That extends to the second enclosure, I grooped my way on.
Till I felt where the foldskirts fly open. Then once more I prayed.
And opened the foldskirts and entered, and was not afraid
But spoke, "Here is David, thy servant!" And no voice replied.
At the first I saw naught but the blackness: but soon I descried
A something more black than the blackness — the vast, the upright
Main prop which sustains the pavilion: and slow into sight
Grew a figure against it, gigantic and blackest of all.
Then a sunbeam, that burst through the tentroof, showed Saul.

IV
He stood as erect as that tent-prop, both arms stretched out wide
On the great cross-support in the centre, that goes to each side;
He relaxed not a muscle, but hung there as, caught in his pangs
And waiting his change, the king-serpent all heavily hungs.
Far away from his kind, in the pine, till deliverance come
With the spring-time,—so agonized Saul, drear and stark, blind and dumb.

V
Then I tuned my harp,—took off the lilies we twine round its chords
Lest they snap 'neath the stress of the noon-tide — those sunbeams like swords!
And I first played the tune all our sheep know, as, one after one,
So docile they come to the pen-door till folding be done.
They are white and unbound by the bushes, for lo, they have fed
Where the long grasses stifle the water within the stream's bed;
And now one after one seeks its lodging, as star follows star
Into eye and the blue far above us,—so blue and so far!

VI
— Then the tune for which quails on the corn
land will each leave his mate
To fly after the player; then, what makes the creckets elate
Till for boldness they fight one another; and then, what has weight
To set the quiver bower a-musing outside his sand house—
There are none such as he for a wonder, half bird and half mouse!
God made all the creatures and gave them our love and our fear,
To give sign, we and they are his children, one family here.

VII
Then I played the help-some of our reapers, their wine-song, when hand
Grasps at hand, eye lights eye in good friendship, and great hearts expand
And grow one in the sense of this world's life,
—And then, the last song
When the dead man is praised on his journey—
'Bear, bear him along.
With his few faults shut up like dead flowerets!
Are balm seeds not here
To console us? The land has none left such as he on the stier.
Oh, would we might keep thee, my brother!'
—And then, the glad chant
Of the marriage,—first go the young maidens,
next, she whom we vaunt
As the beauty, the pride of our dwelling,—And then,
the great march
Wherein man runs to man to assist him and buttress an arch
Naught can break; who shall harm them, our friends? Then, the corns intoned
As the Levites go up to the altar in glory enthroned
But I stopped here: for here in the darkness
Saul groaned.

VIII
And I paused, held my breath in such silence,
and listened apart;
And the tent shook, for mighty Saul shuddered:
and sparkles 'gan dart
From the jewels that woke in his turban, at once with a start,
All its lordly male-sapphires, and rubies courageous at heart.
So the head; but the body still moved not, still hung there erect.
And I bent once again to my playing, pursued it unchecked.
As I sang:

IX
"Oh, our manhood's prime vigor! No spirit feels waste,
Not a muscle is stopped in its playing nor sinew
unbraced.
Oh, the wild joys of living! the leaping from rock up to rock.
The strong rending of boughs from the fir-tree,
the cool silver shock
Of the plunge in a pool's living water, the hunt
of the bear.
And the sultriness showing the lion is couched
in his hair.
And the meal, the rich dates yellowed over with gold dust divine.
And the beef of flesh steeped in the pitcher, the full draught of wine.
And the sleep in the dried river-channel where bulrushes tell
That the water was wont to go warbling so softly and well.
How good is man's life, the mere living! how fit to employ
All the heart and the soul and the senses forever in joy!
Hast thou loved the white locks of thy father,
unbraced
When he trusted thee with the armies, for glorious reward?
Didst thou see the thin hands of thy mother,
held up as men sung
The low song of the nearly-departed, and hear her faint tongue
Joining in while it could to the witness. 'Let one more attest,
I have lived, seen God's hand through a life time, and all was for best?'
Then they sang through their tears in strong victory, not much, but the rest.
And thy brothers, the help and the contest, the working where we grew
Such results as, from settling grape-bundles, the spirit strained true;
And the friends of thy boyhood — that boyhood of wonder and hope.

Present promise and wealth of the future beyond the eye's scope.
Till lo, thou art grown to a monarch; a people is thine.
And all gifts, which the world offers singly, on one head combine!
On each head, all the beauty and strength, love and rage like the thrice
That, a work in the rock, helps its labor and lets the gold go.
High ambition and deeds which surpass it, fame crowning them, — all Brought to blaze on the head of one creature — King Saul!"

x

And lo, with that leap of my spirit, — heart, hand, eye, and voice.
Each lifting Saul's name out of sorrow, each bidding rejoice
Saul's fame in the light it was made for — as when, dare I say.
The Lord's army, in capture of service, strains through its array,
And upareth the cherubim-chariot — "Saul!"
cried I, and stopped,
And waited the thing that should follow. Then
Saul, who hung propped
By the tent's cross-support in the centre, was struck by his name.
Have we seen when spring's arrowy summons goes right to the aim.
And some mountain, the last to withstand her,
that held the alone.
While the vale laughed in freedom and flowers
on a bread bust of stone
A year's snow bound about for a breastplate, — leaves grasp of the sheet?
Fold on fold all at once it crowds thunderously down to his feet.
And there fronts you, stark, black, but alive
yet your mountain of old,
With his rents, the successive bequeathings of ages untold —
Yea, each harm got in fighting your battles,
each furrow and scar
Of his head thrust 'twixt you and the tempest
— all hail, there they are!
— Now again to be softened with verdure, again
Of the dove, tempt the goat and its young to the green on his crest
For their food in the ardors of summer. One long shudder thrilled
All the tent till the very air tingled, then sank and was stilled.
At the King's self left standing before me, released and aware.
What was gone, what remained? All to traverse 'twixt hope and despair,
Death was past, life not come: so he waited.
Awhile his right hand

Held the brow, helped the eyes left too vacant forthwith to remand.
To their place what new objects should enter?
't was Saul as before.
I looked up and dared gaze at those eyes, nor was hurt any more.
Than by slow pallid sunsets in autumn, ye watch from the shore.
At their sad level gaze over the ocean — a sun's slow decline.
Over hills which, resolved in stern silence, over lap and entwine.
Base with base to knit strength more intensely:
so, arm folded arm.
Of'er the chest whose slow heavings subsided.

XI

What spell or what charm,
(For awhile there was trouble within me,) what next should I urge
To sustain him where song had restored him?
— Song filled to the verge.
His cup with the wine of this life, pressing all that it yields.
Of mere fruitage, the strength and the beauty:
beyond, on what fields.
Glean a vintage more potent and perfect to brighten the eye.
And bring blood to the lip, and commend them
the cup they put by?
He saith, "It is good;" still he drinks not: he lets me praise life.
Gives assent, yet would die for his own part.

XII

Then fancies grew ripe
Which had come long ago on the pasture, when round me the sheep
Fed in silence — above, the one eagle wheeled slow as in sleep;
And I lay in my hollow and mused on the world that might be
'Neath his ken, though I saw but the strip
'twixt the hill and the sky;
And I laughed — "Sure my days are ordained to be passed with my flocks,
Let me people at least, with my fancies, the plains and the rocks,
Dream the life I am never to mix with, and imagine the show
Of mankind as they live in those fashions I hardly shall know!
Schemes of life, its best rules and right uses,
the courage that gains,
And the prudence that keeps what men strive
for."
And now these old trains
Of vague thought came again; I grew surer;
so, once more the string
Of my harp made response to my spirit, as thus —

XIII

"Yea, my King."
I began — "Thou dost well in rejecting mere comforts that spring.
From the mere mortal life held in common by man and by brute:
In our flesh grows the branch of this life, in our soul it bears fruit.
Thou hast marked the slow rise of the tree,—how its stem trembled first
Till it passed the kid’s lip, the stag’s antler; then safely outburst
The fan-branches all round; and thou mindest when these too, in turn,
Broke a-bloom and the palm-tree seemed perfect: yet more was to learn,
E’en the good that comes in with the palm-fruit. Our dates shall we slight,
When their juice brings a cure for all sorrow? or care for the plight
Of the palm’s self whose slow growth produced them? Not so! Stem and branch
Shall decay, nor be known in their place, while the palm-wine shall stand
Every wound of man’s spirit in winter. I pour thee such wine,
Leave the flesh to the fate it was fit for! the spirit be thine!
By the spirit, when age shall o’ercome thee, thou still shalt enjoy
More indeed, than at first when inconscious, the life of the sir
Crush that life, and behold its wine running! Each deed thou hast done
Dies, revives, goes to work in the world; until e’en as the sun
Looking down on the earth, through clouds spoil him, though tempests efface,
Can find nothing his own deed produced not, must everywhere trace
The results of his past summer-prime,—so, each ray of thy will,
Every flash of thy passion and prowess, long over, shall thrill
Thy whole people, the countless, with ador, till they too give forth
A like cheer to their sons, who in turn, fill the South and the North
With the radiance thy deed was the germ of. Carouse in the past!
But the license of age has its limit; thou diest at last:
As the lion when age dims his eyeball, the rose at her height; thy fall
So with man — so his power and his beauty forever take flight.
No! Again a long draught of my soul-wine! Look forth o’er the years!
Thou hast done now with eyes for the actual: begin with the seer’s!
Is Saul dead? In the depth of the vale make his tomb — bid arise
A gray mountain of marble heaped four-square, till, built to the skies,
Let it mark where the great First King slumbers: whose fame would ye know?
Up above see the rock’s naked face, where the record shall go
In great characters cut by the scribe. — Such was Saul, so he did;
With the sages directing the work, by the populace chid.
For not half, they’ll affirm, is comprised there!
Which fault to amend,
In the grove with his kind grows the cedar, wherein they shall spend

(See, in tablets, it is level before them) their praise, and record
With the gold of the graver, Saul’s story, the statesman’s great word
Side by side with the poet’s sweet comment. The river’s a-wave
With smooth paper-reeds grazing each other when prophet-winds rave:
So the pen gives unborn generations their due and their part
In thy being! Then, first of the mighty. thank God that thou art!

xiv
And behold while I sang... but O Thou woe didst grant me that day,
And before it not seldom hast granted thy help to essay
Carry on and complete an adventure, — my shield and my sword
In that act where my soul was thy servant, thy word was my word, —
Still be with me, who then at the summit of human endeavor
And scaling the highest, man’s thought could, gazed hopeless as ever
On the new stretch of heaven above me — till, mighty ‘o save,
Just one lift of thy hand cleared that distance — God’s throne from man’s grave!
Let me tell out my tale to its ending — my voice to my heart
Which can scarce dare believe in what marvels last night I took part.
As this morning I gather the fragments, alone with my sheep,
And still fear lest the terrible glory evanish like sleep!
For I wake in the gray dewy covert, while Hebron upheaves
The dawn struggling with night on his shoulder, and Kidron retrieves
Slow the damage of yesterday’s sunshine.

xv
I say then,—my song
While I sang thus, assuring the monarch, and ever more strong
Made a proffer of good to console him — he slowly resumed
His old motions and habits kingly. The right hand replenished
His black locks to their wonted composure, adjusted the swathes
Of his turban, and see — the huge sweat that his countenance bathes,
He wipes off with the robe; and he girds now his loins as of yore,
And feels slow for the armlets of price, with the clasp set before.
He is Saul, ye remember in glory, — ere error had bent
The broad brow from the daily communion; and still, though much spent
Be the life and the bearing that front you, the same, God did choose,
To receive what a man may waste, desecrate never quite lose.
So sinks he along by the tent-prop till, stayed by the pile.
Of his armor and war-clack and garments, he leaned there awhile,
And sat out my singing, — one arm round the tent-prop, to raise
His bent head, and the other hung slack — till
I touched on the praise
I foresaw from all men in all time, to the man patient there:
And thus ended, the harp falling forward.
Then first I was 'ware
That he sat, as I say, with my head just above his vast knees
Which were thrust out on each side around me, like oak roots which please
To encircle a lamb when it shambles. I looked up to know
If the best I could do had brought solace: he spoke not, but slow
Lifted the hand slack at his side, till he laid it with care
Soft and grave, but in mild settled will, on my bow: through my hair
The large fingers were pushed, and he bent back my head, with kind power —
All my face back, intent to peruse it, as men do a flower.
Thus held he me there with his great eyes that scrutinized mine —
And oh, all my heart how it loved him! but where was the sign?
I yearned — "Could I help thee, my father,
inventing a bliss,
I would add, to that life of the past, both the future and this;
I would give thee new life altogether, as good,
ages hence,
As this moment, — had love but the warrant,
love's heart to dispense!"

Then the truth came upon me. No harp more
— no song more! outbroke —

"I have gone the whole round of creation: I saw and I spoke:
I, a work of God's hand for that purpose, received in my brain
And pronounced on the rest of his handwork — returned him again
His creation's approval or censure: I spoke as
I saw:
I report, as a man may of God's work — all's
love, yet all's law,
Now I lay down the judgeship he lent me.
Each faculty tasked
To perceive him, has gained an abyss, where a dewdrop was asked.
Have I knowledge? confounded it shrivels at Wisdom laid bare.
Have I thought about it? how purblind, how blank,
to the Infinite Care?
Do I task any faculty highest, to image success?
I but open my eyes. — and perfection, no more
and no less.

In the kind I imagined, full-fronts me, and God is seen God
In the star, in the stone, in the flesh, in the soul and the clod.
And thus looking within and around me, I ever renew (With that stoop of the soul which in bending upraises it too)
The submission of man's nothing-perfect to God's all-complete,
As by each new obeisance in spirit, I climb to his feet.
Yet with all this abounding experience, this deity known,
I shall dare to discover some province, some gift of my own.
There's a faculty pleasant to exercise, hard to hoodwink,
I am fain to keep still in abeyance, (I laugh as I think)
Lest, in insisting to claim and parade in it, wot ye,
I worst
E'en the Giver in one gift. — Behold, I could love if I durst!
But I sink the pretension as fearing a man may overtake
God's own speed in the one way of love: I abstain for love's sake.
— What, my soul? see thus far and no farther? —
when doors great and small,
Nine-and-ninety flew ope at our touch, should the hundredth appall?
In the least things have faith, yet distrust in the greatest of all?
Do I find love so full in my nature, God's ultimate gift.
That I doubt his own love can compete with it? Here, the parts shift?
Here, the creature surpass the Creator, — the end, whatBegan?
Would I faint in my impotent yearning do all
for this man
And dare doubt he alone shall not help him,
who yet alone can?
Would it ever have entered my mind, the bare will, much less power.
To bestow on this Saul what I sang of, the marvellous dower
Of the life he was gifted and filled with? to make such a soul,
Such a body, and then such an earth for inspiring the whole?
And doth it not enter my mind (as my warm ears attest)
These good things being given, go on, and give one more, the best?
Ay, to save and redeem and restore him, maintain at the height
This perfection, — succeed with life's day-
spring, death's minute of night?
Interpose at the difficult minute, snatch Saul
the mistake.
Saul the failure, the ruin he seems now. — and bid him awake
From the dream, the probation, the prelude, to find himself set.
Clear and safe in new light and new life, — a new harmony yet
DRAMATIC LYRICS

To be run, and continued, and ended—who knows?—or endure!
The man taught enough by life's dream, of the rest to make sure;
By the pain-throb, triumphantly winning intensified bliss,
And the next world's reward and repose, by the struggles in this.

XVIII

"I believe it! 'Tis thou, God, that givest, 'tis I who receive:
In the first is the last, in thy will is my power to believe.
All's one gift: thou canst grant it moreover, as prompt to my prayer
As I breathe out this breath, as I open these arms to the air.
From thy will stream the worlds, life and nature, thy dread Sabaoth:
I will?—the mere atoms despise me! Why am I not lost?
To look that, even that in the face too? Why is it I dare
Think but lightly of such impiety? What stops my despair?
This;—'tis not what man Does which exalts him, but what man Would do!
See the King—I would help him but cannot, the wishes fall through.
Could I wrestle to raise him from sorrow, grow poor to enrich,
To fill up his life, starve my own out, I would—knowing which,
I know that my service is perfect. Oh, speak through me now!
Would I suffer for him that I love? So wouldst thou—so wilt thou!
So shall crown thee the topmost, ineffablest, uttermost crown—
And thy love till infinitude wholly, nor leave up nor down
One spot for the creature to stand in! It is by no breath,
Turn of eye, wave of hand, that salvation joins issue with death!
As thy Love is discovered almighty, almighty be proved
Thy power, that exists with and for it, of being Beloved!
He who did most, shall hear most; the strongest shall stand the most weak.
'Tis the weakness in strength, that I cry for! my flesh, that I seek
In the Godhead? I seek and I find it. O Saul, it shall be A Face like my face that receives thee; a Man like to me.
Thou shalt love and be loved by, forever: a Hand like this hand
Shall throw open the gates of new life to thee! See the Christ stand!"

XIX

I know not too well how I found my way home in the night.
There were witnesses, cohorts about me, to left and to right.
Angels, powers, the muttered, unseen, the alive, the aware:
I repressed. I got through them as hardly, as strugglingly there,
As a runner beset by the populace famished for news—
Life or death. The whole earth was awakened, hell loosed with her crews;
And the stars of night beat with emotion, and tingled and shot
Out in fire the strong pain of pent knowledge: but I oftained not.
For the Hand still impelled me at once and supported, suppressed
All the tumult, and quenched it with quiet, and holy behest,
Till the rapture was shut in itself, and the earth sank to rest.
Anon at the dawn, all that trouble had withered from earth—
Not so much, but I saw it die out in the day's tender birth;
In the gathered intensity brought to the gray of the hills;
In the shuddering forests' held breath; in the sudden wind-thrills;
In the startled wild beasts that bore off, each with eye sidling still Though averted with wonder and dread; in the birds stiff and chill
That rose heavily, as I approached them, made stupid with awe;
E'en the serpent that slid away silent, — he felt the new law.
The same stared in the white humid faces upturned by the flowers;
The same worked in the heart of the cedar and moved the vine-blowers;
And the little brooks witnessing murmured, persistent and low.
With their obstinate, all but hushed voices—
"E'en so, it is so!"

MY STAR

This poem has been held to refer pointedly to Mrs. Browning. An inference to this end may be drawn from the fact that it stands first in a volume of Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning, published in 1872 and dedicated to Alfred Tennyson. "In Poetry—Illustrative and Consummate: In Friendship—Noble and Sincere." The selection was made under Browning's supervision and contains the following preface:

"In the present selection from my poetry, there is an attempt to escape from the embarrassment of appearing to pronounce upon what myself may consider the best of it. I adopt another principle; and by simply stringing together certain pieces on the thread of an imagined personality, I present them in succession, rather as the natural development of a partialar experience than because I account them the most noteworthy portion of my work. Such an attempt was made in the volume of selections from the poetry of Elizabeth Barrett Browning: to which—in outward uniformity, at least—my own would venture to become a companion.

"A few years ago, had such an opportunity presented itself, I might have been tempted to say a word in reply to the objections my poetry was used to encounter. Time has kindly cooperated with my disinclination to write the poetry and the criticism besides. The readers I am at last privileged to expect, meet me fully halfway; and if, from the fitting stand-point, they must still 'censure me in their wisdom,' they have previously 'awakened their senses that they may the better judge.' Nor do I apprehend any more charges of being willfully obscure, unconscientiously careless, or perversely harsh. Having hitherto done my utmost in the art to which my life is a devotion, I cannot engage to increase the effort; but I conceive that there may be helpful light, as well as reassuring warmth, in the attention and sympathy I gratefully acknowledge.

London, May 14, 1872.

All that I know
Of a certain star
Is, it can throw
Like the angled spar)
Now a dart of red,
Now a dart of blue;
Till my friends have said
They would fain see, too.

My star that darts the red and the blue!
Then it stops like a bird: like a flower, hangs furlèd:
They must solace themselves with the Saturn above it.

What matter to me if their star is a world?
Mine has opened its soul to me; therefore I love it.

BY THE FIRESIDE

The scene of the declaration in this poem is laid in a little mountain gorge adjacent to the Baths of Lunea, where the Brownings spent the summer of 1833.

How well I know what I mean to do
When the long dark autumn evenings come;
And where, my soul, is thy pleasant hue?
With the music of all thy voices, dumb
In life's November too!

I shall be found by the fire, suppose,
Over a great wise book as besemeth age,
While the shutters flap as the cross-wind blows,
And I turn the page, and I turn the page,
Not verse now, only prose!

Till the young ones whisper, finger on lip,
"There he is at it, deep in Greek:
Now then, or never, out we slip
To cut from the hazels by the creek
A mimimast for our ship!"

I shall be at it indeed, my friends!
Greek puts already on either side
Such a branch-work forth as soon extends
To a vista opening far and wide,
And I pass out where it ends.

The outside-frame, like your hazel-trees—but the inside-archway widens fast,
And a rarer sort succeeds to these,
And we slope to Italy at last
And youth, by green degrees.

I follow wherever I am led,
Knowing so well the leader's hand:
Oh woman-country, wooded not wild;
Laid all the more by earth's male-lands,
Laid to their hearts instead!

Look at the ruined chapel again
Half-way up in the Alpine gorge!
Is that a tower, I point you plain,
Or is it a mill, or an iron forge
Breaks solitude in vain?

A turn, and we stand in the heart of things;
The woods are round us, heaped and dim;
From slab to slab how it slips and springs.
The thread of water single and slim,
Through the ravage some torrent brings!

Does it feed the little lake below?
That speck of white just on its marge
Is Pella; see, in the evening-glow,
How sharp the silver spear-heads charge
When Alp meets heaven in snow!

On our other side is the straight-up rock;
And a path is kept 'twixt the gorge and it
By boulder-stones where lichens mock
The marks on a moth, and small ferns fit
Their teeth to the polished block.

Oh the sense of the yellow mountain-flowers,
And thorny balls, each three in one,
The chestnuts throw on our path in showers!
For the drop of the woodland fruit's begun,
These early November hours.

That crimson the creeper's leaf across
Like a splash of blood, intense, abrupt,
O'er a shield else gold from rim to boss,
And lay it for show on the fairy-capped
Elf-needled mat of moss.

By the rose-flesh mushrooms, undivulged
Last evening — may, in to-day's first dew
You sudden coral nipple bulged.
Where a freaked fawn-colored flaky crew
Of toad-stools peep indulged.

And yonder, at foot of the fronting ridge
That takes the turn to a range beyond.
Is the chapel reached by the one-arched bridge
Where the water is stopped in a stagnant pond
Danced over by the midge.

The chapel and bridge are of stone alike,
Blackish-gray and mostly wet;
Cut hemp-stalks steep in the narrow dyke.
See here again, how the lichens fret
And the roots of the ivy strike!

Poor little place, where its one priest comes
On a festa-day, if he comes at all
To the dozen folk from their scattered homes,
Gathered within that precinct small
By the dozen ways one roams —

To drop from the charcoal-burners' huts,
Or climb from the hemp-dressers' low shed,
Leave the grange where the woodman stores
his nuts,
Or the wattled cote where the fowlers spread
Their gear on the rock's bare juts.

It has some pretension too, this front,
With its bit of fresco half-moon-wise
Set over the porch, Art's early won't:
'Tis John in the Desert, I surmise,
But has borne the weather's brunt —

Not from the fault of the builder, though.
For a pent-house properly projects
Where three carved beams make a certain show,
Dating — good thought of our architect's —
Five, six, nine, he lets you know.

And all day long a bird sings there,
And a stray sheep drinks at the pond at times;
The place is silent and aware;
It has had its scenes, its joys and crimes,
But that is its own affair.

My perfect wife, my Leonor,
Oh heart, my own, oh eyes, mine too.
Whom else could I dare look backward for.
With whom beside should I dare pursue
The path gray heads abhor?

For it leads to a crag's sheer edge with them;
Youth, flowery all the way, there stops —
Not they: age threatens and they concern,
Till they reach the gulf wherein youth drops,
One inch from life's safe hem!

With me, youth led . . . I will speak now.
No longer watch you as you sit
Reading by fire-light, that great brow
And the spirit-small hand propping it,
Mately, my heart knows how —

When, if I think but deep enough,
You are wont to answer, prompt as rhyme;
And you, too, find without rebuff
Response your soul seeks many a time
Piercing its fine flesh-stuff.

My own, confirm me! If I tread
This path back, is it not in pride
To think how little I dreamed it led

To an age so blest that, by its side,
Youth seems the waste instead?

My own, see where the years conduct!
At first, 't was something our two souls
Should mix as mists do; each is sucked
In each now: on, the new stream rolls,
Whatever rocks obstruct.

Think, when our one soul understands
The great Word which makes all things new,
When earth breaks up and heaven expands,
How will the change strike me and you
In the house not made with hands?

Oh, I must feel your brain prompt mine,
Your heart anticipate my heart,
You must be just before, in fine,
See and make me see, for your part,
New depths of the divine!

But who could have expected this
When we two drew together first
Just for the obvious human bliss,
To satisfy life's daily thirst
With a thing men seldom miss?

Come back with me to the first of all,
Let us lean and love it over again,
Let us now forget and now recall,
Break the rosary in a pearly rain
And gather what we let fall!

What did I say? — that a small bird sings
All day long, save when a brown pair
Of hawks from the wood float with wide wings
So strained to a bell; 'gainst noon-day glare
You count the streaks and rings.

But at afternoon or almost eve
'Tis better; then the silence grows
To that degree, you half believe
It must get rid of what it knows,
Its bosom does so heave.

Hither we walked then, side by side,
Arm in arm and cheek to cheek,
And still I questioned or replied,
While my heart, convulsed to really speak,
Lay choking in its pride.

Silent the crumbling bridge we cross,
And pity and praise the chapel sweet,
And care about the fresco's loss,
And wish for our souls a like retreat,
And wonder at the moss.

Stoop and kneel on the settle under,
Look through the window's grated square:
Nothing to see! For fear of plunder,
The cross is down and the altar bare,
As if thieves don't fear thunder.

We stoop and look in through the grate,
See the little porch and rustic door,
Read duly the dead builder's date;
Then cross the bridge that we crossed before
Take the path again — but wait!
The forests had done it; there they stood;
We caught for a moment the powers at play;
They had mingled us so, for one and good.
Their work was done—we might go or stay.
They relapsed to their ancient mood.

How the world is made for each of us!
How all we perceive and know in it
Tends to some moment's product thus,
When a soul declares itself—to wit,
By its fruit, the thing it does!

Be hate that fruit or love that fruit,
It forwards the general deed of man,
And each of the Many helps to recruit
The life of the race by a general plan;
Each living his own, to boot.

I am named and known by that moment's feat;
There took my station and degree;
So grew my own small life complete,
As nature obtained her best of me—
One born to love you, sweet!

And to watch you sink by the fireside now
Back again, as you mutely sit
Musing by fire-light, that great brow
And the spirit-small hand propping it,
Yonder, my heart knows how!

So, earth has gained by one man the more,
And the gain of earth must be heaven's gain too;
And the whole is well worth thinking o'er
When autumn comes: which I mean to do
One day, as I said before.

ANY WIFE TO ANY HUSBAND

My love, this is the bitterest, that thou—
Who art all truth, and who dost love me now
As thine eyes say, as thy voice breaks to say—
Shouldst love so truly, and couldst love me still
A whole long life through, had but love its will,
Would death that leads me from thee brook delay.

I have but to be by thee, and thy hand
Will never let mine go, nor heart withstand
The beating of my heart to reach its place.
When shall I look for thee and feel thee gone?
When cry for the old comfort and find none?
Never, I know! Thy soul is in thy face.

Oh, I should fade—'tis willed so! Might I save.
Gladdly I would, whatever beauty gave
Joy to thy sense, for that was precious too.
It is not to be granted. But the soul
Whence the love comes, all ravage leaves that whole:
Vainly the flesh fades; soul makes all things new.

It would not be because my eye grew dim
Thou couldst not find the love there, thanks to Him.
Who never is dishonored in the spark
He gave us from his fire of fires, and bade
Remember whence it sprang, nor be afraid
While that burns on, though all the rest grow dark.

So, how thou wouldst be perfect, white and clean
Outside as inside, soul and soul's demesne
Alike, this body given to show it by!
Oh, three-parts through the worst of life's abyss,
What plaids it from the next world after this,
Couldst thou repeat a stroke and gain the sky!

And is it not the bitterer to think
That disengage our hands and thou wilt sink
Although thy love was love in very deed?
I know that nature! Pass a festive day,
Thou dost not throw its relic-flower away
Nor bid its music's loitering echo speed.

Thou let'st the stranger's glove lie where it fell;
If old things remain old things all is well,
For thou art grateful as becomes man best:
And hadst thou only heard me play one tune,
Or viewed me from a window, not so soon
With thee would such things fade as with the rest.

I seem to see! We meet and part; 'tis brief;
The book I opened keeps a folded leaf.
The very chair I sat on, breaks the rank;
That is a portrait of me on the wall—
Three lines, my face comes at so slight a call:
And for all this, one little hour to thank!

But now, because the hour through years was fixed,
Because our inmost beings met and mixed,
Because thou once hast loved me — wilt thou dare
Say to thy soul and Who may list beside,
"Therefore she is immortally my bride;
Chance cannot change my love, nor time impair.

"So, what if in the dust of life that's left,
I, a tired traveller of my sun bereft,
Look from my path when, mimicking the same,
The fire-fly glimpses past me, come and gone?
—Where was it till the sunset? Where anon
It will be at the sunrise? What's to blame?"

Is it so helpful to thee? Canst thou take
The mimic up, nor, for the true thing's sake,
Put gently by such efforts at a beam?
Is the remainder of the way so long,
Thou need'st the little solace, thou the strong?
Watch out thy watch, let weak ones doze and dream!

Ah, but the fresher faces! "Is it true?"
Thou 'lt ask, "some eyes are beautiful and new?"

Some hair, — how can one choose but grasp such wealth?
And if a man would press his lips to lips
Fresh as the wilting hedge-rose-cup there slips
The dewdrop out of, must it be by stealth?

"It cannot change the love still kept for Her,
More than if such a picture I prefer
Passing a day with, to a room's bare side:
The painted form takes nothing she possessed,
Yet, while the Titian Venus lies at rest,
A man looks. Once more, what is there to chide?"

So must I see, from where I sit and watch,
My own self sell myself, my hand attach
Its warrant to the very thefts from me—
Thy singleness of soul that made me proud,
Thy purity of heart I loved aloud,
Thy man's truth I was bold to bid God see!

Love so, then, if thou wilt! Give all thou canst
Away to the new faces — disencumbered,
(Say it and think it) obliterate no more:
Re-issue looks and words from the old mint,
Pass them afresh, no matter whose the print
Image and superscription once they bore!

Re-coin thyself and give it them to spend,—
It all comes to the same thing at the end,
Since mine thou wast, mine art and mine shalt be,
Faithful or faithless, scaling up the sum
Or lavish of my treasure, thou must come
Back to the heart's place here I keep for thee!

Only, why should it be with stain at all?
Why must I, 'twixt the leaves of coronal,
Put any kiss of pardon on thy brow?
Why need the other women know so much,
And talk together, "Such the look and such
The smile he used to love with, then as now!"

Might I die last and show thee! Should I find
Such hardship in the few years left behind,
If free to take and light my lamp, and go
Into thy tomb, and shut the door and sit,
Seeing thy face on those four sides of it
The better that they are so blank, I know!

Why, time was what I wanted, to turn o'er
Within my mind each look, get more and more
By heart each word, too much to learn at first:
And join thee all the fitter for the pause
'Neath the low doorways's lintel. That were cause
For lingering, though thou calledst, if I durst!

And yet thou art the nobler of us two;
What dare I dream of, that thou canst not do,
Outstripping my ten small steps with one stride?
I'll say then, here's a trial and a task—
Is it to bear? — if easy, I'll not ask:
Though love fail, I can trust on in thy pride
A SERENADE AT THE VILLA

Pride? — when those eyes forestall the life behind!
The death I have to go through! — when I find.
Now that I want thy help most, all of thee!
What did I fear? Thy love she? Thou shall hold me fast
Until the little minute's sleep is past.
And I wake saved. — And yet it will not be!

TWO IN THE CAMPAGNA

I wonder do you feel to-day
As I have felt since, hand in hand,
We sat down on the grass, to stray
In spirit better through the land,
This morn of Rome and May?

For me, I touched a thought, I know,
Has tantalized me many times,
Like turns of thread the spiders throw
Mocking across our path for rhymes
To catch at and let go.

Help me to hold it! First it left
The yellowing fennel, run to seed
There, branching from the brickwork's cleft,
Some old tomb's ruin; yonder weed
Took up the floating wdd.

Where one small orange cup unassed
Five beetles, — blind and green they grope
Among the honey-meal: and last,
Everywhere on the grassy slope
I traced it. Hold it fast!

The champaign with its endless fleece
Of feather-gray grasses everywhere!
Silence and passion, joy and peace,
An everlasting wash of air —
Rome's ghost since her decease.

Such life here, through such lengths of hours,
Such miracles performed in play,
Such primal naked forms of flowers,
Such letting nature have her way
While heaven looks from its towers!

How say you? Let us, O my dove,
Let us be unshamed of soul,
As earth lies bare to heaven above!
How is it under our control
To love or not to love?

I would that you were all to me,
You that are just so much, no more.
Nor yours nor mine, nor slave nor free!
Where does the fault lie? What the core
O' the wound, since wound must be?

I would I could adopt your will.
See with your eyes, and set my heart
Beating by yours, and drink my fill
At your soul's springs, — your part my part
In life, for good and ill.

No. I yearn upward, touch you close.
Then stand away. I kiss your cheek,

Catch your soul's warmth, I pluck the rose
And love it more than tongue can speak —
Then the good minute goes.

Already how am I so far
Out of that minute? Must I go
Still like the thistle-bell, no bar.
Onward, whenever light winds blow,
Fixed by no friendly star?

Just when I seemed about to learn!
Where is the thread now? Off again!
The old trick! Only I discern —
Infinite passion, and the pain
Of finite hearts that yearn.

MISCONCEPTIONS

This is a spray the Bird clung to,
Making it blossom with pleasure,
Ere the high tree-top she sprung to,
Fit for her nest and her treasure.
Oh, what a hope beyond measure
Was the poor spray's, which the flying feet Hung to, —
So to be singled out, built in, and sung to !

This is a heart the Queen leant on,
Thrilled in a minute erratic,
Ere the true bosom she bent on,
Meet for love's regal dalmatic.
Oh, what a fancy ecstatic
Was the poor heart's, ere the wanderer went on—
Love to be saved for it, proffered to, spent on!

A SERENADE AT THE VILLA

That was I, you heard last night,
When there rose no moon at all.
Nor, to pierce the strained and tight
Tent of heaven, a planet small:
Life was dead and so was light.

Not a twinkle from the fly,
Not a glimmer from the worm;
When the crickets stopped their cry,
When the owls forebore a term,
You heard music; that was I.

Earth turned in her sleep with pain,
Sultrily suspired for proof,
In at heaven and out again,
Lightning! — where it broke the roof,
Bloodlike, some few drops of rain.

What they could my words expressed,
O my love, my all, my one!
Singing helped the verses best,
And when singing's best was done,
To my lute I left the rest.

So wore night; the East was gray,
White the broad-faced hemlock-flowers:
There would be another day;
Ere its first of heavy hours
Found me. I had passed away.

What became of all the hopes,
Words and song and lute as well?
Say, this struck you — "When life gropes
Fee-bly for the path where all
Light last on the evening slopes,
"One friend in that path shall be,
To secure my step from wrong;
One to count night day for me,
Patient through the watches long,
Serving most with none to see."

Never say — as something bodes —
"So, the worst has yet a worse!"
When life halts 'neath double loads,
Better the task-master's curse
Than such music on the roads!

"When no moon succeeds the sun,
Nor can pierce the midnight's tent
Any star, the smallest one,
While some drops, where lightning rent,
Show the final storm began —

"When the fire-fly hides its spot,
When the garden-voices fail
In the darkness thick and hot, —
Shall another voice avail,
That shape be where these are not?

"Has some plague a longer lease,
Proffering its help uncounted?
Can't one even die in peace?
As one shuts one's eyes on youth,
Is that face the last one sees?"

Oh, how dark your villa was,
Windows fast and obdurate!
How the garden grudged me grass
Where I stood — the iron gate
Ground its teeth to let me pass!

ONE WAY OF LOVE

All June I bound the rose in sheaves,
Now, rose by rose, I strip the leaves
And strew them where Pauline may pass,
She will not turn aside? Ahas!
Let them lie, Suppose they die?
The chance was they might take her eye.

How many a month I strove to suit
These stubborn fingers to the lute!
To-day I venture all I know,
She will not hear my music? So!
Break the string; fold music's wing:
Suppose Pauline had bade me sing!

My whole life long I learned to love,
This hour my utmost art I prove
And speak my passion — heaven or hell?
She will not give me heaven? "Tis well!
Lose who may — I still can say,
Those who win heaven, blest are they!

ANOTHER WAY OF LOVE

June was not over
Though past the full,
And the best of her roses
Had yet to blow,
When a man I knew
But shall not discover,
Since ears are dull,
And time discloses
Turned him and said with a man's true air,
Half sighing a smile in a yawn, as 't were, —
"If I tire of your June, will she greatly care?"

Well, dear, in-doors with you!
True! serene deadness
Tries a man's temper.
What's in the blossom
June wears on her bosom?
Can it clear scores with you?
Sweetness and redness,
_Eadem semper_!

Go, let me care for it greatly or slightly!
If June mend her bower now, your hand left unsightly
By plucking the roses, — my June will do rightfully.

And after, for pastime,
If June be refugent,
With flowers in completeness,
All petals, no prickles,
Delicious as trickles
Of wine porred at mass-time, —
And choose One indulgent
To redness and sweetness;
Or if, with experience of man and of spider,
June use my June-lightning, the strong insect-riddler,
And stop the fresh film-work, — why, June will consider.

A PRETTY WOMAN

That fawn-skin-dappled hair of hers,
And the blue eye
Dear and dewy,
And that infantine fresh air of hers!

To think men cannot take you, Sweet,
And enfold you,
Ay, and hold you.
And so keep you what they make you, Sweet!

You like us for a glance, you know —
For a word's sake
Or a sword's sake,
All's the same, whate'er the chance, you know.

And in turn we make you ours, we say —
You and youth too,
Eyes and mouth too,
All the face composed of flowers, we say.

All's our own, to make the most of, Sweet —
Sing and say for,
Watch and pray for,
Keep a secret or go boast of. Sweet!

But for loving, why, you would not, Sweet,
Though we prayed you,
Paid you, brayed you
In a mortar — for you could not, Sweet!

So, we leave the sweet face fondly there:
Be its beauty
Its sole duty!
Let all hope of grace beyond, lie there!

And while the face lies quiet there,
Who shall wonder
That I ponder
A conclusion? I will try it there.

As, — why must one, for the love foregone,
Scorn mere liking?
Thunder-stricking
Earth, — the heaven, we looked above for, gone!

Why, with beauty, needs there money be,
Love with liking?
Crush the fly-kings
In his gaze, because no honey-bee?

May not liking be so simple-sweet,
If love grew there
T would undo there
All that breaks the cheek to dimples sweet?

Is the creature too imperfect, say?
Would you mend it
And so end it?
Since not all addition perfects aye!

Or is it of its kind, perhaps,
Just perfection —
Whence, rejection
Of a grace not to its mind, perhaps?

Shall we burn up, tread that face at once
Into tinder,
And so hinder
Sparks from kindling all the place at once?

Or else kiss away one’s soul on her?
Your love-fancies!
— A sick man sees
Truer, when his hot eyes roll on her!

Thus the craftsman thinks to grace the rose, —
Plucks a mould-flower
For his gold flower
Uses fine things that efface the rose:

Rosy rubies make its cup more rose,
Precious metals
Ape the petals, —
Last, some old king locks it up, morose!

Then how grace a rose? I know a way!
Leave it, rather,
Must you gather?
Smell, kiss, wear it — at last, throw away!

RESPECTABILITY

DEAR, had the world in its caprice
Deign'd to proclaim "I know you both,
Have recognized your plighted troth,
Am sponsor for you: live in peace!" —
How many precious months and years
Of youth had passed, that speed so fast,
Before we found it out at last,
The world, and what it fears!

How much of priceless life were spent
With men that every virtue decks,
And women models of their sex,
Society’s true ornament,
Ere we dared wander, nights like this,
Through wind and rain, and watch the Seine,
And feel the Boulevard break again
To warmth and light and bliss!

I know! the world prescribes not love;
Allows my finger to caress
Your lips/ contour and downiness,
Provided it supply a glove.
The world’s good word! — the Institute!
Guizot receives Montalembert!

Eh? Down the court three lampions flare:
Put forward your best foot?

LOVE IN A LIFE

ROOM after room,
I hunt the house through
We inhabit together.
Heart, fear nothing, for, heart, thou shalt find
her —

Next time, herself! — not the trouble behind
her
Left in the curtain, the couch’s perfume!
As she brushed it, the cornice-creath blossomed anew:

You looking-glass gleamed at the wave of her feather.

Yet the day wears,
And door succeeds door;
I try the fresh fortune —
Range the wide house from the wing to the centre,
Still the same chance! she goes out as I enter.
Spend my whole day in the quest, — who cares?
But 'tis twilight, you see, — with such suites to explore.
Such closets to search, such alcoves to impor
tune!

LIFE IN A LOVE

ESCAPE me?
Never — Beloved!
While I am I, and you are you,
So long as the world contains us both,
Me the loving and you the loth,
While the one eludes, must the other pursue.
My life is a fault at last, I fear:
It seems too much like a fate, indeed!
Though I do my best I shall scarce succeed,
But what if my aim be wrong here?
It is but to keep the nerves at strain,
To dry one's eyes and laugh at a fall,
And baffled, get up and begin again,—
So the chase takes up one's life, that's all.
While, look but once from your farthest bound,
At me so deep in the dust and dark,
No sooner the old hope goes to ground
Than a new one, straight to the selfsame mark,
I shape me—
Ever Removed!

IN THREE DAYS

So, I shall see her in three days
And just one night, but nights are short,
Then two long hours, and that is morn.
See how I come, unchange, unworn!
Feel, where my life broke off from thine,
How fresh the splinters keep and fine,—
Only a torch and we combine!

Too long, this time of year, the days!
But nights, at least the nights are short.
As night shows where her one moon is,
A hand's-breadth of pure light and bliss,
So life's night gives my lady birth
And my eyes hold her! What is worth
The rest of heaven, the rest of earth?

O loaded curls, release your store
Of warmth and scent, as soon as before
The tingling hair did, lights and darks
Outbreaking into fairy sparks,
When under curl and curl I pried
After the warmth and scent inside,
Through lights and darks how manifold—
The dark inspired, the light controlled!
As early Art embrooks the gold,

What great fear, should one say, "Three days
That change the world might change as well
Your fortune; and if joy delay
Be happy that no worse befell!"
What small fear, if another says,
"Three days and one short night beside
May throw no shadow on your ways;
But years must teem with change untried,
With chance not easily defied,
With an end somewhere undescribed."

No fear!—or if a fear be born
This minute, it dies out in scorn.
Fear? I shall see her in three days
And one night, now the nights are short,
Then just two hours, and that is morn.

IN A YEAR

Never any more,
While I live,
Need I hope to see his face
As before.

Once his love grown chill,
Mine may strive,
Bitterly we re-embrace,
Single still.

Was it something said,
Something done,
Vexed him? Was it touch of hand,
Turn of head?
Strange! that very way
Love began:
I as little understand
Love's decay.

When I sewed or drew,
I recall
How he looked as if I sung,
— Sweetly too.
If I spoke a word,
First of all
Up his cheek the color sprang,
Then he heard.

Sitting by my side,
At my feet,
So he breathed but air I breathed,
Satisfied!
I, too, at love's brim
Touched the sweet;
I would die if death bequeathed
Sweet to him.

"Speak, I love thee best!"
He exclaimed;
"Let thy love my own foretell!"
I confessed;
"Clasp my heart on thine
Now unblamed,
Since upon thy soul as well
Hangeth mine!"

Was it wrong to own,
Being truth?
Why should all the giving prove
His own?
I had wealth and ease,
Beauty, youth:
Since my lover gave me love,
I gave these.

That was all I meant,
— To be just,
And the passion I had raised,
To content.
Since he chose to change
Gold for dust,
If I gave him what he praised
Was it strange?

Would he loved me yet.
On and on.
While I fought some way undreamed
— Paid my debt!
Gave more life and more,
Till, all gone.
He should smile "She never seemed Mine before."
"What, she felt the while,
Must I think?
Love's so different with us men!"
He should smile:
"Dying for my sake —
White and pink!
Can't we touch these bubbles then
But they break!"

Dear, the pang is brief,
Do thy part,
Have thy pleasure! How perplexed
Grows belief!
Well, this cold clay clod
Was man's heart:
Crumble it, and what comes next?
Is it God?

WOMEN AND ROSES

Written on the suggestion of some roses sent
Mrs. Browning. At the time of writing,
Browning was carrying out a resolve to write a poem a day, a resolve which lasted a fortnight.

I
I dream of a red-rose tree,
And which of its roses three
Is the dearest rose to me?

II
Round and round, like a dance of snow
In a dazzling drift, as its guardians, go
Floating the women faded for ages,
Sculptured in stone, on the poet's pages.
Then follow women fresh and gay,
Living and loving and loved to-day,
Last, in the rear, flee the multitude of maidens.
Beauties yet unborn. And all, to one cadence,
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

III
Dear rose, thy term is reached,
Thy leaf hangs loose and bleached:
Bees pass it mimpeached.

IV
Stay then, stoop, since I cannot climb,
You, great shapes of the antique time!
How shall I fix you, fire you, freeze you,
Break my heart at your feet to please you?
Oh, to possess and be possessed!
Hearts that beat 'neath each pallid breast!
Once but of love, the poesy, the passion,
Drink but once and die! — In vain, the same fashion,
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

V
Dear rose, thy joy's undimmed,
Thy cup is ruby-rimmed,
Thy cup's heart nectar-brimmed.

VI
Deep, as drops from a statue's plinth
The bee sucked in by the hyacinth,
So will I bury me while burning.
Quench like him at a plunge my yearning,
Eyes in your eyes, lips on your lips!
Fold me fast where the cincture slips,
Prison all my soul in eternities of pleasure,
Girdle me for once! But no — the old measure,
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

VII

Dear rose without a thorn,
Thy bud 's the babe unborn:
First streak of a new morn.

VIII
Wings, lead wings for the cold, the clear!
What is far conquers what is near.
Roses will bloom nor want beholders,
Sprung from the dust where our flesh moulders,
What shall arrive with the cycle's change?
A novel grace and a beauty strange.
I will make an Eve, be the artist that began her,
Shaped her to his mind! — Alas! in like manner
They circle their rose on my rose tree.

BEFORE

Let them fight it out, friend! things have gone too far.
God must judge the couple: leave them as they are — Whichever one's the guiltless, to his glory,
And whichever one the guilt's with, to my story!

Why, you would not bid men, sink in such a slough,
Strike no arm out further, stick and stink as now.
Leaving right and wrong to settle the embroi-
dment,
Heaven with snaky hell, in torture and embroi-
dment?

Who's the culprit of them? How must he conceive
God — the queen he clasps to, laughing in his sleeve,
" 'Tis but decent to profess one's self beneath her:
Still, one must not be too much in earnest, either!"

Better sin the whole sin, sure that God oberves;
Then go live his life out! Life will try his nerves,
When the sky, which noticed all, makes no disclosure,
And the earth keeps up her terrible composure.
Let him pace at pleasure, past the walls of rose,
Pluck their fruits when grape-trees grace him
as he goes!
For he 's gins to guess the purpose of the garden,
With the sky mute thing, beside there, for a warden.
What's the leopard-dog-thing, constant at his side,
A leer and lie in every eye of its obsequious hide?
When will come an end to all the mock obeisance,
And the price appear that pays for the misfeasance?

So much for the culprit. Who's the martyred man?
Let him bear one stroke more, for be sure he can!
Let that stroke thus evil's lump with good to heaven,
Let him give his blood at last and get his heaven!

All or nothing, stake it! Trusts he God or no?
Thus far and no farther? Further? be it so!
Now, enough of your chicanes of prudent pauses,
Sage provisos, sub-minutes and saving-clauses!

Ah, 'forgive' you bid him? While God's champion lives,
Wrong shall be resisted—dead, why, he forgives.
But you must not end my friend ere you begin him;
Evil stands not crowned on earth, while breath is in him.

Once more—Will the wronger, at this last of all,
Dare to say, 'I did wrong,' rising in his fall?
No?—Let go, then! Both the fighters to their places!
While I count three, step you back as many paces!

AFTER

Take the cloak from his face, and at first
Let the corpse do its worst!

How he lies in his rights of a man!
Death has done all death can.
And, absorbed in the new life he leads,
He recks not, he heed!
Nor his wrong nor my vengeance; both strike
On his senses alike,
And are lost in the solemn and strange
Surprise of the change.

Ha, what avails death to erase
His offence, my disgrace?
I would we were boys as of old
In the field, by the fold!
His outrage, God's patience, man's scorn
Were so easily borne!

I stand here now, he lies in his place:
Cover the face!

THE GUARDIAN ANGEL

Dear and great Angel, wouldst thou only leave
That child, when thou hast done with him, for me!

Let me sit all the day here, that when eve
Shall find performed thy special ministry,
And time come for departure, thou, suspending
Thy flight, may'st see another child for tending,
Another still, to quiet and retrieve.

Then I shall feel thee step one step, no more,
From where thou standest now, to where I gaze.
—And suddenly my head is covered o'er
With those wings, white above the child who prays
Now on that tomb—and I shall feel thee
Guarding
Me, out of all the world; for me, discarding
You heaven thy home, that waits and opens its door.

I would not look up thither past thy head
Because the door opens, like that child, I know,
For I should have thy gracious face instead,
Thou bird of God! And wilt thou bend me low
Like him, and lay, like his, my hands together,
And lift them up to pray, and gently tether
Me, as thy lamb there, with thy garment's spread?

If this was ever granted, I would rest
My head beneath thine, while thy healing hands
Close-covered both my eyes beside thy breast,
Pressing the brain, which too much thought expands,
Back to its proper size again, and smoothing
Distortion down till every nerve had soothing
And all lay quiet, happy and suppressed.

How soon all worldly wrong would be repaired!
I think how I should view the earth and skies
And sea, when once again my brow was bare
After thy healing, with such different eyes.
O world, as God has made it! All is beauty:
And knowing this, is love, and love is duty.
What further may be sought for or declared?

Guercino drew this angel I saw teach
(Alfred, dear friend!)—that little child to pray,
Holding the little hands up, each to each
Pressed gently,—with his own head turned away
Over the earth where so much lay before him
Of work to do, though heaven was opening over him,
And he was left at Fano by the beach.

We were at Fano, and three times we went
To sit and see him in his chapel there,
And drink his beauty to our soul's content
—My angel with me too: and since I care
For dear Guercino's fame (to which in power
And glory comes this picture for a dower, Franght with a pathos so magnificent)—

And since he did not work thus earnestly
At all times, and has else endured some wrong.
I took one thought his picture struck from me,
And spread it out, translating it to song.
My love is here. Where are you, dear old friend?
How rolls the Waiean at your world's far end?
This is Acoma, yonder is the sea.

MEMORABILIA

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
And did he stop and speak to you,
And did you speak to him again?
How strange it seems and new!

But you were living before that,
And also you are living after;
And the memory I started at—
My starting moves your laughter!

I crossed a moor, with a name of its own,
And a certain use in the world no doubt,
Yet a hand's-breadth of it shines alone
‘Mid the blank miles round about:

For there I picked up on the heather,
And there I put inside my breast
A monted feather, an eagle-feather!
Well, I forget the rest.

POPULARITY

As the previous poem was an appreciation of Shelley, so this, of Keats.

STAND still, true poet that you are!
I know you; let me try and draw you,
Some might you'll fail us: when after
You rise, remember one man saw you,
Knew you, and named a star!

My star, God's glow-worm! Why extend
That loving hand of his which leads you,
Yet locks you safe from end to end
Of this dark world, unless he needs you,
Just saves your light to spend?

His clenched hand shall unclose at last,
I know, and let out all the beauty:
My poet holds the future fast
Accepts the coming ages' duty,
Their present for this past.

That day, the earth's feast-master's brow
Shall clear, to God the chalice raising;
"Others give best at first, but then
Forever set'st our table praising.
Keep'st the good wine till now!"

Meantime, I'll draw you as you stand,
With few or none to watch and wonder:
I'll say — a fisher, on the sand
By Tyre the old, with ocean-plunder,
A netful, brought to land.

Who has not heard how Tyrian shells
Enclosed the blue, that dye of dyes
Whereof one drop worked miracles.
And colored like Astarte's eyes
Raw silk the merchant sells?

And each bystander of them all
Could criticise, and quote tradition
How depths of blue sublimed some pall
— To get which, pricked a king's ambition
Worth sceptre, crown and ball.

Yet there's the dye, in that rough mesh,
The sea has only just o'er-whispered!
Live whelks, each lip's beard dripping fresh.
As if they still the water's lip heard
Through foam the rock-weeds thresh.

Enough to furnish Solomon
Such hangings for his cedar-house,
That, when gold-rabed he took the throne
In that abyss of blue, the Spouse
Might swear his presence shone

Most like the centre-spike of gold
Which burns deep in the bluebell's womb
What time, with arders manifold,
The bee goes singing to her gown,
Drunken and overbold.

Mere combs, not fit for warp or woof!
Till cunning come to pound and squeeze
And clarify,— refine to proof
The liquor filtered by degrees,
While the world stands aloof.

And there's the extract, flashed and fine,
And priced and salable at last!
And Hobbs, Nobbs, Stokes and Nokes combine
To paint the future from the past,
Put blue into their line.

Hobbs hints blue,— straight he turtle eats:
Nobbs prints blue,— claret crowns his cup:
Nokes outdaries Stokes in azure feats,—
Both gorge. Who fished the murex up?
What porridge had John Keats?

MASTER HUGUES OF SAXE-GOTHA

Whomever Browning may have had in mind, there was no historical figure with this name and place.

Hist, but a word, fair and soft!
Forth and be judged, Master Hugues!
Answer the question I've put you so oft:
What do you mean by your mountainous fugues?
See, we're alone in the loft...

I, the poor organist here,
Hugues, the composer of note,
Dead though, and done with, this many a year:
Let's have a colloquy, something to quote.
Make the world prick up its ear!
DRAMATIC

See, the church empties space:
'Fast they extinguish the lights,
Hallo there, sacristan! Five minutes' grace!
Here's a crank pedlar wants setting to rights,
Balks one of holding the base.

See, our huge house of the sounds,
Hushing its hundreds at once
Bids the last loiterer back to his bounds!
—O you may challenge them, not a response
Get the church-saints on their rounds!

(Saints go their rounds, who shall doubt?
—March, with the moon to admire,
Up nave, down chancel, turn transept about,
Supervise all betwixt pavement and spire,
Put rats and mice to the rout—

Aloys and Jurien and Just—
Order things back to their place,
Have a sharp eye lest the candlesticks rust,
Rub the church-plate, dim the sacramentace,
Clear the desk-velvet of dust.)

Here's your book, younger folks shelf!
Played I not off-hand and runningly,
Just now, your masterpiece, hard number twelve?
Here's what should strike, could one handle it cunningly:
Help the axe, give it a helve!

Page after page as I played,
Every bar's rest where one wipes
Sweat from one's brow, I looked up and surveyed,
Over my three claviers, you forest of pipes
Whence you still peeped in the shade.

Sure you were wishful to speak?
You, with brow ruled like a score,
Yes, and eyes buried in pits on each cheek,
Like two great breves, as they wrote them of yore,
Each side that bar, your straight beak!

Sure you said—"Good, the mere notes!
Still, coulst thou take my intent.
Know what procured me our Company's notes—
A master were landed and sciolists shent,
Parted the sheep from the goats!"

Well then, speak up, never flinch!
Quick, ere my candle's a sunn
—Burnt, do you see? to its uttermost inch—I believe in you, but that's not enough:
Give my conviction a clinch!

First you deliver your phrase
—Nothing propound, that I see,
Fit in itself for much blame or much praise—
Answered no less, where no answer needs be;
Off start the Two on their ways.

Straight must a Third interpose,
Volunteer needlessly help:

In strikes a Fourth, a Fifth thrusts in his nose,
So the cry's open, the kennel's a-yelp,
Argument's hot to the close.

One dissertates, he is candid:
Two must discept.—has distinguished:
Three helps the couple, if ever yet man did;
Four protests; Five makes a dart at the thing wished:
Back to One, goes the case bandied.

One says his say with a difference:
More of expounding, explaining!
All now is wrangle, abuse and vociferance:
Now there's a truce, all's subdued, self-restraining:
Five, though, stands out all the stiffer hence.

One is incisive, corrosive:
Two retorts, nettled, curt, crepitant;
Three makes rejoinder, expansive, explosive;
Four overbears them all, strident and strepitant:

Five . . . O Danaides. O Sieve!

Now, they ply axes and crowbars!
Now, they prick pins at a tissue
Fine as a skein of the casuist Escobar's
Worked on the bone of a lie. To what issue?
Where is our gain at the Two-bars?

Est fuga, volcitur rota.
On we drift: where looms the din port?
One, Two, Three, Four, Five, contribute their quota;
Something is gained, if one caught but the import—
Show it us, Hughes of Saxo-Gotha!

What with affirming, denying,
Holding, risposing, subjoining,
All's like . . . it's like . . . for an instance
I'm trying . . .
There! See our roof, its gilt moulding and groining
Under those spider-webs lying!

So your fugue broadens and thickens,
Greatens and deepens and lengthens,
Till we exclaim—"But where's music, the dickens?
Blot ye the gold, while your spider-web strengthens —Blacked to the stoutest of tickens?"

I for man's effort am zealous:
Prove me such censure unfounded!
Seems it surprising a lover grows jealous—
Hopes 'twas for something, his organ-pipes sounding,
Tiring three boys at the bellows?

Is it your moral of Life?
Such a web, simple and subtle,
Weave we on earth here in impotent strife,
Backward and forward each throwing his shuttle,
Death ending all with a knife?
Over our heads truth and nature —
Still our life's zigzags and dodges.
Ins and outs, weaving a new legislature —
God's gold just shining its last where that dodges,
Palled beneath man's insensibility.

So we o'ershroud stars and roses,
Cherub and trophy and garland;
Nothing grows which quietly closes
Heaven's earnest eye: not a glimpse of the far land
Gets through our comments and glozies.

Ah, but traditions, inventions,
(Say we and make up a visage)
So many men with such various intentions,
Down the past ages, must know more than this age!
Leave we the web its dimensions!

Who thinks Hugues wrote for the deaf,
Proved a mere mountain in labor?
Better submit; try again; what's the clef?
'Faith, 'tis no trifle for pipe and for tabor —
Four flats, the minor in F.'
THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES

Kar. Hold! — Mine, I say; And mine shall it continue!
Kar. Just this fringe! Take anything beside! Lo, spire on spire.

Curl serpentwise wreathed columns to the top Of the roof, and hide themselves mysteriously Among the twinkling lights and darks that haunt You coruscate! Where the huge veil, they suspend Before the Prefect's chamber of delight.
Flonts wide. then falls again as if its slave. The scented air, took heart now, and anon Lost heart to buoy its breadths of gorgeousness Above the gloom they droop in — all the porch Is jewelled o'er with frostwork charactery; And, see, you eight-point cross of white flame, winking

Hoar-silverly like some fresh-broke marble stone:
Raze out the Rhodian cross there, so thou leav'st mee
This single fringe!

Ay. Ha, wouldst thou, dog-fox? Help! — Three hand-breadths of gold fringe, my son was set To twist, the night he died! Kar. Nay, hear the knave! And I could witness my one daughter borne, A week since, to the Prefect's couch, yet fold These arms, be mute, lest word of mine should mar Our Master's work, day the Prefect here A day, prevent his sailing hence for Rhodes — How know I else? — Hear me denied my right By such a knave!
Ragh. [Interposing.] Each ravage for himself!

Booty enough! On, Druses! Be there found Blood and a heap behind us; with us, Djabal Turned Hakeem; and before us, Lebanon! Yields the porch? Spare not! There his minions dragged
Thy daughter, Karshook, to the Prefect's Fine
Ayoob! Thy son, to soothe the Prefect's pride, Bent o'er that task, the death-sweat on his brow, Carving the spice-tree's heart in scroll-work there!
Onward in Djabal's name!
(As the tumult is at height, enter Khalil. A pause and silence.)

Khalil. Was it for this, Djabal, which summoned you? Deserve you thus
A portion in to-day's event? What, here — When most behoves your feet fall soft, your eyes
Sink low, your tongues lie still, — at Djabal's side,
Close in his very hearing, who, perchance, Assumes e'en now God Hakeem's dread shape, — Dispute you for these gauds?

Ay. How say'st thou, Khalil?

 Doubtless our Master prompts thee! Take the fringe,
Old Karshook! I supposed it was a day . . .
Kha. For pillage?
Kar. Hearken, Khalil! Never spoke A boy so like a song-bird; we avouch thee Prettiest of all our Master's instruments Except thy bright twin-sister; thou and Anael Challenge his prime regard: but we may crave (Such nothing as we be) a portion too Of Djabal's fav'or; in him we believed, His bound ourselves, him moon by moon obeyed. Kept silence till this daybreak — so, may claim Reward: who grudges me my claim?

Ay. Is not as yesterday!
Ragh. Stand off!
Kha. Rebel you?
Must I, the delegate of Djabal, draw His wrath on you, the day of our Return?
Other Druses. Wrench from their grasp the fringe! Hounds must the earth Vomit her plagues on us through thee? — and thee?
Plague me not, Khalil, for their fault!
Kha. Oh, shame! Thus breaks to-day on you, the mystic tribe Who, flying the approach of Osman, bore Our faith, a merest spark, from Syria's ridge. Its birthplace, hither! "Let the sea divide These hunters from their prey," you said; "and safe.
In this dim islet's virgin solitude Tend we our faith, the spark, till happier time Fan it to fire; till Hakeem rise again, According to his word that, in the flesh Which faded on Mokattam ages since, He, at our extreme need, would interpose, And, reinstating all in power and bliss, Lead us himself to Lebanon once more."
Was't not thus you departed years ago, Ere I was born?

Druses. "T was even thus, years ago.
Kha. And did you call (according to old cause) Which bid us, lest the sacred grove profane, Assimilate ourselves in outward rites With strangers fortune makes our lords, and live As Christian with the Christian, Jew with Jew Druse only with the Druses — did you call Or no, to stand 'twixt you and Osman's rage, (Mad to pursue e'en hither through the sea) The remnant of our tribe,) a race self vowed To endless warfare with his hordes and him, To the White-cross Knights of the adjacent Isle? Kar. And why else rend we down, wrench up, raise out?

These Knights of Rhodes we thus solicited For help, bestowed on us a fiercer pest Than aught we fled — their Prefect; who began His promised mere paternal governance. By a prompt massacre of all our Sheikhs Able to thwart the Order in its scheme Of crushing, with our nation's memory. Each chance of our return, and taming us Bondslaves to Rhodes forever — all, he thinks.
To end by this day's treason.

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{Say I not?}

You, fitted to the Order's purposes,

Your Sheikhs cut off, your rights, your garb proscribed,

Must yet receive one degradation more;

The Knights at last throw off the mask —

Transfer,

As tributary now and appanage.

This isle they are but protectors of.

To their own ever-coveting here, the Church,

Who became all crimes that pay her thus.

You, from their Prefect, were to be consigned

Pursuant of I know not what vile pact

To the Knights' Patriarch, ardent to outvie

His predecessor in all wick'dness.

When suddenly rose Djabal in the midst,

Djabal, the man in semblance, but our God

Confessed by signs and portents. Ye saw fire

Bicker round Djabal, heard strange music hit

Bird-like about his brow?

\[ \text{Druses.} \]

\text{We saw — we heard!}

Djabal is Hakeem, the incarnate Dread!

The phantasm Khalif, King of Prodigies!

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{And as he said has not our Khalif done,}

And so disposed events from land to land

Passing invisibly) that when, this morn,

The pact of villany complete, there comes

This Patriarch's Nuncio with this Master's Prefect

Their treason to consummate, — each will face

For a crown, whose handful, an uplifted nation;

For simulated Christians, confessed Druses;

And, for slaves past hope of the Mother-mound,

Freemen returning there 'neath Venice flag;

That Venice which, the Hospitalers' foe,

Grants us from Camdina escort home at price

Of our relinquished isle, Rhodes' counts her own —

Venice, whose promised argosies should stand

Toward harbor: is it now that you, and you,

And you, selected from the rest to bear

The burden of the Khalif's secret, further

To-day's event, entitled by your wrongs,

And witness in the Prefect's hall his fate —

That you dare clatch these gands? Ay, drop them!

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{True.}

Most true, all this; and yet, may one dare hint,

Thou art the youngest of us? — though employed

Abundantly as Djabal's confidant.

Transmitter of his mandates, even now.

Much more, when 'er beside him Anael graces

The cedar throne, his queen-bride, art thou like

To occupy its lowest step that day!

Now, Khalif,wert thou checked as thou aspir'st,

Forbidden such or such an honor. — say,

Would silence serve so amply?

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{Karshook thinks I}

I covet honors? Well, nor idly thinks!

Honors? I have demanded of them all

The greatest!

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{I supposed so.}

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{Judge, yourselves!}

Turn, thus: 'tis in the alcove at the back

Of yonder columned porch, whose entrance now

The veil hides, that our Prefect holds his state,

Receives the Nuncio, when the one, from

Rhodes,

The other lands from Syria; there they meet.

Now, I have sued with earnest prayers . . .

\[ \text{Kar.} \]

For what

Shall the Bride's brother vainly sue?

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

That mine—

Avenging in one blow a myriad wrongs

— Might be the hand to slay the Prefect there!

Djabal reserves that office for himself. [a silence.]

Thus far, as youngest of you all, I speak

— Scarcely more enlightened than yourselves;

since, near

As I approach him, nearer as I trust

Soon to approach our Master, he reveals

Only the God's power, not the glory yet.

Therefore I reasoned with you: now, as servant

To Djabal, bearing his authority,

Hear me appoint your several posts! Till noon

None see him save myself and Anael: once

The deed achieved, our Khalif, casting off

The emboldened Awe's tremendous mystery,

The weakness of the flesh disguise, resumes

His proper glory, never to fade again.

\[ \text{Enter a Druse.} \]

\text{The Druse.} Our Prefect lands from Rhodes!

— without a sign

That he suspects aught since he left our Isle;

Nor in his train a single guard beyond

The few he sailed with hence: so have we Learned

From Loys.

\[ \text{Kar.} \]

\text{Loys? Is not Loys gone}

\[ \text{Aye.} \]

Loys, the Frank Knight, returned?

\[ \text{The Druse.} \]

Loys, the boy, stood on the leading prow

Conspicuous in his gay attire, and leapt

Into the surf the foremost. Since day-dawn

I kept watch to the Northward; take but note

Of my poor vigilance to Djabal!

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

\text{Peace!}

Thou, Karshook, with thy company, receive

The Prefect as appointed: see, all keep

The wonted show of servitude: announce

His entry here by the accustomed peal

Of trumpets, then await the further pleasure

Of Djabal! Loys back, whom Djabal sent

To Rhodes that we might spare the single Knight

Worth sparing!'

\[ \text{Enter a second Druse.} \]

\text{The Druse.} I espied it first! Say, I

First spied the Nuncio's galley from the South!

Said 'st thou a Crossed-keys' flag would flap the mast?

It nears apace! One galley and no more.

If Djabal chance to ask who spied the flag,

Forget not, I it was!

\[ \text{Kha.} \]

Thou, Ayoob, bring

The Nuncio and his followers hither! Break

One rule prescribed, ye wither in your blood,

Die at your fault!

\[ \text{Enter a third Druse.} \]

\text{The Druse.} I shall see home, see home!

— Shall banquet in the sombre groves again!
Hail to thee, Khalil! Venice looms afar;
The argosies of Venice, like a cloud,
Bear up from Candia in the distance!

Kha. Joy!
Summon our people, Raghib! Bid all forth!
Tell them the long-kept secret, old and young!
Set free the captive, let the trampled raise
Their faces from the dust, because at length
The cycle is complete, God Hakem’s reign
Begins anew! Say, Venice for our guard,
Ere night we steer for Syria! Hear you, Druses?
Hear you this crowning witness to the claims
Of Djabal? Oh, I spoke of hope and fear,
Reward and punishment, because he bade
Who has the right: for me, what should I say
But, mar not those imperial lineaments,
No majesty of all that rapt regard
Vex by the least omission! Let him rise
Without a check from you!

Druses. Let Djabal rise!
(Enter Loys. — The Druses are silent.)

Loys. Who speaks of Djabal? for I seek him, friends!
[Aside.] Tu Dieu! ’Tis as our Isle broke out in song
For joy, its Prefect-incubus drops off
To-day, and I succeed him in his rule!
But no — they cannot dream of their good fortune!
[Aloud.] Peace to you, Druses! I have tidings for you,
But first for Djabal: where’s your tall
witcher?
With that small Arab thin-lipped silver-mouth?
Kha. [Aside to Kha.] Loys, in truth! Yet
Djabal cannot err!
Kar. [To Kha.] And who takes charge of Loys? That’s forgotten.
Despite thy wariness! Will Loys stand
And see his comrades slaughtered?

Loys. [Aside.] How they shrink
And whisper, with those rapid faces! What?
The sight of me in their oppressors’ garb Strikes terror to the simple tribe? God’s shame
On those that bring our Order ill repute?
But all’s at end now; better days begin
For those mild mountaineers from over-sea:
The timidiest shall have in me no Prefect
To cower at thus! [Aloud.] I asked for Djabal —

Kar. [Aside.] Better
One lured him, ere he can suspect, inside
The corridor; ’twere easy to dispatch
A youngsters. [To Loys.] Djabal passed some minutes since
Through yonder porch, and...

Kha. [Aside.] Hold! What, him dispatch?
The only Christian of them all we charge
No tyranny upon? Who, — noblest Knight
Of all that learned from time to time their trade
Of lust and cruelty among us, — heir
To Europe’s pomps, a truest child of pride. —
Yet stood between the Prefect and ourselves
From the beginning? Loys, Djabal makes Account of, and precisely sent to Rhodes
For safety? I take charge of him!

[To Loys.] Sir Loys, —

Loys. There, cousins! Does Sir Loys strike
you dead?
Kha. [Advancing.] Djabal has intercourse with few or none
Till noontide; but, your pleasure?

Loys. “Intercourse
With few or none?” — (Ah, Khalil, when you
spoke
I saw not your smooth face! All health! — and health.
To Anael! How fares Anael? — “Intercourse
With few or none?” Forget you, I’ve been friendly
With Djabal long ere you or any Druse?
Enough of him at Reumes, I think, beneath
The Duke my father’s roof? He’d tell by the hour,
With fixed white eyes beneath his swarthy brow,
Plausiblest stories...

Kha. The quaint attire!

Loys. Stories, say you? — Ah,

Loys. How you island-tribe?
Loys. Forget the world’s awake while here you drowse!
What brings me back? What should not bring me, rather!
Our Patriarch’s Nuncio visits you to-day —
Is not my year’s probation out? I come
To take the knightly vows.

Kha. What’s that you wear?

Loys. This Rhodian cross? The cross your Prefect wore.
You should have seen, as I saw, the full Chapter
Rise, to a man, while they transferred this cross
From that unworthy Prefect’s neck to...
(fool —
My secret will escape me!) In a word,
My year’s probation passed, a Knight ere eve
Am I; bound, like the rest, to yield my wealth
To the common stock, to live in chastity,
(We Knights espouse alone our Order’s fame)
— Change this gay weed for the black whitemantled gown.
And fight to death against the Infidel
— Not, therefore, against you, you Christians with
Such partial difference only as befits
The peacefullest of tribes. But Khalil, pri-
thee,
Is not the Isle brighter than wont to-day?
Kha. Ah, the new sword!

Loys. See now! You handle sword
As ’t were a camel-staff! Pull! That’s my motto.

Annealed "Pro fide," on the blade in blue.
Kha. No curve in it? Surely a blade should curve.

Loys. Straight from the wrist! Loose — it should possess itself.

Kha. [Waving with irresistibly exultation the sword.] Weare a nation, Loys, of old fame.
Among the mountains! Rights have we to keep
With the sword too!

[Remembering himself.] But I forget — you bid me
Seek Djabal?

Loys. What! A sword’s sight scares you not?
The People I will make of him and them!
Oh, let my Prefect-sway begin at once!
Bring Djabal — say, indeed, that come he must!

Kha. At noon seek Djabal in the Prefect’s Chamber.
And find... [Aside.] Nay, ’tis thy cursed race’s token.
Frank pride, no special insolence of thine!

[Aside.] Tarry, and I will do your bidding.

Loys! [To the rest aside.] Now, forth you! I proceed to Djabal straight.

Leave this poor boy, who knows not what he says!
Oh will it not add joy to even thy joy,
Djabal, that I report all friends were true?

[Khall goes, followed by the Druses.

Loys. Ta Deus! How happy I shall make these Druses!
Was ’t not surpassingly contrived of me
To get the long list of their wrongs by heart,
Then take the first pretence for stealing off
From these poor islanders, present myself
Sudden at Rhodes before the noble Chapter,
And as best proof of ardu in its cause
Which ere to-night will have become, too, mine.

Acquaint it with this plague-sore in its body,
This Prefect and his villainous career?
The princely Synod! All I dared request
Was his dismissal; and they graciously
Consign his very office to myself —
Myself may cure the Isle diseased!

And well
For them, they did so! Since I never felt
How lone a lot, though brilliant, I embrace,
Till now that, past retrieval, it is mine.
To live thus, and thus die! Yet, as I leapt
On shore, so home a feeling greeted me.
That I could half believe in Djabal’s story.
He used to tempt my father with, at Rennes
And me, too, since the story brought me here
Of some Count Dreas and ancestor of ours
Who, sick of wandering from Bonillon’s war,
Left his old name in Lebanon.

Long days
At least to spend in the Isle; and, my news now
An hour hence, what if Amael turn on me
The great black eyes I must forget?

Why, fool.
Recall them, then? My business is with Dja.
Not Amael! Djabal tarries: if I seek him?
— The Isle is brighter than its wont to-day?

ACT II

Enter Djabal.

Dja. That a strong man should think himself a God!
I — Hakeem? To have wandered through the world.
Sown falsehood, and thence reaped now scorn,
now faith,
For my one chant with many a change, my tale
Of outrage, and my prayer for vengeance — this
Required, forsooth, no mere man’s faculty.
Naught less than Hakeem’s? The persuading
Loys.

To press probation here: the getting access
By Loys to the Prefect: worst of all,
The gaining my tribe’s confidence by fraud.
That would disgrace the very Frank, — a few
Of Europe’s secrets which subdue the flame.
The wave, — to ply a simple tribe with these,
Took Hakeem?

And I feel this first to-day?
Does the day break, is the hour imminent
When one deed, when my whole life’s deed, my deed
Must be accomplished? Hakeem? Why the God?
Shout, rather, “Djabal, Yousof’s child, thought slain
With his whole race, the Druses’ Sheikhs, this Prefect
Endeavored to extirpate — saved, a child.
Returns from traversing the world, a man.
Able to take revenge, lead back the march.
To Lebanon — so shout, and who gainsays?
But now, because delusion mixed itself
Insensibly with this career, all’s changed!
Have I brought Venice to afford us convoy?
“True — but my jugglings wrought that!”

Put I heart
Into our people where no heart lurked? — “Ah.
What cannot an impostor do!”

Not this!
Not do this which I do! Not bid availing
Falsehood! Thou shalt not keep thy hold on me!
— Nor even get a hold on me! ’Tis now —
This day — hour — minute — it is as here I stand
On the accursed threshold of the Prefect.
That I am found deceiving and deceived!
And now what do I? — hasten to the few
Deceived, ere they deceive the many — shout.
“As I professed, I did believe myself!
Say, Druses, had you seen a butchery.
If Ayoob, Karshook saw — Maami there
Must tell you how I saw my father sink;
My mother’s arms twine still about my neck;
I hear my brother shriek, here’s yet the scar
Of what was meant for my own death-blow say.

If you had woke like me, grown year by year.
Out of the tumult in a far-off clime,
Would it be wondrous such delusion grew?
I walked the world, asked help at every hand:
Came help or no? Not this and this? Which helps
When I returned with, found the Prefect here, The Druses here, all here but Hakeem's self, The Khalif of the thousand prophecies, Reserved for such a juncture, — could I call My mission aught but Hakeem's? Promised Hakeem
More than performs the Djabal — you absolve? Me, you will never shame before the crowd Yet happily ignorant? — Me, both throngs surround, The few deceived, the many mabused, — Who, thus surrounded, say for you and them The Prefect, lead to Lebanon? No Khalif, But Sheikh once more! Mere Djabal — not (Khai. [Aside.] God Hakeem! 'T is told! The whole Druse nation knows thee, Hakeem, As we! and mothers lift on high their babes Who seem aware, so glisten their great eyes. Thou hast not failed us; ancient brows are proud; Our elders could not earlier die, it seems, Than with thy coming! The Druse heart is thine! Take it! my lord and theirs, be thou adored! Dja. [Aside.] Adored! — but I renounce it utterly!
Khai. Already are they instituting choirs And dances to the Khalif, as of old 'Tis chronicled thou bad'st them. Dja. [Aside.] I abjure it! 'Tis not mine — not for me!
Kha. Why pour they wine Flavored like honey and bruised mountain-herbs? Or wear those strings of sun-dried cedar-fruit? Oh, let me tell thee — Esnad, we supposed Doting, is carried forth, eager to see The last sun rise on the Isle: he can see now! The shamed Druse women never wept before: They can look up when we reach home, they say. Smell! — sweet cane, saved in Lilith's breast Thus long — Sweet! — it grows wild in Lebanon. And I Alone do nothing for thee! 'T is my office. Just to announce what well thou knowst — but this Thou bidd'st me. At this self-same moment tend The Prefect, Nuncio and the Admiral Either by their three sea-paths: nor forget Who were the trusty watchers! — thou forget? Like me, who do forget that Anael bade ... Dja. [Aside.] Ay, Anael. Anael — is that said at last? Louder than all, that would be said, I knew! What does abjuring mean, confessing mean, To the people? 'Till that woman crossed my path, On went I, solely for my people's sake: I saw her, and I then first saw myself. And slackened pace: 'If I should prove indeed Hakeem — with Anael by!'
Kha. [Aside.] Ah, he is rapt! Dare I at such a moment break on him Even to do my sister's bidding? Yes: The eyes are Djabal's and not Hakeem's yet, Though but till I have spoken this, per chance. Dja. [Aside.] To yearn to tell her, and yet have no one Great heart's word that will tell her! I could gasp Doubtless one such word out, and die. [Aloud.] You said That Anael ...
Kha. ... Fain would see thee, speak with thee, Before thou change, discard this Djabal's shape She knows, for Hakeem's shape she is to know. Something to say that will not from her mind! I know not what — 'Let him but come!' she said. Dja. [Half apart.] My nation—all my Druses — how fare they? Those I must save, and suffer thus to save, Hold their posts? Wait they their Khalif too?
Kha. All at the signal pant to flock around That banner of a brow! Dja. [Aside.] And when they flock, Confess them this: and after for reward, Be chased with howlings to her feet perseverance! — Have the poor outraged Druses, deaf and blind, Precede me there, forestall my story there, Tell it in mocks and jeers! I lose myself! Who needs a Hakeem to direct him now? I need the veriest child — why not this child? [Turning abruptly to Khalif. You are a Druse too, Khalil! ye were nourished Like Anael with our mysteries; if she Could vow, so nourished, to love only one Who should avenge the Druses, whence proceeds. Your silence? Wherefore made you no essay, Who thus implicitly can execute My bidding? What have I done, you could not not? Who, knowing more than Anael the proclamation Of our once lofty tribe, the daily life Of this detested ... Does he come, you say, This Prefect? All's in readiness?
Kha. The sword, The sacred robe, the Khalif's mystic tier. Laid up so long, are now disposed beside The Prefect's chamber. Dja. — Why did you despair?
Kha. I know our nation's state? 'Too surely know, As thou who speak'st to prove me! Wrongs like ours Should wake revenge; but when I sought the wronged And spoke, — 'The Prefect stabbed your son — arise! Your daughter, while you starve, eats shameless bread In his pavilion — then arise!' — my speech Fell idly: 't was, 'Be silent, or worse fare! Endure till time's slow cycle prove complete! Who may'st thou be that takest on thee to thrust Into this peril — art thou Hakeem?' No! Only a mission like thy mission renders All these obedient at a breath, subdues
Their private passions, brings their wills to one!
Dja. You think so?

Kha. Even now — when they have witnessed
Thy miracles — had I not threatened all
With Hakeem's vengeance, they would mar the work.
And cough ere this, each with his special prize,
Safe in his dwelling, leaving our main hope
To perish. No! When these have kissed thy feet
At Lebanon, the past purged off, the present
Clear, — for the future, even Hakeem's mission
May end, and I perchance, or any youth,
Shall rule them thus renewed. — I tutor thee!
Dja. And wisely. (He is Amael's brother,

As Amael's self.) Go say, I come to her.
Haste! I will follow you. ([Khall goes.

To these, the blinded multitude — confess,
Before at least the fortune of my deed
Half authorize its means! Only to her
Let me confess my fault, who in my path
Curled up like incense from a Mage-king's tomb
When he would have the wayfarer descend
Through the earth's rift and bear hid treasure forth!

How should child's-carelessness prove man's hood's crime
Till now that I, whose lone youth hurried past,
Letting each joy 'escape for the Drus's sake,
At length recover in one Druse all joy?
Were her brow brighter, her eyes richer, still
Would I confess! On the gulf's verge I pause,
How could I slay the Prefect, thus and thus?
Amael, be mine to guard me, not destroy! ([Goes.

(Enter Amael and Maan who is assisting to array her in the ancient dress of the Druses.)

Amael. Those saffron vestures of the tabret-
girls!

Comes Djabal, think you?

Maan. Doubtless Djabal comes.

An. Dest thou snow-swathe thee kingler,
Lebanon,
Than in my dreams? — Nay, all the tresses off
My forehead! Look I lovely so? He says
That I am lovely.

Maan. Lovely: nay, that hangs
Awa.

An. You tell me how a khandjar hangs?
The sharp side, thus, along the heart, see,

The maiden of our class. Are you content
For Djabal as for me?

Maan. Content, my child.

An. Oh mother, tell me more of him! He comes

Even now — tell more, fill up my soul with him!

Maan. And did I not... yes, surely... tell you all?

An. What will be changed in Djabal when the Change
Arrives? Which feature? Not his eyes!

Maan. Our Hakeem's eyes rolled fire and clove the dark

Superbly.

"In. Not his eyes! His voice perhaps?
Yet that's no change; for a grave current lived
— Grandly beneath the surface ever lived,
That, scattering, broke as in live silver spray.
While... ah, the bliss... he would discourse to me
In that enforced still fashion, word on word!
'Tis the old current which must swell through that.
For what least tone, Maa, could I lose?
'Tis surely not his voice will change! —

If Hakeem
Only stood by! If Djabal, somehow, passed
Out of the radiance as from out a robe;
Possessed, but was not it?

He lived with you?

Well... and that morning Djabal saw me first
And heard me vow never to wed but one
Who saved my People — on that day... proceed!

Maan. Once more, then: from the time of his return
In secret, changed so since he left the Isle
That I, who screened our Emir's last of sons,
This Djabal, from the Prefect's massacre
— Who bade him ne'er forget the child he was,
— Who dreamed so long the youth he might become —
I knew not in the man that child; the man
Who spoke alone of hope to save our tribe,
How he had gone from land to land to save
Our tribe — allies were sure, nor foes to dread;
And much he mused, days, nights, alone he mused:
But never till that day when, pale and worn
As by a persevering woe, he cried
"Is there not one Druse left me?" — and I showed

The way to Khalil's and your hiding-place
From the abhorred eye of the Prefect here,
So that he saw you, heard you speak — till then,
Never did he announce — how the moon seemed
To ope and shut, the while, above us both!
— His mission was the mission promised us;
The cycle had revolved; all things renewing,
He was lost Hakeem clothed in flesh to lead
His children home anon, now veiled to work
Great purposes: the Druses now would change!

In. And they have changed! And obstacles did sink,

And frontiers rose! And round his form
Played fire, and music beat her angel wings!
My people, let me more rejoice, oh more
For you than for myself! Did I but watch
Afar the pageant, feel our Khalil pass,
One of the throng, how proud were I — though
ne'er

Singed by Djabal's glance! But to be chosen
His own from all, the most his own of all,
To be exalted with him, side by side.
Lead the exulting Druses, meet... ah, how Worthily meet the maidens who await
Ever beneath the cedars — how deserve
This honor, in their eyes? So bright are they
Who saffron-vested sound the tabret there,
The girls who throng there in my dream! One-

hour
And all is over: how shall I do aught
THE RETURN OF THE DRUSES

That may deserve next hour’s exalting? —
How? [Suddenly to MAAM.]
Mother, I am not worthy him! I read it.
Still in his eyes! He stands as if to tell me
I am not, yet forbear. Why else revert
To one theme ever? — how more human gifts
Suffice him in myself — whose worship fades,
Whose awe goes ever off at his approach,
As now, who when he comes...

(DJABAL enters.)

Oh why is it

I cannot kneel to you?

Dja. Rather, ’tis I

Should kneel to you, my Amael!

An. Even so!

For never seem you — shall I speak the truth? —
Never a God to me! ’T is the Man’s hand,
Eye, voice! Oh, do you veil these to our people,
Or but to me? To them, I think, to them!
And brightness is their veil, shadow — my truth!
You mean that I should never kneel to you
— So, thus I kneel!

Dja. [Preventing her.] No — no!

[Feeling the khandjar as he raises her.
Ha, have you chosen...

An. The khandjar with our ancient garb.
But, Djabal,

Change not, be not exalted yet! Give time
That I may plan more, perfect more! My blood
Beats, beats!

[Aside.] Oh, must I then — since Loys leaves us
Never to come again, renew in me
These doubts so near effaced already — must
I needs confess them now to Djabal? — own
That when I saw that stranger, heard his voice,
My faith fell, and the woeful thought flashed first
That each effect of Djabal’s presence, taken
For proof of more than human attributes
In him, by me whose heart at his approach
Beat fast, whose brain while he was by swarm round,
Whose soul at his departure died away,
— That every such effect might have been wrought
In other frames, though not in mine, by Loys
Or any merely mortal presence? Doubt
Is fading fast; shall I reveal it now?
How shall I meet the rapture presently,
With doubt unexpect’d, undiscovered?

Dja. [Aside.] Ayow the truth? I cannot!
In what words
Avow that all she loved in me was false?
— Which yet has served that flower-like love of hers
To climb by, like the clinging gourd, and clasp
With its divinest wealth of leaf and bloom.
Could I take down the prop-work, in itself
So vile, yet interlaced and overlaid
With painted cups and fruitage — might these still Bask in the sun, unconscious their own strength
Of matted stalk and tendril had replaced
The old support thus silently withdrawn!
But no: the beamous fabric crushes too.
’Tis not for my sake but for Amael’s sake
I leave her soul this Hakeem where it leans.

Oh could I vanish from her, quit the Isle!
And yet — a thought comes; here my work is done.
At every point; the Druses must return —
Have convey to their birth-place back, whose’er
The leader be, myself or any Druse —
Venice is pledged to that: ’tis for myself,
For my own vengeance in the Prefect’s death,
I stay now, not for them: to slay or spare
The Prefect, whom imports it save myself?
He cannot bear their passage from the Isle;
What would his death be but my own reward?
Then, mine I will forgo. It is for’gone!
Let him escape with all my House’s blood!
Ere he can reach hand, Djabal disappears,
And Hakeem, Amael loved, shall, fresh as first,
Live in her memory, keeping her sublime
Above the world. She cannot touch that world
By ever knowing what I truly am.
Since Loys, of mankind the only one
Able to link my present with my past,
My life in Europe with my Island life,
Thence, able to unmask me, — I’ve disposed Safely at last at Rhodes, and...

(Enter Khalil.)

Kha. Loys greets thee!
Dja. Loys? To drag me back? It cannot be!

An. [Aside.] Loys! Ah, doubt may not be stifled so!

Kha. Can I have erro’d that thou so gazest?

Yes,
I told thee not in the glad press of tidings
Of higher import, Loys is returned
Before the Prefect, with, if possible,
Twice the light-heartedness of old. As though
On some imagination he expects,
To-day, the world’s fate hung!

Dja. And asks for me?

Kha. Thou knowest all things. Then in chief he greets,
But every Druse of us is to be happy
At his arrival, he declares: were Loys
Thon, Master, he could have no wider soul
To take us in with. How I love that Loys!

Dja. [Aside.] Shame winds me with her tether round and round!

An. [Aside.] Loys? I take the trial! it

The little I can do, be done; that faith,
All I can offer, want no perfecting
Which my own act may compass. Ay, this way
All may go well, nor that ignoble doubt
Be chased by other aid than mine. Advance
Close to my fear, weigh Loys with my Lord,
The mortal with the more than mortal gifts!

Dja. [Aside.] Before, there were so few
Avow’d! and now
There’s doubtless not one least Druse in the Isle
But, having learned my superhuman claims,
And calling me his Khalif-God, will clash
The whole truth out from Loys at first word!
While Loys, for his part, will hold me up,
With a Frank’s immaginable scorn

Of such imposture, to my people’s eyes!

Could I but keep him longer yet awhile
ACT III

ANael and Loy.

An. Here leave me! Here I wait another.

'Twas

For no mad protestation of a love
Like this you say possesses you, I came.

Loy. Love? how protest a love I dare not feel?

Mad words may doubtless have escaped me:

You are here — I only feel you here!

Loy. But once again, whom could you love?

An. Alas, say nothing of myself, who am

A Knight now, for when Knighthood we embrace,

Love we abjure: so, speak on safely: speak,

Lest I speak, and betray my faith! And yet

To say your breathing passes through me, changes

My blood to spirit, and my spirit to you,

As Heaven the sacrificer's wine to it —

This is not to protest my love! You said

You could love one... An.

None only! We are bent to earth — who raises up my tribe, I love;

The Prefect bows us — who removes him; we

Have ancient rights — who gives them back to us,

I love. Forbear me! Let my hand go!

Loy. You could love only? Where is Djabal?

An. Yet wherefore stay? Who does this

But myself?

Loy. Had I apprised her that I come to do

Just this, what more could she acknowledge?

No,

She sees into my heart's core! What is it

Feeds either cheek with red, as June some rose?

Why turns she from me? Ah fool, over-fond

To dream I could call up...

Yet feigned! 'Tis love! Oh Anael, speak to me!

Djabal —

An. Seek Djabal by the Prefect's chamber

At moon!

[Lays. [Aside.] And am I not the Prefect now?

Is it my fate to be the only one

Able to win her love, the only one

Unable to accept her love? 'The past

Breaks up beneath my footing: came I here

This morn as to a slave, to set her free

And take her thanks, and then spend day by day

Content beside her in the Isle? What works

This knowledge in me now? Her eye has broken

The faint disguise away: for Anael's sake

I left the Isle, for her espoused the cause

Of the Druses, all for her I thought, till now,

To live without!

As I must live! To-day

Ordains me Knight, forbids me... never shall

Forbid me to profess myself, heart, arm,

Thy soldier!

An. Djabal you demanded, comes!

[Lays. [Aside.] What wouldst thou, Loy?

see him? Naught beside

Is wanting: I have felt his voice a spell

From first to last. He brought me here, made known

The Druses to me, drove me hence to seek

Redress for them; and shall I meet him now?

When naught is wanting but a word of his,

To — what? — induce me to spurn hope, faith, pride,

Honor away, — to cast my lot among

His tribe, become a proverb in men's mouths,

Breaking my high pact of companionship

With those who graciously bestowed on me

The very opportunities I turn

Against them! Let me not see Djabal now!

An. The Prefect also comes!

[Lays. [Aside.] Him let me see

Not Djabal! Him, degraded at a word,

To soothe me, — to attest belief in me —

And after, Djabal! Yes, ere I return

To her, the Nunne's vow shall have destroyed

This heart's rebellion, and coerced this will

Forever.

Anael, not before the vows

Irrevocably fix me...

Let me fly!

The Prefect, or I lose myself forever! [Goes.

An. Yes, I am calm now: just one way remains —

One, to attest my faith in him: for, see,

I was quite lost else: Lays. Djabal, stand

On either side — two men! I balance looks

And words, give Djabal a man's preference,
The Return of the Druses

No more. In Djabal, Hakeem is absorbed! And for a love like this, the God who saves
My race, selects me for his bride? One way! —

(Djala. [To himself.] No moment is to waste then; 'tis resolved.
If Khalil may be trusted to lead back
My Droses, and if Loys can be cured
Out of the Isle — if I procure his silence,
Or promise never to return at least, —
All's over. Even now my bark awaits:
I reach the next wild islet and the next,
And lose myself beneath the sun forever.
And now, to Anael!

An. Djabal, I am thine!

had not been?

An. Not Djabal's? Say first, do you read my thought?

Why need I speak, if you can read my thought?

Djala. I do not, I have said a thousand times.

An. (My secret 's safe, I shall surprise him
yet!)

Djabal, I knew your secret from the first:
Djabal, when first I saw you . . . (by our porch
You leant, and pressed the tinkling veil away.
And one fringe fell behind your neck — I saw!)

... I knew you were not human, for I said
"This dim secluded house where the sea beats
Is heaven to me — my people's huts are hell
To them; this august form will follow me,
Mix with the waves his voice will, — I have
him;
And they, the Prefect! Oh, my happiness
Rounds to the full whether I choose or no!
His eyes met mine, he was about to speak,
His hand grew damp — surely he meant to
say
He let me love him; in that moment's bliss
I shall forget my people pine for home —
They pass and they repass with pallid eyes!"

I vowed at once a certain vow; this vow —
Not to embrace you till my tribe was saved.
Embrace me!

Djala. [Apart.] And she loved me! Naught remained
But that! — Nay, Anael, is the Prefect dead?

An. Ah, you reproach me! True, his death crowns all,
I know — or should know; and I would do
much.
Believe! but, death! Oh, you, who have known death,
Would never doom the Prefect, were death fearful
As we report!

Death! — a fire curls within us
From the foot's palm, and fills up to the brain,
Up, out, then shatters the whole bubble-shell
Of flesh, perichance!

Death! — witness, I would die,
What'er death be, would venture now to die
For Khalil, for Mami — what for thee?

Nay, but embrace me, Djibal, in assurance
My vow will not be broken, for I must
Do something to attest my faith in you,
Be worthy you!

Djala. [Avoiding her.] I come for that — to say
Such an occasion is at hand: 't is like
I leave you — that we part, my Anael, — part Forever.

An. We part? Just so! I have succumbed.

I am, he thinks, unworthy — and naught less
Will serve than such approval of my faith.
Then, we part not! Remains there no way
short
Of that? — Oh, not that!

Death! — yet a hurt bird
Died in my hands; its eyes filmed — "Nay, it sleeps,"

I said, " will wake to-morrow well;" 't was defead.

Djala. I stand here and time fleets. Anael
— I come
To bid a last farewell to you: perhaps
We never meet again. But, ere the Prefect Arrive . . .

(Enter Khalil, breathlessly.)

Kha. He's here! The Prefect! Twenty guards,

No more — no sign he dreams of danger. All Awaits thee only. Ayooh, Karshook, keep Their posts — wait but the deed's accomplishment.
To join us with thy Druses to a man,
Still holds his course the Nuncio — near and near
The fleet from Candia steering.

Djala. [Aside.] All is lost!

— Or won?

Kha. And I have laid the sacred robe,
The sword, the head-tiar, at the porch — the
place
Commanded. Thou wilt hear the Prefect's trumpet.

Djala. Then I keep Anael — him then, past
recall,
I slay — 't is forced on me! As I began
I must conclude — so be it!

Kha. For the rest,
Save Loys, our foe's solitary sword,
All is so safe that . . . I will ne'er entreat
Thy post again of thee: though danger none,
There must be glory only meet for thee
In slaying the Prefect!

An. [Aside.] And 't is now that Djabal
Would leave me! — in the glory meet for him!

Djala. As glory, I would yield the deed to
you
Or any Druse; what peril there may be,
I keep. [Aside.] All things conspire to hound me on!

Not now, my soul, draw back, at least! Not
now!

The course is plain, howe'er obscure all else.
Once offer this tremendous sacrifice,
Prevent what else will be irreparable,
Secure these transcendental helps, regain
The Cedars — then let all dark clear itself!
I slay him!

Kha. Anael, and no part for us!

[To Djala.] Hast thou possessed her with . . .

Djala. [To An.] Whom speak you to?
Oh, this smile
Turns stranger. Shudder you? The man
must die,
As thousands of our race have died through
him.
One blow, and I discharge his weary soul
From the flesh that pollutes it! Let him fill Straight some new expiatory form, of earth
Or sea, the reptile or some very thing:
What is there in his death?

An. My brother said,
Is there no part in it for us?

Dja. For Khalil.

The trumpet will announce the Nuncio's entry;
Here, I shall find the Prefect hastening
In the Pavilion to receive him — here
I stay the Prefect; meanwhile Ayoob leads
The Nuncio with his guards within: once these Secured in the outer hall, bid Ayoob bar
Entry or egress till I give the sign
Which waits the landing of the argosies
You will announce to me: this double sign
That justice is performed and help arrived,
When Ayoob shall receive, but not before,
Let him throw ope the palace doors, admit
The Druses to behold their tyrant, ere
We leave forever this detested spot.
Go, Khalil, hurry all! No pause, no pause!
Whirl on the dream, secure to wake anon!

Kha. What sign? and who the bearer?

Dja. Who shall show
My ring, admit to Ayoob. How she stands!
Have I not . . . I must have some task for her.
Anael, not that way! 'T is the Prefect's chamber!
Anael, keep you the ring — give you the sign!
It holds her safe amid the stir. You will Be faithful?

An. [Taking the ring.] I would fain be worthy.
Hark! [Trumpet without.]

Kha. He comes!

Dja. And I too come.

An. One word, but one!

Say, shall you be exalted at the deed?
Then? On the instant?

Dja. I exalted? What?
He, there — we, thus — our wrongs revenged,
our tribe
Set free? Oh, then shall I assure yourself,
Shall you, shall each of us, be in his death Exalted?

Kha. He is here!

Dja. Away — away! [They go.

(The Prefect, to Guards.) Back, I say, to the galley every guard!
That's my sole care now; see each bench retains
Its complement of rowers; I embark
O' the instant, since this Knight will have it
so.
Alas me! Could you have the heart, my Loys!
[to a Guard who whispers.] Oh, bring the holy Nuncio here forthwith!

(Loys, a rueful sight, confess, to see
The gray discarded Prefect leave his post.
With tears i' the eye! So, you are Prefect
now?

You depose me — you succeed me? Ha, ha!
Loys. And dare you laugh, whom laughter less becomes
Than yesterday's forced meekness we beheld . . .

Prof. — When you so eloquently pleaded,
Loys,
For my dismissal from the post? Ah, meek
With cause enough, consult the Nuncio else!
And wish him the like meekness: for so stanch
A servant of the church can scarce have bought
His share in the Isle, and paid for it, hard pieces!
You've my successor to console with, Nuncio!
I shall be safe by then i' the galley, Loys!

Loys. You make as you would tell me you rejoice
To leave your scene of . . .

Prof. Trade in the dear Druses?
Blood and sweat traffic? Spare what yesterday
We heard enough of! Drive I in the Isle
A profitable game? Learn wit, my son
Which you'll need shortly! Did it never breed
Suspicion in you, all was not pure profit,
When I, the insatiate . . . and so forth — was bent
On having a partaker in my rule?
Why did I yield this Nuncio half the gain,
If not that I might also shift — what on him?
Half of the peril, Loys?

Loys. Peril?

Prof. Hark you! I'd love you if you 'd let me — this for reason,
You save my life at price of . . . well, say risk
At least of yours. I came a long time since
To the Isle; our Hospitallers bade me tame
These savage wizards, and reward myself —

Loys. The Knights who so repudiate your crime?

Prof. Loys, the Knights! we doubtless un derstood
Each other; as for trusting to reward
From any friend beside myself . . . no, no!
I clutched mine on the spot, when it was sweet,
And I had taste for it. I felt these wizards
Alive — was sure they were not on me, only
When I was on them: but with age comes caution:
And stingings pleasures please less and sting
more,
Year by year, fear by fear! The girls were brighter
Than ever (faith, there's yet one Ana'e left,
I set my heart upon — Oh, prithee, let
That brave new sword lie still!)— These joys looked brighter,

But silence the town, too, as I passed.
With this alcove's delicious memories
Began to mingle visions of gaunt fathers,
Quick-eyed sons, fugitives from the mine, the oar,
Stealing to catch me. Brief, when I began
To quake with fear — I think I hear the Chapter
Solicited to let me leave, now all Worth staying for was gained and gone! — I
say,
Just when, for the remainder of my life,
All methods of escape seemed lost — that then
Up should a young hot-headed Loys spring,
Talk very long and loud, — in fine, compel
The Knights to break their whole arrangement,
Have me
Home for pure shame — from this safehold of mine.
Where but ten thousand Druses seek my life,
To my wild place of banishment, San Gines
By Murcia, where my three fat monarchs lying,
Purchased by gains here and the Nuncio's gold,
Are all I have to guard me, — that such fortune
Should fall to me, I hardly could expect.
Therefore I say, I'd love you,
Loys. Can it be?
I play into your hands then? Oh no, no!
The Venerable Chapter, the Great Order
Sunk o' the sudden into fiends of the pit?
But I will back — will yet unveil you!
Pref. Me?
To whom? — perhaps Sir Galeas, who in Chapter
Shook his white head three — and some dozen times
My hand next morning shook, for value paid!
To that Italian saint, Sir Cosimo? —
Indignant at my wringing year by year.
A thousand bezants from the coral divers,
As you recounted; felt the saint aggrieved.
Well might he — I allowed for his half-share
Merely one hundred! To Sir . . .
Loys. See! you dare
Inculpate the whole Order: yet should I,
A youth, a sole voice, have the power to change
Their evil way, had they been firm in it?
Answer me!
Pref. Oh, the son of Bretagne's Duke,
And that son's wealth, the father's influence, too.
And the young arm, we'll even say, my Loys,
— The fear of losing or diverting these
Into another channel, by gainsaying
A novelty too abruptly, could not influence
The Order! You might join, for aught they cared.
Their red-cross rivals of the Temple! Well,
I thank you for my part, at all events.
Stay here till they withdraw you! You'll inhabit
My palace — sleep, perchance, in the alcove
Whether I go to meet our holy friend.
Good! and now disbelief me if you can, —
This is the first time for long years I entered
Thus [lifts the arras] without feeling just as if I lifted
The lid up of my tomb.
Loys. They share his crime!
God's punishment will overtake you yet.
Pref. Thank you it does not? Pardon this last flash:
I hear a sober visage presently
With the disinterested Nuncio here —
His purchase-money safe at Murcia, too!
Let me repeat — for the first time, no draught
Coming as from a sepulchre salutes me.
When we next meet, this folly may have passed.
We'll hope. Ha, ha! [goes through the arras.
Loys. Assure me but . . . he's gone!
He could not lie, Then what have I escaped.
I, who had so high given up happiness
Forever, to be linked with him and them?
Oh, opportune of discoveries! I
Their Knight? I utterly renounce them all!
Hark! What, he meets by this the Nuncio? Yes
The same hyaena groan-like laughter! Quick —
To Djabal! I am one of them at last,
These simple-hearted Druses — Anael's tribe!
Djabal! She's mine at last. Djabal, I say!
[Exit.

ACT IV

Enter Djabal.

Dja. Let me but slay the Prefect. The end now!
To-morrow will be time enough to pray
Into the means I took: suffice, they served,
Noble as they were, to hurl revenge
True to its object. [Seeing the robe, etc. disposed.
Mine should never so
Have hurried to accomplishment! Thee,
Djabal,
Far other mood befitted! Calm the robe
Should clothe this doom's awarer!
[Taking the robe.] Shall I dare
Assume my nation's robe? I am at least
A Druse again, chill Europe's policy
Drops from me; I dare take the robe. Why not
The Tiar? I rule the Druses, and what more
Betokens it than rule? — yet — yet —
[Footsteps in the alcove.] He comes!

[As he dashes aside the arras, Anael is discovered.

Dja. Ha! Anael! Nay, my Anael, can it be?
Heard you the trumpet? I must slay him here.
And here you ruin all. Why speak you not?
Anael, the Prefect comes! [Anael screams.
So slow to feel
'Tis not a sight for you to look upon?
A moment's work — but such work! Till you go,
I must be idle — idle, I risk all! [Pointing to her hair.
Those locks are well, and you are beauteous thus,
But with the dagger 'tis, I have to do!
An. With mine!
Dja. Blood — Anael?
An. Djabal, 'tis thy deed.
It must be! I had hoped to claim it mine —
Be worthy thee — but I must needs confess.
"T was not I, but thyself . . . not I have . . . Djabal!
Speak to me!

Dja. Oh my punishment!

An. Speak to me!
While I can speak! touch me, despite the blood!
When the command passed from thy soul to mine,
I went, fire leading me, muttering of thee,
And the approaching exaltation. "-- make
One sacrifice!" I said. -- and he sat there,
Bade me approach; and, as I did approach.
Thy fire with music burst into my brain.
'T was but a moment's work, thou saidst per-

It may have been so! Well, it is thy deed!
Dja. It is my deed!

An. His blood all this! -- this! and . . .
And more! Sustain me, Djabal! Wait not now--
Let flash thy glory! Change thyself and me!
It must be! Ere the Druses flock to us!
At least confirm me! Djabal, blood gushed forth --
He was our tyrant -- but I looked he'd fall
Pronounced asleep -- why else is death called sleep?
Sleep? He bent o'er his breast! 'Tis sin, I know.--

Punish me, Djabal, but wilt thou let him?
Be it thou that punishest, not he -- who creeps
On his red breast -- is here! 'Tis the small groan
Of a child -- no worse! Bestow the new life, then,
Too swift it cannot be, too strange, surpassing!

[Following him up as he retreats.]
Now! Change us both! Change me and change thou!
Dja. [Sinks on his knees.] Thus!

Behold my change! You have done nobly. I--

An. Can Hakeem kneel?
Dja. No Hakeem, and scarce Djabal!
I have dealt falsely, and this woe is come.
No -- hear me ere scorn blast me! Once and ever,
The deed is mine! Oh think upon the past!
An. [To herself.] Did I strike once, or twice, or many times?
Dja. I came to lead my tribe where, bathed in glooms,
Both Bahamid the Renovator sleep;
Aanad, I saw my tribe; I said, "Without A miracle this cannot be!" -- I said
"Be there a miracle!" -- for I saw you!
An. His head lies south the portal!
Dja. Weighed with this
The general good, how could I choose my own?
What matter was my purity of soul?
Little by little I engaged myself
Heaven would accept me for its instrument.
I hoped; I said Heaven had accepted me!
An. Is it this blood breeds dreams in me?
Who said
You were not Hakeem? And your miracles --
The fire that plays innocuous round your form?
[Again changing her whole manner.]

Ah, thou wouldst try me -- thou art Hakeem still;
Dja. Woe -- woe! As if the Druses of the Mount
Searce Arabs, even there, but here, in the Isle
Beneath their former selves should comprehend
The subtle lore of Europe! A few secrets
That would not easily affect the meanest
Of the crowd there, could wholly subjugate
The best of our poor tribe. Again that eye?
An. [After a pause springing to his neck.] Djabal,
in this there can be no deceit!
Why, Djabal, were you human only, -- think,
Maim is but human, Khalil human,
Loys is human even -- did their words
Haunt me, their looks pursue me? Shame on you
So to have tried me! Rather, shame on me
So to need trying! Could I, with the Prefect
And the blood, there -- could I see only you?
Hang by your neck over this gulf of blood?
Speak, I am saved! Speak, Djabal! Am I saved?
[As DJABAL slowly unclips her arms, and puts her violently from him.]

Hakeem would save me! Thou art Djabal! Crouch!
Bow to the dust, thou basest of our kind!
The pile of thee, I reared up to the cloud --
Full, midway, of our fathers' trophied tombs,
Based on the living rock, dowered not by
The unstable desert's jaws of sand,-- falls prone
Fire, music, quenched; and now thou liest there
A ruin, obscene creatures will manour through!
-- Let us come, Djabal!

Dja. Whither come?

An. Where? -- to the Druses thou hast wronged! Confess,
Now that the end is gained -- (I love thee now --
That thou hast so deceived them -- (perchance love thee
Better than ever!) Come, receive their doom
Of infamy! Oh, best of all I love thee!
Shame with the man, no triumph with the God,
Be mine! Come!

Why? You have called this deed mine -- it is mine
And with it I accept its circumstance.

How can I longer strive with fate? The past
Is past: my false life shall henceforth show
true.

Hear me! The argosies touch land by this;
They bear us to fresh scenes and happier skies.
What if we reign together? -- if we keep
Our secret for the Druses' good? -- by means
Of even their superstition, plant in them
New life? I learn from Europe: all who seek Man's good must awe man, by such means as these.
We two will be divine to them — we are!
All great works in this world spring from the ruins
Of greater projects — ever, on our earth,
Babels men block out. Babylons they build,
I wretst the weapon from your hand! I claim
The deed! Retire! You have my ring — you bar
All access to the Nuncio till the forces
From Venice land!

In. Thou wilt feign Hakeem then?
Dja. [Putting the Turia on Hakeem on his head.] And from this moment that I dare one wide
Eyes that till now refused to see, begins
My true dominion: for I know myself.
And what am I to personate. No word?

'Tis come on me at last! His blood on her —
What memories will follow that! Her eye.
Her fierce distorted lip and ploughed black
brow!
Ah, fool! Has Europe then so poorly tamed
The Syrian blood from out thee? Thou, presume
To work in this foul earth by means not foul?
Scheme, as for heaven, — but, on the earth, be glad
If a least ray like heaven's be left thee!
Thus
I shall be calm — in readiness — no way
Surprised. [A noise without.

This should be Khalif and my druses.
Venice is come then! Thus I grasp thee, sword!
Druses, 'tis Hakeem saves you! In! Behold
Your Prefect!

[Enter Loy's. Djabal hides the khamjar in his robe.
Loy's. Oh, well found, Djabal! — but no time for words.

You know who waits there?

[Pointing to the alcove.

Well! — and that 't is there
He meets the Nuncio? Well? Now, a surprise —
He there —
Dja. I know —
Loy's. — is now no mortal's lord,
Is absolutely powerless! — call him, dead —
He is no longer Prefect — you are Prefect!
Oh, shrink not! I do nothing in the dark,
Nothing unworthy Breton blood, believe!
I understood at once your urgency
That I should leave this isle for Rhodes: I felt
What you were loath to speak — your need of help.
I have fulfilled the task, that earnestness
Imposed on me: have, face to face, confronted
The Prefect in full Chapter, charged on him
The enormites of his long rule; he stood
Nude, offered no defence, no crime denied.
On which, I spoke of you, and of your tribe,
Your faith so like our own, and all you urged
Of old to me — I spoke, too, of your goodness,
Your patience — brief, I hold henceforth the Isle
In charge, am nominally lord, — but you,
You are associated in my rule —
Are the true Prefect? Ay, such faith had they
In my assurance of your loyalty
[For who insults an impertinent old man?]

That we assume the Prefecture this hour?
You gaze at me? Hear greater wonders yet —
I cast down all the fabric I have built!
These Knights, I was prepared to worship . . .
but
Of that another time; what's now to say,
Is — I shall never be a Knight! Oh, Djabal,
Here first I throw all prejudice aside,
And call you brother! I am Druse like you:
My wealth, my friends, my power, are wholly
yours.
Your people, which is now my people: for
There is a maiden of your tribe, I love —
She loves me — Khalif's sister
Dja. Anael?
Loy's. Start you? Seems what I say, unknighthly? Thus it chanced:
When first I came, a novice, to the isle . . .
[Enter one of the Nuncio's Guards from the alcove.
Guard. Oh horrible! Sir Loy's! Here is Loy's!
And here — [Others enter from the alcove.

[Pointing to Djabal.] Secure him, bind him — this is he!

[They surround Djabal.
Loy's. Madmen — what is 't you do? Stand from my friend,
And tell me!
Guard. Thou canst have no part in this —
Surely no part! But slay him not! The Nuncio Commanded, slay him not!

Loy's. Speak, or . . .
Guard. The Prefect
Lies murdered there by him thou dost embrace.
Loy's. By Djabal? Miserable fools! How Djabal?

[Guard lifts Djabal's robe; Djabal flings down the khamjar.
Loy's. [After a pause.] Thou hast received some insult worse than all,
Some outrage not to be endured —
[To the Guards.] Stand back!
He is my friend — more than my friend! Thou hast
Slain him upon that provocation!
Guard.
No! No
provocation? 'T is a long devised
Conspiracy: the whole tribe is involved.
He is their Khalif — 't is on that pretence —
Their mighty Khalif who died long ago,
And now comes back to life and light again!
All is just now revealed, I know not how,
By one of his confederates — who, struck
With horror at this murder, first apprised
The Nuncio. As 't was said, we find this Djabal
Here where we take him,
Dja. [Aside.] Who broke faith with me?
Loy's. [To Djabal.] Hear'st thou? Speak!
'Till thou speak I keep off these.
Or die with thee. Deify this story! Thou
A Khalif, an impostor? Thou, my friend,
Whose tale was of an inoffensive tribe,
With . . . but thou know'st — on that tale's truth I pledged
My faith before the Chapter: what art thou?
Dja. Loy's, I am as thou hast heard. All's
true!
No more concealment! As these tell thee, all
Was long since planned. Our Druses are enough
To crush this handful: the Venetians lend
Even now in our behalf. Loye, we part!
Thou, serving much, wouldst fain have served me more;
It might not be. I thank thee. As thou hear-
est,
We are a separated tribe: farewell!

Loye, Oh, where will truth be found now?
Canst thou so
Belie the Druses? Do they share thy crime?
Those thou professest of our Breton stock,
Are partners with thee? Why, I saw but
now
Khalil, my friend—he spoke with me—no
word
Of this! and Anael—whom I love, and who loves me—she spoke no word of this!

Dja. Poor boy!
Anael, who loves thee? Khalil, fast thy friend?
We, offsets from a wandering Count of Dreuix
No: older than the oldest, princeleir
Than Europe's princeleir race, our tribe:

enough
For thine, that on our simple faith we found
A monarchy to shame your monarchies
At their own trick and secret of success.
The child of this our tribe shall laugh upon
The palace-step of him whose life e'er night
Is forfeit, as that child shall know, and yet Shall laugh there! What, we Druses wait forsooth
The kind interposition of a boy
— Can only save ourselves if thou concede?
— Khalil admire thee? He is my right hand.
My delegate!—Anael accept thy love?
She is my bride!

Loye. Thy bride? She one of them?

Dja. My bride!

Loye. And she retains her glorious eyes!
She, with those eyes, has shared this miscreant's guilt!

Ah—who but she directed me to find
Djabal within the Prefect's chamber? Khalil
Bade me seek Djabal there, too! All is truth!
What spoke the Prefect worse of them than
this?

Did the Church ill to institute long since
Perpetual warfare with such serpenty?
And I—have I desired to shift my part.
Excade my share in her design? "Tis well!

Dja. Loye, I wronged thee—but unwittingly:
I never thought there was in thee a virtue
That could attach itself to what thou deem-
est
A race below thine own. I wronged thee, Loye.
But that is over; all is over now,
Save the protection I ensure against
My people's anger. By their Khalil's side,
Thou art secure and mayst depart: so, come!

Loye, Thy side? I take protection at thy hand?

(Enter other Guards.)

Guards. Fly with him! Fly, Sir Loye! 'Tis too true!
And only by his side thou may'st escape!
The whole tribe is in full revolt: they flock
About the palace—will be here—on thee—
And there are twenty of us, we the Guards
O' the Nuncio, to withstand them! Even we

Had stayed to meet our death in ignorance,
But that one Druse, a single faithful Druse,
Made known the horror to the Nuncio. Fly!
The Nuncio stands aghast. At least let us
Escape thy wrath, O Hakeem! We are bought In thy tribe's persecution! [To Loye.] Keep by him!
They hail him Hakeem, their dead Prince returned:
He is their God, they shout, and at his beck
Arc life and death!

Loye, springing at the khandjar Djabal had thrown down, seizes him by the throat.
Thus by his side am I!

Thus I resume my knighthood and its warfare,
Thus end thee, miscreant, in thy pride of place!
Thus art thou caught. Without, thy dupes may cluster.
Friends aid thee, foes avoid thee,—thou art
Hakeem,
How say they?—God art thou! but also here
Is the least, youngest, meanest the Church calls
Her servant, and his single arm avails
To aid her as she lists. I rise, and thou Art crushed! Hordes of thy Druses flock without:
Here thou hast me, who represent the Cross,
Honor and Faith, 'gainst Hell, Mahound and thee.

Heaven could not ask so much of me—not,
Sure,
So much! I cannot kill him so!

[Djabal remains calm.] Implore my mercy, Hakeem, that my scorn
May help me! Nay, I cannot ply thy trade;
I am no Druse. no stabbcr: and thine eye,
Thy form, are too much as they were—my
friend
Had such! Speak! Beg for mercy at my foot!

[Djabal still silent.]

Heaven could not ask so much of me—not,
Sure,
So much! I cannot kill him so!

[After a pause.] Thou art
Strong in thy cause, then—dest outbrave us,
then,
Heardst thou that one of thine accomplices,
Thy very people, has accused thee? Meet
His charge! Thou hast not even slain the Preflect
As thy own vile creed warrants. Meet that Druse!

Come with me and disapprove him—be thou tried
By him, nor seek appeal! Promise me this,
Or I will do God's office! What, shalt thou
Roast of assassins at thy beck, yet truth
Want even an executioner? Consent,
Or I will strike—look in my face—I will!

Dja. Give me again my khandjar, if thou darest!

(Loye gives it.)
Let but one Druse accuse me, and I plunge
This home. A Druse betray me? Let us go!

[Aside.] Who has betrayed me?

[Shouts without.]
Hearest thou? I hear
No plainer than long years ago I heard
That shout—but in no dream now! They return!
Wilt thou be leader with me, Loye? Well!
ACT V

The uninitiated Druses, filling the hall tumultuously, and speaking together.

Here flock we, obeying the summons. Lo, Hakeem hath appeared, and the Prefect is dead, and we return to Lebanon! My manufacture of goats' fleece must, I doubt, soon fall away there. Come, old Nasif—link thine arm in mine—we fight, if needs be. Come, what is a great fight-word?—"Lebanon"! [My daughter—my daughter!]—But is Khalil to have the office of Hanzia?—Nay, rather, if he be wise, the monopoly of henna and cloves. Where is Hakeem?—The only prophet I ever saw, prophesied at Cairo once, in my youth: a little black Copht, dressed all in black too, with a great stripe of yellow cloth flapping down behind him like the back-fin of a water-snake. Is this he? Biamrallah! Biamrallah! Hakeem! (Enter the Nuncio, with Guards.)

Nuncio. [To his Attendants.] Hold both, the sorcerer and this accomplice. Ye talk of that accursed him! And tell Sir Loys he is mine, the Church's hope: Bid him approve himself our Knight indeed! Lo, this black disemboguing of the Isle! [To the Druses.] Ah, children, what a sight for these old eyes! That kept themselves alive this voyage through To smile their very last on you! I came To gather one and all you wandering sheep Into my fold, as though a father came... As though, in coming, a father should... [To his Guards.] Ten, twelve—Twelve guards of you, and not an outlet? None? The wizards stop each avenue? Keep close! [To the Druses.] As if one came to a son's house, I say, So did I come—no guard with me—to find... Alas—alas! A Druse, Who is the old man? Another. Oh, ye are to shout! Children, he styles you. Druses, Ay, the Prefect's Bain! Glory to the Khalif, our Father! Nuncio. Even so! I find (ye prompt aright) your father slain! While most he plotted for your good, that father (Alas, how kind, ye never knew)—lies slain! [Aside.] (And hell's worm gnaw the glozing knave— with me, For being duped by his cajoleries! Are these the Christians? These the docile crew My bezants went to make me Bishop o'er?) [To his Attendants, who whisper.] What say ye does this wizard style himself? Hakeem? Biamrallah? The third Fatemite? What is this jargon? He—is the insane Khalif, Dead near three hundred years ago, come back In flesh and blood again? Druses. He mutters! Hear ye? He is blaspheming Hakeem. The old man Is our dear Prefect's friend. Tear him! Nuncio. Ye dare not! I stand here with my five-and-seventy years, The Patriarch's power behind me, God's above! Those years have witnessed sin enough; ere now Misguided men arose against their lords, And found excuse; but ye, to be enslaved By sorceries, cheats—alas! the same tricks, tried On my poor children in this nook o' the earth, Could triumph, that have been successively Exploded, laughed to scorn, all nations through: "Romaioi, Loudaioi eti prosselutos, Cretes and Arabians,"—you are duped the last.

Said I, refrain from tearing me? I pray ye Tear me! Shall I return to tell the Patriarch That so much love was wasted—every gift Rejected, from his benison I brought, Down to the galley-full of bezants, sunk An hour since at the harbor's mouth, by that... That...—never will I speak his hated name! [To his Servants.] What was the name the fellow slip-futter Called their arch-wizard by? [They whisper.] Oh, Djabal was't? Druses. But how a sorcerer? false wherein? Nuncio. (Ay, Djabal!) How false? Ye know not, Djabal has confessed... Nay, that by tokens found on him we learn... What I sailed hither solely to divulge— How by his spells the demons were allured To seize you; not that these be ought save lies And mere illusions. Is this clear? I say, By measures such as these, he would have led you Into a monstrous mire: follow ye? Say, shall ye perish for his sake, my sons? Druses. Hark ye! Nuncio. —Be of one privilege amerced? No! Infinite the Patriarch's mercies are! No! With the Patriarch's license, still I bid Tear him to pieces who misled you; Haste! Druses. The old man's beard shakes, and His eyes are white fire! After all, I know nothing of Djabal beyond what Karshook says; he knows but what Khalil says, who knows just what Djabal says himself. Now, the little Copht Prophet, I saw at Cairo in my youth, began by promising each bystander three full measures of wheat... (Enter Khalil and the initiated Druses.)

Kha. Venice and her deliverance are at hand: Their fleet stands through the harbor! Hath he slain The Prefect yet? Is Djabal's change come yet? Nuncio. [To Attendants.] What's this of Venice? Who's this boy? [Attendants whisper.] One Khalil? Djabal's accomplice, Loys called, but now, The only Druse, save Djabal's self, to fear? [To the Druses.] I cannot hear ye with these aged ears! Is it so? Ye would have my troops assist? Doth he abet him in his sorceries? Down with the cheat, guards, as my children bid! [They spring at Khalil; as he beats them back, Stay! No more bloodshed! Spare detrued youth! Whom seek'st thou? (I will teach him)— whom, my child? Thou know'st not what these know, what these deeds I am an old man, as thou seest—have done With life; and what should move me but the truth? Art thou the only fount one of thy tribe? 'Tis I interpret for thy tribe! Kre. Oh, this Is the expected Nuncio! Druses, hear!— Endure ye this? Unworthy to partake The glory Hakeem gains you! While I speak, The ships touch land: who makes for Lebanon? They plant the winged lion in these hails! Nuncio. [Aside.] If it be true! Venice? Oh, never true! Yet Venice would so gladly thwart our Knights, So fain get footing here, stand close by Rhodes! Oh, to be duped this way! Kre. Ere he appear And lead you gloriously, repent, I say! Nuncio. [Aside.] Nor any way to stretch the arch-wizard stark Ere the Venetians come? Cut off the head, The trunk was easily stilled. [To the Druses.] He? Bring him forth! Since so you needs will have it, I assent! You'd judge, say you, on the spot?—confound The sorcerer in his very circle? Where's Our short black-bearded sallow friend who swore He'd earn the Patriarch's guerdon by one stab? Bring Djabal forth at once! Druses. Ay, bring him forth! The Patriarch drives a trade in oil and silk, And we're the Patriarch's children—all men, we! Where is the glory? Show us all the glory! Kre. You dare not so insult him! What, not so, etc. [To the Druses.] I tell thee, Nuncio, these are un instructed, Untrusted—they know nothing of our Khalif!— Not see that if he lets a doubt arise 'Tis but to give yourselves the chance of seeming To have some influence in your own return! That all may say ye would have trusted him Without the all-convincing glory—ay. And did! Embrace the occasion, friends! For, think— What wonder when his change takes place? But now For your sakes, he should not reveal himself. No—could I ask and have. I would not ask The change yet? (Enter Djabal and Lords.) Spite of all, reveal thyself! I had said, pardon them for me—for Anael. For our sakes pardon these besotted men Ay, for thine own— they hurt not thee! Yet now One thought swells in me and keeps down all else, This Nuncio couples shame with thee, has called Imposture thy whole course, all bitter things Has said: he is but an old fretful man! Hakeen—nay, I must call thee Hakeem now— Reveal thyself! See! Where is Anael? See! [Lords. To Djabal.] Here are thy people! Keep thy word to me! Dja. Who of my people hath accused me? Nuncio. So! This is Djabal, Hakeem, and what not? A fit deed, Lords, for thy first Knight's day! May it be angry of thy after-life! Ever prove truncheon of the Church as now That, Nuncio of the Patriarch, having charge Of the Isle here, I claim thee [turning to Dja.] as these bid me, Forfeit for murder done thy lawful prince, Thou conjurer that peep'st and mutterest! Why should I hold thee from their hands? Nuncio. Spells, children? But hear how I dispose of all his spells! Thou art a prophet?—wouldst entice thy tribe From me?—thou work'st miracles? (Attend! Let him but move me with his spells?) I. Nuncio. . . . Dja. . . . Which how thou cam'st to be, I say not now, Though I have also been at Stamboul, Luke! Ply thee with spells, forsooth! What need of spells? If Venice, in her Admiral's person, stoop To ratify thy compact with her foe, The Hospitallers, for this Isle—withdraw Her warrant of the deed which reinstates My people in their freedom, tricked away By him I slew,—refuse to convoy us To Lebanon and keep the Isle we have— Then will be time to try what spells can do! Dest thou dispute the Republic's power? Nuncio. Lo ye! He tempts me too, the wily exorcist! No! The renowned Republic was and is The Patriarch's friend: 'tis not for courting Venice That I—that these implore thy blood of me! Lo ye, the subtle miscreant! Ha, so subtle? Ye Druses, hear him! Will ye be deceived? How he evades me! Where's the miracle He works? I bid him to the proof—fish up Your galley full of bezants that he sank! That were a miracle! One miracle! Enough of trailing, for it chases my years, I am the Nuncio, Druses! I stand forth To save you from the good Republic's rage When she shall find her fleet was summoned here To aid the murmurers of a knave like this! [As the Druses hesitate, his Attendants whisper. Ah, well suggested! Why, we hold the while One who, his close confederate till now, Confesses Djabal at the last a cheat, And every miracle a cheat! Who throws me His head? I make three offers, once I offer, And twice . . . Dja. Let who moves perish at my foot! Kre. Thanks, Hakeem, thanks! Oh, Anael, Maani, Why tarry they? Druses. [To each other.] He can! He can! Live he—
[To the Nuncio.] I say he can, old man! Thou know'st him not.
Live fire like that thou seest now in his eyes,
Plays fawning round him. See! The change begins!
All the brow lightens as he lifts his arm!
Look not at me! It was not I!

Dja. What Druse Accused me, as he saith? I bid each bone
Crumble within that Druse! None, Loys, none
Of my own people, as thou said'st, have raised
A voice against me.

Nuncio. [Aside.] Venice to come! Death!

Dja. [Continuing.] Confess and go unscathed, however false!
Seest thou my Druses, Luke? I would submit
To thy pure malice did one Druse confess?

Loys. [To his Attendants who whisper.] Ah, ye counsel so?

[Aloud.] Bring in the witness, then, who, first of all,
Disclosed the treason! Now I have thee, wizard!
Ye heard that? If one speaks, he bids you hear him
Joint after joint: well then, one does speak!
One,
Befooled by Djabal, even as yourselves,
But who hath voluntarily proposed
To expiate, by confessing thus, the fault
Of having trusted him.

[They bring in a veiled Druse.

Loys. Now, Djabal, now!

Dja. Friend, Djabal fronts thee! Make a ring, sons. Speak!

Expose this Djabal — what he was, and how;
The wiles he used, the aims he cherished; all,
Explicitly as late 't was spoken to these
My servants: I absolve and pardon thee.

Loys. Thou hast the dagger ready, Djabal?

Dja. Speak,
Receivest! Druses. Stand back, fool! farther! Suddenly
You shall see some huge serpent glide from men,
The empty vest, or down will thunder crash!
Back, Khalil! Kha. I go back? Thus go I back!

[To An.] Unveil! Nay, thou shalt face the Khalil! Thus!

[He tears away Anael's veil; Djabal folds his arms
And bows his head; the Druses fall back; Loys springs from the side of Djabal and the Nuncio.

Loys. Then she was true — she only of them all!
True to her eyes — may keep those glorious eyes,
And now she mine, once again mine! Oh, Anael!

Djabal. I think thee a partner in his crime —
That blood could soil that hand? may, 'tis mine — Anael.

— Not mine? Who offer thee before all these
My heart, my sword, my name — so thou wilt say
That Djabal, who affirms thou art his bride,

Lies — say but that he lies!

Dja. Thou, Anael?

Loys. Nay, Djabal, nay, one chance for me — the last!
Thou hast had every other; thou hast spoken
Days, nights, what falsehood listed thee — let me
Speak first now; I will speak now!

Nuncio. Loys, pause! Thou art the Duke's son, Bretagne's choicest stock,

Loys of Dreux, God's sepulchre's first sword:
This wilt thou spit on, this degrade, this trample.

To earth?

Loys. [To An.] Who had foreseen that one day, Loys
Would stake these gifts against some other good
In the whole world? I give them thee! I would
My strong will might bestow real shape on them,
That I might see, with my own eyes, thy foot
Tread on their very neck! 'Tis not by gifts
I put aside this Djabal: we will stand —
We do stand, see, two men! Djabal, stand forth!

Whose worth her, I or thou? I — who for Anael
Uprightly, purely kept my way, the long
True way — left thee each by-path, boldly lived
Without the lies and blood, — or thou, or thou?
Me! love me, Anael! Leave the blood and him!

[To Dja.] Now speak — now, quick on this
That I have said.
Thou with the blood, speak if thou art a man!

Dja. [To An.] And was it thou betrayedst me? 'Tis well!
I have deserved this of thee, and submit.
Nor 't is much evil thou inflicttest: life
Ends here. The cedars shall not wave for us:
For there was crime, and must be punishment.
See late! By thee I was seduced, by thee
I perish: yet do I — can I repent?
I with my Arab instinct, thwarted ever
By my Frank policy, — and with, in turn,
My Frank brain, thwarted by my Arab heart —
While these remained in equipoise, I lived
Nothing; had either been predominant,
As a Frank schemer or an Arab mystic.
I had been something; — now, each has destroyed
The other — and behold, from out their crash,
A third and better nature rises up —
My mere man's-nature! And I yield to it:
I love thee, I who did not love before!

An. Djabal!

Dja. If it seemed love, but it was not love:
How could I love while thou adoredst me?
Now thou despisest, art above me so
Immeasurably! Thou, no other, doomest
My death now; this my steel shall execute
Thy judgment; I shall feel thy hand in it
Oh, luxury to worship, to submit,
Transcended, doomed to death by thee!

An. My Djabal!

Dja. Dost hesitate? I force thee then?

Approach,
Druses! for I am out of reach of fate;
No further evil waits me. Speak the doom!
Hear, Druses, and hear, Nuncio, and hear,
Lords!
Ah. Hakeem! [She falls dead.]

[The Druses tremble, gawling before him.

Druses. Ah, Hakeem! not on me thy wrath!
Bianarrallah, pardon! never doubted I!
Ha, dog, how sayest thou?
[They surround and seize the Nuncio and his Guards.
Lords flings himself upon the body of Anael, on which Djaabal continues to gaze as stupified.

Nuncio. Caitiffs! Have ye eyes?
Whips, racks should teach you? What, his fools? his dupes?
Leave me! I'll have me!
Kha. [Approaching Djaabal timidly.] Save her for my sake!
She was already thine; she would have shared
To-day thine exaltation: think, this day.
Her hair was plaited thus because of thee!
Yes, feel the soft bright hair — feel!
Nuncio. [Struggling with those who have seized him.] What, because His leman dies for him? You think it hard
To die? Oh, would you were at Rhodes, and choice
Of deaths should suit you!
Kha. [Bending over Anael’s body.] Just restore her life!
So little does it! there — the eyelids tremble!
"I was not my breath that made them; and the lips
Move of themselves. I could restore her life!
Hakeem, we have forgotten — have presumed
On our free converse: we are better taught.
See, I kiss — how I kiss thy garment’s hem
For her! She kisses it — Oh, take her deed
In mine! Thou dost believe now. Anael! —

See.
She smiles! Were her lips open o’er the teeth
Thus, when I spoke first? She believes in thee!
Go not without her to the cedars, lord!
Or leave us both — I cannot go alone!
I have obeyed thee, if I dare say speak:
Hath Hakeem thus forgot all Djaabal knew?
Thou feelest then my tears fail hot and fast
Upon thy hand, and yet thou speakest not?
Ere the Venetian trumpet sound — ere thou
Exalt thyself, O Hakeem! save thou her!
Nuncio. And the accursed Republic will arrive
And find me in their toils — dead, very like,
Under their feet!

What way — not one way yet
To foil them? None? [Observing Djaabal’s face.] What ails the Khalif? Ah,
That ghastly face! A way to foil them yet!
[To the Druses.] Look to your Khalif, Druses! Is that face
God Hakeem’s? Where is triumph — where is
Said he of exaltation — hath he promised
So much to-day? Why then, exalt thyself!
Cast off that husk, thy form, set free thy soul
In splendor! Now, hear witness! here I stand —
I challenge him exalt himself, and I
Become, for that, a Druse like all of you!
The Druses. Exalt thyself! Exalt thyself,
O Hakeem!

Dja. [Advances.] I can confess now all from first to last.
There is no longer shame for me. I am . . .
[Here the Venetian trumpet sounds; the Druses shout, Djaabal’s eye catches the expression of those about him, and, as the old dream comes back, he is again confident and inspired.

—Am I not Hakeem? And ye would have crawled
But yesterday within these impure courts
Where now ye stand erect! Not grand enough?
—What more could be conceded to such beasts
As all of you, so sunk and base as you,
Than a mere man? A man among such beasts was miracle enough: yet him you doubt,
Him you forswear, him fair would you destroy —
With the Venetians at your gate, the Nuncio
Thus — see the baffled hypocrite! and, best,
The Prefect there!

Druses. No, Hakeem, ever thine!
Nuncio. He lies — and twice he lies — and throve he lies!
Exalt thyself, Mahommed! Exalt thyself!

Dja. Druses! we shall henceforth be far away —
Out of mere mortal ken — above the cedars —
But we shall see ye go, hear ye return,
Repeopling the old solitudes, — through thee,
My Khalif! Thou art full of me: I fill Thee full — my hands thus fill thee! Yestereve,
— Nay, but this morn, I deemed thee ignorant
Of all to do, requiring word of mine
To teach it: now, thou hast all gifts in one,
With truth and purity go other gifts,
All gifts come clustering to that. Go, lead
My people home whate’er betide!

[Turning to the Druses.] Ye take
This Khalif for my delegate? To him
Bow as to me? He leads to Lebanon —
Ye follow?

Druses. We follow! Now exalt thyself!

Dja. [ Raises Loys.] Then to thee, Loys!
How I wronged thee, Loys!
Yet, wronged, no less thou shalt have full revenge,
Fit for thy noble self, revenge — and thus.
Thou, loaded with such wrongs, the primed soul,
The first sword of Christ’s sepulchre — thou
Guard Khalif and my Druses home again!
Justice, no less, God’s justice and no more,
For those I leave! — to seeking this, devote
Some few days out of thy Knight’s brilliant
life!
And, this obtained them, leave their Lebanon,
My Druses’ blessing in thine ears — (they shall Bless thee with blessing sure to have its way)
One cedar-blossom in thy ducal cap.
One thought of Anael in thy heart. — perchance,
One thought of him who thus, to bid thee speed,
His last word to the living speaks! This done,
Resume thy course, and, first amidst the first
In Europe, take my heart along with thee!
Go boldly, go serenely, go angustly —
What shall withstand thee then?

Thus I exalt myself, set free my soul!

[He stabs himself. As he falls, supported by Khalil and Loy's, the Venetians enter; the Admiral advances.

Admiral. God and St. Mark for Venice!
Plant the Lion!

[At the clash of the planted standard, the Druses shout, and more tumultuously forward, Loy's drawing his sword.

Dja. [Leading them a few steps between Kha- lil and Loy's.] On to the Mountain!
At the Mountain, Druses!

[Dies.]

A BLOT IN THE SCUTCHEON

A TRAGEDY

This play was written in 1843 at the request of Macready, and very rapidly, in four or five days. A misunderstanding with Macready, fully related in Mrs. Orr's Life and Letters of Robert Browning, I. 168–184, and in Mr. Gosse's Personalia, led to a breach between the two friends. The play was received with great applause, but circumstances prevented it from being kept on the boards. It has, however, been reproduced both in England and in America, near the close of Browning's life and after his death. Helen Faucit, afterward Lady Martin, took the part of Mildred. The play was printed shortly after it first appeared, as No. V. of Bells and Pomegranates.

PERSONS

Mildred Tresham.
Guendolen Tresham.
Thorold, Earl Tresham.
Austen Tresham.
Henry, Earl Mertoun.
Gerard, and other Retainers of Lord Tresham.

Time, 17—

ACT I

Scene I. The interior of a lodge in Lord Tresham's park. Many Retainers crowded at the window, supposed to command a view of the entrance to his mansion. Gerard, the Warrancer, his back to a table on which are flying, etc.

1st Retainer. Ay, do! push, friends, and then you'll push down me!

—What for? Does any hear a runner's foot Or a steed's trample or a coach-wheel's cry? Is the Earl come or his least pursuivant? But there's no breeding in a man of you Save Gerard yonder: here's a half-place yet, Old Gerard!

Gerard. —Save your courtesies, my friend. Here's my place.

2d Ret. —Now, Gerard, out with it! What makes you sullen, this of all the days I the year? To-day that young rich bountiful Handsome Earl Mertoun, whom alone they match With our Lord Tresham through the country-side, Is coming here in utmost bravery.

To ask our master's sister's hand?

Ger. —What then?

2d Ret. —What then? Why, you, she speaks to, if she meets

Your worship, smiles on as you hold apart

The boughs to let her through her forest walks. You, always favorite for your no-deserts,

You've heard, these three days, how Earl Merto- tun sings

To lay his heart and house and broad lands too

At Lady Mildred's feet: and while we squeeze Ourselves into a mousehole lest we miss

One conge of the least page in his train,

You sit o' one side — 'there's the Earl,' say I—

"What then?" say you!

3d Ret. —I'll wager he has let

Both swans he tamed for Lady Mildred swim

Over the falls and gain the river!

Ger. —Ralph,

Is not to-morrow my inspecting-day

For you and for your hawks?

4th Ret. —Let Gerard be!

He's coarse-grained, like his carved black cross-bow stock.

Hah, look now, while we squabble with him, look!

Well done, now — is not this beginning, now, To purpose?

1st Ret. —Our retainers look as fine —

That's comfort. Lord, how Richard holds himself

With his white staff! Will not a knave behind

Prick him upright?
He's only bowing, fool! The Earl's man bent us lower by this much.

1st Ret. That's comfort. Here's a very cavalcade!

3d Ret. I don't see wherefore Richard, and his troop

Of silk and silver varlets there, should find Their perfumed selves so indispensable On high days, holidays! Would it so disgrace Our family, if I, for instance, stood In my right hand a cast of Swedish hawks, A brace of greyhounds in my left? —

Ger. — With Hugh The logman for supporter, in his right

The bill-hook, in his left the brushwood-shears! 3d Ret. Out on you, crab! What next, what next? The Earl!

1st Ret. Oh Walter, groom, our horses, do they match The Earl's? Ah, that first pair of the six — They paw the ground — Ah, Walter! and that brute.

Just on his haunches by the wheel! 6th Ret. Ay — Ay!

You, Philip, are a special hand, I hear, At soups and sauces: what's a horse to you? D'ye mark that beast they've slid into the midst So cunningly? — then, Philip, mark this further;

No leg has he to stand on! 1st Ret. No? That's comfort. 2d Ret. Peace, Cook! The Earl descends. Well, Gerard, see The Earl at least! Come, there's a proper man, I hope! Why, Ralph, no falcon, Pole or Swede, Has got a starrier eye. 4th Ret. His eyes are blue — But leave my hawks alone!

4th Ret. So young, and yet So tall and shapely!

5th Ret. Here's Lord Tresham's self! There now — there's what a nobleman should be!

He's older, graver, loftier, he's more like A House's head!

2d Ret. But you'd not have a boy — And what's the Earl beside? — possess too soon That stateliness?

1st Ret. Our master takes his hand — Richard and his white staff are on the move Back fall our people — tsch! there's Timothy Sure to get tangled in his ribbon-ties, And Peter's cursed rossette's a-coming off! — At last I see our lord's back and his friend's; And the whole beautiful bright company Close round them: in they go! [Jumping down from the window-bench, and making for the table and its jugs.] Good health, long life Great joy to our Lord Tresham and his House! 6th Ret. My father drove his father first to court.

After his marriage-day — ay, did he!

Lord Tresham, Lady Mildred, and the Earl! Here, Gerard, reach your beaker! Ger. Drink, my boys! Don't mind me — all's not right about me — drink!

2d Ret. [Aside.] He's vexed, now, that he let the show escape! [To GER.] Remember that the Earl returns this way.

Ger. That way?

2d Ret. Just so,

Ger. Then my way's here. [Goes.] 2d Ret. Old Gerard Will die soon — mind, I said it! He was used To care about the pitifullest thing That touched the House's honor, not an eye But his could see wherein: and on a cause Of scarce a quarter this importance, Gerard Fairly had fretted flesh and bone away In cares that this was right, nor that was wrong, Such point decorous, and such square by rule — He knew such niceties, no herald more:

And now — you see his humor: die he will! 2d Ret. God help him! Who's for the great servants' hall To hear what's going on inside? They'd follow Lord Tresham into the saloon.

3d Ret. I! — 4th Ret. I —

Leave Frank alone for catching, at the door, Some hint of how the parley goes inside! Prosperity to the great House once more! Here's the last drop! 1st Ret. Have at you! Boys, hurrah!

Scene II. A saloon in the Mansion.

Enter LORD TRESHAM, LORD MERTON, AUSTIN, and GUENDOLEN.

Tresham. I welcome you, Lord Merton, yet once more.

To this ancestral roof of mine. Your name — Noble among the noblest in itself, Yet taking in your person, fame averse, New price and lustre. — (as that gem you wear. Transmitted from a hundred knightly breasts. Fresh chased and set and fixed by its last lord, Seems to rekindle at the core) — your name Would win you welcome!

Merton. Thanks!

Tresh. But add to that, The worthiness and grace and dignity Of your proposal for uniting both Our Houses even closer than respect Unites them now — add these, and you must grant One favor more, nor that the least, — to think The welcome I should give: 'tis given! My lord.

My only brother, Austin — he's the king's. Our cousin, Lady Guendolen — betrothed To Austin: all are yours.

Ger. I thank you — less For the expressed commendings which your seal. And only that, authenticates — forbids My putting from me, . . . to my heart I take Your praise... but praise less claims my grateful
Than the indulgent insight it implies
Of what must needs be uppermost with one
Who comes, like me, with the bare leave to ask
In weighed and measured unimpassioned words,
A gift, which, if as calmly 'tis denied,
He must withdraw, content upon his cheek,
Despair within his soul. That I dare ask
Firmly, near boldly, near with confidence
That gift, I have to thank you. Yes, Lord
Tresham,
I love your sister—as you 'd have one love
That lady... oh more, more I love her!
Wealth,
Rank, all the world thinks me, they 're yours,
you know,
To hold or part with, at your choice—but grant
My true self, me without a roof of land,
A piece of gold, a name of yesterday,
Grant me that lady, and you... Death or life?

Guendolen. [Apart to Aus.] Why, this is loving, Austin!
Austin. He's so young!
Guen. Young? Old enough, I think, to half surmise
He never had obtained an entrance here,
Were all this fear and trembling needed.
Austin. Hush!
He reddens.
Guen. Mark him, Austin; that 's true love!
Ours must begin again.
Tresh. We 'll sit, my lord.
Ever with best desert goes diffidence,
I may speak plainly nor be misconceived.
That I am wholly satisfied with you
On this occasion, when a falcon 's eye
Were dull compared with mine to search out faults,
Is somewhat. Mildred's hand is hers to give
Or to refuse.
M'en. But you, you grant my suit?
I have your word if hers?
Tresh. My best of words
If hers encourage you. I trust it will.
Have you seen Lady Mildred, by the way?
M'en. 1... 1... our two demesnes, remember, touch;
I have been used to wander carelessly
After my stricken game: the heron roused
Deep in my woods, has trailed its broken wing
Through thickets and glades a mile in yours,—or else
Some eyass ill-reclaimed has taken flight
And lured me after her from tree to tree,
I marked not whither. I have come upon
The lady's wondrous beauty unaware,
And—and then... I have seen her.

Guen. [Aside to Aus.] Note that mode
Of faltering out that, when a lady passed,
He, having eyes, did see her! You had said—
"On such a day I scanned her, head to foot;
Observed a red, where red should not have been,
Outside her elbow; but was pleased enough
Upon the whole." Let such irreverent talk
Be lessened for the future!
Tresh. What's to say
May be said briefly. She has never known
A mother's care; I stand for father too.
Her beauty is not strange to you, it seems—
You cannot know the good and tender heart,
Its girl's trust and its woman's constancy,
How pure yet passionate, how calm yet kind,
How grave yet joyous, how reserved yet free.
As light where friends are—how imbued with lore
The world most prizes, yet the simplest, yet
The... one might know I talked of Mildred
—thus
We brothers talk!
M'en. I thank you.
Tresh. In a word,
Control's not for this lady; but her wish
To please me outstrips in its subtlety
My power of being pleased: herself creates
The want she means to satisfy. My heart
Prefers your suit to hers as 't were its own.
Can I say more?
M'en. No more—thanks, thanks—no more!
Tresh. This matter then discussed...
M'en. We'll waste no breath
On ighth less precious. I'm beneath the roof
Which holds her: while I thought of that, my speech
To you would wander— as it must not do,
Since as you favor me I stand or fall.
I pray you suffer that I take my leave!
Tresh. With less regret 't is suffered, that again
We meet, I hope, so shortly.
M'en. We? again?
Ah yes, forgive me— when shall... you will crown
Your goodness by forsworth with apprising me
When... if... the lady will appoint a day
For me to wait on you—and her.
Tresh. So soon
As I am made acquainted with her thoughts
On your proposal— howsoever they lean
A messenger shall bring you the result.
M'en. You cannot bind me more to you, my lord.
Farewell till we renew... I trust, renew
A converse ne'er to disminate again.
Tresh. So may it prove!
M'en. You, lady, you, sir, take
My humble salutation!
Guen. and Aus. Thanks!
Tresh. Within there!
(Servants enter. TRESHAM conducts MEADOWS to the doors. Meantime AUSTIN remarks)
Well,
Here I have an advantage of the Earl,
Confess now! I 'd not think that all was safe
Because my lady's brother stood my friend!
Why, he makes sure of her—" do you say.
yes—
She'll not say, no."— what comes it to beside?
I should have prayed the brother, "speak this speech;
For Heaven's sake urge this on her— put in this—
Forget not, as you 'd save me, 't other thing,—
Then set down what she says, and how she looks, And if she smiles, and "in an under breath: "Only let her accept me, and do you All and the world refuse me, if you dare!"

Guen. That way you'd take, friend Austin? What a shame I was your cousin, namely from the first Your bride, and all this fervor's run to waste! Do you know you speak sensibly to-day? The Earl's a fool.

Trish. Here's Thorold. Tell him so! Trish. [Returning.] Now, voices, voices! 'St! the lady's first! How seems he?—seems he not... come, faith give fraud The mercy-stroke whenever they engage! Down with fraud, up with faith! How seems the Earl? Guen. A name! a blazon! if you knew their worth As you will never! come — the Earl? Guen. He's young.

Trish. What's she? an infant safe in heart and brain. Young! Mildred is fourteen, remark! And you... Austen. There's tact for you! I meant that being young was good excuse If one should tax him... Trish. Well? Guen. With lacking wit.

Trish. He lacked wit? Where might he lack wit, so please you? Guen. In standing straighter than the steward's rod And making you the tiresomest harrangue, Instead of slipping over to my side And softly whispering in my ear. "Sweet lady, Your cousin there will do me detriment If little dreams of: he's absorbed, I see, In my old name and fame — be sure he'll leave My Mildred, when his best account of me Is ended, in full confidence I wear My grandsire's periwig down either cheek, I'm lost unless your gentleness vouchsafes..." Trish.... "To give a best of best accounts, yourself, Of me and my demerits." You are right! He should have said what now I say for him. You golden creature, will you help us all? Here's Austin means to vouch for much, but you — You are... what Austin only knows! Come up.

All three of us: she's in the library No doubt, for the day's wearing fast. Precede! Guen. Austin, how we must! — Trish. Must what? Must speak truth. Malignant tongue! Detect one fault in him! I challenge you!

Guen. Witchcraft's a fault in him. For you're bewitched. Trish. What's urgent we obtain Is, that she soon receive him — say, to-morrow — Next day at furthest. Guen. Ne'er instruct me! Trish. Come! — He's out of your good graces, since forsooth. He stood not as he'd carry us by storm With his perfections! You're for the composed Manly assured becoming confidence! — Get her to say, "To-morrow," and I'll give you... I'll give you black Umbuanda, to be spoiled With petting and snail-paces. Will you? Come!

Scene III. Mildred's Chamber. A painted window over looks the Park. Mildred and Guendolen.

Guen. Now, Mildred, spare those pains. I have not left Our talkers in the library, and climbed The wearsome ascent to this your bower. In company with you, — I have not dared... Nay, worked such prodigies as sparing you Lord Mertoun's pedigree before the flood, Which Thorold seemed in very act to tell — Or bringing Austin to pluck up that most Firm-rooted heresy — your sutor's eyes, He would maintain, were gray instead of blue — I think I brought you to contrition! — Well, I have not done such things, (all to deserve A minute's quiet cousins' talk with you,) To be dismissed so coolly! Mildred. Guendolen! What have I done? what could suggest... Guen. There, there! Do I not comprehend you'd be alone To throw these testimonies in a heap, Thorold's enlargings, Austin's brevities, With that poor silly heartless Guendolen's Ill-timed misplaced attempted smartnesses — And sift their sense out? now, I come to spare you Nearly a whole night's labor. Ask and have! Demand, be answered! Lack I ears and eyes? Am I perplexed which side of the rock-table The Conqueror dined on when he landed first, Lord Mertoun's ancestor was hidden take — The bow-hand or the arrow-hand's great need? Mildred, the Earl has soft blue eyes!

Mild. My brother, — Did he... you said that he received him well? Guen. If I said only "well" I said not much. Oh, stay — which brother? Mild. Thorold! who — who else? Guen. Thorold (a secret) is too proud by half.

Nay, hear me out — with us he's even gentler Than we are with our birds. Of this great House The least retainer that ever caught his glance Would die for him, real dying — no mere talk: And in the world, the court, if men would cite The perfect spirit of honor. Thorold's name Rises of its clear nature to their lips. But he should take men's homage, trust in it. And care no more about what drew it down. He has desert, and that, acknowledgment; Is he content?

Mild. You wrong him, Guendolen. Guen. He's proud, confess; so proud with brooding o'er The light of his interminable line. An ancestry with men all paladins. And women all...
Mil. Therefore, well, and of we.

Happiness Dear but that, who (going, call I have)

She must my hair. A voice declared 'twas yonder did not you—Oh, Austin 'tis was declared.

The moon-beam purpling the dark chamber! Sweet,

Good night! Gown. Forgive me—sleep the soundlier for me!

[Going, she turns suddenly. Mildred! Perdition! all's discovered! Thorold finds

That the Earl's greatest of all grandmothers
Was grander daughter still—to that fair dame
Whose garter slipped down at the famous dance!

Mil. Is she—can she be really gone at last? My heart! I shall not reach the window.

Needs Must I have sinned much, so to suffer! She lifts the small lump which is suspended before the Virgin's image in the window, and places it by the purple pane.

There! [She returns to the seat in front. Mildred and Merton! Mildred, with consent Of all the world and Thorold, Merton's bride! Too late! 'Tis sweet to think of, sweeter still

To hope for, that this blessed end soothes up

The curse of the beginning; but I know

It comes too late: 'twill sweetest be of all

To dream my soul away and die upon.

[Noise without.

The voice! Oh why, why glistened in the snake
Into the paradise Heaven meant us both?

[The window opens softly. A low voice sings.

There's a woman like a dew-drop, she's so purer

Than the purest;

And her noble heart's the noblest, yes, and her

Sure faith's the surest;

And her eyes are dark and humid, like the depth

On depth of lustre

Hid 't the harp's bell, while her tresses, sunnier

Than the wild-grape cluster;

Gush in golden-tinted plenty down her neck's rose-misted marble:

Then her voice's music... call it the well's bubbling, the bird's warble!

And this woman says, "My days were sunless

And my nights were moonless,

Parched the pleasant April herbage, and the Lark's heart's outburst tasteless,

If you loved me not!" And I who—(oh, for words of mine!)- adore her,

Who am wont to lay my spirit prostrate palpably before her—

[He enters, approaches her seat, and bends over her.

I may enter at her portal soon, as now her lattice takes me,

And by moonrise as by midnight make her mine, as hers she makes me!

[The Earl throws off his slouched hat and long cloak.

My very heart sings, so I sing, Beloved!

Mil. Sit, Henry—do not take my hand!

Mer. 'Tis mine. The meeting that appalled us both so much

Is ended.

Mil. What begins now?

Mer. Happiness

Such as the world contains not.

Mil. That is it.

Our happiness would, as you say, exceed

The whole world's best of kisses: we—do we Deserve that? Utter to your soul, what minute

Long since, Beloved, has grown used to hear,

Like a death-knell, so much regarded once,

And so familiar now; this will not be!

Mer. Oh, Mildred, have I met your brother's face?

Compelled myself—if not to speak untruth,

Yet to disguise, to shun, to put aside

The truth, as—what had e'er prevailed on me

Save you, to venture? Have I gained at last

Your brother, the one scarer of your dreams,

And waking thoughts' sole apprehension too?

Does a new life, like a young sunrise, break

On the strange unrest of our night, confused

With rain and stormy flaw—and will you see

No dripping blossoms, no fire-tinted drops

On each live spray, no vapor steaming up,

And no expressless glory in the East?

When I am by you, to be ever by you,

When I have won you and may worship you.

Oh, Mildred, can you say "this will not be"?

Mil. Sin has surprised us, so will punishment.

Mer. No—me alone, who sinned alone!

Mil. The night you likened our past life to—was it storm

Throughout to you then, Henry?

Mer. Of your life

I spoke—what am I, what my life, to waste

A thought about when you are by me?—you

It was, I said my folly called the storm

And pulled the night upon. 'T was day with me—

Perpetual dawn with me.

Mil. Come what come will.

You have been happy: take my hand!
To her we dream of—I had heard of one,
Hat dreamed of her, and I was close to her.
With speak to her, might live and die her own,
Who knew? I spoke. Oh, Mildred, feel you not
That now, while I remember every glance
Of yours, each word of yours, with power to test
And weigh them in the diamond scales of pride,
Resolved the treasure of a first and last
Heart’s love shall have been bartered at its worth,
That now I think upon your purity
And utter ignorance of guilt—your own
Or other’s guilt—the girlish undisguised
Delight at a strange novel prize—I talk
A silly language, but interpret, you!
If I, with fancy at its full, and reason
Scarce in its germ, enjounced you secrecy,
If you had pity on my passion, pity
On my protest’d sickness of the soul
To sit beside you, hear you breathe, and watch
Your eyelids and the eyes beneath—if you
Accorded gifts and knew not they were gifts—
If I grew mad at last with enterprise
And must behold my beauty in her bower
Or perish—I was ignorant of even
My own desires—what then were you?) if sorrow
Sin—if the end came—must I now renounce
My reason, blind myself to light, say truth
Is false and lie to God and my own soul?
Contempt were all of this!
Mildred! Do you believe . . .
Or, Henry, I will not wrong you—you believe
That I was ignorant. I scarce grieve over
The past! We’ll love on; you will love me—still!
Mildred! Oh, to love less what one has injured!
Daisy.
Whose passion I have rashly hurt, my breast—
Shall my heart’s warmth not nurse thee into strength?
Flower I have crushed, shall I not care for thee?
Bloom o’er my crest, my fight-mark and device!
Mildred, I love you and you love me!
Mildred! Go!
Be that your last word. I shall sleep to-night.
Mildred! This is not our last meeting?
Mildred! One night more.
Mildred! And then—think, then!
Mildred! Then, no sweet courtship-days,
No dawning consciousness of love for us.
No strange and palpitating births of sense
From words and looks, no innocent fears and hopes.
Reserves and confidences: morning’s over!
Mildred! How else should love’s perfected noon-tide follow?
All the dawn promised shall the day perform.
Mildred! So may it be! but—
You are cautious, Love?
Are sure that unobserved you scaled the walls?
Mildred! Oh, trust me! Then our final meeting’s fixed
To-morrow night?
Mildred! Farewell! Stay, Henry . . . wherefore?
His foot is on the yew-tree bough: the turf
Receives him: now the moonlight as he runs
Embraces him—but he must go—is gone.
Ah, once again he turns—thanks, thanks, my
Love!
He's gone. Oh, I'll believe him every word!
I was so young, I loved him so. I had
No mother, God forgot me, and I fell.
There may be pardon yet; all's doubt beyond.
Surely the bitterness of death is past!

ACT II

SCENE. The Library.

Enter Lord Tresham, hastily.

Tresh. This way! In, Gerard, quick!

[As Gerard enters, Tresham secures the door.

Now speak! or, wait—

I'll bid you speak directly. [Seats himself.

Now repeat

Firmly and circumstentially the tale
You just now told me; it eludes me; either
I did not listen, or the half is gone
Away from me. How long have you lived here?

Here in my house, your father kept our woods
Before you?

Ger. — As his father did, my lord.
I have been eating, sixty years almost,
Your bread.

Tresh. Yes, yes. You ever were of all
The servant in my father's house. I know,
The trusted one. You'll speak the truth.

Ger. I'll speak
God's truth. Night after night . . .

Tresh. Since when?

Ger. At least
A month—each midnight has some man access
To Lady Mildred's chamber.

Tresh. Tush, "access"—

No wide words like "access" to me!

Ger. He runs
Along the woodside, crosses to the south,
Takes the left tree that ends the avenue . . .

Tresh. The last great yew-tree?

Ger. You might stand upon
The main boughs like a platform. Then he . . .

Tresh. Quick!

Ger. Climbs up, and, where they lessen at the top,

— I cannot see distinctly, but he throws,
I think—for this I do not vouch—a line
That reaches to the lady's casement—

Tresh. — Which
He enters not! Gerard, some wretched fool
Dares pry into my sister's privacy!
When such are young, it seems a precious thing
To have approached,—to merely have approached.
Got sight of, the abode of her they set
Their frantic thoughts upon! He does not enter?

Gerard?

Ger. There is a lamp that's full i' the midst,
Under a red square in the painted glass

Of Lady Mildred's . . .

Tresh. Leave that name out! Well?

That lamp?

Ger. — Is moved at midnight higher up
To one pane—a small dark-blue pane: he waits
For that among the boughs: at sight of that,
I see him, plain as I see you, my lord,
Open the lady's casement, enter there . . .

Tresh. — And stay?

Ger. An hour, two hours.

Tresh. And this you saw
Once?—twice?—quick!

Ger. Twenty times.

Tresh. And what brings you
Under the yew-trees?

Ger. The first night I left
My range so far, to track the stranger stag
That broke the pale, I saw the man.

Tresh. Yet sent
No cross-bow shaft through the marauder?

Ger. But He came, my lord, the first time he was seen,
In a great moonlight, light as any day,

[From Lady Mildred's chamber.

Tresh. [After a pause.] You have no cause
—Who could have cause to do my sister wrong?

Ger. Oh, my lord, only once—let me this once

Speak what is on my mind! Since first I noted
All this, I've groaned as if a fiery net
Plucked me this way and that—fire if I turned
To her, fire if I turned to you, and fire
If down I flung myself and strove to die.
The lady could not have been seven years old
When I was trusted to conduct her safe
Through the deer-herd to stroke the snes-now-white

I brought to eat bread from her tiny hand
Within a month. She ever had a smile
To greet me with—she . . . if it could undo
What's done, to lap each limb from off this trunk . . .

All that is foolish talk, not fit for you—
I mean, I could not speak and bring her hurt
For Heaven's compelling. But when I was fixed
To hold my peace, each morsel of your food
Eaten beneath your roof, my birth-place too.
Choked me. I wish I had grown mad in doubts
What it behoved me do. This mourn it seemed Either I must confess to you, or die:
Now it is done, I seem the vilest worm
That crawls, to have betrayed my lady!

Tresh. No—

Gerard!

Ger. Let me go!

Tresh. A man, you say:
What man? Young? Not a vulgar hind?

Ger. What dress?

Ger. A slouched hat and a large dark foreign cloak
Wraps his whole form; even his face is hid;
But I should judge him young: no hind, be sure!

Tresh. Why?

Ger. He is ever armed: his sword projects

Beneath the cloak.

Tresh. Gerard,—I will not say
No word, no breath of this!

{Gr.} Thanks, thanks, my lord!

Tresham paces the room. After a pause,
Oh, thought's absurd! — as with some monstrous fact
Which, when ill thoughts beset us, seems to give Merciful God that made the sun and stars,
The waters and the green delights of earth,
The lie! I apprehend the monstrous fact —
Yet know the marker of all worlds is good,
And yield my reason up inadequate
To reconcile what yet I do behold —
Blasting my sense! There's cheerful day outside —
This is my library, and this the chair
My father used to sit in carelessly
After his soldier-fashion, while I stood
Between his knees to question him: and here
Gerard our gray retainer. — as he says,
Fed with our food, from sire to son, an age —
Iam told a story — I am to believe!
That Mildred... oh, no, no! both tales are true,
Her pure cheek's story and the forester's!
Would she, or could she, err — much less, confound
All guiles of treachery, of craft, of... Heaven
Keep me within its hand! — I will sit here
Until thought settle and I see my course.
Avert, O God, only this woe from me!
[As he sinks his head between his arms on the table,
Guendolen's voice is heard at the door.
Lord Tresham! [She knocks.] Is Lord Tresham there?

{Tresham, hastily turning, pulls down the first book above him and opens it.

Tre. Come in!

Gwen. Nothing more?

Tresh. What should I say more?

Gwen. Pleasant question! more?

This more. Did I besiege poor Mildred's brain
Last night till close on morning with "the Earl,"
"The Earl" — whose worth did I asseverate
Till I am very fain to hope that... Thorold,
What is all this? You are not well!

Tresh. Who, I?

You laugh at me.

Gwen. Has what I'm fain to hope,
Arrived then? Does that huge tome speak some blot
In the Earl's 'sentcheon come no longer back
Than Arthur's time?

Tresh. When left you Mildred's chamber?

Gwen. Oh, late enough, I told you! The main thing
To ask is, how I left her chamber. — sure,
Content yourself, she'll grant this paragon
Of Earls no such ungracious...

Tresh. Send her here!

Gwen. Thorold?

Tresh. I mean — acquaint her, Guendolen, — but mildly!

Gwen. Mildly?

Tresh. Ah, you guessed aright!
I am not well: there is no hiding it.
But tell her I would see her at her leisure —

That is, at once! here in the library!
The passage in that old Italian book
We hunted for so long is found, say, found —
And if I let it slip again... you see,
That she must come — and instantly!

Gwen. I'll die
Piecemeal, record that, if there have not gloomed
Some blot i' the 'sentcheon!

Tresh. Go! or, Guendolen,
Be you at call, — with Austin, if you choose, —
In the adjoining gallery! There, go:

[Guendolen goes.

Another lesson to me! You might bid
A child disguise his heart's sore, and conduct
Some sly investigation point by point
With a smooth brow, as well as bid me catch
The inquisitorial cleverness some praise!
If you had told me yesterday, There's one
You needs most circumvent and practise with.
Entrap by policies, if you would wound
The truth out: and that one is — Mildred!

There,

There — reasoning is thrown away on it!
Prove she's unchaste... why, you may after prove
That she's a poisoner, traitress, what you will!
Where I can comprehend naught, naught's to say,
Or do, or think! Force on me but the first
Abomination. — then pour all plagues,
And I shall ne'er make count of them!

(Enter Mildred.)

Mil. What book
Is it I wanted, Thorold? Guendolen
Thought you were pale; you are not pale.
That book?

That's Latin surely.

Tresh. Mildred, here's a line,
(Don't lean on me: I'll English it for you)
"Love conquers all things." What love conquers them?
What love should you esteem — best love?
Mil. True love.

Tresh. I mean, and should have said, whose love is best
Of all that love or that profess to love?
Mil. The list's so long, there's father's, mother's, husband's...

Tresh. Mildred, I do believe a brother's love
For a sole sister must exceed them all.
For see now, only see! there's no alloy
Of earth that creeps into the perfect'st gold
Of other loves — no gratitude to claim;
You never gave her life, not even aught
That keeps life — never tended her, instructed
Enriched her — so, your love can claim no right
O'er her save pure love's claim: that's what I call
Freedom from earthliness. You'll never hope
To be such friends, for instance, she and you.
As when you hunted cowslips in the woods
Or played together in the meadow hay.
Oh yes — with age, respect comes, and your worth
Is felt, there's growing sympathy of tastes.
There's ripened friendship, there's continued esteem.
Mil. Oh, Thorold, you must never tempt me thus!
To die here in this chamber by that sword Would seem like punishment: so should I glide, Like an arch-cheat, into extremest bliss! 'T were easily arranged for me: but you — What would become of you?

Tresh. And what will now Become of me? I'll hide your shame and mine From every eye; the dead must heave their hearts
Under the marble of our chapel-floor; They cannot rise and blast you. You may wed Your paramour above our mother's tomb; Our mother cannot move from 'neath your foot. We too will somehow wear this one day out; But with to-morrow hastens here — the Earl! The youth without suspicion face can come From heaven, and heart from... whence proceed such hearts?
I have dispatched last night at your command A missive bidding him present himself To-morrow — here — thus much is said; the rest Is understood as if 't were written down — "His suit finds favor in your eyes." Now dictate This morning's letter that shall countermand Last night's — do dictate that!

Mil. But, Thorold — if I will receive him as I said?

Tresh. [Starting up.] Ho there! Guendolen! (Guendolen and Austin enter.)
And, Austin, you are welcome, too! Look there —
The woman there!

Aus. and Guen. How? Mildred?

Tresh. Mildred once! Now the receiver night by night, when sleep Blesses the inmates of her father's house, — I say, the soft sly wanton that receives Her guilt's accomplice 'neath this roof which holds You, Guendolen, you, Austin, and has held A thousand Treshams — never one like her! No lighter of the signal-lamp her quick Ford breath near quenches in hot eagerness To mix with breath as foul! no losser O' the lattice, practised in the stealthy tread, The low voice and the noiseless come-and-go! Not one composer of the bancheat's mien Into — what you thought Mildred's, in a word! Know her!

Guen. Oh, Mildred, look to me, at least! Thorold — she's dead, I'd say, but that she stands Rigid as stone and whiter!

Tresh. You have heard... Guen. Too much! You must proceed no further.

Mil. Yes —

Proceed! All's truth. Go from me!

Tresh. All is truth. She tells you! Well, you know, or ought to know, All this I would forgive in her. I'd con
Each precept the harsh world enjoins, I'd take
Our ancestors' stern verdicts one by one,
I'd bind myself before them to exact
The prescribed vengeance—and one word of hers,
The sickle of her, the bare least memory
Of Mildred, my one sister, my heart's pride
Above all praises, my all in all so long,
Would scatter every trace of my resolve.
What were it silently to waste away
And see her waste away from this day forth,
Two seathed things with leisure to repeat,
And grow acquainted with the grave, and die
Tired out if not at peace, and be forgotten?
It were not so impossible to bear.
But this—that, fresh from last night's pledge renewed
Of love with the successful gallant there,
She calmly bids me help her to entice
Inveigle an unconscious trusting youth
Who thinks her all that 's chaste and good and pure,
Invites me to betray him, who so fit
As honor's self to cover shame's arch-deed?
That she 'll receive Lord Merton—her own phrase—
This, who could bear? Why, you have heard
Of thieves,
Stabbers, the earth's disgrace, who yet have laughed,
"Talk not to me of torture—I 'll betray
No comrade I 've pledged faith to!"—you have heard
Of wretched women—all but Mildreds—tied
By wild illicit ties to sordid vile
You 'd tempt them to forsake; and they'll reply
"Gold, friends, repuate, I left for him. I find
In him, why should I leave him then for gold,
Repuate or friends?"—and you have felt your heart
Respond to such poor outcasts of the world
As to so many friends; bad as you please,
You've felt they were God's men and women still,
So, not to be disowned by you. But she
That stands there, calmly gives her lover up
As means to wed the Earl that she may hide
Their intercourse the surelier: and, for this,
I curse her to her face before you all,
Shame hunt her from the earth! Then Heaven do right
To both! It hears me now—shall judge her then!

[As MILDRED faints and falls, TRESHAM rushes out.]

AUS. Stay, Tresham, we'll accompany you! Guen.

WE? What, and leave Mildred? We? Why, where's my place
But by her side, and where yours but by mine? Mildred—one word! Only look at me, then!

AUS. No, Guenolien! I echo Thorold's voice.

She is unworthy to behold...

Guen. Us two?

If you spoke on reflection, and if I
Approved your speech—if you to put the thing
At lowest—you the soldier, bound to make

The king's cause yours and fight for it, and throw
Regard to others of its right or wrong,
—If with a death-white woman you can help,
Let alone sister, let alone a Mildred,
You left her—or if I, her cousin, friend
This morning, playfellow but yesterday,
Who said, or thought at least a thousand times,
"I'd serve you if I could," should now face round
And say, "Ah, that's to only signify
I'd serve you while you're fit to serve yourself
So long as fifty eyes await the turn
Of yours to forestall its yet half-formed wish,
I'll proffer my assistance you'll not need—
When every tongue is praising you, I'll join
The praisers' chorus—when you're hemmed about
With lives between you and detraction—lives
To be laid down if a rude voice, rash eye,
Rough hand should violate the sacred ring
Their worship throws about you,—then indeed,
Who'll stand up for you stout as I?" If so
We said, and so we did,—not Mildred there
Would be unworthy to behold us both,
But we should be unworthy, both of us,
To be beheld by—by—your meanest dog,
Which, if that sword were broken in your face
Before a crowd, that badge torn off your breast,
And you cast out with hooting and contempt,
—Would push his way through all the hooters, gain
Your side, go off with you and all your shame
To the next ditch you choose to die in! Austin,
Do you love me? Here's Austin, Mildred,—here's Your brother says he does not believe half—
No, nor half that—of all he heard! He says,
Look up and take his hand!

AUS. My hand, dear Mildred!

MIL. I—I was so young!

Beside, I loved him, Thorold—and I had
No mother; God forgot me: so, I fell.

GUEN. Mildred!

MIL. Require no further! Did I dream
That I could palliate what is done? All's true.
Now, punish me! A woman takes my hand.'

LET. Go my hand! You do not know, I see.
I thought that Thorold told you.

GUEN. What is this?

REET. Where start you to?

MIL. Oh, Austin, loosen me!

You heard the whole of it—your eyes were

In their surprise, than Thorold's! Oh, unless
You stay to execute his sentence, loose
My hand! Has Thorold gone, and are you here?

GUEN. Here, Mildred, we two friends of yours will wait
Your bidding; be you silent, sleep or muse!
Only, when you shall want your bidding done.
How can we do it if we are not by?

HERE. Austin waiting patiently your will:
One spirit to command, and one to love
And to believe in it and do its best,
Poor as that is, to help it—why, the world
Has been won many a time, its length and breadth,
By just such a beginning!

Mil. I believe
If once I threw my arms about your neck
And sunk my head upon your breast, that I should weep again.

Guen. Let go her hand now, Austin!
Wait for me. Pace the gallery and think
On the world's seemings and realities,
Until I call you.

[AUSTIN GOES.]

Mil. No—I cannot weep.
No more tears from this brain—no sleep—no tears!

O Guendolen, I love you!

Guen. Yes: and "love"
Is a short word that says so very much!
It says that you confide in me.

Mil. Confide!

Guen. Your lover's name, then! I've so much to learn.

Here I can work in your behalf!

Mil. My friend,
You know I cannot tell his name.

Guen. At least He is your lover? and you love him too?

Mil. Ah, do you ask me that?—but I am fallen
So low!

Guen. You love him still, then?

Mil. My sole prop
Against the guilt that crushes me! I say,
Each night cre I lie down, "I was so young—
I had no mother, and I loved him so!"
And then God seems indulgent, and I dare
Trust him my soul in sleep.

Guen. How could you let us
Even talk to you about Lord Merton?

Mil. There is a cloud around me.

Guen. But you said
You would receive his suit in spite of this?

Mil. I say there is a cloud.

Guen. No cloud to me!

Lord Merton and your lover are the same!

Mil. What maddest fancy!

Guen. [Calling aloud.] Austin! (spare your pains—
When I have got a truth, that truth I keep)—

Mil. By all you love, sweet Guendolen, forbear!

Have I confided in you...

Guen. Just for this!

Austin!—Oh, not to guess it at the first!
But I did guess it—thafs it, I divined,
Felt by an instinct how it was: why else
Should I pronounce you free from all that heap
Of sins which had been irredeemable?
I felt they were not yours—what other way
Than this, not yours? The secret's wholly mine!

Mil. If you would see me die before his face...

Guen. I'd hold my peace! And if the Earl returns
To-night?

Mil. Ah Heaven, he's lost!

Guen. I thought so. Austin!

(ENTER AUSTIN.)

Oh, where have you been hiding?
My rash love lured her to! Each day must see
Some fear of hers effaced, some hope renewed:
Then there will be surprises, unforeseen
Delights in store. I'll not regret the past.
[The light is placed above in the purple pane.
And see, my signal rises, Mildred's star!
I never saw it lovelier than now
It rises for the last time. If it sets,
'Tis that the reassuming sun may dawn.
[As he prepares to ascend the last tree of the avenue,
Tresham arrests his arm.

Unhand me — peasant, by your grasp! Here's gold.
'T was a mad freak of mine. I said I'd pluck
A branch from the white-blossomed shrub beneath
The casement there. Take this, and hold your peace.
Tresham. Into the moonlight yonder, come with me!

Out of the shadow.

Mrs. I am armed, fool!

Tresham. Yes, or no? You'll come into the light, or no?

My hand is on your throat — refuse! —

Mrs. That voice!

Where have I heard . . . no — that was mild and slow.

I'll come with you. [They advance.

Tresham. You're armed; that's well. Declare your name; who are you?

Mrs. (Tresham! — she is lost!)

Tresham. Oh, silent? Do you know, you hear yourself

Exactly as, in curious dreams I've had
How felons, this wild earth is full of, look
When they're detected, still your kind has looked!
The brave holds an assured countenance,
The thief is void of and plausible,
But silently the slave of lust has crunched
When I have fancied it before a man.

Your name!

Mr. I do conjure Lord Tresham — ay,
Kissing his foot, so I might prevail —
That he for his own sake forbear to ask
My name! As heaven's above, his future weal
Or woe depends upon my silence! Vain!
I read your white inexorable face.

Know me, Lord Tresham!

(Tresham throws off his disguise.

Tresham. Merton! Draw now!

Mrs. Hear me

But speak first!

Tresham. Not one least word on your life!
Be sure that I will strangle in your throat.
The least word that informs me how you live
And yet seem what you seem? No doubt 'twas you

Touched Mildred still to keep that face and sin.
We should join hands in frantic sympathy
If you once taught me the unteachable,
Explained how you can live so, and so lie,
With God's help I retain, despite my sense,
The old belief — a life like yours is still impossible. Now draw!

Mrs. Not for my sake.

Do I entreat a hearing — for your sake,
And most, for her sake?

Tresham. Ha ha, what should I Know of your ways? A miscreant like yourself,

How must one rouse his ire? A blow? — that's pride

No doubt, to him! One spurns him, does one not?

Or sets the foot upon his mouth, or spits

Into his face! Come! Which, or all of these?

Mrs. Twixt him and me and Mildred,

Heaven be judge!

Can I avoid this? Have your will, my lord!

(His hands and, after a few pauses, falls.

Tresham. You are not hurt?

Mrs. You'll hear me now!

Tresham. But rise!

Mrs. Ah, Tresham, say I not "you'll hear me now!"

And what procures a man the right to speak

In his defence before his fellow man,

But — I suppose — the thought that presently

He may have leave to speak before his God

His whole defence?

Tresham. Not hurt? It cannot be!

You made no effort to resist me. Where Did my sword reach you? Why not have returned

My thrusts? Hurt where?

Mrs. My lord —

Tresham. How young he is!

Mrs. Lord Tresham, I am very young, and yet

I have entangled other lives with mine.

Do let me speak, and do believe my speech!

That when I die before you presently, —

Tresham. Can you stay here till I return with help?

Mrs. Oh, stay by me! When I was less than boy

I did you grievous wrong and knew it not —

Upon my honor, knew it not! Once known,

I could not find what seemed a better way

To right you than I took: my life — you feel

How less than nothing were the giving you

The life you've taken! But I thought my way

The better — only for your sake and hers!

And as you have decided otherwise,

Would I had an infinity of lives

To offer you! Now say — instruct me — think!

Can you, from the brief minutes I have left,

Eke out my reparation? Oh think — think!

For I must wring a partial — dare I say,

Forgiveness from you, ere I die? I do

Forgive you.

Mrs. Wait and ponder that great word!

Because, if you forgive me, I shall hope

To speak to you of — Mildred!

Tresham. Merton, haste

And anger have undone us. 'Tis not you

Should tell me for a novelty you're young,

Thoughtless, unable to recall the past,

Be but your pardon ample as my own?

Mrs. Ah, Tresham, that a sword-stroke and a drop

Of blood or two, should bring all this about!

Why, 'twas my very fear of you, my love
Of you — (what passion like a boy's for one Like you?) — that ruined me! I dream'd of you You, all accomplished, courted everywhere. The scholar and the gentleman, I burned To knit myself to you: but I was young, And your surpassing reputation kept me So far aloof! Oh, wherefore all that love? With less of love, my glorious yesterday Of praise and gentlest words and kindest looks, Had taken place perchance six months ago. Even now, how happy we had been! And yet I know the thought of this escaped you, Tresham! Let me look up into your face; I feel 'Tis changed above me: yet my eyes are glazed. Where? where?

[As he endeavors to raise himself his eye catches the blem.

Ah, Mildred! What will Mildred do? Tresham, her life is bound up in the life That's bleeding fast away! I'll live — must live, There, if you'll only turn me I shall live And save her! Tresham — oh, had you but heard! Had you but heard! What right was yours to set The thoughtless foot upon her life and mine, And then say, as we perish, "Had I thought, All had gone otherwise'? We've sinned and die: Never you sin, Lord Tresham! for you'll die, And God will judge you. Tresham. Yes, be satisfied! That process is begun.

Mrs. And she sits there Waiting for me! Now, say you this to her — You, not another — say. I saw him die As he breathed this, "I love her!" — you don't know What those three small words mean! Say, loving her Lowers me down the bloody slope to death With memories ... I speak to her, not you, Who had no pity, will have no remorse, Perchance intend her ... Die along with me. Dear Mildred! 'tis so easy, and you'll 'scape So much unkindness! Can I lie at rest, With rude speech spoken to you, under deeds Done to you? — heartless men shall have my heart, And I tied down with grave-clothes and the worm, Aware, perhaps, of every blow — oh God! — Upon those lips — yet, of no power to tear The felon stripe by stripe! Die, Mildred! Leave Their honorable world to them! For God We're good enough, though the world casts us out. Tresham. Ho, Gerard! (Enter Gerard, Austin and Guendolen, with lights.) No one speak! You see what's done. I cannot bear another voice.

Mrs. There's light — Light all about me, and I move to it. Tresham, did I not tell you — did you not Just promise to deliver words of mine To Mildred? Tresham. Will bear those words to her. Mrs. Now? Tresham. Now. Lift you the body, and leave me The head. [As they have half raised Mertoun, he turns suddenly. Mrs. I knew they turned me: turn me not from her! There! stay you! there! [Dies Guen. [After a pause.] Austin, remain you here With Thorold until Gerard comes with help: Then lead him to his chamber. I must go To Mildred. Tresham. Guendolen, I hear each word You uttered. Did you hear him bid me give His message? Did you hear my promise? I, And only I, see Mildred. Guen. She will die. Tresham. Oh no, she will not die! I dare not hope She'll die. What ground have you to think she'll die? Why, Austin's with you!

Austin. Had we but arrived Before you fought! Tresham. There was no fight at all. He let me slaughter him — the boy! I'll trust The body there to you and Gerard — thus! Now bear him on before me.

Austin. Whither bear him? Tresham. Oh, to my chamber! When we meet there next, We shall be friends. [They bear out the body of Mertoun. Guen. Will she die, Guendolen? Tresham. He fell just here. Now answer me. Shall you in your whole life — You who have naught to do with Mertoun's fate, Now you have seen his breast upon the turf, Shall you e'er walk this way if you can help? When you and Austin wander arm-in-arm Through our ancestral grounds, will not a shade Be ever on the meadow and the waste — Another kind of shade than when the night Shuts the woodside with all its whispers up? But will you ever so forget his breast As carelessly to cross this bloody turf Under the black yew avenue? 'That's well! You turn your head: and I then? — Guen. What is done Is done. My care is for the living. Thorold, Bear up against this burden: more remains To set the neck to! Tresham. Dear and ancient trees My fathers planted, and I loved so well! What have I done that, like some fabled crime Of yore, lets lose a Fairy leading thus Her miserable dance amidst you all? Oh, never more for me shall winds intone With all your tops a vast antiphony, Demanding and responding in God's praise! Hers ye are now, not mine! Farewell — farewell!
Mildred's Chamber. Mildred alone.

Mildred. He comes not! I have heard of those who seemed Resonant in prosperity,—you thought Sorrow might slay them when she listed; yet Did they so gather up their diffused strength At her first menace, that they bade her strike, And stood and laughed her subtest skill to scorn.

Oh, 't is not so with me! The first toy fell, And the rest fail upon it, not on me:
Else should I hear that Henry comes not? — fails
Just this first night out of so many nights?
Loving is done with. Were he sitting now,
As so few hours since, on that seat, we'd love
No more—constrive no thousand happy ways
To hide love from the loveless, any more.
I think I might have urged some little point
In my defence, to Thorold; he was breathless
For the least hint of a defence: but no,
The first shame over, all that would fail.
No Henry! Yet I merely sit and think
The morn's dead o'er and o'er. I must have crept
Out of myself. A Mildred that has lost
Her lover—oh, I dare not look upon Such woe! I crouch away from it! 'T is she Mildred, will break her heart, not I! The world
Forsakes me: only Henry's left me—left?
When I have lost him, for he does not come,
And I sit stupidly ... Oh Heaven, break up
This worse than anguish, this mad apathy,
By any means or any messenger!

Tresh. [Without.] Mildred! Mildred! [Enter Tresham.] You? alone?
Oh, no more cursing!

Tresh. Mildred, I must sit.

There—you sit!

Mildred. Say it, Thorold—do not look
The curse! deliver all you come to say!
What must become of me? Oh, speak that thought
Which makes your brow and cheeks so pale!
Tresh. My thought?
Mildred. All of it!
Tresh. How we waded—years ago!
After those water-lilies, till the plash,
I know not how, surprised us; and you dared
Neither advance nor turn back: so, we stood
Laughing and crying until Gerard came—
Once safe upon the turf, the leastest too.
For once more reaching the relinquished prize!
How idle thoughts are, some men's, dying men's!

Mildred. You call me kindlier by my name
Than even yesterday: what is in that?
Tresh. It weighs so much upon my mind
That I
This morning took an office not my own!
I might ... of course, I must be glad or grieved,
Content or not, at every little thing
That touches you. I may with a wanling heart
Even reprove you, Mildred; I did more:
Will you forgive me?

Mildred. Thorold? do you mock?
Or no ... and yet you bid me ... say that word!

Tresh. Forgive me, Mildred!—are you silent, Sweet?

Mildred. [Starting up.] Why does not Henry Mertoun come to-night?

Are you, too, silent?

[Taking his mantle aside, and pointing to his scabbard, which is empty.

Ah, this speaks for you!

You've murdered Henry Mertoun! Now proceed!

What is it I must pardon? This and all?
Well, I do pardon you—I think I do.
Thorold, how very wretched you must be!
Tresh. He bade me tell you...

Mildred. What do I forbid
Your utterance of! So much that you may tell
And will not—how you murdered him ... but, no!

You'll tell me that he loved me, never more
Than bleeding out his life there: must I say
"Indeed," to that? Enough! I pardon you.

Tresh. You cannot, Mildred! for the harsher words, yes:

Of this last deed Another's judge: whose doom
I wait in doubt, despondency and fear.

Mildred. Oh, true! There's naught for me to pardon! True!

You lose my soul of all its cares at once.
Death makes me sure of him forever! You Tell me his last words? He shall tell me them, And take my answer—no in words, but reading Himself the heart I had to read him late,
Which death ...

Tresh. Death? You are dying too? Well said
Of Guendolen! I dared not hope you'd die:
But she was sure of it.

Mildred. Tell Guendolen
I loved her, and tell Austin. .

Tresh. Him you loved:

Mildred. Ah, Thorold! Wasn't rushily done
To quench that blood, on fire with youth and hope
And love of me—whom you loved too, and yet Suffered to sit here waiting his approach
While you were slaying him? Oh, doubtlessly You let him speak his poor confused boy's speech
—Do his poor utmost to disarm your wrath
And repine me!—you let him try to give
The story of our love and ignorance,
And the brief madness and the long despair
You let him plead all this, because your code
Of honor bids you hear before you strike:

But at the end, as he looked up for life
Into your eyes—you struck him down!

Tresh. No! No!

Had I but heard him —had I let him speak
Half the truth—less—had I looked long on

I had desisted! Why, as he lay there,
The moon on his flushed cheek, I gathered all
The story ere he told it: I saw through
The troubled surface of his crime and yours
A depth of purity immovable:
Had I but glanced, where all seemed turbidest
Had gleamed some inlet to the calm beneath;
I would not glance: my punishment's at hand. There, Mildred, is the truth! and you — say on —
You curse me?

Mil. As I dare approach that Heaven
Which has not bade a living thing despair,
Which needs no code to keep its grace from stain,
But bids the vilest worm that turns on it
Desist and be forgiven. — I — forgive not,
But bless you, Thorold, from my soul's souls!

[Falls on his neck.

There! Do not think too much upon the past!
The cloud that's broke was all the same a cloud
While it stood up between my friend and you;
You hurt him 'neath its shadow: but is that
So past retrieve? I have his heart, you know;
I may dispose of it: I give it you;
It loves you as mine loves! Confirm me,

Henry! [Dies.

Tresh. I wish thee joy, Beloved! I am glad
In thy full gladness!

Guen. [Without.] Mildred! Tresham!

[Entering with Austin.]

Thorold, I could desist no longer. Ah, she swoons!
That's well.

Tresh. Oh, better far than that!

Guen. She's dead!

Let me unlock her arms!

Tresh. She threw them thus:

About my neck, and blessed me, and then died:
You'll let them stay now, Guendolen!

Aus. Leave her.

And look to him! What ails you, Thorold?

Guen. White

As she, and whiter! Austin! quick — this side!

Aus. A froth is oozing through his clenched teeth;
Both lips, where they're not bitten through, are black:
Speak, dearest Thorold!

Tresh. Something does weigh down
My neck beside her weight: thanks: I should fall
But for you, Austin, I believe! — there, there,
'T will pass away soon! — ah, — I had forgotten:

I am dying.

Guen. Thorold — Thorold — why was this?

Tresh. I said, just as I drank the poison off,
The earth would be no longer earth to me,
The life out of all life was gone from me. There are blind ways provided, the foredoomed
Heart-wearied player in this pageant-world
Drops out by, letting the main masque defile
By the conspicuous portal: I am through Just through!

Guen. Don't leave him, Austin! Death is close.

Tresh. Already Mildred's face is peacefuller,
I see you, Austin — feel you: here's my hand,
Put yours in it — you, Guendolen, yours too!
You're lord and lady now — you're Treshams; name
And fame are yours: you hold our 'scutcheon up,

Austin, no blot on it! You see how blood
Must wash one blot away: the first blot came
And the first blood came. To the vain world's eye
All's gales again: no care to the vain world,
From whence the red was drawn!

Aus. No blot shall come!

Tresh. I said that: yet it did come. Should it come,
Vengeance is God's, not man's. Remember me!

Guen. [Letting fall the pulseless arm.]

[Dies.]

Thorold, we can but — remember you!

COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY

A PLAY

"Ivy and violet, what do ye here
With blossom and shoot in the warm spring-weather,
Hiding the arms of Moncenci and Vere?"

HANMER.

NO ONE LOVES AND HONORS BARRY CORNWALL MORE THAN DOES

ROBERT BROWNING;

WHO, HAVING NOTHING BETTER THAN THIS PLAY

TO GIVE HIM IN PROOF OF IT, MUST SAY SO.

BROWNING was stimulated by the enthusiastic reception of A Blot in the 'Scutcheon to write another play for the stage, but for some reason it was not performed for ten years or so. It was printed in 1844 as No. VI. of Belz and Pomegranates. Mr. Gosse in his Personalia says:

— "I have before me at the present moment a copy of the first edition, marked for acting by the author, who has written: "I made the alterations in this copy to suit some—I forget what—projected stage representation; not that of Miss Fauceit, which was carried into effect long afterward." The stage directions are numerous and minute, showing the science which the dramatist had gained since he first tried to put his creations on the boards.

COLOMBE OF RAVESTINE, Duchess of Juliers and Cleves.
SUZYNE, ADOLF, her Attendants.
GUIBERT, GAUCHEME, MAUROY, CLUGNET, Courtiers.
VALENCE, Advocate of Cleves.
PRINCE BERTHOLD, Claimant of the Duchy.
MAELCHOR, his Confidant.

PLACE, The Palace at Juliers.

TIME, To-day.

Morning. Scene. A corridor leading to the Audience-
chamber.

GAUCHEME, CLUGNET, MAUROY and other Courtiers, round GUIBERT who is silently reading a paper. as he drops it at the end—

Guibert. That this should be her birthday;
and the day
We all invested her, twelve months ago,
As the late Duke's true heiress and our liege;
And that this also must become the day . . .
Oh, miserable lady!
1st Courtier. Ay, indeed?
2d Court. Well, Guibert?
3d Court. But your news, my friend, your news!
The sooner, friend, one learns Prince Berthold's
pleasure,
The better for us all: how writes the Prince?
Give me! I'll read it for the common good.

Gu. In time, sir; — but till time comes, pardon me!
Our old Duke just disclosed his child's retreat,
Declared her true succession to his rule,
And died: this birthday was the day, last year,
We conveyed her from Castle Raestine—
That sleight is out trustfully its extreme age
On the Meuse's quiet bank, where she lived queen
Over the water-buds,— to Juliers' court
With joy and bustle. Here again we stand;
Sir Gauzeme's buckle's constant to his cap:
To-day's much such another sunny day!
Gaucheme. Come, Guibert, this outgrows a jest, I think!
You're hardly such a novice as to need
The lesson, you pretend.

Gu. What lesson, sir?

That everybody, if he'd thrive at court,
Should, first and last of all, look to himself?
Why, no: and therefore with your good ex-

Some of the suggestions are characteristic enough. For instance: "Unless a very good Valence is found, this extremely fine speech, in Act IV, where Valence describes Berthold to Colombe, perhaps the jewel of the play, is to be left out." In the present editions the verses run otherwise."

The play has recently [1895] been rearranged in three acts and brought again on the stage.

(— Ho, Master Adolf!) — to myself I'll look.

(Enter Adolf.)

Gui. The Prince's letter; why, of all men
else,
Comes it to me?

Adolf. By virtue of your place.

SIR GUIBERT. "T was the Prince's express
charge,
His envoy told us, that the missive there
Should only reach our lady by the hand
Of whosoever held her place.

Gui. Enough!

(Adolf retires.

Then, gentlemen, who'll accept a certain poor
Indifferently honorable place,
My friends, I make no doubt, have gnashed
to their teeth.
At leisure minutes these half-dozen years,
To find me never in the mood to quit?
Who asks may have it, with my blessing, and —
This to present our lady. Who'll accept?

You, — you, — you? There it lies, and may,
for me!

Mauroy. [.A youth, picking up the paper, reads aloud.] "Prince Berthold, proved by titles following.

Undoubted Lord of Juliers, comes this day
To claim his own, with license from the Pope,
The Emperor, the Kings of Spain and France ". . .

Gu. Sufficient "titles following," I judge!
Don't read another! Well, — "to claim his own?"

Mau. "— And take possession of the Duchy held
Since twelve months, to the true heir's prejudice,
By "... Colombe, Juliers' mistress, so she thinks,
And Raestine's mere lady, as we find!

Who wants the place and paper? Guibert's right.

I hope to climb a little in the world,—
I'd push my fortunes; — but, no more than he.

Could tell her on this happy day of days,
That, save the nessegay in her hand, perhaps,
There's nothing left to call her own. Sir Clugnet.

You famish for promotion; what say you?

Clugnet. [.An old man.] To give this letter
were a sort. I take it,

Of service: services ask recompense:
What kind of corner may be Raestine?

Gui. The castle? Oh, you'd share her fortunes? Good!
Three walls stand upright, full as good as four,
With no such bad remainder of a roof.
Clay.  Oh, — but the town?

A church were to was once a spire, 'tis judged;
And half a dyke, except in time of thaw.
Clay.  Still there's some revenue?

Clay.  If not?

Guicci.  Hang guilders, then! he blesses you.
Clay.  What man do you suppose me? Keep your paper!

And, let me say, it shows no handsome spirit
To daily with misfortune: keep your place!

Gaunt.  Some one must tell her.

Guicci.  Some one may: you may!

Guicci. Sir Guibert, 'tis no trifle turns me sick
Of court-hypocrisy at years like mine,
But this bears near it.  Where 's there news at all?

Who'll bear the face, for instance, to affirm
He never heard, e'en while we crowned the girl,
That Juliers' tenure was by Salic law;
That one, confessed her father's cousin's child,
And, she away, indisputable heir.

Against our choice protesting and the Duke's,
Claimed Juliers? —nor, as he preferred his claim,
That first this, then another potentate,
Inclined to its allowance? — I or you,
Or any one except the lady's self?
Oh, it had been the direst cruelty
To break the business to her! Things might change:
At all events, we'd see next masque at end,
Next mummercy over first: and so the edge
Was taken off sharp tidings as they came,
Till here's the Prince upon us, and there's she

Wreathing her hair, a song between her lips,
With just the faintest notion possible
That some such chantant earns a livelihood
About the world, by feigning grievances—
Few pay the story of, but grudge its price,
And fewer listen to, a second time.

Your method proves a failure; now try mine!
And, since this must be carried,

Guicci.  [Snatching the paper from him.] By your leave!

Your zeal transports you: 'T will not serve the Prince
So much as you expect, this course you'd take.
If she leaves quietly her palace, — well;
But if she died upon its threshold, — no:
He'd have the trouble of removing her.
Come, gentle, we're all — what the devil knows!
You, Guicelme, won't lose character, beside —
You broke your father's heart superiorly
To gather his succession — never blush!
You're from my province, and, he comforted,
They tell of it with wonder to this day.
You can afford to let your talent sleep.
We'll take the very worst supposed, as true;
There, the old Duke knew, when he bid his child
Among the river-flowers at Ravestein,
With whom the right lay! Call the Prince our Duke!

There, she's no Duchess, she's no anything
More than a young maid with the bluest eyes:
And now, sirs, we'll not break this young maid's heart
Coolly as Guicelme could and would! No haste!
His talent's full-blow'n, ours but in the bud:
We'll not advance to his perfection yet —

Will we, Sir Maufray? See, I've ruined Maufray
Forever as a courtier!

Gaunt.  Here's a coil!

And, count us, will you? Count its residue,
This boasted convoy, this day last year's crowd!
A birthday, too, a gratulation day!
I'm dumb: bid that keep silence!

Man, and others.  Eh, Sir Guibert?

He's right: that does say something: that's bare truth!

Ten-twelve, I make: a perilous dropping off!

Guicci.  Pooh — is it audience hour? The vestibule

Swarms too, I wager, with the common sort
That want our privilege of entry here.

Guicci.  Adolf! [Re-enter ADOLF.] Who's outside?

Guicci.  Oh, your looks suffice!

Nobody waiting?

Man.  [Looking through the door-folds.] Scarcely our number!

Guicci.  'Sdeath!

Nothing to her for, to complain about?
It can't be! Ill news spreads, but not so fast
As this to frighten all the world!

Guicci.  The world

Lives out of doors, sir — not with you and me
By presence-chamber porches, state-room stairs,
Wherever warmth's perpetual: outside's free
To every wind from every compass-point
And who may get nipped needs be weather-wise.
The Prince comes and the lady's People go;
The snow-goose settles down, the swallows flee —

Why should they wait for winter-time? 'Tis instinct:
Don't you feel somewhat chilly?

Guicci.  That's their craft!

And last year's crowds-round and cries-forth
That strewed the garlands, overarched the roads,
Lighted the bonfires, sang the loyal songs!
Well 'tis my comfort, you could never call me
The People's Friend! The People keep their word —

I keep my place: don't doubt I'll entertain
The People when the Prince comes, and the People
Are talked of! Then, their speeches — no one tongue Found respite, not a pen had holiday
— For they wrote, too, as well as spoke, these knives!
Now see: we tax and tithe them, pill and poll,
They wince and fret enough, but pay they must
— We manage that, — so, pay with a good grace
They might as well, it costs so little more
But when we've done with taxes, meet folk next.
Outside the toll-booth and the rating-place,
In public — they have us if they will,
We're at their mercy after that, you see.
For one tax not ten devils could extort
— Over and above necessity, a grace;
This prompt disboshoming of love, to wit
— Their vine-leaf wrappage of our tribute penny,
And crowning attestation, all works well.
Yet this precisely do they thrust on us!
These cappings quick, these crook-and-cringings low,
Hand to the heart, and forehead to the knee,
With grin that shuts the eyes and ope the mouth —
So tender they their love; and, tender made,
Go home to curse us, the first doit we ask.
As if their souls were any longer theirs!
As if they had not given ample warrant
To who should clap a collar on their neck.
Rings in their nose, a goad to either flank.
And take them for the brute they boast themselves!
Stay — there's a bush at the outer door —
And somebody entreating, . . . that's my name!
Adolf. — I heard my name! 'T was probably
The suitor.
Gui. Oh, there is one? With a suit
Adolf. He d fain enforce in person.
Gui. The good heart
— And the great fool! Just one the mid-door's fold!
Is that a lappet of his cloak, I see?
Adolf. If it bear plenteous sign of travel
... ay,
The very cloak my comrades tore!
Gui. Why tore?
Adolf. He seeks the Duchess' presence in that trim;
Since daybreak, was he posted hereabouts.
Lest he should miss the moment.
Gui. Where's he now?
Adolf. Gone for a minute possibly, not more:
They have ado enough to thrust him back.
Gui. Ay — but my name, I caught?
Adolf. Oh, sir — he said
— What was it? — You had known him formerly,
And, he believed, would help him did you guess?
He waited now; you promised him as much:
The old plea! 'Faith, he's back. — renew the charge!
[Speaking at the door.] So long as the man
parleys, peace outside —
Nor be too ready with your halberts, there!
Gui. My horse bespattered, as he blocked the path
A thin sour man, not unlike somebody.
Adolf. He holds a paper in his breast, whereon
He glances when his cheeks flush and his brow
At each repulse —
Gui. I noticed he'd a brow.
Adolf. So glancing, he grows calmer, leans awhile
Over the balustrade, adjusts his dress,
And presently turns round, quiet again,
With some new pretext for adittance, —
Back!
[To GuiBERT.] — Sir, he has seen you! Now cross halberts! Ha.
Pascal is prostrate — there lies Fabian too!
No passage! Whither would the madman press?
Close the doors quick on me!
Gui. Too late! He's here.
(Enter, hastily and with discomposed dress, Valence.)
Valence. Sir GuiBERT, will you help me? —
Me, that come
Charged by your townsmen, all who starve at Cleves,
To represent their heights and depths of woe
Before our Duchess and obtain relief!
Such errands barricade such doors, it seems:
But not a common hindrance drives me back
On all the sad yet hopeful faces, lit
With hope for the first time, which sent me forth.
Cleves, speak for me! Cleves' men and women,
speak!
Who followed me — your strongest — many a mile
That I might go the fresher from their ranks,
— Who sit — your weakest — by the city gates,
To take me fuller of what news I bring
As I return — for I must needs return!
— Can I? 'T were hard, no listener for their wrongs,
To turn them back upon the old despair
Harder, Sir GuiBERT, than imploring thus —
So, I do — any way you please — implore!
If you . . . but how should you remember
Cleves?
Yet they of Cleves remember you so well!
Ay, comment on each trait of you they keep,
Your words and deeds caught up at second
hand,
Proud, I believe, at bottom of their hearts,
O! the very levity and recklessness
Which only prove that you forget their wrongs,
Cleves, the grand town, whose men and women starve.
Is Cleves forgotten? Then, remember me!
You promised me that you would help me once
For other purpose: will you keep your word?
Gui. And who may you be, friend?
Val. Valence of Cleves.
Gui. Valence of . . . not the advocate of Cleves,
I owed my whole estate to, three years back?
Ay, well may you keep silence! Why, my lords,
You've heard, I'm sure, how, Pentecost three years,
I was so nearly ousted of my land
By some knave’s pretext — eh? when you refused me
Your only daughter, Clugnet! — and you’ve heard
How I recovered it by miracle
— (When I refused her!) Here’s the very friend,
— Valence of Cleves, all parties have to thank!
Nay, Valence, this procedure’s vile in you!
I’m no more grateful than a courtier should, But polite am I — I bear a brain.
I can cast about a little, might require
Your services a second time. I tried
To tempt you with advancement here to court
— “No!” — well, for curiosity at least
To view our life here — “No!” — our Duchess, then,
A pretty woman’s worth some pains to see,
Nor is she spoiled, I take it, if a crown
Complete the forehead pale and tresses pure . . .
Val. Our city trusted me its miseries.
And I am come.
Gui. — So much for taste! But “come,” —
So may you be, for anything I know.
To beg the Pope’s cross, or Sir Clugnet’s daughter.
And with an equal chance you get all three! If it was ever worth your while to come.
Was not the proper way worth finding too?
Val. Straight to the palace-portal, sir, I came.
Gui. — And said? —
Val. — That I had brought the miseries Of a whole city to relieve.
Gui. — Which saying
Won your admittance? You saw me, indeed,
And here, no doubt, you stand: as certainly,
My intervention, I shall not dispute.
Procures you audience; which, if I procure,
That paper’s closely written — by Saint Paul,
Here flock the Wrongs, follow the Remedies,
Chapter and verse, One, Two, A, B and C! Perhaps you’d enter, make a reverence,
And launch these “miseries” from first to last?
Val. How should they let me pause or turn aside?
Gui. [To Valence.] My worthy sir, one question! You’ve come straight
From Cleves, you tell us: heard you any talk At Cleves about our lady?
Val. Much.
Gui. — And what?
Val. Her wish was to redress all wrongs she knew.
Gui. — That, you believed?
Val. — You see me, sir!
Gui. — Nor stopped
Upon the road from Cleves to Juliers here, For any — rumors you might find afloat?
Val. I had my townsmen’s wrongs to busy me.
Gui. — This is the lady’s birthday, do you know
— Her day of pleasure?
Val. — That the great, I know,
For pleasure born, should still be on the watch
To exclude pleasure when a duty offers:
Even as, for duty born, the lowly too
May ever snatch a pleasure if in reach:
Both will have plenty of their birthright, sir!
Gui. [Aside to Guibert.] Sir Guibert, here’s your man! No scruples now —
You’ll never find his like! Time presses hard,
I’ve seen your drift and Adolf’s too, this while,
But you can’t keep the hour of audience back
Much longer, and at noon the Prince arrives,
[Pointing to Valence.] Entrust him with it —
Fool no chance away!
Gui. — Him?
Gui. — With the missive! What’s the man to her?
Gui. No bad thought! — Yet, ’tis yours, who ever played
The tempting serpent; else ’t were no bad thought!
I should — and do — mistrust it for your sake,
Or else . . .
(Enter on Official who communicates with Adolf.)
Adolf. — The Duchess will receive the court!
Gui. — Give us a moment, Adolf! Valence, friend.
I’ll help you. We of the service, you’re to mark,
Have special entry, while the herd . . . the folk Outside, get access through our help alone;
— Well, it is so, was so, and I suppose
So ever will be: your natural lot is, therefore.
To wait your turn and opportunity,
And probably miss both. Now, I engage To set you, here and in a minute’s space,
Before the lady, with full leave to plead
Chapter and verse, and A, and B, and C,
To heart’s content.
Val. — I grieve that I must ask. —
This being, yourself admit, the custom here, —
To what the price of such a favor mounts?
Gui. — Just so! You’re not without a courtier’s tact.
Little at court, as your quick instinct prompts,
Do such as we without a recompense.
Val. Yours is?
Gui. — A trifle: here’s a document
’T is some one’s duty to present her Grace —
I say, not mine — these say, not theirs — such points Have weight at court. Will you relieve us all
And take it? Just say, “I am bidden lay This paper at the Duchess’ feet!”
Val. — No more?
I thank you, sir!
Adolf. — Her Grace receives the court!
Gui. [Aside.] Now, sursum corda, quoth the mass-priest! — Do —
Whosever my kind saint, do let alone
These pushings to and fro, and pullings back;
Peaceably let me hang o’ the devil’s arm
Completely! Let me live quite his, or yours!
[The Courtiers begin to range themselves, and more toward the door.
After me, Valence! — So, our famous Cleves Lack bread? Yet don’t we gallants buy their face?
And dear enough — it beggars me, I know,
To keep my very gloves fringed properly.
This, Valence, is our Great State Hall you cross;
You gain ure’s veritable museums.
The Pope’s gift: and those salvers testify
The Emperor. Presently you’ll set your foot
But you don’t speak, friend Valence!
Val. I shall speak.
Gus. [Aside to Guibert.] Guibert — it were no such ungrateful thing
If you and I, at first, seemed horror-struck
With the bad news. Look here, what you shall Do!
Suppose you, first, clap hand to sword and cry “Yield strangers our allegiance? First I’ll perish
Beside your Grace!” — and so give me the cue To
Val. — Clap your hand to note-book and jot
That to recall the Prince with? I conceive.
[To Valence.] Do, Valence, speak, or I shall half suspect
You’re plotting to supplant us, me the first,
I, the lady’s favor! Is’t the grand harangue
You mean to make, that thus engrosses you?
— Which of her virtues you’ll apostrophize?
Or is’t the fashion you aspire to start,
Of that close-curled, not unbecoming hair?
Or what else ponder you? —
My townsmen’s wrongs.

ACT II

Noon. Scene. The Presence-chamber.

The Duchess and Sabine.

Duchess. Announce that I am ready for the court!
Sabine. ’Tis scarcely audience-hour, I think;
your Grace
May best consult your own relief, no doubt,
And shun the crowd: but few can have arrived.
Duch. Let those not yet arrived, then, keep away!
’T was me, this day last year at Ravestein,
You hurried. It has been full time, beside,
This half-hour. Do you hesitate?
Sab. —
Duch. Stay, Sabine; let me hasten to make sure
Of one true thankers: here with you begins
My audience, claim you first its privilege!
It is my birth’s event they celebrate:
You need not wish me more such happy days,
But — ask some favor! Have you none to ask?
Has Adolf none, then? this was far from least
Of much I waited for impatiently,
Assure yourself! It seemed so natural
Your gift, beside this bunch of river-bells,
Should be the power and leave of doing good
To you, and greater pleasure to myself.
You ask my leave to-day to marry Adolf?
The rest is my concern.
Sab. Your Grace is ever
Our lady of dear Ravestein.— but, for Adolf...

Duch. “But”? You have not, sure, changed in your regard
And purpose towards him?
Sab. We change?
Duch. Well then? Well?
Sab. How could we two be happy, and, most like.
Leave Juliers, when — when . . . but ’t is audience-time!
Duch. “When, if you left me, I were left
indeed!”
Would you subjoin that? Bid the court
approach!
— Why should we play thus with each other,
Sabine?
Do I not know, if courtiers prove remiss,
If friends detain me, and get blame for it.
There is a cause? Of last year’s fervid throng scarcely one half comes now. [Sabine goes out.
Sab. [Aside.] One half? No alas!
Duch. So can the mere suspicion of a cloud
Over my fortunes, strike each loyal heart.
They’ve heard of this Prince Berthold; and,
forsooth,
Some foolish arrogant pretence he makes,
May grow more foolish and more arrogant,
They please to apprehend! I thank their love.
Admit them!
Sab. [Aside.] How much has she really
learned?
Duch. Surely, whoever’s absent, Tristan waits?
— Or at least Romnald, whom my father raised
From nothing — come, he’s faithful to me,
come!
(Sabine, I should but be the prouder — yes,
The fitter to comport myself aright)
Not Romnald? Xavier — what said he to that?
For Xavier hates a parasite, I know!
Duch. Well, sunshine’s everywhere, and summer too.
Next year ’t is the old place again, perhaps—
The water-breeze again, the birds again.
— It cannot be! It is too late to be!
What part had I, or choice in all of it?
Hither they brought me; I had not to think
Nor care, concern myself with doing good
Or ill, my task was just — to live, — to live.
And, answering ends there was no need explain,
To render Juliers happy — so they said.
All could not have been falsehood: some was
love.
And wonder and obedienee. I did all
They looked for: why then cease to do it now?
Yet this is to be calmly set aside,
And — ere next birthday’s dawn, for aught I
know,
Things change, a claimant may arrive, and
I ...
It cannot be! it shall not be! His right?
Well then, he has the right, and I have not,
—But who bade all of you surround my life
And close its growth up with your ducal crown
Which, plucked off rudely, leaves me perishing?
I could have been like one of you, —loved, hoped.
Feared, lived and died like one of you — but you
COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY

Would take that life away and give me this,
And I will keep this! I will face you! Come!
(Ende the Courters and VALENCE.)

The Courters. Many such happy mornings to your Grace!
Duch. [Aside, as they pay their dower.] The same words, the same faces,—the same
love!
I have been overfearful. These are few;
But these, at least, stand firmly: these are mine.
As many come as may; and if no more,
'Tis that these few suffice—they do suffice!
What succor may not next year bring me?
Plainly,
I feared too soon. [To the Courters.] I thank you, sirs: all thanks!
Val. [Aside, as the Duchess passes from one group to another, conversing.] 'Tis she —
The vision this day last year brought,
When, for a golden moment at our Cleves,
She tarried in her progress hither. Cleves
Chose me to speak its welcome, and I spoke
—not that she could have noted their request
—I thought, old before his time—who gazed.
Well, Heaven's gifts are not wasted, and that gaze
Kept, and shall keep me to the end, her own!
She was above it — but so would not sink
My gaze to earth! The People caught it, hers—
Thenceforward, mine; but thus entirely mine,
Who shall affirm, had she not raised my soul
Ere she retired and left me — them? She turns —
There's all her wondrous face at once! The ground
Reels and...
[Suddenly occupying himself with his paper.]
These wrongs of theirs I have to plead!
Duch. [To the Courters.] Nay, compliment enough! and kindness' self
Should persuade before it wish me more such years.
'Twas fortunate that thus, ere youth escaped,
I tasted life's pure pleasure—one such, pure,
Is worth a thousand, mixed — and youth's for
pleasure;
Mine is received; let my age pay for it.
Gau. So, pay, and pleasure paid for, thinks
your Grace.
Should never go together?
Gu.i. How, Sir Guimelme? I
Hurry one's feast down unenjoyingly
At the snatched breathing-intervals of work?
As good you saved it till the dull day's-end
When, stiff and sleepy, appetite is gone,
Eat first, then work upon the strength of food!
Duch. True: you enable me to risk my future,
By giving me a past beyond recall,
I lived, a girl, one happy leisure year:
Let me endeavor to be the Duchess now!
And so — what news, Sir Guibert, spoke you
of?
[As they advance a little, and Guibert speaks —
That gentleman?]
Val. [Aside]. I feel her eyes on me.
Gu.i. [To VALENCE.] The Duchess, sir, inclines to hear your suit.

Advance! He is from Cleves.
Val. [Coming forward.] [Aside.] Their wrongs — their wrongs!
Duch. And you, sir, are from Cleves? How fresh in mind.
The hour or two I passed at queenly Cleves!
She entertained me bravely, but the best
Of her good pageant seemed its standers-by
With unsuppressive joy on every face!
What says my ancient famous happy Cleves?
Val. Take the truth, lady — you are made for truth!
So think my friends: nor do they less deserve
The having you to take it, you shall think,
When you know all — nay, when you only know
How, on that day you recollect at Cleves,
When the poor acquisicing multitude
Who thrust themselves with all their woes apart
Into unnoticed corners, that the few,
Their means sufficed to muster trappings for,
Might fill the foreground, occupy your sight
With joyous faces fit to bear away
And boast of as a sample of all Cleves
— How, when to daylight these crept out once
more.
Clutching, unconscious, each his empty rags
Whence the scant coin, which had not half bought bread,
That morn he shook forth, counted piece by piece.
And, well-advisedly, on perfumes spent them
To burn, or flowers to strew, before your path
— How, when the golden flood of music and bliss
Ebb'd, as their moon retreated, and again
Left the sharp black-point rocks of misery bare
— Then I, their friend, had only to suggest
"Saw she the horror as she saw the pomp!"
And as one man they cried, "He speaks the
truth:
Show her the horror! Take from our own
months
Our wrongs and show them, she will see them
too!"
This they cried, lady! I have brought the wrongs.
Duch. Wrongs? Cleves has wrongs — apparent now and thus?
I thank you! In that paper? Give it me!
Val. (There, Cleves)! In this! (What did
I promise, Cleves?)
Our weavers, clothiers, spinners are reduced
Since... Oh, I crave your pardon! I forget
I lay the privilege of this approach,
And promptly would discharge my debt. I lay
This paper humbly at the Duchess' feet.
[Presenting Guibert's paper.]
Gu.i. Stay! for the present...;
Duch. Stay, sir! I take aught
That teaches me their wrongs with greater pride
Than this your ducal circket. Thank you, sir!
(The Duchess reads hastily; then, turning to the Courtiers —
What have I done to you? Your deed or mine
Was it, this crowning me? I gave myself
No more a title to your homage, no,
Than church-flowers, born this season, wrote
the words
In the saint's book that sanctified them first.
Hear—(A.
Well, I'll try,
Ne'er God's Mother than most earthy things?
That if 'tis faded 'tis with prayer's sole breath—

That one day it boasted was God's day? Still, I do thank you! Had you used respect, Here might I dwell to my last white leaf, Here lose life's latest freshness, which even yet May yield some wandering insect rest and food:

So, going me forth, and—all is best for all!

[Afier a pause.] Prince Berthold, who art Juliers' Duke it seems—
The King's choice, and the Emperor's, and the Pope's—
Be mine, too! Take this People! Tell not me Of rescripts, precedents, authorities,
But take them, from a heart that yearns to give!

Find out their love,—I could not; find their fear—
I would not; find their like,—I never shall,
Among the flowers!—[Taking off her coronet.

Colombe of Ravestein
Thanks God she is no longer Duchess here!

Val. [Advancing to Guibert.] Sir Guibert, knight, they call you—this of mine Is the first step I ever set at court.
You dared make me your instrument, I find;
For that, so sure as you and I are men, We reckon to the utmost present—
But as you are a courtier and I none, Your knowledge may instruct me. I, already, Have too far outraged, by my ignorance Of courtier-ways, this lady, to proceed A second step and risk addressing her:
I am degraded—you let me address! Out of her presence, all is plain enough What I shall do—but in her presence, too, Surely there's something proper to be done.

[To the others.] You, gentle, tell me if I guess aright—

May I not strike this man to earth?

The Courtiers. [As Guibert springs forward, withholding him.] Let go!

The clothiers' spokesman, Guibert? Grace a churl?

Duch. [To Valence.] Oh, be acquainted with your party, sir!
He's of the oldstęp lineage Juliers boasts;
A lion treats him for a coziness;
"Scorning to waver"—that's his 'scutcheon's word.
His office with the new Duke—probably
The same in honor as with me; or more,
By so much as this gallant turn deserves.
He's now, I dare say, of a thousand times
The rank and influence that remain with her
Whose part you take! So, lest for taking it You suffer...

Val. I may strike him then to earth?

Gui. [Falling on his knee.] Great and dear lady, pardon me! Hear once!
Believe me and be merciful—be just!

I could not bring myself to give that paper
Without the keenest pity that I could wring
And so felt Clinget here, and Manfroy here—
No one dared meet it. Protestant's cheap,
But, if to die for you did any good,
[To Guibert.] Would not I die, sir? Say your worst of me!
But it does no good, that's the mournful truth,
And since the hint of a resistance, even,
Would just precipitate, on you the first,
A speedier ruin—I shall not deny,
Savoring myself indulgent pain,
I thought to give you pleasure (who might say?)
By showing that your only subject found
To carry the sad notice was the man
Precisely ignorant of its contents;
A nameless, mere provincial advocate;
One whom 't was like you never saw before,
Never would see again. All has gone wrong:
But I meant right, God knows, and you, I trust!

Duch. A nameless advocate, this gentleman?
(I pardon you, Sir Guibert.)

Gui. [Rising, to Valence.] Sir, and you?
Val. Rejoice that you are lightened of a load.
Now, you have only me to reckon with.

Duch. One I have never seen, much less

[Val. Dare I speak, lady?

Duch. Dare you! Heard you not
I rule no longer?

Val. Lady, if your rule
Were based alone on such a ground as these [Pointing to the Courtiers. Could furnish you,—abjure it! They have hidden

A source of true dominion from your sight.

Duch. You hear them—so much is left...

Val. Hear Cleves!
Whose haggard craftsmen rose to starve this day,
Starve now, and will lie down at night to starve,
Sure of a like to-morrow—but as sure
Of a most unlike morrow—after that,
Since end things must, end howsoever things may.

What curbs the brute-force instinct in its hour?
What makes—instead of rising, all as one,
And teaching fingers, so expert to wield
Their tool, the broadsword's play or carbin's trick,

—What makes that there's an easier help, they think.

For you, whose name so few of them can spell, Whose face scarce one in every hundred saw,— You simply have to understand their wrongs,
And wrongs will vanish—so, still trades are plied.
And swords lie rusting, and myself stand here!

There is a vision in the heart of each
Of justice, mercy, wisdom, tenderness
To wrong and pain, and knowledge of its cure:
And these embodied in a woman's form
That best transmits them, pure as first received,
From God above her, to mankind below.

Will you derive your rule from such a ground, Or rather hold it by the suffrage, say,
Of this man — this — and this?

Duch. [After a pause.] You come from Cleves?

How many are at Cleves of such a mind?

Val. [From his paper.] "We, all the manufacturers of Cleves —"

Duch. Or stay, sir — lest I seem too covetous.

Are you my subject? such as you describe,
Am I to you, though to no other man?

Val. [From his paper.] — "Valence, ordained your Advocate at Cleves —"

Duch. [Replacing the coronet.] Then I remain Cleves' Duchess! Take you note,

While Cleves but yields one subject of this stamp.

I stand her lady till she waves me off,

For her sake, all the Prince claims I withhold;

Laugh at each menace; and, his power deplying,

Return his missive with its due contempt!

[ Casting it away.]

Val. [Picking it up.] — Which to the Prince

I will deliver, lady,

(Note it down, Gauclene) — with your message too!

Duch. I think the office is a subject's, sir!

— Either . . . how style you him? — my special guarder

The Marshal's — for who knows but violence

May follow the delivery? — Or, perhaps,

My Chancellor's — for law may be to urge

On its receipt! — Or, even my Chamberlain's —

For I may violate established form!

[To Valence.] Sir, — for the half-hour till this service ends,

Will you become all these to me?

Val. [Palling on his knee.] My liege!

Duch. Give me!

[The Courtiers present their badges of officer.

[Putting them by.] Whatever was their vice once,

They need new conversation. [Raising Valence.] Are you mine?

I will be Duchess yet! [She retires.

The Courtiers. Our Duchess yet! A glorious lady! Worthy love and dread!

I'll stand by her. — and I, whate'er betide! Gau. [To Valence.] Well done, well done, sir! I care not who knows,

You have done nobly and I envy you —

Though I am but unfairly used, I think;

For when one gets a place like this I hold,

One gets too the remark that its mere wages, The pay and the precedent, make our prize.

Talk about zeal and faith apart from these,

We're laughed at — much would zeal and faith subsist

Without these also! Yet, let these bestopped,

Our wages discontinue, — then, indeed,

Our zeal and faith, (we hear on every side,) Are not released — having been pledged away I wonder, for what zeal and faith in turn?

Hard money purchased me my place! No, —

I'm right, sir — but your wrong is better still, If I had time and skill to argue it.

Therefore, I say, I'll serve you, how you please —

If you like, — fight you, as you seem to wish —

(The kinder of me that, in sober truth,

I never dreamed I did you any harm) . . .

Gau. — Or, kinder still, you'll introduce, no doubt,

His merits to the Prince who's just at hand, And let no hint drop he's made Chancellor And Chamberlain and Heaven knows what be to side!

Clug. [To Valence.] You stare, young sir, and threaten! Let me say,

That at your age, when first I came to court,

I was not much above a gentleman;

While now . . .

Val. — You are Head-Lackey? With your office

I have not yet been graced, sir!

Other Courtiers. [To Clugnet.] Let him talk!

Fidelity, disinterestedness,

Excuse so much! Men claim my worship ever

Who stanchly and steadfastly . . .

(Enter Adolf.)

Adolf. The Prince arrives.

Courtiers. Ha? How?

Adolf. He leaves his guard a stage behind

At Aix, and enters almost by himself.

1st Court. The Prince! 'This foolish business puts all out.

2d Court. Let Gauclene speak first!

3d Court. Better I began

About the state of Juliers: should one say

All's prosperous and inviting him?

4th Court. — Or rather,

All's prostrate and imploring him?

5th Court. That's best.

Where's the Cleves' paper, by the way?

4th Court. [To Valence.] Sir — sir —

If you'll but lend that paper — trust it me, I'll warrant . . .

5th Court. Softly, sir — the Marshal's duty!

Clug. Has not the Chamberlain a hearing first

By virtue of his patent?

Gau. Patents? — Duties?

All that, my masters, must begin again!

One word compasses the whole controversy:

We're simply now — the Prince's!

The Others. Ay — the Prince's!

(Enter Sabine.)

Sab. Adolf! Bid . . . Oh, no time for ceremony!

Where's whom our lady calls her only subject? She needs him. Who is here the Duchess's?

Val. [Starting from his reverie.] Most gratefully I follow to her feet.

ACT III

Afternoon. Scene. The Vestibule.

Enter Prince Bertold and Melchior.

Bertold. A thriving little burgh this Juliers looks.

[Half-apart.] Keep Juliers, and as good you kept Cologne:

Better try Aix, though! —

Melchior. Please 't your Highness speak?
Birth. [As before.] Aix, Cologne, Frankfort,— Milan;— Rome!—

Mel. The Grave.
More weary seems your Highness, I remark.
Than sunry conquerors whose path I've warred
Through fire and blood to any prize they gain.
I could well wish you, for your proper sake,
That some shade of opposition here
Had met a blunt sea-salut refuse unlock.
Or a gared usher lead your steps astray,
You must not look for next achievement's palm
So easily: this will hurt your conquering.

Birth. My next? Ay, as you say, my next and next!
Well, I am tired, that's truth, and moody too,
This silent entrance-morning: listen why!
Our little bough, now, Juliers — tis indeed
One link, however insignificant,
Of the great chain by which I reach my hope.
— A link I must secure: but otherwise,
You'd wonder I esteem it worth my grasp.
Just see what life is, with its shifts and turns!
It happens now — this very nook — to be
A place that once ... not a long while since, neither—
When I lived an ambitious hanger-on
Of foreign courts, and bore my claims about,
Discarded by one kinsman, and the other
A poor priest merely, — then, I say, this place
Shone my ambition's object; to be Duke —
Seemed then, what to be Emperor seems now.
My rights were far from judged as plain and sure
In those days as of late, I promise you:
And 'twas my day-dream, Lady Colette here
Might 'en compound the matter, pity why!
Be struck, say, with my chivalry and grace
As a boy! — bestow her hand at length,
And make me Duke, in her right if not mine.
Here am I, Duke confessed, at Juliers now.
Hearken: if ever I be Emperor.
Remind me what I felt and said to-day!

Mel. All this consoles a bookish man like me.
And so will weariness cling to you. Wrong,
Wrong! Had you sought the lady's court yourself,—
Faced the redoubtables composing it,
Flattered this, threatened that man, bribed the other,—
Pleased by writ and word and deed, your cause,—
Conquered a footing inch by painful inch,—
And, after long years' struggle, pomeoned at last
On her for prize, — the right life had been lived,
And justice done to divers faculties.
Shut in that brow. Yourself were visible
As you stood victor, then; whom now — your Pardon! I am forced narrowly to search and see,
So are you hid by helps — this Pope, your uncle—
Your cousin, the other King! You are a mind,—
They, body: too much of mere legs-and-arms
Obstructs the mind so! Match these with their like:
Match mind with mind:

Birth. And where's your mind to match?
They show me legs-and-arms to cope withal?
I'd subjugate this city — where's its mind?

Mel. Got out of sight when you came troops and all!
And in its stead, here greets you flesh-and-blood:
A suing economy of both, this first!

Well done, gent, all considered! — I may go?

Birth. Help me receive them!

Mel. Oh, they just will say
What yesterday at Aix their fellows said,—
At Troyes, the day before! Sir Prince, my friend.

Why do you let your life slip thus? — Meantime,
I have my little Juliers to admire —
The understanding this tough Platonist,
Your holy uncle disinterred, Amelia:
Lend me a company of horse and foot,
To help me through his tractate — gain my Duchy!

Birth. And Empire, after that is gained, will be — ?

Mel. To help me through your uncle's comment, Prince!

Birth. Ah! Well: he o'er-refines — the scholar's fault!
How do I let my life slip? — Say, this life,
I lead now, differs from the common life
Of other men in mere degree, not kind,
Of joys and griefs, — still there is such degree
Mere largeness in life is something, sure,—
Enough to care about and struggle for,
In this world: for this world, the size of things;
The sort of things, for that to come, no doubt.
A great is better than a little aim:
And when I wooed Priscilla's rosy mouth
And failed so, under that gray convent-wall,
Was I more happy than I should be now

[By this time, the Courtiers are ranged before him.]
If failing of my Empire? Not a whit.
— Here comes the mind, it once had tasked me sore
To battle, but for my advantages!
All's best as 'tis: these scholars talk and talk.

Our duffiest service proffer we!

Clug. I, please your Highness, having exercised
The function of Grand Chamberlain at court,
With much acceptance, as men testify . . .

Birth. I cannot greatly thank you, gentlemen!
The Pope declares my claim to the Duchy founded
On strictest justice — you concede it, therefore, I do not wonder: and the kings my friends.
Protest they mean to see such claim enforced,—
You easily may offer to assist.
But there's a slight discretionary power
To serve me in the matter, you've had long,
Though late you use it. This is well to say —
But could you not have said it months ago?
I'm not denied my own Duke's truceleon, true —
COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY

'Tis flung me — I stoop down, and from the ground.

Pick it, with all you placid standers-by:
And now I have it, gems and mire at once,
Grace go with it to my soiled hands, you say!

Gui. (By Paul, the advocate our doughty friend Cuts the best figure!)

Gui. If our ignorance
May have offended, sure our loyalty . . .

Berth. Loyalty? Yours? Oh — of yourselves you speak!
I mean the Duchess all this time, I hope!
And since I have been forced repeat my claims
As if they never had been urged before,
As I began, so must I end, it seems,
The formal answer to the grave demand!
What says the lady?

Courtiers. [One to another.] 1st Court. Marshall! 2d Court. Orator!

Gui. A variation of our mistress' way!
Wipe off 'his' boots' dust, Chugnet! — that, he 1st Court. Your place!
2d Court. Just now it was your own!

Gui. The devil's!

Berth. [To Guibert.] Come forward, friend
— you with the paper, there!
Is Juliers the first city I've obtained?
By this time, I may boast proficiency
In each decorum of the circumstance,
Give it me as she gave it — the petition,
Demand, you style it! What's required in brief?
What title's reservation, appanage's
Allowance? I heard all at Treves, last week.

Gui. [To Guibert.] "Give it him as she gave it!"

Gui. And why not?
[To Berthold.] The lady crushed your summoms thus together,
And bade me, with the very greatest scorn
So fair a frame could hold, inform you . . .

Courtiers. Stop —

Idiot!

Gui. — Inform you she denied your claim,
Defied yourself? (I tread upon his heel,
The blustering advocate!)

Berth. By heaven and earth!

Dare you jest, sir?

Gui. Did they at Treves, last week?

Berth. [Starting up.] Why then, I look much bolder than I knew,
And you prove better actors than I thought:
Since, as I live, I took you as you entered
For just so many dearest friends of mine,
Fled from the sinking to the rising power
— The sneaking'st crew, in short, I've despised —
Whereas, I am alone here for the moment,
With every soldier left behind at Aix!
Silence? That means the worst? I thought
as much!

What follows next?

Courtiers. Gracious Prince — he raves!

Gui. He asked the truth and why not get the truth?

Berth. Am I a prisoner? Speak, will somebody?
— But why stand paltering with imbeciles?
Let me see her, or . . .

Gui. Her, without her leave.

Berth. No one see: she's Duchess yet!

Courtiers. [Footsteps without, as they are disputing.] Good chance!

She's here — the Lady Colombe's self!

Berth. 'Tis well!

[Aside.] Array a handful thus against my world?

Not ill done, truly! Were not this a mind
To match one's mind with? Colombe! Let us wait!

I failed so, under that gray convenl wall!

She comes.

Gui. The Duchess! Strangers, range yourselves!

[As the Duches enters in conversation with Valence, Berthold and the Courtiers fall back a little.]

Duch. Presagefully it beats, presagefully,
My heart: the right is Berthold's and not mine.

Val. Grant that he has the right, dare I mistrust
Your power to acquiesce so patiently
As you believe, in such a dream-like change
Of fortune — change abrupt, profound, complete?

Duch. Ah, the first bitterness is over now!
Bitter I may have felt it to confront
The truth, and ascertain those natures' value
I had so counted on; that was a pang;
But I did bear it, and the worst is over.
Let the Prince take them!

Val. And take Juliers too?

— Your people without crosses, wands and chains —

Only with hearts?

Duch. There I feel guilty, sir!

I cannot give up what I never had:
For I ruled these, not them — these stood between,

Shall I confess, sir? I have heard by stealth
Of Berthold from the first; more news and more:
Closer and closer swam the thunder cloud,
But I was safely housed with these, I knew.
At times when to the casement I would turn,
At a bird's passage or a flower-trail's play,
I caught the storm's red glimpses on its edge —
Yet I was sure some one of all these friends
Would interpose: I followed the bird's flight
Or plucked the flower — some one would interpose!

Val. Not one thought on the People — and Cleves there!

Duch. Now, sadly conscious my real sway was missed,
Its shadow goes without so much regret:
Else could I not again thus calmly bid you,

Answer Prince Berthold!

Val. Then you acquiesce?

Duch. Remember over whom it was I ruled!

Gui. [Stepping forward.] Prince Berthold, yonder, craves an audience, lady!

Duch. [To Valence.] I only have to turn,
and I shall face
Prince Berthold! Oh, my very heart is sick!
It is the daughter of a line of Dukes
This scornful insolent adventurer
Will bid depart from my dead father's halls!
I shall not answer him— dispute with him—
But, as he bids, depart! Prevent it, sir!
Sir—but a mere day's respite! Urge me—
What shall I call to mind I should have urged,
When time is gone by— 'twill all be mine, you urge!
A day—an hour—that I myself may lay
My rule down! 'Tis too sudden—must not be!
The world's to hear of it! Once done—ever!
How will it read, sir? How be sung about?
Prevent it!

Berth. [Approaching.] Your frank indignation,
lady,
Cannot escape me. Overbold I seem;
But somewhat should be pardoned my surprise
At this reception,—this defiance, rather.
And if, for their and your sake, I rejoice
Your virtues could inspire a trusty few
To make such gallant stand in your behalf,
I cannot but be sorry, for my own.
Your friends should force me to retract my steps:
Since I no longer am permitted speak
After the pleasant peaceful course prescribed
No less by courtesy than relationship
Which I remember, if you once forgot.
But never must attack pass unrepelled.
Suffer that, through you, I demand of these
Who controverts my claim to Juliers?

Duch. — Me,
You say, you do not speak to—

Berth. — Of your subjects
I ask, then: whom do you accredit? Where Stand those should answer?

Val. [Advancing.] The lady is alone.

Berth. — Alone, and thus? So weak and yet
So bold?

Val. — I said she was alone —

Berth. — And weak, I said.

Val. — When is man strong until he feels alone?
It was some lonely strength at first, be sure,
Created organs, such as those you seek,
By which to give its varied purpose shape:
And, naming the selected ministrants,
Took sword, and shield, and sceptre,—each, a man!
That strength performed its work and passed its way:
You see our lady: there, the old shapes stand!
A Marshal, Chamberlain, and Chancellor—
"Be helped their way, into their death put life
And find advantage!"—so you counsel us.
But let strength feel alone, seek help itself,
And, as the inland-hatched sea-creature hunts
The sea's breast out,—as, littered 'mid the waves
The desert-brute makes for the desert's joy,
So turns our lady to her true resource,
Passing o'er hollow fictions, worn-out types,—
And I am first her instinct fastens on.
And prompt I say, as clear as heart can speak,
The People will not have you; nor shall have it
Is not merely I shall go bring Cleves
And fight you to the last,—though that does much,
And men and children,—ay, and women too,
Fighting for home, are rather to be feared.
Than mercenaries fighting for their pay—
But, say you beat us, since such things have been,
And, where this Juliers laughed, you set your foot
Upon a steaming bloody blush,—what then?
Stand you the more our lord that there you stand?
Lord it o'er troops whose force you concentrate,
A pilled flame wheroeto all arors tend—
Lord it 'mid priests whose schemes you amplify,
A cloud of smoke 'neath which all shadows brood—
But never, in this gentle spot of earth,
Can you become our Colombe, our play-queen,
For whom, to furnish lines for her hair,
We'd pour our veins forth to enrich the soil!—
Our conqueror? Yes!—Our despot? Yes!—
Our Duke?

Know yourself, know us!

Berth. — [Who has been in thought.] Know your lady, also!
[Very deferentially.]—To whom I needs must exculpate myself
For having made a rash demand, at least,
Wherefore to you, sir, who appear to be
Her chief adviser, I submit my claims.

[Giving papers.
But, this step taken, take no further step,
Until the Duchess shall pronounce their worth.
Here be our meeting-place; at night, its time:
Till when I humbly take the lady's leave!
[He withdraws. As the Duchess turns to Valence.
the Courtiers interchange glances and come forward a little.
1st Court. — So, this was their device?
2d Court. — No had device!
3d Court. — You'd say they love each other.

Guibert's friend
From Cleves, and she, the Duchess!

4th Court. — And moreover,
That all Prince Berthold comes for, is to help
Their loves!

5th Court. — Pray, Guibert, what is next to do?

Gu. — [Advancing.] I laid my office at the Duchess' foot—

Others. — And I — and I — and I!

Duch. — I took them, sirs.

Gu. — [Apart to Valence.] And now, sir, I am simple knight again—

Guibert, of the great ancient house, as yet
That never bore affront; whate'er your birth,
As things stand now, I recognize yourself
[If you'll accept experience of some date]
As like to be the leading man o' the time.
Therefore as much above me now, as I
Seemed above you this morning. Then, I offered
To fight you: will you be as generous
And now fight me?

Val. — Ask when my life is mine!

Gu. — 'Tis hers now!
Of that I leave? My Duchy — keeping it, Or losing it — is that my sole world now? Val. I'll have I spoken if you thence despise Juliers; although the lowest, on true grounds, Be worth more than the highest rule, on false: Aspire to rule, on the true grounds! Duch. Nay, hear — False, I will never — rash, I would not be! This is indeed my birthday — soul and body, Its hours have done on me the work of years. You hold the requisition; ponder it! If I have right, my duty's plain: if he — Say so, nor ever change a tone of voice! At night you meet the Prince; meet me at eve! Till when, farewell! This discomposes you? Believe in your own nature, and its force Of renovating mine! I take my stand Only as under me the earth is firm: So, prove the first step stable, all will prove. That first, I choose — [Laying her hand on his] — the next to take, choose you! [She withdraws.

Val. [After a pause.] What drew down this on me? — on me, dead once, She thus bids live, — since all I hitherto Thought dead in me, youth's ardors and emprise Burst into life before her, as she bids Who needs them. Whither will this reach, where end? Her hand's print burns on mine . . . Yet she's above —

So very far above me! All's too plain: I served her when the others sank away, And she rewards me as such souls reward: — The changed voice, the suffusion of the cheek, The eye's acceptance, the expressive hand, —Reward, that's little, in her generous thought, Though all to me . . . I cannot so disdain Heaven's gift, nor call it other than it is! She loves me! [Looking at the Prince's papers.] — Which love, these, perseverance, forbid. Can I decide against myself — pronounce She is the Duchess and no mate for me? — Cleves, help me! Teach me, — every haggard face, — To sorrow and endure! I will do right Whatever be the issue. Help me, Cleves!

ACT IV

Evening. Scene. An Antechamber. Enter the Courtiers.

May. Now, then, that we may speak — how spring this mine? Duch. Is Guibert ready for its match? He cools! Not so friend Valence with the Duchess there! "Stay, Valence! Are not you my better self?" And her cheek mantled —

Gu. Well, she loves him, sir. And more, — since you will have it I grow cool,
COLOMBE'S BIRTHDAY

She's right: he's worth it.

Gau. For his deeds to-day?

Say so!

Gui. What should I say beside?

Gau. Not this—

For friendship's sake leave this for me to say—

That we're the dupes of an egregious cheat!

This plain unpractised suitor, who found way
To the Duchess through the nearest die's turn-up,

A year ago had seen her and been seen,

Loved and been loved.

Gui. Impossible! — Nor say,

How sly and exquisite a trick, moreover,

Was this which — taking not their stand on facts

Boldly, for that had been endurable,

But worming on their way by craft, they choose

Resort to, rather, — and which you and we,

Sleep-like, assist them in the playing-off!

The Duchess thus parades him as preferred,

Not on the honest ground of preference,

Seeing first, liking more, and there an end —

But as we all had started equally,

And at the close of a fair race he proved

The only valiant, sage and loyal man.

Herself, too, with the pretty fits and starts, —

The careless, winning, candid ignorance

Of what the Prince might challenge or forego —

She had a hero in reserve! — What risk

Can she? This deferential easy Prince

Who brings his claims for her to ratify

He's just her puppet for the nonce! You'll see —

Valence pronounces, as is equitable,

Against him: off goes the confederate:

As equitably, Valence takes her hand!

The Chancellor. You run too fast: her hand,

No subject takes.

Do not our archives hold her father's will?

That will provides against such accident,

And gives next heir, Prince Berthold, the remain

Of Juliers, which she forfeits, wedding so.

Gau. I know that, well as you. — but does the Prince?

Knows Berthold, think you, that this plan, he helps,

For Valence's ennoblement, — would end.

If crowned with the success which seems its due,

In making him the very thing he plays, the actual Duke of Juliers? — All agree

That Colombe's title waived or set aside,

He is next heir.

The Chair. Incontrovertibly.

Gau. Gilbert, your match, now, to the train!

Gui. Enough!

I'm with you: selfishness is best again,

I thought of turning honest — what's a dream

Let's wake now!

Gau. Selfish, friend, you never were:

'T was but a series of revenges taken

On your unselfishness for prospering ill,

But now that you're grown wiser, what's our course?

Gui. — Wait, I suppose, till Valence weds our lady,

And then, if we must needs revenge ourselves,

Apprise the Prince.

Gau. — The Prince, ere then dismissed?

With thanks for playing his mock part so well?

Tell the Prince now, sir! Ay, this very night, ere he accepts his dole and goes his way,

Explain how such a marriage makes him Duke,

Then trust his gratitude for the surprise!

Gui. — Our lady wedding Valence all the same

As if the penalty were undisclosed?

Good! If she loves, she'll not disown her love,

Throw Valence up. I wonder you see that.

Gui. The shame of it — the suddenness and shame!

Within her, the inclining heart — without,

A terrible array of witnesses

And Valence by, to keep her to her word.

With Berthold's indignation or disgust!

We'll try it! — Not that we can venture much.

Her confidence we've lost forever: Berthold's

Is all to gain.

Gui. To-night, then, venture we!

Yet — if lost confidence might be renewed?

Gui. Never in noble natures! With the base ones,

Twist off the crab's claw, wait a smarting-while,

And something grows and grows and gets to be

A mimic of the lost joint, just so like

As keeps in mind it never, never will Replace its predecessor! Crabs do that;

But top the lion's foot — and . . .

Gui. To the Prince!

Gau. [Aside.] And come what will to the lion's foot, I pay you,

My cat's paw, as I long have yearned to pay!

[Voice.] Footsteps! Himself! 'T is Valence breaks on us,

Exulting that their scheme succeeds. We'll hence

And perfect ours! Consult the archives, first.

Then, fortified with knowledge, seek the Hall!

Gui. [To GAUCHEME as they retire.] You have not smiled so since your father died!

(As they retire, enter VALENCE WITH PAPERS.)

Val. So must it be! I have examined these

With scarce a palpitating heart — so calm,

Keeping her image almost wholly off,

Setting upon myself determined watch,

Repelling to the utmost his claims:

And the result is — all men would pronounce,

And not I, only, the result to be —

Berthold is heir: she has no shade of right

To the distinction which divided us,

But, suffered to rule first, I know not why,

Her rule connived at by those Kings and Popes,

To serve some devil's purpose, — now 't is gained,

Whatever it was, the rule expires as well.

Valence, this rupture . . . selfish can it be?

Eject it from your heart, her home! — It stays!

Ah, the brave world that opens on us both!

— Do my poor townsmen so esteem it?

Cleves.
I need not your pale faces! This, reward
For service done to you? Too horrible!
I never served you: 't was myself I served—
Nay, served not—rather saved from punishment—
Which, had I failed then, would plague me now!
My life continues yours, and your life, mine.
But if, to take God's gift, I swerve no step—Cleves! If I breathe no prayer for it—if she,
[Footsteps without.]
Cleomes, that comes now, freely gives herself—
Will Cleves require, that, turning thus to her, I...

(Enter Prince Berthold.)
Pardon, sir! I did not look for you
Till night, 't the Hall; nor have as yet declared
My judgment to the lady.

Berth. That need I not ask.
Val. You need not: I have proved the lady's mind:
And, justice being to do, dare act for her.

Berth. Doubtless she has a very noble mind.
Val. Oh, never fear but she'll in each conjuncture
Bear herself bravely! She no whist deponents
On circumstance; as she adorns a throne,
She had adorned...

Berth. A cottage—what book
Have I read that, of every queen that lived?
A throne! You have not been instructed, sure,
To forestall my request?

Val. 'Tis granted, sir! My heart instructs me. I have scrutinized
Your claim...

Berth. Ah—claims, you mean, at first preferred?
I come, before the hour appointed me,
To pray you let those claims at present rest.
In favor of a new and stronger one.

Val. You shall not need a stronger: on the part
O' the lady, all you offer I accept,
Since one clear right suffices: yours is clear.
Propose!

Berth. I offer her my hand.
Val. Your hand?

Berth. A Duke's, yourself say; and, at no far time.

(Enter the Duchess.)
Duch. My fate, sir! Ah, you turn away.
All's over,
But you are sorry for me? Be not so!
What I might have become, and never was,
Regret with me! What I have merely been,
Rejoice I am no longer! What I seem Beginning now, in my new state, to be,
Hope that I am!—for, once my rights proved void,
This heavy roof seems easy to exchange
For the blue sky outside—my lot henceforth.

Val. And what a lot is Berthold's?
Duch. How of him?
Val. He gathers earth's whole good into his arms;
Standing, as man now, stately, strong and wise,
Marching to fortune, not surprised by her.
One great aim, like a guiding-star, above —
Which tasks strength, wisdom, statelessness, to lift
His manhood to the height that takes the prize;
A prize not near — lest overlooking earth
He rashly spring to seize it — nor remote,
So that he rest upon his path content:
But day by day, while shimmering grows shine,
And the faint cirlet prophesies the orb,
He sees as much as, just evolving these,
The statelessness, the wisdom and the strength,
To due completion, will surmise this life,
And lead him at his grandest to the grave.
After this star, out of a night he springs;
A beggar's cradle for the throne of thrones
He quits; so, mounting, feels each step he Nor, as from each to each exultingly
He passes, overlooks one grade of joy.
This, for his own good: — with the world, each gift
Of God and man, — reality, tradition,
Fancy and fact — so well environ him,
That as a mystic panoply they serve —
Of force, untainted, to awe mankind,
And work his purpose out with half the world,
While he, his master, dexterously slipt
From such encumbrance, is meantime employed
With his own prowess on the other half.
Thus shall he prosper, every day's success
Adding, to what is he, a solid strength —
An airy might to what eneirches him,
Till at the last, so life's routine lends help,
That as the Emperor only breathes and moves,
His shadow shall be watched, his step or stalk
Become a comfort or a portent, how
He trails his trine take significance —
Till even his power shall cease to be most power,
And men shall dread his weakness more, nor dare
Peril their earth its bravest, first and best,
Its typified invincibility.
Thus shall he go on, greatening, till he ends —
The man of men, the spirit of all flesh,
The fiery centre of an earthly world!
Duch. Some such a fortune I had dreamed should rise
Out of my own — that is, above my power
Seemed other, greater potencies to stretch —
Val. For you?
Duch. It was not I moved there, I think:
But one I could,— though constantly beside,
And aye approaching, — still keep distant from,
And so adore. 'Twas a man moved there.
Val. Who?
Duch. I felt the spirit, never saw the face.
Val. See it! 'Tis Berthold's! He enables you
To realize your vision.
Duch. Berthold?
Val. Duke —
Emperor to be: he proffers you his hand.
Duch. Generous and princely!
Val. He is all of this.
Duch. Thanks, Berthold, for my father's sake. No hand
Degrades me!

Val. You accept the proffered hand?
Duch. That he should love me!
Val. "Loved" I did not say.
Had that been — love might so incline the Prince
To the world's good, the world that's at his foot,—
I do not know, this moment, I should dare
Desire that you refused the world — and Cleves —
The sacrifice he asks.
Duch. Not love me, sir?
Val. He scarce affirmed it.
Duch. May not deeds affirm?
Val. What does he?... Yes, yes, very much he does!
All the shame saved, he thinks, and sorrow saved —
Immitagible sorrow, so he thinks.
Sorrow that's deeper than we dream, perchance!
Duch. Is not this love?
Val. So very much he does!
For look, you can descend now gracefully:
All doubts are banished, that the world might have,
Or worst, the doubts yourself, in after-time,
May call up of your heart's sincerity now.
To such, reply, "I could have kept my rule —
Increased it to the utmost of my dreams —
Yet I abjured it." This, he does for you:
It is meeklye much.
Duch. Still "much!"
But why is it not love, sir? Answer me!
Val. Because not one of Berthold's words and looks
Had gone with love's presentment of a flower
To the beloved: because bold confidence,
Open superiority, free pride —
Love owns not, yet were all that Berthold owned:
Because where reason, even, finds no flaw,
Unerring a lover's instinct may.
Duch. You reason, then, and doubt?
Val. I love, and know.
Duch. You love? How strange! I never cast a thought
On that! Just see our selfishness! You seemed
So much my own... I had no ground — and yet,
I never dreamed another might divide
My power with you, much less exceed it.
Val. Lady,
I am yours wholly.
Duch. Oh, no, no, not mine!
'Tis not the same now, never more can be.
Your first love, doubtless. Well, what's gone from me?
What have I lost in you?
Val. My heart replies —
No loss there! So, to Berthold back again:
This offer of his hand, he bids me make —
Its obvious magnitude is well to weigh Duch. She's... yes, she must be very fair for you!
Val. I am a simple advocate of Cleves.
Duch. You! With the heart and brain that so helped me,
I fancied them exclusively my own,
Yet find are subject to a stronger sway!
She must or... tell me, is she very fair?
Val. Most fair, beyond conception or belief.
Duch. Black eyes? — no matter! Colombé, the world leads Its life without you, whom your friends pro-tressed
The only woman — see how true they spoke!
One lived this while, who never saw your face.
Nor heard your voice — unless... Is she from Cleves?
Val. Cleves knows her well.
Duch. Ah — just a fancy, now!
When you poured forth the wrongs of Cleves, —
I said,
— Thought, that is, afterward... Val.
— You thought of me?
Duch. Of whom else? Only such great cause, I thought.
For such effect: see what true love can do!
Cleves is his love. I almost fear to ask
... And will not. This is idling: to our work!
Admit before the Prince, without reserve,
My claims misgrounded; then may follow
better
... When you poured out Cleves’ wrongs impetuously,
Was she in your mind?
Val. All done was done for her — To humble me!
Duch. She will be proud at least.
Val. She?
Duch. When you tell her.
Val. That will never be.
Duch. How — are there sweeter things you hope to tell?
No, sir! You counselled me. — I counsel you
In the one point I — any woman can.
Your worth, the first thing; let her own come
next —
Say what you did through her, and she through
you —
The praise of her beauty afterward!
Will you?
Val. I dare not.
Duch. Dare not?
Val. She loves me.
Suspects not such a love in me.
Duch. You jest.
Val. The lady is above me and away.
Not only the brave form, and the bright mind.
And the great heart, combine to press me low —
But all the world calls rank divides us.
Duch. Rank!
Now grant me patience! Here’s a man declares
Oraenlarly in another’s case —
Sees the true value and the false, for them —
Nay, bids them see it, and they straight do see.
You called my court’s love worthless — so it
turned:
I threw away as dross my heap of wealth,
And here you stickle for a piece or two!
First — has she seen you?
Val. Yes.
Duch. She loves you, then.
Val. One flash of hope burst; then succeeded
night:
And all’s at darkest now. Impossible!
Duch. We’ll try: you are — so to speak —
my subject yet?
Val. As ever — to the death.
Duch. Obey me, then!
Val. I must.
Duch. Approach her, and... no! first of all
Get more assurance. “My instructress,” say.
“Was great, descended from a line of kings.
And even fair” — (wait why I say this folly—
“She said, of all men, none for eloquence,
Courage, and” what cast even these to shade:
“The heart they sprung from, — none deserved like him
Who saved her at her need: if she said this,
What should not one I love, say?”
Val. Heaven — this hope —
Oh, lady, you are filling me with fire!
Duch. Say this! — nor think I bid you cast
aside
One touch of all the awe and reverence;
Nay, make her proud for once to heart’s content
That all this wealth of heart and soul’s her
own!
Think you are all of this, — and, thinking it,
... (Obey!) — Val.
Val. I cannot choose.
Duch. Then, kneel to her!
[Valence sinks on his knee.
I dream!
Val. Have mercy! Yours unto the death, —
I have obeyed. Despise, and let me die!
Duch. Alsas, sir, is it to be ever thus?
Even with you as with the world? I know
This morning’s service was no vulgar deed
Whose motive, once it darts arrov itself,
Explains all done and infinitely more.
So, takes the shelter of a nobler cause.
Your service named its true source, — loyalty!
The rest is unsaid again. The Duchess bids you,
Rise, sir! ‘The Prince’s words were in debate,
Val. [Rising.] Rise? Truth, as ever, lady, comes from you!
I should rise — I who spoke for Cleves, can speak
For Man — yet tremble now, who stood firm
then.
I laughed — for’t was past tears — that Cleves should starve
With all hearts beating loud the infamy,
And no tongue daring trust as much to air:
Yet here, where all hearts speak, shall I be mute?
Oh, lady, for your own sake look on me!
On all I am, and have, and do — heart, brain,
Body and soul, — this Valence and his gifts!
I was proud once: I saw you, and they sank,
So that each, magnified a thousand times,
Were nothing to you — but such nothingness,
Would a crown gild it, or a sceptre prop,
A treasure speed, a laurel-wreath enhance?
What is my own desert? — But should your love
Have... there’s no language helps here... singled me,
Then—oh, that wild word "then!"—be just to love,
In generosity its attribute!
Love, since you pleased to love! All's cleared
—a stage
For trial of the question kept so long:
Judge you—is love or vanity the best?
You, solve it for the world's sake—you, speak first
What all will shout one day—you, vindicate
Our earth and be its angel! All is said.
Lady, I offer nothing—I am yours:
But, for the cause's sake, look on me and him,
And speak—
Duch. I have received the Prince's message:
Say, I prepare my answer!
VAL. Take me, Cleves! (He withdraws.)
Duch. Mournful—that nothing's what it calls itself?
Devotion, zeal, faith, loyalty—mere love?
And, love in question, what may Berthold's be?
I did ill to mistrust the world so soon:
Already was this Berthold at my side.
The valley-level has its hawks, no doubt:
May not the rock-top have its eagles, too?
Yet Valence... let me see his rival then!

ACT V

Night. Scene. The Hall.

Enter Berthold and Melchior.

Mel. And here you wait the matter's issue?
Berth. Here.
Mel. I don't regret I shut Amelia out, then.
But tell me, on this grand disclosure,—how Behaved our spokesman with the forehead?
Berth. Oh, turned out no better than the foreheadless—
Was dazzled not so very soon, that's all!
For my part, this is scarce the lusty showy
Chivalry you gave me credit of.
Perhaps I had a fancy,—but 'tis gone.
Let her commence the unfriendled innocent
And carry wrongs about from court to court?
No, truly! The least shake of fortune's sand
My uncle-Pope chokes in a coughing fit.
King-cousin takes a fancy to blue eyes,
And wondrously her claims would brighten up.

Forth comes a new gloss on the ancient law,
O'er-looked provisos, over-past promises.
Follow in plenty. No: 'tis the safe step.
The hour beneath the convent-wall is lost:
Juliers and she, once mine, are ever mine.

Mel. Which is to say, you, losing heart already.

Ehude the adventure.

Berth. Not so—or, if so—
Why not confess at once that I advise
None of our kingly craft and guild just now
To lay, one moment, down their privilege
With the notion they can any time at pleasure
Retake it; that may turn out hazardous.
We seem, in Europe, pretty well at end

O! the night, with our great masque: those favored few
Who keep the chamber's top, and honor's chance
Of the early evening, may retain their place
And figure as they list till out of breath.
But it is growing late; and I observe
A dim grum kind of tipstaves at the doorway
Not only bar new-comers entering now,
But caution those who left, for any cause,
And would return, that morning draws too near;
The ball must die off, shut itself up. We:
I think, may dance lights out and sunshine in,
And sleep off headache on our frippery:
But friend the other, who cunningly stole in,
And, after breathing the fresh air outside,
Means to re-enter with a new costume,
Will be advised go back to bed. I fear,
I stick to privilege, on second thoughts.

Mel. Yes—yes, you evade the adventure: and,

beside,
Give yourself out for colder than you are.
King Philip, only, notes the lady's eyes?
Don't they come in for somewhat of the motive
With you too?

Berth. Yes—no: I am past that now.
Gone's is: I cannot shut my soul to fact.
Of course, I might by forethought and contrivance
Reason myself into a rapture. Gone:
And something better come instead, no doubt.

Mel. So be it! Yet, all the same, proceed
My way
Though to your ends; so shall you prosper best!
The lady— to be won for selfish ends—
Will be won easier my unselfish... call it
Romantic way.

Berth. Won easier?

Mel. Will not she?

Berth. There I profess humility without bound,
Il! cannot speed— not I—the Emperor.

Mel. And I should think the Emperor best waived.

From your description of her mood and way,
You could look, if it pleased you, into hearts;
But are too indolent and fond of watching
Your own—you know that, for you study it.

Berth. Had you but seen the orator her friend,
So bold and voluble an hour before,
Abashed to earth at aspect of the change!
Make her an Empress? Ah, that changed the case.

Oh, I read hearts! 'Tis for my own behoof.
I coult her with my true worth: wait the event!
I learned my final lesson on that head
When years ago,—my first and last essay—
Before the priest my uncle could by help
Of his superior raise me from the dirt—
Priscilla left me for a Brabant lord
Whose cheek was like the topaz on his thumb.
I am past illusion on that score.

Mel. Here comes
The lady—

Berth. And there you go. But do not!
Give me
Another chance to please you! Hear me plead!
Mel. You 'll keep, then, to the lover, to the must?
(Enter the Duchess followed by Adolf and Sayne, and, after an interval, by the Couriers.)
Berth. Good auspice to our meeting!
Duch. May it prove!
— And you, sir, will be Emperor one day?
Berth. (Aya, that ' s the point! I may be Emperor.
Duch. T is not for my sake only, I am prond
Of this your offer: I am prouder far.
That from the highest state should duly spring
The highest, since most generous, of deeds.
Berth. (Generous—still that!) You under-rate yourself.
You are, what I, to be complete, must gain—
Find now, and may not find, another time.
While I career on all the world for stage,
There needs at home my representative.
Duch. — Such, rather, would some warrior-woman be—
One dowered with lands and gold, or rich in friends—
One like yourself.
Berth. Lady, I am myself,
And have all these: I want what ' s not myself,
Nor has all these. Why give one hand two swords?
Here ' s one already: be a friend ' s next gift
A silk glove, if you will—I have a sword.
Duch. You love me, then?
Berth. Your lineage I revere,
Honor your virtue, in your truth believe,
Do homage to your intellect, and bow
Before your peerless beauty.
Duch. — But, for love—
Berth. A further love I do not understand.
Our best course is to say these hideous truths,
And see them, once said, grow endurable:
Like waters shuddering from their central bed,
Black with the midnight bowels of the earth,
That, once up-sponted by an earthquake ' s three,
A portent and a terror—soon subsides,
Freshen apace, take gold and rainbow hues
In sunshine, sleep in shadow, and at last
Grow common to the earth as hills or trees—
Accepted by all things they came to scare.
Duch. You cannot love, then?
Berth. — Charlemagne, perhaps!
Are you not over-curious in love lore?
Duch. I have become so, very recently.
It seems, then, I shall best deserve esteem
Respect, and all your candor promises,
By putting on a calculating mood
Asking the terms of my becoming yours?
Berth. Let me not do myself injustice, neither.
Because I will not condescend to fictions
That promise what my soul can never acquit,
It does not follow that my guarded phrase
May not include far more of what you seek,
Than wide profession of less scrupulous men.
You will be Empress, once for all; with me
The Pope disputes supremacy— you stand,
And none gamsays, the earth ' s first woman.
Duch. — That
Or simple Lady of Ravestein again?
Berth. The matter ' s not in my arbitration:
Now I have made my claims—which I regret—
Cede one, cede all?
Duch. This claim then, you enforce?
Berth. The world looks on.
Duch. And when must I decide?
Berth. When lady? Have I said thus much so promptly
For nothing? — Poured out, with such pains
at once
What I might else have suffered to ooz forth
Droplet by droplet in a lifetime long—
For aught less than as prompt an answer,
too?
All ' s fairly told now: who can teach you more?
Duch. I do not see him.
Berth. I shall ne'er deceive.
This offer should be made befittingly
Did time allow the better setting forth
The good of it, with what is not so good,
Advantage, and disparagement as well:
But as it is, the sum of both must serve.
I am already weary of this place;
My thoughts are next stage on to Rome.
Decide! The Empire— or, — not even Juliers now!
Hail to the Empress—farewell to the Duchess!
[The Couriers, who have been drawing nearer and nearer, interpose.
Gau. — "Farewell," Prince? when we break
in at our risk —
Chag. Almost upon court-license trespassing
Gau. — To point out how your claims are valid yet!
You know not, by the Duke her father's will,
The lady, if she weds beneath her rank,
Forfeits her Duchy in the next heir's favor —
So ' tis expressly stipulate. And if
It can be shown ' tis her intent to wed
A subject, then yourself, next heir, by right
Succeed to Juliers.
Berth. What insanity? —
Gui. Sir, there's one Valence, the pale fiery
man
You saw and heard this morning—thought, no
doubt,
Was of considerable standing here:
I put it to your penetration, Prince.
If ever true love, the truest love for her
Could make him serve the lady as he did!
He ' s simply a poor advocate of Cleves
— Creeps here with difficulty, finds a place
With danger, gets in by a miracle,
And for the first time meets the lady's face—
So runs the story: is that credible?
For, first — no sooner in, than he's apprised
Fortunes have changed; you are all-powerful
here,
The lady as powerless: he stands fast by her!
Duch. [Aside.] And do such deeds spring up from love alone?
Gui. But here occurs the question, does the lady
Love him again? I say, how else can she?
Can she forget how he stood singly forth
In her defence, dared outrage all of us,
Insult yourself — for what, save love's reward?
Duch. [Aside.] And is love then the sole reward of love?
Gu. But, love him as she may and must — you ask.

Means she to wed him? "Yes," both natures answer!

Both, in their pride, point out the sole result;
Naught less would be accept nor she propose.

For each conjecture was she great enough
Will be, for this.

Clay. Though, now that this is known.

Duch. — What, sir, and wherefore? — since I am not sure
That all is any other than you say!

You take this Valence, hold him close to me.

Him with his actions: can I choose but look?

I am not sure, love trailer shows itself
Than in this man, you hate and would degrade.

Yet, with your worst abatement, show me this.

Nor am I — (thru made look within myself,
Ex. I had dared) — now that the look is dared —
Sure that I do not love him!

Gu. — Hear you, Prince?

Berth. And what, sirs, please you, may this prattle mean

Unless to prove with what alacrity

You give your lady's secrets to the world?

How much indebted, for discovering

That quality, you make me, will be found
When there's a keeper for my own to seek.

Couriers. "Our lady?"

Berth. — She assuredly remains.

Duch. Ah, Prince — and you too can be generous?

You could renounce your power, if this were so,

And let me, as these phrase it, wed my love

Yet keep my Duchy? You perhaps exceed

Him, even, in disinterestedness!

Berth. How, lady, should all this affect my purpose?

Your will and choice are still as ever, free.

Say, you have known a worthier than myself

In mind and heart, of happier form and face —

Others must have their birthright: I have gifts,

To balance theirs, not blot them out of sight.

Against a hundred alien qualities,

I lay the prize I offer: I am nothing:

Wd. you the Empire?

Duch. — And my heart away?

Berth. When have I made pretension to your heart?

I give none. I shall keep your honor safe;

With mine I trust you, as the sculptor trusts

Your marble woman with the marble rose.

Loose on her hand, she never will let fall,

In graceful, slight, silent security.

You will be proud of my world-wide career.

And I content in you the fair and good.

What were the use of planting a few seeds

The thankless climate never would nurture —

Affections all repelled by circumstance?

Enough: to these no credit I attach.

To what you own, find nothing to object.

Write simply on my requisition's face.

What shall content my friends — that you admit,

As Colombe of Ravestein, the claims therein.

Or never need admit them, as my wife —

And either way, all's ended!

Duch. — Let all end!

Berth. The requisition!

Gu. — Valence holds, of course!

Berth. Desire his presence! [Apart goes out

Couriers. [To each other.] Out it all comes yet;

He'll have his word against the bargain yet;

He's not the man to tamely acquiesce.

One passionate appeal — upbraiding even,

May turn the tide again. Despair not yet!

Berth. [To Melchior.] The Empire has its old success, my friend!

Mel. You've had your way: before the spokesman speaks

Let me, but this once, work a problem out.

And ever more be dumb! The Empire wins!

To better purpose have I read my books!

(Enter Valence.)

Mel. [To the Couriers.] Apart, my masters!

[To Valence.] Sir, one word with you! I am a poor dependant of the Prince's Pitched on to speak, as of slight consequence.

You are no higher, I find: in other words:

We two, as probably the wisest here,

Need not hold diplomatic talk like fools.

Suppose I speak, divesting the plain fact

Of all their tortuous phrases, fit for them?

Do you reply so, and what trouble saved?

The Prince, then — an embroiled strange heap

of news

This moment reaches him — if true or false,

All dignity forbids he should inquire

In person, or by worthier deputy;

Yet somehow must inquire, lest slander come:

And so, 'tis I am pitched on. You have heard

His offer to your lady?

Val. Yes.

Mel. — Conceive

Her joy thereat?

Val.

Mel. I cannot.

No one can.

All draws to a conclusion, therefore.

Val. [.Aside.] So!

No after-judgment — no first thought revised —

Her first and last decision — me, she leaves,

Takes him; a simple heart is flung aside,

The ermine over a heartless breast embraced.

Oh Heaven, this mockery has been played too off.

Once, to surprise the angels — twice, that fiends.

Recordings, might be proud they chose not so —

Thrice, many thousand times, to teach the world

All men should pause, mistrust their strength.

— since men

Can have such chance yet fail so signal —

But ever, ever this farewell to Heaven.

Welcome to earth — this taking death for life —

This spurning love and kneeling to the world —

Oh Heaven, it is too often and too old!

Mel. Well, on this point, what but an absurd

rumor

Ariseth — these, its source — its subject, you!

Your faith and loyalty misconstruing

They say, your service claims the lady's hand!

Of course, nor Prince nor lady can respond:

Yet something must be said: for, were it true

You made such claim, the Prince would . . .
Val. Well, sir,—would?

Mel. Not only probably withdraw his suit, But, very like, the lady might be forced!

Accept you own. Oh, there are reasons why! But you'll excuse at present all save one,—

I think so. What we want is, your own witness, For, or against—her good, or yours: decide!

Val. [Aside.] Be it her good if she accounts it so!

[After a contest.] For what am I but hers, to choose as she?

Who knows how far, beside, the light from her May reach, and dwell with, what she looks upon?

Mel. [To the Prince.] Now to him, you! Berth. [To VALENCE.] My friend acquaints you, sir,

The noise runs . . .

Val. Prince, how fortunate are you, Wedding her as you will, in spite of noise, To show belief in love! Let her but love you, All else you disregard! What else can be? You know how love is incompatible With falsehood—purifies, assimilates All other passions to itself.

Mel. Ay, sir: But softly! Where, in the object we select, Such love is, perchance, wanting?

Val. Then indeed, What is it you can take?

Mel. *Nay, ask the world! Youth, beauty, virtue, an illustrious name, An influence o'er mankind, Val. *When man perceives . . . —Ah, I can only speak as for myself! DUCH. Speak for yourself! Val. May I?—no, I have spoken And time's gone by. Had I seen such an one, As I loved—her—weighing thoroughly that word—

So should my task be to evolve her love; If for myself!—if for another—well.

Berth. Heroic truly! And your sole reward— The secret pride in yielding up love's right? Val. Who thought upon reward? And yet how much Comes after—oh, what ampestest recompense? Is the knowledge of her, naught? the memory, naught?—Lady, should such an one have looked on you, Never wrong yourself so far as quote the world And say, love can go unrequited here! You will have blessed him to his whole life's end— Low passions hind-red, baser cares kept back, All goodness cherished where you dwelt—and dwell, What would he have? He holds you—you, both form And mind, in his,—where self-love makes such room For love of you, he would not serve you now The vulgar way,—repulse your enemies, Win you new realms, or best, to save the old Die blissfully—that's past so long ago! He wishes you no need, thought, care of him— Your good, by any means, himself unseen. Away, forgotten!—He gives that life's task up, As it were . . . but this charge which I return—

[Offers the requisition, which she takes.]

Wishing your good.

Duch. [Having subscribed it.] And opportune, sir— Since at a birthday's close, like this of mine. Good wishes gentle deeds reciprocate. Most on a wedding-day, as mine is too, Should gifts be thought of: yours comes first by right.

Ask of me!

Berth. He shall have whate'er he asks, For your sake and his own.

Val. [Aside.] If I should ask The withered bunch of flowers she wears—perhaps, One last touch of her hand, I never more Shall see!

[After a pause, presenting his paper to the Prince. Cleves' Prince, redress the wrongs of Cleves! Berth. I will, sir! DUCH. [As VALENCE prepares to retire.]— Nay, do out your duty, first! You bore this paper; I have registered My answer to it: read it and have done! Valence reads it.

I take him—give up Juliers and the world. This is my Birthday.

Mel. *Berthold, my one hero Of the world she gives up, one friend worth my books, Sole man I think it pays the pains to watch,— Speak, for I know you through your Popes and Kings! Berth. [After a pause.] Lady, well rewarded! Sir, as well deserved! I could not imitate—I hardly envy—I do admire you. All is for the best. Too costly a flower was this, I see it now. To pluck and set upon my barren helm To wither—any garish plume will do. I'll not insult you and refuse your Duchy— You can so well afford to yield it me, And I were left, without it, sadly lorn, As it is—for me—if that will flatter you, A somewhat wearier life seems to remain Than I thought possible where . . . faith, their life Begins already! They're too occupied To listen: and few words content me best. [Abruptly to the Courtiers.] I am your Duke, though! Who oblige me here? Duch. Adolf and Sabyns follow us — GUS. [Starting from the Courtiers.]—And I? Do I not follow them, if I may n't you? Shall not I get some little duties up At Ravenstein and emulate the rest? God save you, Guelphine! 'Tis my Birthday, too!

Berth. You happy handful that remain with me . . . That is, with Dietrich the black Barnabite I shall leave over you—will earn your wages
The seventh number of Bells and Pomegranates was entitled Dramatic Romances and Lyrics. In the redistribution of his shorter poems when he collected his writings, Browning having already a group of Dramatic Lyrics made a second of Dramatic Romances, taking the occasion to make a little nicer discrimination. Thus some of the poems originally included under the combined title were distributed among the Lyrics, and some at first grouped under Lyrics were transferred to this division of Romances. The first poem in the group was originally contained in Dramatic Lyrics along with Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister under the general title of Camp and Cloister, this poem representing the camp.

"You’re wounded!" "Nay," the soldier’s pride
To touched to quick, he said:
"I’m killed, Sire!" And his chief beside,
Smiling the boy fell dead.

THE PATRIOT

AN OLD STORY

Mr. Browning has denied that this poem refers to Arnold of Brescia. It is imaginative, not historical in its dramatic action. It was possibly to relieve the poem of its apparent distinct reference to history that he removed the name of Brescia, which was used in the poem in its first form.

It was roses, roses, all the way,
With myrtle mixed in my path like mad:
The house-roofs seemed to heave and sway,
The church-spires flamed, such flags they had,
A year ago on this very day.

The air broke into a mist with bells,
The old walls rocked with the crowd and cries.

Had I said, "Good folk, mere noise repels
But give me your sun from yonder skies!"
They had answered, "And afterward, what else?"

Alack, it was I who leaped at the sun
To give it my loving friends to keep!
Naught man could do, have I left undone:
And you see my harvest, what I reap
This very day, now a year is run.

There’s nobody on the house-tops now—
Just a paled few at the windows set;
For the best of the sight is, all allow,
At the Shambles’ Gate — or, better yet,
By the very scaffold’s foot, I trow.
I go in, and, more than needs,
A rope cuts both my wrists behind;
And I think, by the feel, my forehead bleeds,
For they fling, whoever has a mind,
Stones at me for my year’s misdeeds.

Thus I entered, and thus I go!
In triumphs, people have dropped down dead.
“Paid by the world, what dost thou owe Me?” — God might question; now instead,
’Tis God shall repay: I am safer so.

MY LAST DUCHESS
FERRARA

In Dramatic Lyrics this was entitled Italy, and grouped with Count Gismond under the head Italy and France.

That’s my last Duchess painted on the wall,
Looking as if she were alive. I call
That piece a wonder, now; Frà Pandolf’s hands
Worked busily a day, and there she stands,
Will ’t please you sit and look at her? I said
“Frà Pandolf” by design, for never read
Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
The depth and passion of its earnest glance,
But to myself they turned (since none puts by
The curtain I have drawn for you, but I)
And seemed as they would ask me, if they
Durst,
How such a glance came there; so, not the first
Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, ’t was not
Her husband’s presence only, called that spot
Of joy into the Duchess’ cheek; perhaps
Frà Pandolf chanced to say, “Her mantle laps
Over my lady’s wrist too much,” or “Paint
Must never hope to reproduce the faint Half-flush that dies along her throat;” such stuff
Was courtesy, she thought, and cause enough
For calling up that spot of joy. She had A heart — how shall I say? — too soon made glad,
Too easily impressed: she liked whate’er
She looked on, and her looks went everywhere.
Sir, ’t was all one! My favor at her breast,
The dropping of the daylight in the West,
The bough of cherries some officious fool
Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
She rode with round the terrace — all and each
Would draw from her alike the approving speech,
Or blush, at least. She thanked men, — good!
but thanked
Somehow — I know not how — as if she ranked
My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name
With anybody’s gift. Who’d stoop to blame
This sort of trifling? Even had you skill
In speech — (which I have not) — to make your will
Quite clear to such an one, and say, “Just this
Or that in you disgusts me; here you miss,
Or there exceed the mark” — and if she let Herself be lessoned so, nor plainly set
Her wit to yours, forsooth, and made excuse.
—E’en then would be some stooping; and I choose
Never to stoop. Oh sir, she smiled, no doubt,
Whene’er I passed her; but who passed without Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands;
Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands
As if alive. Will ’t please you rise? We’ll meet
The company below, then. I repeat,
The Count your master’s known munificence
Is ample warrant that no just pretence
Of mine for dowry will be disallowed;
Though his fair daughter’s self, as I avowed
At starting, is my object. Nay, we’ll go
Together down, sir. Notice Neptune, thoug,
Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity,
Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for me!

COUNT GISMOND
AIX IN PROVENCE

Christ God who savest man, save most
Of men Count Gismond who saved me!
Count Gauthier, when he chose his post,
Chose time and place and company
To suit it; when he struck at length
My honor, ’t was with all his strength,
And doubtless ere he could draw
All points to one, he must have schemed!
That miserable morning saw
Few half so happy as I seemed,
While being dressed in queen’s array
To give our tourney prize away.

I thought they loved me, did me grace
To please themselves; ’t was all their doel
God makes, or fair or foul, our face;
If showing mine so caused to bleed
My consuls’ hearts, they should have dropped
A word, and straight the play had stopped.

They, too, so beauteous! Each a queen
By virtue of her brow and breast;
Not needing to be crowned, I mean,
As do. E’en when I was dressed,
Had either of them spoke, instead
Of glancing sideways with still head!

But no; they let me laugh, and sing
My birthday song quite through, adjust
The last rose in my garland, fling
A last look on the mirror, trust
My arms to each an arm of theirs,
And so descend the castle-stairs —

And come out on the morning-troop
Of merry friends who kissed my cheek,
And called me queen, and made me stoop
Under the canopy — a streak
That pierced it, of the outside sun,
Powdered with gold its gloom's soft dun—
And they could let me take my state
And foolish throne amid applause
Of all come there to celebrate:
My queen's—Oh I think the cause
Of much was, they forgot no crowd
Makes up for parents in their shrud!

H owe'er that be, all eyes were bent
Upon me, when my cousin cast
Their down; 'twas time I should present
The victor's crown, but... there, 'twill last
No long time... the old mist again
Blinds me as then it did. How vain!

See! Gismond's at the gate, in talk
With his two boys: I can proceed,
Well, at that moment, who should stalk
Forth boldly—to my face, indeed;
But Gauthier, and he thundered, "Stay!!"
And all stayed. "Bring no crowns, I say!
"Bring torches! Wind the penance-sheet
About her! Let her shun the chaste,
Or lay herself before their feet!
Shall she whose body I embraced
A night long, queen it in the day?
For honor's sake no crowns, I say!"

I? What I answered? As I live,
I never fancied such a thing
As answer possible to give.
What says the body when they spring
Some monstrous torture-engine's whole
Strength on it? No more says the soul,

Till out strode Gismond; then I knew
That I was saved. I never met
His face before, but, at first view,
I felt quite sure that God had set
Himself to Satan; who would spend
A minute's mistrust on the end?

He strode to Gauthier, in his thrall
Gave him the lie, then struck his mouth
With one back-handed blow that wrote
In blood men's verdict there. North, South,
East, West, I looked. The lie was dead,
And damned, and truth stood up instead.

This glads me most, that I enjoyed
The heart of the joy, with my content
In watching Gismond mulloyed
By any doubt of the event:
God took that on him— I was bid
Watch Gismond for my part: I did.

Did I not watch him while he let
His armorer just brace his greaves,
Rivet his hauberk, on the 1st
The while! His foot... my memory leaves
No least stamp out, nor how anon
He pulled his ringing gauntlet on.

And e'en before the trumpet's sound
Was finished, prone lay the false knight.

Prose as his lie, upon the ground:
Gismond flew at him, used no slight
Of the sword, but open-breasted drove,
Cleaving till out the truth he clove.

Which done, he dragged him to my feet
And said, "Here die, but end thy breath
In full confession, lest thou fleet
From my first, to God's second death!
Say, hast thou lied?" And, "I have lied
To God and her," he said, and died.

Then Gismond, kneeling to me, asked
What safe my heart holds, though no word
Could I repeat now, if I tasked
My powers forever, to a third
Dear even as you are. Pass the rest
Until I sank upon his breast.

Over my head his arm he flung
Against the world; and scarce I felt
His sword (that dripped by me and swung)
A little shifted in its belt:
For he began to say the while
How South our home lay many a mile.

So midst the shouting multitude
We two walked forth to never more
Return. My cousins have pursed
Their life, untroubled as before
I vexed them. Gauthier's dwelling-place
God lighten! May his soul find grace!

Our elder boy has got the clear
Great brow; though when his brother's black
Fall eye shows scorn, it... Gismond here?
And have you brought my tercel back?
I just was telling Adela
How many birds it struck since May.

THE BOY AND THE ANGEL

First published in Hood's Magazine, August, 1844. It was rewritten, with five new couples, and was published in 1845, in Dramatic Romances and Lyrics, or No. VII. of Bells and Pomegranates. When it appeared in the Poetical Works of 1868, a fresh verse was added. In 1864 the poem ended as follows:

"Go back and praise again
The early way, while I remain.

"Be again the boy all curl'd;
I will finish with the world."

Theocrite grew old at home,
Gabriel dwelt in Peter's dome.

MORNING, evening, noon and night,
"Praise God!" sang Theocrite.

Then to his poor trade he turned,
Whereby the daily meal was earned.

Hard he labored, long and well:
O'er his work the boy's curls fell.
But ever, at each period,
He stopped and sang, "Praise God!"

Then back again his curls he threw,
And cheerful turned to work anew.

Said Blaise, the listening monk, "Well done;
I doubt not thou art heard, my son:

"As well as if thy voice to-day
Were praising God, the Pope's great way.

"This Easter Day, the Pope at Rome
Praises God from Peter's dome."

Said Theocrite, "Would God that I Might praise him that great way, and die!"

Night passed, day shone,
And Theocrite was gone.

With God a day endures alway,
A thousand years are but a day.

God said in heaven, "Nor day nor night
Now brings the voice of my delight."

Then Gabriel, like a rainbow's birth,
Spread his wings and sank to earth;

Entered, in flesh, the empty cell,
Lived there, and played the craftsman well;

And morning, evening, noon and night,
Praised God in place of Theocrite.

And from a boy, to youth he grew:
The man put off the stripling's hue:

The man matured and fell away
Into the season of decay:

And ever o'er the trade he bent,
And ever lived on earth content.

(He did God's will; to him, all one
If on the earth or in the sun.)

God said, "A praise is in mine ear;
There is no doubt in it, no fear:

"So sing old worlds, and so
New worlds that from my footstool go.

"Clearer loves sound other ways:
I miss my little human praise."

Then forth sprang Gabriel's wings, off fell
The flesh disguise, remained the cell.

'T was Easter Day: he flew to Rome,
And paused above Saint Peter's dome.

In the tiring-room close by
The great outer gallery,

With his holy vestments dight,
Stood the new Pope, Theocrite:

And all his past career
Came back upon him clear,

Since when, a boy, he plied his trade,
Till on his life the sickness weighed;

And in his cell, when death drew near,
An angel in a dream brought cheer:

And rising from the sickness dream,
He grew a priest, and now stood here.

To the East with praise he turned,
And on his sight the angel burned.

"I bore thee from thy craftsman's cell,
And set thee here; I did not well.

"Vainly I left my angel-sphere,
Vain was thy dream of many a year.

"Thy voice's praise seemed weak; it dropped—
Creation's chorus stopped!

"Go back and praise again
The early way, while I remain.

"With that weak voice of our disdain,
Take up creation's pausing strain.

"Back to the cell and poor employ:
Resume the craftsman and the boy!"

Theocrite grew old at home;
A new Pope dwelt in Peter's dome.

One vanished as the other died:
They sought God side by side.

INSTANS TYRANNUS

Or the million or two, more or less,
I rule and possess.
One man, for some cause undefined,
Was least to my mind.

I struck him, he grovelled of course—
For, what was his force?
I pinned him to earth with my weight
And persistence of hate;

And he lay, would not moan, would not curse,
As his lot might be worse.

"Were the object less mean, would he stand
At the swing of my hand!
For obscurity helps him and blots
The hole where he squats.

So, I set my five wits on the stretch
To inveigle the wretch,
All in vain! Gold and jewels I threw,
Still he conched there perdue;

I tempted his blood and his flesh,
Hid in roses my mesh.
Choicest cates and the flagon's best spilth:
Still he kept to his filth.

IV

Had he kith now or kin, were access
To his heart, did I press:
Just a son or a mother to seize!
No such booty as these.
Were it simply a friend to pursue
Mid my million or two,
Who could pay me in person or pelf
What he owes me himself?
No! I could not but smile through my chafe:
For the fellow lay safe.
As his mates do, the midge and the nit,
Through minuteness, to wit.

v

Then a humor more great took its place
At the thought of his face,
The droop, the low cares of the mouth,
The trouble uncount
"Twixt the brows, all that air one is fain
To put out of its pain,
And, "no!" I admonished myself,
Is one baffled by toad or by rat?
The gravamen's in that!
How the lion, who crouches to suit
His back to my foot,
Would admire that I stand in debate!
But the small turns the great
If it vexes you,—that is the thing!
Toad or rat vex the king?
Though I waste half my realm to unearth
Toad or rat, "tis well worth!"

vi

So, I soberly laid my last plan
To extinguish the man
Round his creep-hole, with never a break,
Ran my fires for his sake;
Over-head, did my thunder combine
With my underground mine:
Till I looked from my labor content
To enjoy the event.

vii

When sudden...how think ye, the end?
Did I say "without friend"?
Say rather, from marge to blue marge
The whole sky grew his targe
With the sun's self for visible boss,
While an Arm ran across
Which the earth heaved beneath like a breast
Where the wretch was safe prest!
Do you see? Just my vengeance complete,
The man sprang to his feet,
Stood erect, caught at God's skirts, and prayed!
—So, I was afraid!

MESMERISM

All I believed is true!
I am able yet
All I want, to get

By a method as strange as new:
Dare I trust the same to you?
If at night, when doors are shut,
And the wood-worm picks,
And the death-watch ticks,
And the bar has a flag of smut,
And a cat's in the water-butt—

And the socket floats and flares,
And the house-beans grow,
And a foot unknown
Is surmised on the garret-stairs,
And the locks slip unawares—

And the spider, to serve his ends,
By a sudden thread,
Arms and legs outspread,
On the table's midst descends,
Comes to find, God knows what friends!—

If since eve drew in, I say,
I have sat and brought (To speak) my thought
To bear on the woman away,
Till I felt my hair turn gray—

Till I seemed to have and hold,
In the vacancy
'Twixt the wall and me,
From the hair-plait's chestnut-gold
To the foot in its muslin fold—

Have and hold, then and there,
Her, from head to foot,
Breathing and mute,
Passive and yet aware,
In the grasp of my steady stare—

Hold and have, there and then,
All her body and soul
That completes my whole,
All that women add to men,
In the clutch of my steady ken—

Having and holding, till
I imprint her fast
On the void at last
As the sun does whom he will
By the calotypist's skill—

Then,—if my heart's strength serve,
And through all and each
Of the veils I reach
To her soul and never swerve,
Knitting an iron nerve

Command her soul to advance
And inform the shape
Which has made escape
And before my countenance
Answers me glance for glance—

I, still with a gesture fit
Of my hands that best
Do my soul's behest,
Pointing the power from it,
While myself do steadfast sit—
Steadfast and still the same
On my object bent,
While the hands give vent
To my ardor and my aim
And break into very flame—

Then I reach, I must believe,
Not her soul in vain,
For to me again
It reaches, and past retrieve
Is wound in the toils I weave;

And must follow as I require,
As befits a thrill,
Bringing flesh and all,
Essence and earth-attire,
To the source of the tactile fire:

Till the house called hers, not mine,
With a growing weight
Seems to suffocate
If she break not its leaden line
And escape from its close confine.

Out of doors into the night!
On to the maze
Of the wild wood-ways,
Not turning to left nor right
From the pathway, blind with sight—

Making through rain and wind
O'er the broken shrubs,
'Twixt the stems and stubs,
With a still, composed, strong mind.
Nor a care for the world behind—

Swifter and still more swift,
As the crowding peace
Doth to joy increase
In the wide blind eyes uplift
Through the darkness and the drift!

While I— to the shape, I too
Feel my soul dilate
Nor a whit abate,
And relax not a gesture due,
As I see my belief come true.

For, there! have I drawn or no
Life to that lip?
Do my fingers dip
In a flame which again they throw
On the cheek that breaks aglow?

Ha! was the hair so first?
What, unfiled!
Made alive, and spread
Through the void with a rich outburst,
Chestnut gold-interpersed?

Like the doors of a casket-shrine,
See, on either side,
Her two arms divide
Till the heart betwixt makes sign,
Take me, for I am thine!

"Now—now"—the door is heard!
Hark, the stairs! and near—

Nearer—and here—
"Now!" and at call the third
She enters without a word.

On doth she march and on
To the fancied shape;
It is, past escape,
Herself, now: the dream is done
And the shadow and she are one.

First I will pray. Do Thou
That ownest the soul,
Yet wilt grant control
To another, nor disallow
For a time, restrain me now!

I admonish me while I may,
Not to squander guilt,
Since require Thou wilt
At my hand its price one day!
What the price is, who can say?

THE GLOVE

(Peter Ronsard "lagnitius.)

"Heigho," yawned one day King Francis.
"Distance all value enhances!
When a man's busy, why, leisure
 Strikes him as wonderful pleasure;
'Faith, and at leisure ones he?
Straightway he wants to be busy.
Here we've got peace; and agast I'm Caught thinking war the true pastime.
Is there a reason in metre?
Give us your speech, master Peter!"
I who, if mortal dare say so,
Ne'er am at loss with my Naso,
"Sire," I replied, "jobs prove cloudlets:
Men are the merest Axions"—
Here the King whistled aloud. "Let's —Heigho—go look at our lion!"
Such are the sorrowful chances
If you talk fine to King Francis.

And so, to the courtyard proceeding
Our company, Francis was leading,
Increased by new followers tenfold
Before he arrived at the penfold;
Lords, ladies, like clouds which bedizen
At sunset the western horizon.
And Sir De Lorge pressed 'mid the foremost
With the dame he professed to adore most.
Oh, what a face! One by fits eyed
Her, and the horrible pitside;
For the penfold surrounded a hollow
Which led where the eye scarce dared follow,
And shelled to the chamber secluded
Where Blueheard, the great lion, brooded.
The King hailed his keeper, an Arab
As glossy and black as a scarab,
And bade him make sport and at once stir
Up and out of his den the old monster.
They opened a hole in the wire-work
Across it, and dropped there a firework,
And fled: one's heart's beating redoubled;
A pause, while the pit's mouth was troubled,
The blackness and silence so utter.
By the firework's slow sparkling and sputter;
Then earth in a sudden contortion
Gave out to our gaze her abortion.

Such a brute! Were I friend Clement Marot
Whose experience of nature's but narrow,
And move it no facility to form a small mist
When he verifies David the Psalmist!
I should study that brute to describe you
Ilion Judae Leonum de Triba.

One's whole blood grew curling and creepy
To see the black mane, vast and heavy,
The tail in the air stiff and streaming,
The wide eyes, nor waxing nor waning,
As over the barrier which bounded
His platform, and as who surrounded
The barrier, they reached and they rested
On space that might stand him in best stead:
For who knew, he thought, what the amazement,
The eruption of clatter and blaze meant,
And if, in this minute of wonder,
No outlet, 'mid lightning and thunder,
Lay broad, and his shackles all shivered,
The lion at last was delivered?
Ay, that was the open sky o'erhead!
And you saw by the flash on his forehead,
By the hope in those eyes wide and steady,
He was leagues in the desert already,
Driving the flocks up the mountain,
Or catlike conched hard by the fountain
To waylay the date-gathering negroes:
So guarded he entrance or egress.

"How he stands!" quoth the King: "we may well swear.
No novice, we've won our spurs elsewhere
And so can afford the confession,
We exercise wholesome discretion
In keeping aloof from his threshold,
Once bold you, those jaws wan no fresh hold,
Their first would too pleasantly purloin
The visitor's brisquet or surliun:
But who's he would prove so fool-hardly?
Not the best man of Mariguan, parliun!"

The sentence no sooner was uttered,
Than over the rails a glove fluttered,
Fell close to the lion, and rested:
The dame 't was, who flung it and jested
With life so, De Lorge had been wooing
For months past; he sat there pursuing
His suit, weighing out with nonchalance
Fine speeches like gold from a balance,

Sound the trumpet, no true knight 's a carriar!
De Lorge made one leap at the barrier,
Walked straight to the glove,— while the lion
Ne'er moved, kept his far-reaching eye on
The palm-tree-edged desert-spring's sapphire,
And the musky oiled skin of the Kaffir,
Picked it up, and calmly retreated,
Leaped back where the lady was seated,
And full in the face of its owner
Flung the glove.

"Your heart's queen, you dethrone her?
So should I!" — cried the King "'twas mere vanity,
Not love, set that task to humanity!"

Lords and ladies alike turned with beating
From such a proved wolf in sheep's clothing.

Not so, I; for I caught an expression
In her brow's undisturbed self-possession
Amid the Court's scolding and meritment.
As if from no pleasing experience
She rose, yet of pain not much heedful
So long as the process was needful,—
As if she had tried in a crucible,
To what "speeches like gold" were reducible,
And, finding the finest prove copper,
Felt the smoke in her face was but proper;
To know what she had not to trust to,
Was worth all the ashes and dust too,
She went out 'mid howling and laughter;
Clement Marot stayed; I followed after,
And asked, as a grace, what it all meant?
If she wished not the rash deed's recallment?
"For I" — so I spoke — "am a poet:
Human nature,— behooves that I know it!"

She told me, "Too long had I heard
Of the deed proved alone by the word:
For my love — what De Lorge would not dare!
With my scorn — what De Lorge could compare!
And the endless descriptions of death
He would brave when my lip formed a breath,
I must reckon as braved, or, of course,
Doubt his word — and moreover, perfec.
For such gifts as no lady could spurn,
Must offer my love in return.
When I looked on your lion, it brought
All the dangers at once to my thought,
Encountered by all sorts of men,
Before he was lodged in his den. —
From the poor slave whose club or bare hands
Dug the trap, set the snare on the sands,
With no King and no court to applaud,
By no shame, should he shrink, overawed,
Yet to capture the creature made shift,
That his rude boys might laugh at the gift.
— To the page who last leaped o'er the fence
Of the pit, on no greater pretence
Than to get back the bonnet he dropped.
Lest his pay for a week should be stopped,
So, wiser I judged it to make
One trial what "death for my sake"
Really meant, while the power was yet mine,
Than to wait until time should define
Such a phrase not so simply as I,
Who took it to mean just 't to die,
The blow a glove gives is but weak;
Does the mark yet discolor my cheek?
But when the heart suffers a blow,
Will the pain pass so soon, do you know?"

I looked, as away she was sweeping,
And saw a youth eagerly keeping
As close as he dared to the doorway,
So doubt that a noble should more weigh
His life than befits a plebeian;
And yet, had our brute been Nemean —
(I judge by a certain calm fervor
The youth stepped with, forward to serve her) He'd have scarce thought you did him the worst turn
DRAMATIC ROMANCES

If you whispered, "Friend, what you'd get, first earn!"
And what, shortly after, she carried
Her shame from the Court, and they married,
To that marriage some happiness, mangle
The voice of the Court, I dared augur.

For De Lorge, he made women with men vie.
Those in wonder and praise, these in envy;
And in short stood so plain a head taller
That he wooded and won... how do you call her?
The beauty, that rose in the sequel
To the King's love, who loved her a week well.
And 't was noticed he never would honor
De Lorge (who looked daggers upon her)
With the easy commission of stretching
His legs in the service, and fetching
His wife, from her chamber, those straying
Sad gloves she was always mislaying,
While the King took the closet to chat in,—
But of course this adventure came at in,
And never the King told the story,
How bringing a glove brought such glory,
But the wife smiled — "His nerves are grown firmer:
Mine he brings now and utters no murmur."

VENIENTI OCCURRIT MORSI!
With which moral I drop my theorbo.

TIME'S REVENGES

I've a Friend, over the sea;
I like him, but he loves me.
It all grew out of the books I write;
They find such favor in his sight
That he slaughters you with savage looks
Because you don't admire my books.
He does himself though,—and if some vein
Were to snap to-night in this heavy brain,
To-morrow month, if I lived to try,
Round should I just turn quietly,
Or out of the bedclothes stretch my hand
Till I found him, come from his foreign land
To be my nurse in this poor place,
And make my broth and wash my face
And light my fire and, all the while,
I bear with his old good-humored smile
That I told him "Better keep away
Than come and kill me, night and day.
With, worse than fever thobs and shoots,
The creaking of his clumsy boots."
I am as sure that this he would do,
As that Saint Paul's is striking two.
And I think I rather... woe is me!

—Yes, rather should see him than not see,
If lifting a hand could sent him there
Before me in the empty chair
To-night, when my head aches indeed,
And I can neither think nor read,
Nor make those purple fingers hold
The pen; this garret's freezing cold!

And I've a Lady—there he wakes,
The laughing fiend and prince of snakes
Within me, at her name, to pray
Fate send some creature in the way
Of my love for her, to be down-torn,
Uphurst and outward-borne,
So I might prove myself that sea
Of passion which I needs must be!
Call my thoughts false and my fancies quaint
And my style infirm and its figures faint,
All the critics say, and more blame yet,
And not one angry word you get.
But, please you, wonder I would put
My cheek beneath that lady's foot
Rather than trample under mine
The laurels of the Florentine,
And you shall see how the devil spends
A fire God gave for other ends!
I tell you, I stride up and down
This garret, crowned with love's best crown,
And feasted with love's perfect feast,
To think I kill for her, at least.
Body and soul and peace and fame,
Alike youth's end and manhood's aim,—
So is my spirit, as flesh with sin,
Filled full, eaten out and in
With the face of her, the eyes of her,
The lips, the little chin, the stir
Of shadow round her mouth, and she
— I'll tell you — calms would decrece
That I should roast at a slow fire,
If that would compass her desire
And make her one whom they invite
To the famous ball to-morrow night.

There may be heaven; there must be hell;
Meantime, there is our earth here — well!

THE ITALIAN IN ENGLAND

Both this poem and the following were written after Browning's visit to Italy in 1844. A originally published they were entitled Ital, in England and England in Italy. The dramatic incident in the former poem was a re- enactment of a particular historic incident.

That second time they hunted me
From hill to plain, from shore to sea,
And Austria, bounding far and wide
Her blood-hounds through the country-side,
Breathed hot and instant on my trace.
— I made six days a hiding-place
Of that dry green old aqueduct
Where I and Charles, when boys, have plucked
The fire-flies from the roof above,
Bright creeping through the moss they love:
How long it seems since Charles was lost!
Six days the soldiers crossed and crossed
The country in my very sight:
And when that peril ceased at night,
The sky broke out in red dismay
With signal fires; well, there I lay
Close covered over in my recess,
Up to the neck in ferns and cross,
Thinking on Metternich our friend,
And Charles's miserable end,
And much beside, two days; the third,
Hunger o'ercame me when I heard
The peasants from the village go
To work among the maize; you know,
With us in Lombardy, they bring
Provisions packed on mules, a string
With little bells that cheer their task,
And casks, and boughs on every cask
To keep the sun's heat from the wine;
These let pass in jingling line.
And, close on them, dear noisy crew,
The peasants from the village, too;
For at the very rear would troop
Their wives and sisters in a group
To help, I knew. When these had passed,
I threw my glove to strike the last,
Taking the chance: she did not start,
Much less cry out, but stopped apart,
One instant rapidly glanced round,
And saw me beckon from the ground;
A wild bush grows and hides my crypt;
She picked my glove up while she stripped
A branch off, then rejoined the rest
With that; my glove lay in her breast.
Then I drew breath: they disappeared:
It was for Italy I feared.

An hour, and she returned alone
Exactly where my glove was thrown.
Meanwhile came many thoughts; on me
Rested the hopes of Italy;
I had devised a certain tale
Which, when 't was told her, could not fail
Persuade a peasant of its truth;
I meant to call a freak of youth
This hiding, and give hopes of pay,
And no temptation to betray,
But when I saw that woman's face,
Its calm simplicity of grace,
Our Italy's own attitude
In which she walked thus far, and stood,
Planting each naked foot so firm,
To crush the snake and spare the worm—
At first sight of her eyes, I said,
...I am that man upon whose head
They fix the price, because I hate
The Austrians over us: the State
Will give you gold—oh, gold so much!—
If you betray me to their clutch,
And be your death, for aught I know,
If once they find you saved their foe,
Now, you must bring me food and drink,
And also paper, pen and ink,
And carry safe what I shall write
To Padua, which you'll reach at night
Before the dinnno shuts: go in,
And wait till Tenebre begin;
Walk to the third confessional,
Between the pillar and the wall,
And kneeling whisper, Whence comes peace?
Say it a second time, then cease;
And if the voices inside returns,
From Christ and Freedom; what concerns
The cause of Peace?—for answer, slip
My letter where you placed your lip;
Then come back happy we have done
Our mother service—t, the son,
As you the daughter of our land!

Three mornings more, she took her stand
In the same place, with the same eyes:
I was no surer of surprise
Than of her coming. We conferred
Of her own prospects, and I heard
She had a lover—stout and tall,
She said—then let her eyelids fall,
"He could do much"—as if some doubt
Entered her heart,—then, passing out,
"She could not speak for others, who
Had other thoughts; herself she knew;"
And so she brought me drink and food.
After four days, the scouts pursued
Another path; at last arrived
The help my Paduan friends contrived
To furnish me: she brought the news,
For the first time I could not choose
But kiss her hand, and lay my own
Upon her head—"This faith was shown
To Italy, our mother; she Uses my hand and blesses thee."
She followed down to the sea-shore;
I left and never saw her more.

How very long since I have thought
Concerning—much less wished for—aight
Beside the good of Italy,
For which I live and mean to die!
I never was in love; and since
Charles proved false, what shall now convince
My inmost heart I have a friend?
However, if I pleased to spend
Real wishes on myself—say, three—
I know at least what one should be,
I would grasp Metternich until
I felt his red wet throat distil
In blood through these two hands. And next,
—Nor much for that and I perplexed—
Charles, perjured traitor, for his part,
Should die slow of a broken heart
Under his new employers. Last
—Ah, there, what should I wish? For fast
Do I grow old and out of strength.
If I resolved to seek at length
My father's house again, how scared
They all would look, and unprepared!
My brothers live in Austria's pay
—Disowned me long ago, men say;
And all my early mates who used
To praise me so—perhaps induced
More than one early step of mine—
Are turning wise; while some opine
"Freedom grows license," some suspect
"Haste breeds delay," and recollect
They always said, much premature
Beginnings never could endure!
So, with a slilen "All's for best,"
The land seems settling to its rest,
I think then, I should wish to stand
This evening in that dear, lost land,
Over the sea the thousand miles,
And know if yet that woman smiles
With the calm smile; some little farm
She lives in there, no doubt: what harm
If I sit on the door-side bench,
And, while her spindle made a tetch
Fantastically in the dust,
Inquired of all her fortunes—just
Her children's ages and their names,
And what may be the husband's aims
For each of them. I'd talk this out,
And sit there, for an hour about,
Then kiss her hand once more, and lay
Mine on her head, and go my way.

So much for idle wishing — how
It steals the time! To business now.

THE ENGLISHMAN IN ITALY
Piano di Sorrento

Forti, Forti, my beloved one,
Sit here by my side,
On my knees put up both little feet!
I was sure, if I tried,
I could make you laugh spite of Scirocco.

Now, open your eyes,
Let me keep you amused till he vanish
In black from the skies,
With telling my memories over
As you tell your heads;
All the Plain saw me gather, I garland
— The flowers or the weeds.

Time for rain! for your long hot dry Autumn
Had net-worked with brown
The white skin of each grape on the bunches,
Marked like a quail's crown,
Those creatures you make such account of,
Whose heads, — speckled white
Over brown like a great spider's back,
As I told you last night, —
Your mother bites off for her supper.

Red-ripe as could be,
Pomegranates were chapping and splitting
In halves on the tree:
And betwixt the loose walls of great flintstone,
Or in the thick dust
On the path, or straight out of the rock-side,
Wherever could thrust
Some burnt sprig of bold hardly rock-flower
Its yellow face up.
For the prize were great butterflies fighting,
Some five for one cup.

So, I guessed, ere I got up this morning,
What change was in store,
By the quick rustle-down of the quail-nets
Which woke me before
I could open my shutter, made fast
With a bough and a stone,
And look through the twisted dead vine-twigs,
Sole lattice that's known.
Quick and sharp rang the rings down the ncpoles.
While, busy beneath,
Your priest and his brother tugged at them,
The rain in their teeth.
And out upon all the flat house-roofs
Where split figs lay drying,
The girls took the frails under cover:
Nor use seemed in trying
To get out the boats and go fishing,
For, under the cliff,
Fierce the black water frothed o'er the blind-rack
No seeing our skiff.

Arrive about noon from Amalfi,
— Our fisher arrive,
And pitch down his basket before us,
All trembling alive
With pink and gray jellies, your sea-fruit;
You touch the strange lumps,
And months gape there, eyes open, all manner
Of horns and of lumps,
Which only the fisher looks grave at,
While round him likeumps
Cling screaming the children as naked
And brown as his shrumps;
Himself too as bare to the middle
— You see round his neck
The string and its brass coin suspended,
That saves him from wreck.
But to-day not a boat reached Salerno,
So back, to a man,
Came our friends, with whose help in the vineyards
Grape-harvest began,
In the vat, halfway up in our house-side,
Like blood the juice spins,
While your brother all bare-legged is dancing
Till breathless he grins
Dead-beaten in effort on effort
To keep the grapes under.
Since still when he seems all but master,
In pours the fresh plunder
From girls who keep coming and going
With basket on shoulder,
And eyes shut against the rain’s driving;
Your girls that are older,
For under the hedges of aloe,
And where, on its bed
Of the orchard’s black mould, the love-apple
Lies pulpy and red,
All the young ones are kneeling and filling
Their laps with the snails
Tempted out by this first rainy weather, —
Your best of regales,
As to-night will be proved to my sorrow,
When, sapping in state,
We shall feast our grape-gleaners (two dozen,
Three over one plate)
With lasagne so tempting to swallow
In slippery ropes,
And gourds fried in great purple slices,
That color of popes.
Meantime, see the grape bunch they’ve brought you:
The rain-water slips
O'er the heavy blue bloom on each globe
Which the wasp to your lips
Still follows with fretful persistence:
Nay, taste, while awake.
This half of a curd-white smooth ebe se-ball
That peels, flake by flake,
Like an onion, each smoother and whiter;
Next, sip this weak wine
From the thin green glass flask, with its stopper,
A leaf of the vine;
And end with the prickly-pear's red flesh
That leaves through its juice
The stony black seeds on your pearl-teeth.
Scirocco is loose!

Hark, the quick, whistling pelt of the olives
Which, thick in one's track,
Tempt the stranger to pick it, and bite them,
Though not yet half black!
How the old twisted olive trunks shudder,
The meandlers let fall
Their hard fruit, and the brittle great fig-trees
Snap off, figs and all,
For here comes the whole of the tempest!
No refuge, but creep
Back again to my side and my shoulder,
And listen or sleep.

Oh, how will your country show next week,
When all the vine-boughs
Have been stripped of their foliage to pasture
The mules and the cows?
Last eve, I rode over the mountains;
Your brother, my guide,
Soon left me, to feast on the myrtles
That offered, each side,
Their fruit-balls, black, glossy and luscious, —
Or strip from the sorbs
A treasure, or, rose and wondrous,
Those shy gold orbs!
But my mule picked his sure sober path out,
Just stopping to neigh
When he recognized down in the valley
His mates on their way
With the faggots and barrels of water;
And soon we emerged
From the plain, where the woods could scarce follow;
And still as we urged
Our way, the woods wondered, and left us.
As up we still trudged,
Though the wild path grew wilder each instant,
And place was even grudging
'Mid the rock-chasms and piles of loose stones
Like the loose broken teeth
Of some monster which climbed there to die
From the ocean beneath —
Place was grudging to the silver-gray fume-weed
That clung to the path,
And dark rosemary ever-dying
That spire the wind's wrath,
So loves the salt rock's face to seaward,
And lentisks as stanch
To the stone where they root and bear berries,
And ... what shows a branch
Coral-colored, transparent, with circlets
Of pale seagreen leaves;
Over all trod my mule with the caution
Of gleaners o'er sheaves,
Still, foot after foot like a lady,
Till, round after round,
He climbed to the top of Calvano,
And God's own profound
Was above me, and round me the mountains,
And under, the sea,
And within me my heart to bear witness
What was and shall be,
Oh, heaven and the terrible crystal!
No rampart excludes
Your eye from the life to be lived
In the blue solitude;
Oh, those mountains, their infinite movement!
Still moving with you;

For, ever some new head and breast of them
Thrusts into view
To observe the intruder; you see it
If quickly you turn
And, before they escape you, surprise them.
They grudge you should learn
How the soft plains they look on, lean over
And love they pretend
— Cower beneath them, the flat sea-pine crouches.
The wild fruit-trees bend.
Even the myrtle-leaves curl, shrink and shut:
All is silent and grave;
'Tis a sensuous and timorous beauty,
How fair! but a slave.
So, I turned to the sea; and there slumbered
As greenly as ever
Those isles of the siren, your Galli;
No ages can sever
The Three, nor enable their sister
To join them, — halfway
On the voyage, she looked at Ulysses
No farther to-day,
Though the small one, just launched in the wave
Watches breast-high and steady
From under the rock, her bold sister
Swam halfway already.
Fortune, shall we sail there together
And see from the sides
Quite new rocks show their faces, new haunts
Where the siren abides?
Shall we sail round and round them, close over
The rocks, though unseen,
That ruffle the gray glossy water
To glorious green?
Then scramble from splinter to splinter,
Reach land and explore,
On the largest, the strange square black turret
With never a door,
Just a loop to admit the quick lizards;
Then, stand there and hear
The birds' silent singing, that tells us
What life is, so clear?
— The secret they sang to Ulysses
When, ages ago.
He heard and he knew this life's secret
I hear and I know.

Ah, see! The sun breaks o'er Calvano;
He strikes the great gloom
And flutters it o'er the mount's summit
In airy gold fume,
All is over, Look out, see the gypsy,
Our tinker and smith,
Has arrived, set up bellows and forge,
And down-squatted forthwith
To his hammering, under the wall there;
One eye keeps aloof
Theurchins that itch to be putting
His jews' harps to proof,
While the other, through locks of curled wire.
Is watching how sleek
Shines the hog, come to share in the windfall
Chew abbot's own cheek!
All is over, Wake up and come out now,
And down let us go,
And see the fine things got in order
At church for the show.
Of the Sacrament, set forth this evening;
To-morrow's the Feast.
Of the Rosary's Virgin, by no means
Of Virgins the least.
As you'll hear in the off-hand discourse
Which (all nature, no art)
The Dominican brother, these three weeks,
Was getting by heart.
Not a pillar nor post but is dizened
With red and blue paper;
All the roof waves with ribbons, each altar
Abaze with long tapers;
But the great masterpiece is the scaffold
Rigged glorious to hold
All the fiddlers and fitters and drummers
And trumpeters bold,
Not afraid of Bellini nor Anber,
Who, when the priest's horse,
Will strike us up something that's brisk
For the feast's second course.
And then will the flaxen-wigged Image
Be carried in pomp
Through the plain, while in gallant procession
The priests mean to stomp.
All round the glad church lie old bottles
With gunpowder stopped,
Which will be, when the Image re-enters,
Religiously popped;
And at night from the crest of Calvano
Great bonfires will hang.
On the plain will the trumpets join chorus,
And now proppers bang.
At all events, come—to the garden
As far as the wall;
See me tap with a hoe on the plaster
Till out there shall fall
A scorpion with wide angry nippers!

"Such trifles!" you say?
Fortin, in my England at home,
Men meet gravely to-day.
And debate, if abolishing Corn-laws
Be righteous and wise
—If 't were proper, Stefano should vanish
In black from the skies!

IN A GONDOLA

In a letter to Miss Haworth, Browning writes,
"I am getting to love painting as I did once. . . . I chanced to call on Forster the other day, and he pressed me into committing verse on the instant, not the minute, in Macfie's behalf, who has wrought a divine Venetian work, it seems, for the British Institution. Forster described it well—but I could do nothing better than this wooden ware—all the 'properties,' as we say, were given and the problem was how to catalogue them in rhyme and unreason." Therupon followed the first stanza of the following poem; but after seeing the picture he was moved to go on and carry the poem through to a real end.

He says.
I send my heart up to thee, all my heart
In this my singing,
For the stars help me, and the sea bears part;
The very night is clinging
Closer to Venice's streets to leave one space
Above me, whence thy face
May light my joyous heart to thee its dwelling-place.

She speaks.
Say after me, and try to say
My very words, as if each word
Came from you of your own accord,
In your own voice, in your own way:
'Tis this woman's heart and soul and brain
Are mine as much as this gold chain.
She bids me wear; which 'tis (say again)
'I choose to make by cherishing
A precious thing; or to choose to fling
Over the boat-side, ring by ring.'
And yet once more say . . . no word more!
Since words are only words. Give o'er!

Unless you call me, all the same,
Familiarly by my pet name,
Which if the Three should hear you call,
And me reply to, would proclaim
At once our secret to them all.
Ask of me, too, command me, blame—
Do, break down the partition-wall
'Twixt us, the day-light world beholds
Curtailed in dusk and splendid folds!
What's left but—all of me to take?
I am the Three's; prevent them, slake
Your thirst! 'Tis said, the Arab sage,
In practising with gems, can loose
Their subtle spirit in his crane
And leave but ashes: so, sweet mage,
Leave them my ashes when thou use
Sucks out my soul, thy heritage!

He sings.
Past we glide, and past, and past!
Words that poor Agnese doing
Where they make the shutters fast?
Gray Zanobi’s just a-waiting
To his cough the purchased bride:
Past we glide!

Past we glide, and past, and past!
Why’s the Pucci Palace flaring
Like a beacon to the blast?
Guests by hundreds, not one caring
If the dear host’s neck were wirèd?
Past we glide!

She sings.
The moth’s kiss, first!
Kiss me as if you made believe
You were not sure, this eve,
How my face, your flower, had purred
Its petals up: so, here and there
You brush it, till I grow aware
Who wants me, and wide ope I burst.

The bee’s kiss, now!
Kiss me as if you entered gay
IN A GONDOLA

My heart at some moonday,
A bead that darts not disallow.
The claim, so all is rendered up,
And passively its shattered cup
Over your head to sleep I bow.

He sings.

What are we two?
I am a Jew,
And carry thee, farther than friends can pursue,
To a feast of our tribe;
Where they need thee to bribe
The devil that blasts them unless he imbibes
Thy . . . Scatter the vision forever! And now,
As of old, I am I, thou art thou!

Say again, what we are?
The sprite of a star,
I bare thee above where the destinies bar
My plumes their full play
Till a ruddier ray
Than my pale one announce there is withering away
Some . . . Scatter the vision forever! And now,
As of old, I am I, thou art thou!

He muses.

Oh, which were best, to roam or rest?
The land's lap or the water's breast?
To sleep on yellow miller-sheaves,
Or swim in lucid shallows just
Eluding water-lily leaves.
An inch from Death's black fingers, thrust
To lock you, whose release he must;
Which life were best on Summer eyes?

He speaks, musing.

Lie back; could thought of mine improve you?
From this shoulder let there spring
A wing; from this, another wing;
Wings, not legs and feet, shall move you!
Snow-white must they spring, to blend
With your flesh, but I intend
They shall deepen to the end,
Broader, into burning gold.
Till both wings crescent-wise enfold
Your perfect self, from 'neath your feet
To o'er your head, where, lo, they meet
As if a million sword-blades hurled
Defiance from you to the world!

Rescue me thou, the only real!
And scare away this mad ideal
That came, nor motions to depart!
Thanks! Now, stay ever as thou art!

Still he muses.

What if the Three should catch at last
Thy serenader? While there's cast
Paul's cloak about my head, and last
Gian pinions me. Himself had past
His stylet through my back; I reek;
And . . . is it thou I feel?

They trail me, these three godless knaves,
Past every church that saints and savages.

Nor stop till, where the cold sea raves
By Lido's wet accursed graves,
They scoop mine, roll me to its brink,
And . . . on thy breast I sink!

She replies, musing.

Dip your arm o'er the boat-side, elbow-deep,
As I do; thus: were death so unlike sleep,
Caught this way? Death's to tear from flame or steel,
Or poison doubtless; but from water—feel!

Go find the bottom! Would you stay me?
There!
Now pluck a great blade of that ribbon-grass
To plait in where the foolish jewel was,
I hung away; since you have praised my hair,
'T is proper to be choice in what I wear.

He speaks.

Row home? must we row home? Too surely Know I where its front's demurely
Over the Giudecca piled;
Window just with window muniting,
Door on door exactly waiting,
All's the set face of a child;
But behind it, where's a trace
Of the snaiveeness and reserve,
And formal lines without a curve,
In the same child's playing-face?
No two windows look one way
O'er the small sea-water thread
Below them. Ah, the autumn day
I, passing, saw you overhead!
First, out a cloud of curtain blew,
Then a sweet cry, and last came you—
To catch your glory that must needs
Escape just then, of all times then,
To peck a tall plant's fleecy seeds,
And make me happiest of men.
I scarce could breathe to see you reach
So far back o'er the balcony
To catch him ere he climbed too high
Above you in the Smyrna peach,
That quick the round smooth cord of gold,
This coiled hair on your head, unravelled.
Fell down you like a gorgeous snake
The Roman girls were wont, of old,
When Rome there was, for coolness' sake
To let lie curling o'er their bosoms,
Dear lory. may his beak retain
Ever its delicate rose stain
As if the wounded lotus-blossoms
Had marked their theft to know again!

Stay longer yet, for others' sake
Than mine! What should your chamber do?
—With all its rarities that ache
In silence while day lasts, but wake
At night-time and their life renew,
Suspended just to pleasure you
Who brought against their will together
These objects, and, while day lasts, weave
Around them such a magic tether
That dumb they look: your harp, believe,
With all the sensitive tight strings
Which dare not speak, now to itself
Breathes solemnly, as if some elf
WENT IN AND OUT THE CHORDS. HIS WINGS
MAKE MARMUR WHERESOEVER THEY GRAZIE.
AS A NANGLED MARY, BETWEEN THE MAZE
OF MIDNIGHT PALACE-PILLARS, ON AND ON, TO SOW GOD'S PLAGUES, HAVE GONE-
THROUGH GUILTY GLORIOUS BABYLON,
AND WHILE SUCH MARMURS FLOW, THE NYMPH
BENDS O'ER THE HARP-TOP FROM HER SHELL
AS THE DRY LIMPET FOR THE LUNG
COME WITH A TUNE HE KNOWS SO WELL,
AND HOW YOUR STATUES' HEARTS MUST SWELL!
AND HOW YOUR PICTURES MUST DESCEND
TO SEE EACH OTHER, FRIEND WITH FRIEND!
OH, COULD YOU TAKE THEM BY SURPRISE,
YOU'D FIND SCHIDONE'S EAGER DUCHESS
DOING THE QUAINTEST COURTESIES
TO THAT PRIM SAINT BY HASTE-THEE-LAKE!
AND, DEEPER INTO HER ROCK DEN,
BEOLD CASTELFRANCO'S MAGDALENE
YOU'D FIND RETREATED FROM THE KEN
OF THAT ROBED COURSE-KEEPING SER --
AS IF THE TIZIAN THINKS OF HER,
AND IS NOT, RATHER, GRAVELY BENT
ON SEEING FOR HIMSELF WHAT TOYS
ARE THESE, HIS PROGENY INVENT,
WHAT LITTER NOW THE BOARD EMPLOYS
WHEREON HE SIGNED A DOCUMENT
THAT GOT HIM MURDERED! EACH ENJOYS
ITS NIGHT SO WELL, YOU CANNOT BREAK
THE SPORT UP, SO, INDEED MUST MAKE MORE STAY WITH ME, FOR OTHERS' SAKE.

SHE SPOKES.

TO-MORROW, IF A HARPS-STRING, SAY,
IS USED TO TIE THE JASMINE BACK
THAT OVERFLOODES MY WINDOW WITH SWEETS
CONVIVE YOUR ZORJI SOMEHOW MEETS
MY ZANZE! IF THE RIBBON'S BLACK,
THE THREE ARE WATCHING: KEEP AWAY!

YOUR GONDOLA -- LET ZORJI WREATH
A MESH OF WATER-WEEDS AROUND
ITS PROW, AS IF HE WORKED NO END.
HAD STRUCK SOME QUAY OR BRIDGE-FOOT STAIR!
THAT I MAY THROW A PAPER OUT
AS YOU AND HE GO UNDERNEATH.

THERE'S ZANZE'S VIGILANT TAPER: SAFE ARE WE,
ONLY ONE MINUTE MORE TO-NIGHT WITH ME?
RESUME YOUR PAST Self OF A MONTH AGO!
BE YOU THE BASHFUL GALLANT, I WILL BE
THE LADY WITH THE COLDEST BREAST THAN SNOW.
NOW HOW YOU, AS BECOMES, OR TOUCH MY HAND
MORE THAN I TOUCH YOURS WHEN I STEP TO LAND, AND SAY, "ALL THANKS, SIORE!"

HER HEART TO HEART.

AND LIPS TO LIPS! YET ONCE MORE, ERE WE PART, CHASB ME AND MAKE ME THINE, AS MINER THOU ART!
HE IS SURPRISED, AND STARTED.

IT WAS ORDAINED TO BE SO, SWEET! -- AND BEST
COMES NOW, BENEATH THINE EYES, UPON THY BREAST.

STILL KISS ME! CARE NOT FOR THE COWARDS! CARE
ONLY TO PUT ASIDE THY BEAUTIFUL HAIR
MY BLOOD WILL BURN! THE THREE, I DO NOT SEEN
TO DEATH, BECAUSE THEY NEVER LIVED: BUT I HAVE LIVED INDEED, AND SO -- (YET ONE MORE KISS) -- CAN DIE!

WARRING

An account of Alfred Domett, Browning's early friend, who was the occasion of this poem, will be found in the notes.

I

WHAT'S BECOME OF WARRING
Since he gave us all the slip,
Chose land-travel or seafaring,
Boots and chest or staff and scrip,
Rather than pace up and down
Any longer London town?

II

Who 'd have guessed it from his lip
Or his brow's accustomed bearing,
On the night he thus took ship
Or started landward? -- little caring!
For us, it seems, who slipped together
(Friends of his too, I remember)
And walked home through the merry weather,
The snowiest in all December,
I left his arm that night myself
For what's his-name's, the new prose-poet
Who wrote the book there, on the shelf--
How, forsooth, was I to know it
If Waring meant to glide away
Like a ghost at break of day?
Never looked he half so gay!

III

He was prouder than the devil:
How he must have cursed our revel!
And many other meetings,
Indoor visits, outdoor greetings,
As up and down he paced this London,
With no work done, but great works undone,
Where scarce twenty knew his name,
Why not, then, have earlier spoken,
Written, burstled? Who's to blame.
If your silence kept unbroken?
"True, but there were sundry jottings,
Stray-leaves, fragments, blurs and blottings,
Certain first steps were achieved
Already which? -- (is that your meaning?)
"Had well borne out who's believed
In more to come!" But who goes cleaning
Hedgeside chance-blades, while full-sheaved
Stand cornfields by him? Pride, o'erwrought
Pride alone, puts forth such claims
Of the day's distinguished names.

IV

Meantime, how much I loved him,
I find out now I've lost him,
I who cared not if I moved him,
Who could so carelessly accord him,
Henceforth never shall get free
Of his ghostly company,
His eyes that just a little wink
As deep I go into the merit
Of this and that distinguished spirit
His cheeks' raised color, soon to sink.
As long I dwell on some stupendous
And tremendous (Heaven defend us!)
Monstrous-form-ingens-horrordous
Demoniac-terrible
Pennant's latest piece of graphic.
Nay, my very wrist grows warm
With his dragging weight of arm.
Even so, swimmingly appears,
Through one's after-supper musings,
Some lost lady of old years.
With her hecnoteus vain endeavor
And goodness unrepaid as ever;
The face, accustomed to refrains,
We, puppies that we were . . . Oh never Surely, nice of conscience, scrupled
Being aught like false, forsooth, to?
Telling aught but honest truth to?
What a sin, had we centupled
Its possessor's grace and sweetness!
Not she heard in its completeness
Truth, for truth's a weighty matter,
And truth, at issue, we can't flatter!
Well, 'tis done with; she's exempt
From damming us through such a sorry;
And so she glides, as down a valley,
Taking up with her contempt,
Past our reach; and in, the flowers
Shut her unregarded hours.

Oh, could I have him back once more.
This Waring, but one half-day more!
Back, with the quiet face of yore,
So hungy for acknowledgment
Like mine! 'T'ld fool him to his bent.
Feed, should not he, to heart's content?
I'd say, "to only have conceived,
Planned your great works, apart from progress,
Surpasses little works achieved!"
I'd the world, I should be believed,
I'd make such havoc of the claims.
Of the day's distinguished names
To feast him with, as feasts an ogress
Her feverish sharp-toothed gold-crowned child!
Or as one feasts a creature rarely
Captured here, unreconcile
To capture; and completely gives
Its petty humors license, barely
Requiring that it lives.

Ichabod, Ichabod,
The glory is departed!
Travels Waring East away?
Who, of knowledge, by hearsay,
Reports a man upset
Somewhere as a god.
Hordes grown European-hearted,
Millions of the wild made tame
On a sudden at his fame?
In Vishan-land what Avatar?
Or who in Moscow, toward the Czar,
With the demurest of footfalls
Over the Kremlin's pavement bright
With serpentine and syeneite,
Steps, with five other Generals
That simultaneously take snuff,
For each to have pretext enough
And kierchiefwise unfold his sash
Which, softness' self, is yet the stuff
To hold fast where a steel chain snaps,
And leave the grand white neck no gash?
Waring in Moscow, to those rough
Cold northern natures born perhaps,
Like the lambwhite maiden dear
From the circle of nate kings
Unable to repress the tear,
Each as his sceptre down he flings,
To Dian's fane at Taurica,
Where now a captive priestess, she alway
Mingles her tender grave Hellenic speech
With theirs, tuned to the hailstone-beaten beach
As pours some pigeon, from the myrrhly hands
Rapt by the whirlblast to fierce Scythian strands
Where breed the swallows, her melodious cry
Amid their barbarous twitter!
In Russia? Never! Spain were fitter!
Ay, most likely 't is in Spain
That we and Waring meet again
Now, while he turns down that cool narrow lane
Into the blackness, out of grave Madrid
All fire and shine, abrupt as when there's slid
Its stiff gold blazing pall
From some black collif-hid.
Or, best of all,
I love to think
The leaving us was just a feint;
Back here to London did he sink,
And now works on without a winkle
Of sleep, and we are on the brink
Of something great in fresco-paint:
Some garret's ceiling, walls and floor,
Up and down and o'er and o'er
He splashes, as none splashed before
Since great Cidara Tolodore.
Or Music means this land of ours
Some favor yet, to pity won
By Purcell from his Rosy Bowers,—
"Give me my so-long promised son,
Let Waring end what I began!"
Then down he creeps and out he steals
Only when the night conceals
His face; in Kent 'ts cherry-time,
Or hops are picking; or at prime
Of March he wanders as, too happy,
Years ago when he was young,
Some mild eye when woods grew sappy
And the early moths had sprung
To life from many a trembling sheath
Woven the warm boughs beneath;
While small birds said to themselves
What should soon be actual song,
And young gnats, by tens and twelves,
Made as if they were the throng
That crowd around and carry aloft
The sound they have nursed, so sweet and pure,
Out of a myriad noises soft,
Into a tone that can endure
Amid the noise of a July noon
When all God's creatures crave their boon,
All at once and all in tune,
And get it, happy as Waring then,
Having first within his ken
What a man might do with men:
And far too glad, in the even-glow.
To mix with the world he meant to take
Into his hand, he told you, so—
And out of it his world to make,
To contract and to expand
As he shut or opened his hand.
O' Waring, what's to really be?
A clear stage and a crowd to see!
Some Garrick, say, out shall not be
The heart of Hamlet's mystery plac'd?
Or, where most uncanny beasts are rife,
Some Junius—am I right?—shall tuck
His sleeve, and forth with flaying-knife!
Some Chatterton shall have the luck
Of calling Rowley into life!
Some one shall somehow run a-muck
With this old world for want of strife
Sound asleep. Contrive, contrive
To rouse us, Waring! Who's alive?
Our men scarce seem in earnest now,
Distinguished names! but 'tis, somehow,
As if they played at being names
Still more distinguished, like the games
Of children. Turn our sport to earnest
With a visage of the sternest:
Bring the real times back, confessed
Still better than our very best!

II

"When I last saw Waring ..."
('How all turned to him who spoke!
You saw Waring? Truth or joke?
In land-travel or sea-faring?)"

"We were sailing by Triest
Where a day or two we harbored:
A sunset was in the West,
When, looking over the vessel's side,
One of our company espied
A sudden speck to larboard;
And as a sea-duck flies and swims
At once, so came the light craft up,
With its sole lateen sail that trims
And turns (the water round its rims
Dancing, as round a sinking cup)
And by us like a fish it curled,
And drew itself up close beside,
Its great sail on the instant furled,
And o'er its thwarts a shrill voice cried,
('A neck as bronzed as a Lascar's)"
"Buy wine of us, you English brig?
Or fruit, tobacco and cibars?
A pilot for you to Triest?
Without one, look you never so big,
They'll never let you up the bay!
We natives should know best,'"
I turned, and 'just those fellows' way,'
Our captain said, "The long-shore thieves
Are laughing at us in their sleeves."

"In truth, the boy leaned laughing back;
And one, half-hidden by his side
Under the furled sail, soon I spied,
With great grass hat and kerchief black,
Who looked up with his kingly throat
Said somewhat, while the other shook
His hair back from his eyes to look
Their longest at us; then the boat,
I know not how, turned sharply round,
Laying her whole side on the sea
As a leaping fish does; from the lee
Into the weather, cut somehow
Her sparkling path beneath our bow
And so went off, as with a bound,
Into the rosy and golden half
O' the sky, to overtake the sun
And reach the shore, like the sea-calf
Its singing cave; yet I caught one
Glance ere away the boat quite passed,
And neither time nor toil could mar
Those features: so I saw the last
Of Waring!"—'You? Oh, never star
Was lost here but it rose afar!
Look East, where whole new thousands are!
In Vithmu-land what Avatar?

THE TWINS

"Give" and "It shall be given unto you"

Originally published in 1854, in connection with a poem by Mrs. Browning, A Plea for the Ragged Schools of London, in a volume issued for a bazaar to benefit the "Refuge for Young Delineate Girls."

Grand rough old Martin Luther Bloomed fables—flowers on furze,
The better the uncoather:
Do roses stick like burrs?

A beggar asked an alms
One day at an abbey-door,
Said Luther: but, seized with qualms
The Abbot replied, "We're poor!"

"Poor, who had plenty once,
When gifts fell thick as rain:
But they give us naught, for the nonce,
And how should we give again?"

Then the beggar, "See your sins!
Of old, unless I err,
Ye had brothers for inmates, twins,
Date and Dabitur,

"While Date was in good case
Dabitur flourished too:
For Dabitur's lenten face
No wonder if Date rue,

"Would ye retrieve the one?
Try and make plump the other!
When Date's penance is done,
Dabitur helps his brother,

"Only, beware relapse!"
The Abbot hung his head.
This beggar might be perhaps
An angel, Luther said."
A LIGHT WOMAN

So far as our story approaches the end,
Which do you pity the most of us three? —
My friend, or the mistress of my friend
With her wanton eyes, or me?

My friend was already too good to lose,
And seemed in the way of improvement yet.
When she crossed his path with her hunting-hose,
And over him drew her net.

When I saw him tangled in her toils,
A shane, said I, if she adds just him
To her nine-and-fifty other spoils,
The hundredth for a whim!

And before my friend be wholly hers,
How easy to prove to him, I said,
An eagle's game her pride prefers,
Though she snaps at a wren instead!

So, I gave her eyes my own eyes to take,
My hand sought hers as in earnest need,
And round she turned for my noble sake,
And gave me herself indeed.

The eagle am I, with my fame in the world,
The wren is he, with his maiden face,
—You look away and your lip is curled?
Patience, a moment's space!

For see, my friend goes shaking and white;
I have turned it, appears, his day to night,
Eclipsing his sun's disk.

And I did it, he thinks, as a very thief:
"Though I love her — that, he comprehends —
One should master one's passions, love, in chief;
And be loyal to one's friends!"

And she, — she lies in my hand as tame
As a pear late basking over a wall;
Just a touch to try and off it came;
'Tis mine, — can I let it fall?

With no mind to eat it, that's the worst!
Were it thrown in the road, would the case assist?
'T was quenching a dozen blue-flies' thirst
When I gave its stalk a twist.

And I, — what I seem to my friend, you see:
What I soon shall seem to his love, you guess:
What I seem to myself, do you ask of me?
No hero, I confess.

'T is an awkward thing to play with souls,
And matter enough to save one's own:
Yet think of my friend, and the burning coals
He played with for bits of stone!

One likes to show the truth for the truth,
That the woman was light is very true;
But suppose she says, — Never mind that youth!
What wrong have I done to you?

Well, anyhow, here the story stays,
So far at least as I understand;
And, Robert Browning, you writer of plays,
Here's a subject made to your hand!

THE LAST RIDE TOGETHER

I said — Then, dearest, since 't is so,
Since now at length my fate I know,
Since nothing all my love avails,
Since all, my life seemed meant for, fails,
Since this was written and needs must be —
My whole heart rises up to bless
Your name in pride and thankfulness!
Take back the hope you gave, — I claim
Only a memory of the same,
—And this beside, if you will not blame,
Your leave for one more last ride with me.

My mistress bent that brow of hers;
Those deep dark eyes where pride demurs
When pity would be softening through,
Fixed me a breathing-while or two
With life or death in the balance: right!
The blood replenished me again;
My last thought was at least not vain:
I and my mistress, side by side
Shall be together, breathe and ride,
So, one day more am I deified.

Who knows but the world may end to-night?

Hush! if you saw some western cloud
All hilly-boomed, over-bowed
By many benedictions — sun's
And moon's and evening-star's at once —
And so, you, looking and loving best,
Conscious grew, your passion drew
Cloud, sunset, moonrise, star-shine too,
Down on you, near and yet more near,
Till flesh most fade for heaven was here! —
Thus beat she and lingered — joy and fear?
Thus lay she a moment on my breast.

Then we began to ride. My soul
Smoothed itself out, a long-cramped scroll
Freshening and fluttering in the wind,
Past hopes already lay behind.
What need to strive with a life awry?
Had I said that, had I done this,
So might I gain, so might I miss.
Might she have loved me? just as well
She might have hated, who can tell?
Where had I been now if the worst befell?
And here we are riding; and I.

Fail I alone, in words and deeds?
Why, all men strive, and who succeeds?
We rode; it seemed my spirit flew,
Saw other regions, cities new.
As the world rushed by on either side.
I thought, — All labor, yet no less
Bear up beneath their unsuccess.
Look at the end of work, contrast
The petty done, the undone vast.
This present of theirs with the hopeful past!
I hoped she would love me; here we ride.

What hand and brain went ever paired?
What heart alike conceived and dared?
What act proved all its thought had been?
What will but felt the flimsy screen?
We ride and I see her bosom heave.
There's many a crown for who can reach.
Ten lines, a statesman's life in each!
The flag stuck on a heap of bones,
A soldier's doing! what atones?
They scratch his name on the Abbey-stones.
My riding is better, by their leave.

What does it all mean, poet? Well,
Your brains beat into rhythm, you tell
What we felt only; you expressed
You held things beautiful the best.
And place them in rhyme so, side by side,
'Tis something, nay 'tis much: but then,
Have you yourself what's best for men?
Are you — poor, sick, old ere your time
Nearer one whirr your own sublime
Than we who never have turned a rhyme?
Sing, riding 's a joy! For me, I ride.

And you, great sculptor — so, you gave
A score of years to Art, her slave.
And that's your Venus, whence we turn
To yonder girl that fords the burn!
You acquiesce, and shall I repine?
What, man of music, you grown gray
With notes and nothing else to say.
Is this your sole praise from a friend,
"Greatly his opera's strains intend,
But in music we know how fashions end!"
I gave you youth; but we ride, in fine.

Who knows what's fit for us? Had fate
Proposed bliss here should sublimate
My being — had I signed the bond
Still one must lead some life beyond,
Have a bliss to die with, dim-descried.
This foot once planted on the goal.
This glory-garland round my soul.
Could I desecry such? Try and test!
I sink back shuddering from the quest.
Earth being so good, would heaven seem best?
Now, heaven and she are beyond this ride.

And yet — she has not spoke so long!
What if heaven be that, fair and strong
At life's best, with our eyes upturned
Whither life's flower is first discerned,
We, fixed so, ever should so abide?
What if we still ride on, we two,
With life forever old yet new,
Changed not in kind but in degree,
The instant made eternity,
And heaven just prove that I and she
Ride, ride together, forever ride?

THE PIED PIPER OF HAMELIN
A child's story

(Written for, and inscribed to, W. M. the Younger)

Macready's eldest son when a child was confined to the house by illness, and Browning wrote this "jeu d'esprit" to amuse the child and give him a subject for illustrative drawings.

I

HAMELIN Town's in Brunswick,
By famous Hanover city;
The river Weser, deep and wide,
Washes its wall on the southern side;
A pleasanter spot you never spied.
But, when begins my ditty,
Almost five hundred years ago,
To see the townsfolk suffer so
From vermin, was a pity.

II

Rats!
They fought the dogs and killed the cats,
And bit the babies in the cradles,
And ate the cheeses out of the vats,
And licked the soup from the cooks' own ladles.
Split open the kegs of salted sprats,
Made nests inside men's Sunday hats,
And even spoiled the women's chats.
By drowning their speaking
With shrieking and squeaking
In fifty different sharps and flats.

III

At last the people in a body
To the Town Hall came flocking:
"'T is clear," cried they, "our Mayor's a noddy;
And as for our Corporation — shocking.
To think we buy gowns lined with ermine
For dolts that can't or won't determine
What's best to rid us of our vermin!
You hope, because you're old and obese,
To find in the furry civic robe ease?
Rouse up, sirs! Give your brains a racking
To find the remedy we're lacking,
Or, sure as fate, we'll send you packing!"
At this the Mayor and Corporation
Quaked with a mighty consternation.

IV

An hour they sat in council;
At length the Mayor broke silence:
"For a gadfly I'd my ermine gown sell,
I wish I were a mile hence!
It's easy to bid one rack one's brain —
I'm sure my poor head aches again,
I've scratched it so, and all in vain.
Oh for a trap, a trap, a trap!"
Just as he said this, what should hap
At the chamber-door but a gentle tap?
"Bless us," cried the Mayor, "what's that then?"
(With the Corporation as he sat,
Looking little though wondrous fat;
Nor brighter was his eye, nor moister
Than a too-long-opened oyster,
Save when at noon his paunch grew mutinous
For a plate of turtle green and gluttonous
"Only a scraping of shoes on the mat?
Anything like the sound of a rat
Makes my heart go pit-a-pat!"

"Come in!" — the Mayor cried, looking bigger:
And in did come the strangest figure!
His queer long coat from heel to head
Was half of yellow and half of red,
And he himself was tall and thin,
With sharp blue eyes, each like a pin,
The light loose hair, yet swarthy skin,
No tuft on cheek nor beard on chin,
But lips where smiles went out and in;
There was no guessing his kith and kin:
And nobody could enough admire
The tall man and his quaint attire.
Quoth one: "It's as my great-grand sire,
Starting up at the Trump of Doom's tone,
Had walked this way from his painted tombstone!"

He advanced to the council-table;
And, "Please your honors," said he, "I'm able.
By means of a secret charm, to draw
All creatures living beneath the sun,
That creep or swim or fly or run,
After me so as you never saw!
And I chiefly use my charm
On creatures that do people harm,
The night and toad, and swarthy viper;
And people call me the Pied Piper,
And here they noticed round his neck
A scarf of red and yellow stripe,
To match with his coat of the self-same cheque;
And at the scarf's end hung a pipe;
And his fingers, they noticed, were ever straying
As if impatient to be playing
Upon this pipe, as low it dangled
(Over his vesture so old-fangled.)
"Ye-h," said he, "poor piper as I am,
In Tartary I fished the main,
Last June, from his huge swarms of gnats;
I eased in Asia the Nizam
Of a monstrous brood of vampire-bats;
And as for what your brain bewilders,
If I can rid your town of rats
Will you give me a thousand guilders?"
"One? fifty thousand!" — was the exclamation
Of the astonished Mayor and Corporation.

Into the street the Piper stept,
Smiling first a little smile,
As if he knew what magic slept
In his quiet pipe the while;
Then, like a musical adept,
To blow the pipe his lips he wrinkled,
And green and blue his sharp eyes twinkled,
Like a candle-flame where salt is sprinkled;
And ere three shrill notes the pipe uttered,
You heard as if an army muttered;
And the muttering grew to a grumbling;
And the grumbling grew to a mighty rumbling;
And out of the houses the rats came tumbling.
Great rats, small rats, lean rats, brawny rats,
Brown rats, black rats, gray rats, tawny rats,
Grave old plodders, gay young friskers,
Fathers, mothers, uncles, cousins,
Cocking tails and prickling whiskers,
Families by tens and dozens,
Brothers, sisters, husbands, wives —
Followed the Piper for their lives.
From street to street he piped advancing,
And step for step they followed dancing,
Until they came to the river Weser,
Wherein all plunged and perished!
— Save one who, stony as Julius Caesar,
Swam across and lived to carry
(As he, the manuscript he cherished)
To Rat-land home his commentary:
Which was, "At the first shrill notes of the pipe,
I heard a sound as of scraping tripe,
And putting apples, wondrous ripe,
Into a cider-press's gripe:
And a moving away of pickle-tub-boards,
And a levying of ajar of conserve-cupboards,
And a drawing of the corks of train-oil-flasks,
And a breaking of the hoops of butter-casks:
And it seemed as if a voice
'Sweeter far than by harp or by psalter
Is breathed' called out. 'Oh rats, rejoice!
The world is grown to one vast drysalter!
So much on, crunch on, take your muncheon,
Breakfast, supper, dinner, luncheon!
And just as a bulky sugar-panecon,
All ready staved, like a great sun shone
Glorious scarce an inch before me,
Just as methought it said, 'Come, bore me!'
— I found the Weser rolling o'er me.'"

You should have heard the Hamelin people
Ringing the bells till they rocked the steeple,
"Go," cried the Mayor, "and get long poles,
Poke out the nests and block up the holes!
Consult with carpenters and builders,
And leave in our town not even a trace
Of the rats!" — when suddenly, up the face
Of the Piper perked in the market-place,
With a, "First, if you please, my thousand Guilders!"

A thousand guilders! The Mayor looked blue;
So did the Corporation too.
For council dinners made rare havoc
With Claret, Moselle, Vine-de-Grave, Hock;
And half the money would replenish
Their cellar's biggest butt with Rhenish.
To pay this sum to a wandering fellow
With a gypsy coat of red and yellow!
"Beside," quoth the Mayor with a knowing wink,
"Our business was done at the river's brink;"
Dramatic Romances

We saw with our eyes the vermin sink,
And what’s dead can’t come to life, I think.
So, friend, we’re not the folks to shrink
From the duty of giving you something for Drink,
And a matter of money to put in your poke;
But as for the guilders, what we spoke
Of them, as you very well know, was in joke.
Beside, our losses have made us thrifty.
A thousand guilders! Come, take fifty!

The Piper’s face fell, and he cried,
“O trilling! I can’t wait, beside!
I’ve promised to visit by dinner time
Bagdat, and accept the prime
Of the Head-Cook’s potage, all he’s rich in,
For leaving left, in the Caliph’s kitchen,
Of a nest of scorpions no survived:
With him I proved no bargain-driver,
With you, don’t think I’ll bate a stiver!
And folks who put me in a passion
May find me pipe after another fashion.”

“Hows?” cried the Mayor, “d’ye think I brook
Being worse treated than a Cook?
Insulted by a lazy rascal
With idle pipe and verse piebald?
You threaten us, fellow? Do your worst,
Blow your pipe there till you burst!”

Once more he stept into the street,
And to his lips again
Laid his long pipe of smooth straight cane;
And ere he blew three notes (such sweet
Soft notes as yet musician’s cunning
“Never gave the enraptured air
There was a rustling that seemed like a bustling
Of merry crowds justling at pitching and hustling;
Small feet were pattering, wooden shoes clattering,
Little hands clapping and little tongues chattering,
And, like owls in a farm-yard when barley is Scattering,
Out came the children running.
All the little boys and girls,
With rosy cheeks and flaxen curls,
And sparkling eyes and teeth like pearls,
Tripping and skipping, ran merrily after
The wonderful music with shouting and laughter.

The Mayor was dumb, and the Council stood
As if they were changed into blocks of wood,
Unable to move a step, or cry
To the children merrily skipping by,
—Could only follow with the eye
That joyous crowd at the Piper’s back.
But how the Mayor was on the rack,
And the wretched Council’s bosoms beat,
As the Piper turned from the High Street
To where the Weser rolled its waters
Right in the way of their sons and daughters!
However, he turned from South to West,

And to Koppelberg Hill his steps addressed.
And after him the children pressed;
Great was the joy in every breast.
“He never can cross that mighty top!
He’s forced to let the piping drop,
And we shall see our children stop!”
When, lo, as they reached the mountain-side,
A wondrous portal opened wide,
As if a cavern was suddenly hollowed;
And the Piper advanced and the children followed;
And when all were in to the very last,
The door in the mountain-side shut fast.
Did I say, all? No! One was lame,
And could not dance the whole of the way;
And in after years, if you would blame
His sadness, he was used to say,—
“Tis dull in our town since my playmates left!
I can’t forget that I’m bereft
Of all the pleasant sights they see,
Which the Piper also fondled me.
For he led us, he said, to a jovous land,
Joining the town and just at hand,
Where waters gushed and fruit-trees grew.
And flowers put forth a fairer hue,
And everything was strange and new;
The sparrows were brighter than peacocks here.
And their dogs outran our fallow deer,
And honey-bees had lost their stings,
And horses were born with eagles’ wings;
And just as I became assured
My lame foot would be speedily cured,
The music stopped and I stood still,
And found myself outside the hill,
Left alone against my will,
To go now limping as before,
And never hear of that country more!”

Alas, alas for Hamelin!
There came into many a burgher’s pate
A text which says that heaven’s gate
Opens to the rich at an easy rate.
As the needle’s eye takes a camel in!
The Mayor sent East, West, North and South,
To offer the Piper, by word of mouth,
Wherever it was men’s lot to find him,
Silver and gold to his heart’s content,
If he’d only return the way he went,
And bring the children behind him,
But when they saw ’twas a lost endeavor,
And Piper and dancers were gone forever,
They made a decree that lawyers never
Should think their records dated duly,
If, after the day of the month and year,
These words did not as well appear.
“And so long after what happened here
On the Twenty-second of July,
Thirteen hundred and seventy six:
And the better in memory to fix
The place of the children’s last retreat,
They called it, the Pied Piper’s Street—
Where any one playing on pipe or tabor
Was sure for the future to lose his labor.
Nor suffered they hostelry or tavern
To shock with mirth a street so solemn;
But opposite the place of the cavern
They wrote the story on a column,
The Flight of the Duchess

And on the great church-window painted
The same, to make the world acquainted
How their children were stolen away,
And there it stands to this very day.
And I must not omit to say
That in Transylvania there’s a tribe
Of alien people who ascribe
The outlandish ways and dress
On which their neighbors lay such stress,
To their fathers and mothers having risen
Out of some subterraneous prison
Into which they were trapped
Long time ago in a mighty band
Out of Hamelin town in Brunswick land.
But bow or why, they don’t understand.

XV

So, Willy, let me and you be wipers!
Of scores out with all men—especially pipers!
And, whether they pipe us free from rats or
From mice,
If we’ve promised them aught, let us keep our promise!

The Flight of the Duchess

The first nine sections of this poem were printed in Hood’s Magazine for April, 1843.
The poem took its rise from a line—"Following the Queen of the Gypsies, O!" the burden of a song which the poet, when a boy, heard a woman singing on a Guy Fawkes’ Day. As Browning was writing it, he was interrupted by the arrival of a friend on some important business, which drove all thoughts of the Duchess, and the scheme of her story, out of the poet’s head. But some months after the publication of the first part, when he was staying at Bettisfield Park, in Shropshire, a guest, speaking of early winter, said, "The deer had already to break the ice in the pond." On this a fancy struck the poet, and, returning home, he worked it up into the conclusion of the poem as it now stands.

I
You’re my friend:
I was the man the Duke spoke to;
I helped the Duchess to cast off his yoke, too;
So, here’s the tale from beginning to end,
My friend!

II
Ours is a great wild country:
If you climb to our castle’s top,
I don’t see where your eye can stop;
For when you’ve passed the cornfield country,
Where vineyards leave off, flocks are packed,
And sheep-range leads to cattle-tract,
And cattle-tract to open-cape,
And open-cape to the very base
Of the mountain where, at a funeral pace,
Round about, solemn and slow,
One by one, row after row.

III
I was born the day this present Duke was—
(And O, says the song, ere I was old!)
In the castle where the other Duke was—
(When I was happy and young, not old!)
I in the kennel, he in the bowser:
We are of like age to an hour.
My father was huntsman in that day;
Who has not heard my father say
That, when a boar was brought to bay,
Three times, four times out of five,
With his huntsmen he’d contrive
To get the killing-place transfixed,
And pin him true, both eyes betwixt?
And that’s why the old Duke would rather
He lost a salt-pit than my father,
And loved to have him ever in call;
That’s why my father stood in the hall
When the old Duke brought his infant out
To show the people, and while they passed
The wondrous panting round about,
Was first to start at the outside blast.
As the Kaiser’s courier blew his horn,
Just a month after the babe was born,
"And," quoth the Kaiser’s courier, "since
The Duke has got an heir, our Prince
Needs the Duke’s self at his side:"
The Duke looked down and wept his wince,
But he thought of wars o’er the world wide,
Castles a-fire, men on their march,
The toppling tower, the crushing arch;
And up he looked, and awhile he eyed
The row of crests and shields and banners
Of all achievements after all manners,
And "ay," said the Duke with a surly pride.
The more was his comfort when he died
At next year’s end, in a velvet suit,
With a gilt glove on his hand, his foot
In a silk shoe for a leather boot,
Petitioned like a herald,
In a chamber next to an ante-room,
Where he breathed the breath of page and groom,
What he called stink, and they, perfume:
—"They should have set him on red Berold
Mad with pride, like fire to manage!"
They should have got his cheek fresh tannage
Such a day as to-day in the merry sunshine!
Had they stuck on his fist a rough-foot Merlin!
Hark, the wind’s on the heath at its game!
Oh for a noble falcon-lantern.

Up and up the pine-trees go,
So, like black priests up, and so
Down the other side again.
To another greater, wilder country,
That’s one vast red dream burn’t-up plain,
Branch’d through and through with many a vein
Whence iron’s dug, and copper’s dealt;
Look right, look left, look straight before,—
Beneath they mine, above they smelt,
Copper-ore and iron-ore,
And forge and furnace mould and melt,
And so on, more and ever more,
Till at the last, for a bounding belt,
Comes the salt sand hour of the great sea-shore,
—And the whole is our Duke’s country.
To flap each broad wing like a banner,
And turn in the wind, and dance like flame!
Had they broached a white-beer cask from Berlin
— Or if you incline to prescribe mere wine
Put to his lips, when they saw him pine,
A cup of our own Moldavia fine.
Cotnar for instance, green as May sorrel
And ropy with sweet,—we shall not quarrel.

IV
So, at home, the sick tall yellow Duchess
Was left with the infant in her clutches,
She being the daughter of God knows who:
And now was the time to revisit her tribe.
Abroad and afar they went, the two,
And let our people rail and gibe
At the empty hall and extinguished fire,
As loud as we liked, but ever in vain,
Till after long years we had our desire,
And back came the Duke and his mother again.

And he came back the pertest little ape
That ever affronted human shape.
Fall of this travel, struck at himself,
You'd say; but despised our bluff old ways?
— Not he! For in Paris they told the elf
Our rough North land was the Land of Lays,
The one good thing left in evil days;
Since the Mid-Age was the Heroic Time,
And only in wild nooks like ours
Could you taste of it yet as in its prime,
And see true castles, with proper towers,
Young-hearted women, old-minded men,
And manners now as manners were then.
So, all that the old Dukes had been, without Knowing it,
This Duke would fain know he was, without Being it;
'T was not for the joy's self, but the joy of his Showing it.
Nor for the pride's self, but the pride of our Seeing it.
He revived all usages thoroughly worn-out.
The souls of them fumed-forth, the hearts of Them torn-out:
And chief in the chase his neck he perilled,
On a lady horse, all legs and length.
With blood for bone, all speed, no strength;
They should have set him on red Berold
With the red eye slow consuming in fire,
And the thin stiff ear like an abbey spire!
VI
Well, such as he was, he must marry, we heard:
And out of a convent, at the word.
Came the lady, in time of spring.
—Oh, old thoughts they cling, they cling!
That day, I know, with a dozen oaths
I clad myself in thick hunting-clothes
Fit for the chase of arochs or baffle
In winter-time when you need to muffle.
But the Duke had a mind we should cut a figure,
And so we saw the lady arrive:
My friend, I have seen a white crane bigger!
She was the smallest lady alive,
Made in a piece of nature's madness,
Too small, almost, for the life and gladness
That over-filled her, as some hive
Out of the bees' reach on the high trees
Is crowded with its safe merry bees;
In truth, she was not hard to please!
Up she looked, down she looked, round at the mead,
Straight at the castle, that's best indeed
To look at from outside the walls:
As for us, styled the "serfs and thralls,"
She as much thanked me as if she had said it.
(With her eyes, do you understand?)
Because I patted her horse while I led it;
And Max, who rode on her other hand.
Said, no bird flew past but she inquired
What its true name was, nor ever seemed tired—
If that was an eagle she saw hover,
And the green and gray bird on the field was the plover.
When suddenly appeared the Duke;
And as down she sprung, the small foot pointed
On to my hand, as with a rebuke,
And as if his backbone were not jointed,
The Duke stepped rather aside than forward,
And welcomed her with his grandest smile;
And, mind you, his mother all the while
Chilled in the rear, like a wind to Nor'ward;
And up, like a weary yawn, with its pulleys
Went, in a shriek, the rusty portcullis;
And, like a glad sky the north-wind sullies,
The lady's face stopped its play,
As if her first hair had grown gray;
For such things must begin some one day.

VII
In a day or two she was well again;
As who should say, "You labor in vain!
This is all a jest against God, who meant
I should ever be, as I am, content
And glad in his sight; therefore, glad I will be."
So, smiling as at first went she.

VIII
She was active, stirring, all fire—
Could not rest, could not tire
To a stone she might have given life!
(I myself loved once, in my day)
—For a shepherd's, miner's, huntsman's wife,
(I had a wife, I know what I say)
Never in all the world such an one!
And here was plenty to be done,
And she that could do it, great or small,
She was to do nothing at all.
There was already this man in his post,
This in his station, and that in his office,
And the Duke's plan admitted a wife, at most,
To meet his eye, with the other trophies,
Now outside the hall, now in it.
To sit thus, stand thus, see and be seen,
At the proper place in the proper minute,
And die away the life between.
And it was amusing enough, each infraction
Of rule—but for after-sadness that came
To hear the consummate self-satisfaction
With which the young Duke and the old dame
THE FLIGHT OF THE DUCHESS

Would let her advise, and criticise,
And, being a fool, instruct the wise,
And, child-like, parcel out praise or blame:
They bore it all in complacent guise,
As though an artificer, after contriving
A wheel-work image as if it were living,
Should find with delight it could motion to strike him!
So found the Duke, and his mother like him:
The lady hardly got a rebuff—
That had not been contumtions enough,
With his cursed snort, as he nodded applause,
And kept off the old mother-cat’s claws.

IX
So, the little lady grew silent and thin,
Paling and ever paling,
As the way is with a hid chagrin:
And the Duke perceived that she was ailing,
And said in his heart, “I is done to spite me,
But I shall find in my power to right me!”
Don’t swear, friend! The old one, many a year,
Is in hell, and the Duke’s self... you shall hear.

x
Well, early in autumn, at first winter-warning,
When the stag had to break with his foot, of a morning,
A drinking-hole out of the fresh tender ice
That covered the pond till the sun, in a trice,
Loosening it, let out a ripple of gold,
And another and another, and faster and faster.
Till, dimpling to blindness, the wide water rolled:
Then it so chanced that the Duke our master
Asked himself what were the pleasures in season.
And found, since the calendar bade him be hearty,
He should do the Middle Age no treason
In resolving on a hunting-party.
Always provided, old books showed the way of it:
What meant old poets by their strictures?
And when old poets had said their say of it,
How taught old painters in their pictures?
We must revert to the proper channels,
Workings in tapestry, paintings on panels,
And gather up woodcraft’s authentic traditions:
Here was food for our various ambitions,
As on each case, exactly stated—
To encourage your dog, now, the properest chirrup.
Or best prayer to Saint Hubert on mounting your stirrup—
We of the household took thought and debated.
Blessed was he whose back ached with the jerkin
His sire was wont to do forest-work in;
Blessed he who nobly sunk his ‘obs’
And “abs” while he tugged on his grandsire’s trunk-hose:
What signified hats if they had no rings on,
Each slouching before and behind like the scallop.

And able to serve at sea for a shallop,
Loaded with lacquer and looped with crimson?
So that the deer now, to make a short rhyme
on ‘t,
What with our Venerers, Prickers and Verderers,
Might hope for real hunters at length and not murderers.
And oh the Duke’s tailor, he had a hot time
on ‘t!

Now you must know that when the first dizziness
Of flap-hats and buff-coats and jack-boots subsided,
The Duke put this question, “The Duke’s part provided,
Had not the Duchess some share in the business?”
For out of the month of two or three witnesses
Did he establish all fit-or-unfitnesses?
And, after much laying of heads together,
Somebody’s cap got a notable feather
By the announcement with proper union
That he had discovered the lady’s function:
Since ancient authors gave this tenet,
“When horns wind a mort and the deer is at siege,
Let the dame of the castle prick forth on her jennet.
And, with water to wash the hands of her liege
In a clean ewer with a fair towelling,
Let her preside at the disembowelling.”
Now, my friend, if you had so little religion
As to catch a hawk, some falcon-lanner,
And thrust her broad wings like a banner
Into a coop for a vulgar pigeon;
And if day by day and week by week
You cut her claws, and sealed her eyes,
And clipped her wings, and tied her beak,
Would it cause you any great surprise
If, when you decided to give her an airing,
You found she needed a little preparing?
— I say, should you be such a curmudgeon.
If she clung to the perch, as to take it in dudgeon?
Yet when the Duke to his lady signified
Just a day before, as he judged most dignified,
In what a pleasure she was to participate.
And, instead of leaping wide in flashes,
Her eyes just lifted their long lashes,
As if pressed by fatigue even he could not dissipate.
And duly acknowledged the Duke’s forethought.
But spoke of her health, if her health were worth aught.
Of the weight by day and the watch by night.
And much wrong now that used to be right.
So, thanking him, declined the hunting,—
Was conduct ever more affronting?
With all the ceremony settled—
With the towel ready, and the sewer
Polishing up his oldest ewer,
And the jennet pitched upon, a piebald,
Black-barred, cream-coated and pink eye-balled,—
DRAMATIC ROMANCES

No wonder if the Duke was nettled! And when she persisted nevertheless,—
Well, I suppose here's the time to confess
That there ran half round our lady's chamber
A balcony none of the hardest to chamber;
And that Jacynth the tire-woman, ready in waiting,
Stayed in call outside, what need of relating?
And since Jacynth was like a June rose, why, a fervent
Adorer of Jacynth of course was your servant;
And if she had the habit to peep through the casement,
How could I keep at any vast distance?
And so, as I say, on the lady's persistence,
The Duke, dumb-stricken with amazement,
Stood for a while in a sultry smoother,
And then, with a smile that partook of the awful,
Turned her over to his yellow mother
To learn what was held decorous and lawful;
And the mother smelt blood with a cat-like instinct,
As her cheek quick whitened through all its quince-tint.
Oh, but the lady heard the whole truth at once!
What meant she? — Who was she? — Her duty and station.
The wisdom of age and the folly of youth, at
once,
Its deplorable and its fitting relation —
In brief, my friend, set all the devils in hell
free
And turn them out to carouse in a belfry
And treat the priests to a fifty-part canon,
And then you may guess how that tongue of hers ran on!
Well, somehow or other it ended at last
And, licking her whiskers, out she passed;
And after her, — making (he hoped) a face
Like Emperor Nero or Sultan Saladin,
Stalked the Duke's self with the austere grace
Of ancient hero or modern paladin,
From door to staircase — oh such a solemn
Unbending of the vertebral column!

XIII

Now, in your hand, Gypsies reach you, only
After reaching all hands beside;
North they go, South they go, trooping or lonely,
And still, as they travel far and wide,
Catch they and keep now a trace here, a trace
there,
That puts you in mind of a place here, a place
there.
But with us, I believe they rise out of the ground,
And nowhere else, I take it, are found
With the earth-tint yet so freshly embrowned:
Born, no doubt, like insects which breed on
The very fruit they are meant to feed on.
For the earth — not a use to which they don't turn it,
The ore that grows in the mountain's womb,
Or the sand in the pits like a honeycomb,
They sift and soften it, bake it and burn it —
Whether they weld you, for instance, a snaffle
With side-bars never a brute can baffle;
Or a lock that's a puzzle of wards within wards;
Or, if your colt's forefoot inclines to curve inwards,
Horseshoes they hammer which turn on a swivel
And won't allow the hoof to shrivel;
Then they cast bells like the shell of the winkle
That keep a stout heart in the ram with their tinkle,
But the sand — they pinch and pound it like
otters;
Commend me to Gypsy glass-makers and potters!
Glasses they'll blow you, crystal-clear,
Where just a faint cloud of rose shall appear.
As if in pure water you dropped and let die
A bruised black-blooded mulberry;
And that other sort, their crowning pride,
With long white threads distinct inside,
Like the lake-flower's fibrous roots which dangle
Loose such a length and never tangle,
Where the bold sword-lily cuts the clear waters,
And the cup-lily couches with all the white
dughters:
Such are the works they put their hand to,
The uses they turn and twist iron and sand to.
And these made the troop, which our Duke saw sally
Toward his castle from out of the valley,
Men and women, like new-hatched spiders,
Come out with the morrow to greet our riders,
And up they wound till they reached the ditch,
Whereat all stopped save one, a witch
That I knew, as she hobbled from the ground,
By her gait directly and her stoop,
I, whom Jacynth was used to importune
To let that same witch tell us our fortune,
The oldest Gypsy then above ground;
And, sure as the autumn season came round,
She paid us a visit for profit or pastime.
And every time, as she swore, for the last time,
And presently she was seen to sidle
Up to the Duke till she touched 'his bridge,
So that the horse of a sudden reared up
As under its nose the old witch peered up
Then clapping heel to his horse, the mere curveted,
Out rode the Duke, and after his holo
Horses and hounds swept, huntsman and servitor,
And back I turned and bade the crone follow.
And what makes me confident what's to be told you
Had all along becn of this crone's devising,
Is, that, on looking round sharply, behold you,
There was a novelty quick as surprising:
For first, she had shot up a full head in stature,
And her step kept pace with mine nor faltered,
As if age had foregone its immaturity,
And the ignoble mien was wholly altered,
And the face looked quite of another nature,
And the change reached too, whatever the change meant,
Her shaggy wolf-skin cloak's arrangement:
For where its tatters hung loose like sedges,
Gold coins were glittering on the edges,
Like the band-roll strung with tomtns
Which proves the veil a Persian woman's:
And under her brow, like a snail's horns newly
Come out as after the rain he paces,
Two unmistakable eye-points duly
Live and aware looked out of their places.
So, we went and found Jacynth at the entry
Of the lady's chamber standing sentry;
I told the command and produced my companion,
And Jacynth rejoiced to admit any one,
For since last night, by the same token,
Not a single word had the lady spoken:
They went in both to the presence together,
While I in the balcony watched the weather.

And now, what took place at the very first of all,
I cannot tell, as I never could learn it:
Jacynth constantly wished a curse to fall
On that little head of hers and burn it,
If she knew how she came to drop so soundly
Asleep of a sudden and there continue
The whole time sleeping as profoundly
As one of the boars my father would pin you
Twist the eyes where life holds garrison,
— Jacynth forgive me the comparison!
But where I begin my own narration
Is a little after I took my station
To breathe the fresh air from the balcony,
And, having in those days a falcon eye,
To follow the hunt through the open country,
From where the bushes thimnier crested
The hillocks, to a plain where 's not one tree.
When, in a moment, my ear was arrested
By — was it singing, or was it saying,
Or a strange musical instrument playing
In the chamber? — and to be certain
I pushed the lattice, pulled the curtain,
And there lay Jacynth asleep,
Yet as if a watch she tried to keep,
In a rosy sleep along the floor
With her head against the door;
While in the midst, on the seat of state,
Was a queen — the Gipsy woman late.
With head and face downbent
On the lady’s head and face intent:
For, coiled at her feet like a child at ease,
The lady sat between her knees,
And o’er them the lady’s clasped hands met,
And on those hands her chin was set,
And her upturned face met the face of the crone
Wherein the eyes had grown and grown
As if she could double and quadruple
At pleasure the play of either pupil.
—Very like, by her hands’ slow flapping,
As up and down like a gro-crow’s flappers
They moved to measure, or bell clappers.
I said, “Is it blessing, is it banishing,
Do they applaud you or burlesque you—
Those hands and fingers with no flesh on?”
But, just as I thought to spring in to the rescue,
At once I was stopped by the lady’s expression:
For it was life her eyes were drinking
From the crone’s wide pair above unwinking.
—Life’s pure fire received without shrinking,
Into the heart and breast whose heaving
Told you no single drop they were leaving,
—Life, that filling her, passed redundant
Into her very hair, back swerving
Over each shoulder, loose and abundant,
As her head thrown back showed the white throat curving;
And the very tresses shared in the pleasure,
Moving to the mystic measure,
Bounding as the bosom bounded,
I stopped short, more and more unconfounded,
As still her cheeks burned and eyes glistened,
As she listened and she listened:
When all at once a hand detained me,
The selfsame contagion gained me,
And I kept time to the wondrous chime,
Making out words and prose and rhyme.
Till it seemed that the music fruited
Its wings like a task fulfilled, and dropped
From under the words it first had propped,
And left them midway in the world:
Word took word as hand takes hand,
I could hear at last and understand,
And when I held the unbroken thread,
The Gypsy said:

“—And so at last we find my tribe
And so I set thee in the midst,
And to one and all of them describe
What thou sahest and what thou didst,
Our long and terrible journey through,
And all thou art ready to say and do
In the trials that remain;
I trace them the vein and the other vein
That meet on thy brow and part again,
Making our rapid mystic mark;
And I bid my people prove and prove
Each eye’s profound and glorious globe.
Till they detect the kindred spark
In those depths so dear and dark,
Like the spots that snap and burst and flee.
Circling over the midnight sea,
And on that round young cheek of thine
I make them recognize the tinge
As when of the costly scarlet wine
They drip so much as will impinge
And spread in a thinnest scale afloat
One thick gold drop from the olive’s coat
Over a silver plate whose sheen
Still through the mixture shall be seen.
For so I prove thee, to one and all,
Fit, when my people one their breast,
To see the sign, and hear the call,
And take the vow, and stand the test
Which adds one more child to the rest—
When the breast is bare and the arms are wide,
And the world is left outside.
For there is probation to decrees,
And many and long must the trials be
Thou shalt victorious endure.
If that brow is true and those eyes are sure;
Like a jewel-finder’s fierce assay
Of the prize he dug from its mountain tomb—
Let once the vindicating ray
Leap out amid the anxious gloom,
And steel and fire have done their part.
And the prize falls on its finder’s heart.
So, trial after trial past over.
Wilt thou fall at the very last
Breathless, half in trance
With the thrill of the great deliverance,
Into our arms for evermore;
And thou shalt know, those arms once curled
About thee, what we knew before,
How love is the only good in the world,
Henceforth be loved as heart can love,
Or brain devise, or heart approve!
Stand up, look below,
It is our life at thy feet we throw
To step with into light and joy;
Not a power of life but we employ
To satisfy thy nature’s want;
Art thou the tree that props the plant,
Or the climbing plant that seeks the tree—
Canst thou help us, must we help thee?
If any two creatures grow into one,
They would do more than the world has done;
Though each apart were never so weak,
Ye vainly through the world should seek
For the knowledge and the might
Which in each unite their right;
So, to approach at least that end,
And blend,—as much as may be, blend
Thee with us or us with thee,—
As climbing plant or propping tree,
Shall some one deck thee, over and down,
Up and about, with blossoms and leaves?
Fix his heart’s fruit for thy garland-crown,
Clung with his soul as the good-vine cleaves,
Die on thy boughs and disappear,
While not a leaf of thine is seen?
Or is the other far in store,
And art thou fitted to adore,
To give thy wondrous self away,
And take a stronger nature’s sway?
I foresee and could foretell
Thy future portion, sure and well;
But those passionate eyes speak true, speak true,
Let them say what thou shalt do!
Only be sure thy daily life,
In its peace or in its strife,
Never shall be unmoved;
We pursue thy whole career.
And hope for it, or doubt, or fear,—
Lo, hast thou kept thy path or swerved,
We are beside thee in all thy ways,
With our blame, with our praise,
Our shame to feel, our pride to show,
Glad, angry—but indifferent, no!
Whether it be thy lot to go,
For the good of us all, when the haters meet
In the crowded city's horrible street;
Or thou art alone through the morass
Where never sound yet was
Save the dry quick clap of the stork's bill,
For the air is still, and the water still,
When the blue breast of the dipping coot
Dives under, and all is mute.
So, at the last shall come old age,
Decrepit as belts that stage;
How else wouldst thou retire apart
With the hoarded memories of thy heart,
And gather all to the very least
Of the fragments of life's earlier feast,
Let fall through eagerness to find
The crowning dainties yet behind?
Ponder on the entire past
Laid together thus at last,
When the twilight helps to fuse
The first fresh with the faded hues,
And the outline of the whole,
As round eve's shades their framework roll,
Grandly fronts for once thy soul,
And then as 'mid the dark, a gleam
Of yet another morning breaks,
And like the hand which ends a dream,
Death, with the night of his sunbeam,
Touches the flesh and the soul awakes,
Then"—
Aye, then indeed something would happen!
But what? For here her voice changed like a bird's;
There grew more of the music and less of the words:
Had Jacynth only been by me to clap pen
To paper and put you down every syllable
With those clever clerky fingers,
All I've forgotten as well as what lingers
In this old brain of mine that's but ill able
To give you even this poor version
Of the speech I spoil, as it were, with stammering
— More fault of those who had the hammering
Of prosody into me and syntax,
And did it, not with hobnails but tinstacks!
But to return from this excursion,—
Just, do you mark, when the song was sweetest,
The peace most deep and the charm completest,
There came, shall I say, a snap—
And the charm vanished!
And my sense returned, so strangely banished,
And, starting as from a nap,
I knew the crone was bewitching my lady,
With Jacynth asleep; and but one spring made I
Down from the casement, round to the portal.
Another minute and I had entered,—
When the door opened, and more than mortal
Stood, with a face where to my mind centred
All beauties I ever saw or shall see,
The Duchess: I stopped as if struck by palsy.
She was so different, happy and beautiful,
I felt at once that all was best,
And that I had nothing to do, for the rest,
But wait her commands, obey and be dutiful.
Not that, in fact, there was any commanding;
I saw the glory of her eye,
And the brow's height and the breast's expanding
And I was hers to live or to die.
As for finding what she wanted,
You know God Almighty granted
Such little signs should serve wild creatures
To tell one another all their desires,
So that each knows what his friend requires,
And does its bidding without teachers.
I preceded her; the crone
Followed silent and alone;
I spoke to her, but she merely jabbered
In the old style; both her eyes had shone
Back to their pits; her stature shrunk;
In short, the soul in its body sunk
Like a blade sent home to its scabbard.
We descended, I preceding;
Crossed the court with nobody heeding;
All the world was at the chase,
The court-yard like a desert-place,
The stable emptied of its small fry;
I saddled myself the very palfrey
I remember patting while it carried her,
The day she arrived and the Duke married her,
And, do you know, though it's easy deceiving
One's self in such matters, I can't help believing
The lady had not forgotten it either,
And knew the poor devil so much beneath her
Would have been only too glad for her service
To dance on hot ploughshares like a Turk dercise,

But, unable to pay proper duty where owing it.
Was reduced to that pitiful method of showing it:
For though the moment I began setting
His saddle on my own nag of Berold's begetting,
(Not that I meant to be obtrusive)
She stopped me, while his rug was shifting,
By a single rapid finger's lifting,
And, with a gesture kind but conclusive,
And a little shake of the head, refused me,—
I say, although she never used me,
Yet when she was mounted, the Gypsy behind her,
And I ventured to remind her,
I suppose with a voice of less steadiness
Than usual, for my feeling exceeded me,
— Something to the effect that I was in readiness
Whenever God should please she needed me,
Then, do you know, her face looked down on me
With a look that placed a crown on me,
And she felt in her bosom,—mark, her bosom—
And, as a flower-tree drops its blossom,
Dropped me,—ah, had it been a purse
Of silver, my friend, or gold that's worse,
Why, you see, as soon as I found myself
So understood,—that a true heart so may gain
Such a reward,—I should have gone home again,
Kissed Jacynth, and soberly drowned myself!
It was a little plait of hair
Such as friends in a convent make
To wear, each for the other's sake,—
This, see, which at my breast I wear,
Ever did (rather to Jacynth's grudgment),
And ever shall, till the Day of Judgment.
And then,—and then,—to cut short,—this is idle.
These are feelings it is not good to foster,—
I pushed the gate wide, she shook the bridle,
And the palfrey bounded,—and so we lost her.

XVI
When the liquor's out why clink the cannikin?
I did think to describe you the panic in
The redoubtable breast of our master the mannikin,
And what was the pitch of his mother's yellowness,
How she turned as a shark to snap the spare rib.
Clean off, sailors say, from a pearl-diving Carib.
When she heard, what she called the flight of the feloness
— But it seems such child's play,
What they said and did with the lady away!
And to dance on, when we've lost the music,
Always made me—and no doubt makes—you sick.

Nay, to my mind, the world's face looked so stern
As that sweet form disappeared through the postern,
She that kept it in constant good-humor,
It ought to have stopped; there seemed nothing to do more,
But the world thought otherwise and went on,
And my head's one that its spite was spent on:
Thirty years are fled since that morning,
And with them all my head's adorning.
Nor did the old Duchess die outright,
As you expect, of suppressed spite,
The natural end of every adorer
Not suffered to empty its poison-bladder:
But she and her son agreed, I take it,
That no one should touch on the story to make it,
For the wound in the Duke's pride rankled fiery,
So, they made no search and small inquiry—
And when fresh Gypsies have paid us a visit,
I've noticed the couple were never inquisitive,
But told them they're folks the Duke don't want here,
And bade them make haste and cross the frontier.
Brief, the Duchess was gone and the Duke was glad of it,
And the old one was in the young one's stead,
And took, in her place, the household's head,
And a blessed time the household had of it!
And were I not, as a man may say, cautious
How I trench, more than needs, on the nauseous,
I could favor you with sundry touches
Of the paint-smutches with which the Duchess Heightened the mellowness of her cheek's yel- lowness
(To get on faster) until at last her
Cheek grew to be one master-plaster
Of mucus and fucus from mere use of cernce:
In short, she grew from scalp to udder
Just the object to make you shudder.

XVII
You're my friend—
What a thing friendship is, world without end!
How it gives the heart and soul a stir-up
As if somebody broached you a glorious rumlet,
And poured out, all lovelily, sparklingly, sumit,
Our green Moldavia, the streaky syrup,
Cotnar as old as the time of the Druids—
Friendship may match with that monarch of fluids;
Each suppers a dry brain, fills you its ins-and-outs,
Gives your life's hour-glass a shake when the thin sand doths
Whether to run on or stop short, and guarantees
Age is not all made of stark sloth and arrant ease.
I have seen my little lady once more,
Jacynth, the Gypsy, Berold, and the rest of it,
For to me spoke the Duke, as I told you before;
I always wanted to make a clean breast of it:
And now it is made—why, my heart's blood,
that went trickle,
Trickle, but anon, in such muddly driblets,
Is pumped up brisk now, through the main ventricile,
And genially floats me about the giblets.
I'll tell you what I intend to do:
I must see this fellow his sad life through—
He is our Duke, after all,
And I, as he says, but a serf and thrall.
My father was born here, and I inherit
His fame, a chain he bound his son with;
Could I pay in a lump I should prefer it,
But there's no mine to blow up and get done with:
So, I must stay till the end of the chapter,
For, as to our middle-age-manners-adapater,
Be it a thing to be glad on or sorry on,
Some day or other, his head in a morion,
And breast in a hauberke, his heels he'll kick up,
Slain by an onslaught fierce of hiceup,
And then, when red doth the sword of our Duke rust,
And its leathern sheath lie o'ergrown with a blue crust,
Then I shall scrape together my earnings;
For, you see, in the churchyard Jacynth reposes,
And our children all went the way of the roses:
It's a long lane that knows no turnings,
One needs but little tackle to travel in;
So, just one stont cloak shall I indue:
And for a staff, what beats the javelin
With which his boars my father pinned you?
And then, for a purpose you shall hear presently,
Taking some Cotnar, a tight pumph skinful,
I shall go journeying, who but I, pleasantly!
Sorrow is vain and despondency sinful.
What's a man's age? He must hurry more, that's all;
Cram in a day, what his youth took a year to hold:
When we mind labor, then only, we're too old—
What age had Methusalem when he begat Saul?
And at last, as its have some buffeted ship sees,
(Come all the way from the north-parts with sperm oil)
I hope to get safely out of the turmoil
And arrive one day at the land of the Gypsies,
And find my lady, or hear the last news of her
From some old thief and son of Lucifer.
His forehead chapletted green with wreathy hop,
Sunburned all over like an Ethiopian.
And when my Cotmar begins to operate
And the tongue of the rogue to run at a proper rate,
And our wine-skin, tight once, shows each scarce-
cid dent,
I shall drop in with — as if by accident —
"You never knew, then, how it all ended,
What fortune good or bad attended
The little lady your Queen befriended?"
"And when that's told me, what's remaining?
This world's too hard for my explaining,
The same wise judge of matters equine
Who still preferred some slim four-year-old
To the big-boned stock of mighty Berold,
And, for strong Cotmar, drank French weak wine,
He also must be such a lady's scornor!
Smooth Jacob still robs homely Esaun:
Now up, now down, the world's one see-saw.
— So, I shall find out some snug corner
Under a hedge, like Orson the wood-knight,
Turn myself round and bid the world goodnight;
And sleep a sound sleep till the trumpet's blowing
Wakes me (unless priests cheat us laymen)
To a world where will be no further throwing
Pearls before swine that can't value them.
Amen!

A GRAMMARIAN'S FUNERAL

SHORTLY AFTER THE REVIVAL OF LEARNING IN EUROPE

Let us begin and carry up this corpse,
Singing together
Leave we the common crofts, the vulgar thorpes
Each in its tether
Sleeping safe on the bosom of the plain,
Cared-for till cock-crow:
Look out if yonder be not day again
Rimming the cock-row!
That's the appropriate country; there, man's thought
Rarer, less tetter.
Self-gathered for an outbreak, as it ought,
Chafes in the censer.
Leave we the unlettered plain its herd and crop;
Seek we sepulture
On a tall mountain, cleft to the top,
Crowded with culture!
All the peaks soar, but one the rest excels;
Clouds overcome it;
No! yonder sparkles the citadel's
Circling its summit.
Thither our path lies; wind we up the heights;
Wait ye the warning?
Our low life was the level's and the night's;
He's for the morning.

Step to a time, square chests, erect each head,
Wear the beholders!
This is our master, famous, calm and dead,
Borne on our shoulders.

Sleep, crop and herd! sleep, darkling thorpe and croft,
Safe from the weather!
He, whom we convey to his grave aloft,
Singing together,
He was a man born with thy face and throat,
Lyrie Apollo!
Long he lived nameless: how should Spring take note
Winter would follow?
Till lo, the little touch, and youth was gone!
Cramped and diminished,
Meant he, "New measures, other feet anon!
My dance is finished?"
No, that's the world's way: (keep the mountain-side,
Make for the city!)
He knew the signal, and stepped on with pride
Over men's pity;
Left play for work, and grappled with the world
Bent on escaping:
"What's in the scroll," quoth he, "thou kestetl furled?
Show me their shaping,
Theirs who most studied man, the bard and sage,
— Give!" — So, he gawnd him.
Straight got by heart that book to its last page:
Learned, we found him.
Yea, but we found him bald too, eyes like lead,
Accents uncertain:
"Time to taste life," another would have said,
"Up with the curtain!"
This man said rather, "Actual life comes next?
Patience a moment!
Grant I have mastered learning's crabbed text,
Still there's the comment.
Let me know all! Prate not of most or least,
Painful or easy!
Even to the crumbs I'd fain eat up the feast.
Ay, nor feel uneasy."
Oh, such a life as he resolved to live,
When he had learned it.
When he had gathered all books had to give!
Sooner, he spurned it.
Image the whole, then execute the parts —
Fancy the fabric
Quite, ere you build; ere steel strike fire from quarter,
Ere mortar dab brick!

(Here's the town-gate reached: there's the markt-place Gaping before us.)
Yea, this in him was the peculiar grace
(Hearten our chorus!)
That before living he'd learn how to live —
No end to learning:
Earn the means first — God surely will contrive Use for our earning.
Others mistrust and say, "But time escapes:
Live now or never!"
He said, "What's time? Leave now for dogs and apes!
Man has Forever."

Back to his book then; deeper drooped his head:
Calcines racked him;
Lendeth before, his eyes grew dress of lead:
Tussis attacked him.

"Now, master, take a little rest!" — not he!
(Caution redoubled.
Step two abreast, the way winds narrowly!)
Not a whit troubled,
Back to his studies, fresher than at first,
Fierce as a dragon
He (soul-hydropic with a sacred thirst)
Sucked at the flagon.
Oh, if we draw a circle premature,
Headless of far gain,
Greedily for quick returns of profit, sure
God is our bargain!

Was it not great? did not he throw on God,
(He loves the burden) —
God's task to make the heavenly period
Perfect the earthen?
Did not he magnify the mind, show clear
Just what it all meant?.
He would not discount life, as fools do here,
Paid by instamunte.
He ventured neck or nothing — heaven's success
Found, or earth's failure:
"Will thou trust death or not?" He answered
"Yes! Hence with life's pale lure!"

That low man seeks a little thing to do.
Sees it and does it:
This high man, with a great thing to pursue,
Dies ere he knows it.
That low man goes on adding one to one,
His hundred's soon hit:
This high man, aiming at a million,
Misses an unit.
That, has the world here — should he need the next.
Let the world mind him!
This, throws himself on God, and unperplexed
Seeking shall find him.
So, with the throttling hands of death at strife,
Ground he at grammar;
Still, through the rattle, parts of speech were rife:
While he could stammer
He settled Hot's business — let it be!
Properly based On —
Gave us the doctrine of the enelic De —
Dead from the waist down.
Well, here's the platform, here's the proper
place:
Hail to your pursuicns.
All ye highfler of the feathered race,
Swallows and curlews!
Here's the top-peak; the multitude below
Live, for they can, there:
This man decided not to Live but Know —
Burn this man there?
Here — here's his place, where meteors shoot,
clouds form.
Lightnings are loosened,
Stars come and go! Let joy break with the storm.

Peace let the dew send!
Lofty designs must close in like effects:
Loftily lying,
Leave him — still loftier than the world suspects,
Living and dying.

THE HERETIC'S TRAGEDY
A MIDDLE-AGE INTERLUDE

Rom Mundio; seu, Juxite me Floribus. A Conceit of Master Gysbrecht, Canon-Regular of Saint Fodecumby-the-Bar, Ypres City. Cantique, Virgilius. And both often been sung at Hock-tide and Festivals.
Gavisus eram, Jessides.

A. D. 1314; as distorted by the refraction from Flemish brain to brain, during the course of a couple of centuries. R. B.)

PREADMONISHETH THE ABBOT DEODAET

The Lord, we look to once for all,
Is the Lord we should look at, all at once:
He knows not to vary, saith Saint Paul,
Nor the shadow of turning, for the nonce.
See him no other than as he is!
Give both the infinitudes their due —
Infinite mercy, but, I wis,
As infinite a justice too.

[Organ: plagal-cadence]
As infinite a justice too.

ONE SINGETH

John, Master of the Temple of God,
Falling to sin the Unknown Sin,
What he bought of Emperor Aldabrod,
He sold it to Sultan Saladin:
Till caught by Pope Clement, a-buzzing there,
Hornet-prince of the mad wasps' hive,
And clip't of his wings in Paris square,
They bring him now to be burned alive.

[And wanteth there grace of lute or clavicithern, ye shall say to confirm him who singeth —
We bring John now to be burned alive.

In the midst is a goodly gallows built;
'Twixt fork and fork, a stake is stuck;
But first they set divers tumbrils a-till,
Make a trench all round with the city nuck
Inside they pile log upon log, good store;
Fagots not few, blocks great and small,
Reach a man's mid-thigh, no less, no more,—
For they mean he should roast in the sight of d'All.

Cho. — We mean he should roast in the sight of d'All.

Good sappy bavins that kindle forthwith;
Billets that blaze substantial and slow;
Fine-stump split deftly, dry as pith;
Larch-heart that chars to a chalk-white glow:
Then up they hoist me John in a chafe,

DRAMATIC ROMANCES

What, a boy at his side, with the bloom of a lass,
To help and handle my lord’s hour-glass!
Didst ever behold so lithe a chime?
Hiss cheek hath laps like a fresh-singed swine.

Aaron’s asleep — shelve hip to hamach
Or somebody deal him a dig in the paunch!
Look at the purse with the tassel and knob,
And the gown with the angel and thingum-bob!

What’s he at, quotha? reading his text!
Now you’ve his curtsey — and what comes next?

See to our converts — you doomed black dozen —
No stealing away — nor cog nor cozen!
You five, that were thieves, deserve it fairly;
You seven, that were beggars, will live less sparely;
You took your turn and dipped in the hat,
Got fortune — and fortune gets you; mind that!

Give your first groan — compunction’s at work;
And soft! from a Jew you mount to a Turk.
Lo, Micah, — the selfsame beard on chin
He was four times already converted in!
Here’s a knife, clip quick — it’s a sign of grace —
Or he runs us all with his hanging-face.

Whom now is the bishop a-leering at?
I know a point where his text falls pat.
I’ll tell him to-morrow, a word just now
Went to my heart and made me vow
I meddle no more with the worst of trades —
Let somebody else pay his serenades.

Gron all together now, whee — hee — hee!
It’s a work, it’s a work, ah, woe is me!
It began, when a herd of us, picked and placed,
Were spurred through the Corso, stripped to the waist;
Jew brutes, with sweat and blood well spent
To usher in worthily Christian Lent.

It grew, when the hangman entered our bounds,
Yelled, pricked us out to his church like hounds;
It got to a pitch, when the hand indeed
Which gutter my purse would throttle my creed;
And it overflows, when, to even the odd,
Men I helped to their souls help me to their God.

But now, while the scapegoats leave our flock,
And the rest sit silent and count the clock,
Since forced to muse the appointed time
On these precious facts and truths sublime,
Let us fitly employ it, under our breath,
In saying Ben Ezra’s Song of Death.

For Rabbi Ben Ezra, the night he died,
Called sons and sons’ sons to his side,
And spoke, “This world has been harsh and strange;
Something is wrong: there needeth a change.

But what, or where? at the last or first?
In one point only we sinned, at worst.

“The Lord will have mercy on Jacob yet.
And again in his border see Israel set.
When Judah beholds Jerusalem,
The stranger-seed shall be joined to them:
To Jacob’s House shall the Gentiles cleave,
So the Prophet saith and his sons believe

“Ay, the children of the chosen race
Shall carry and bring them to their place:
In the land of the Lord shall lead the same,
Bondsman and handmaids. Who shall blame,
When the slaves enslave, the oppressed ones o’er
The oppressor triumph forevermore?

“God spoke, and gave us the word to keep:
Bade never fold the hands nor sleep
Mid a faithless world, — at watch and ward.
Till Christ at the end relieve our guard.
By his servant Moses the watch was set:
Though near upon cock-crow, we keep it yet.

“Thou! if thou wast he, who at midnight came,
By the starlight, naming a dubious name!
And if, too heavy with sleep — too rash
With fear — O thou, if that martyr-gash
Fell on thee coming to take thine own,
And we gave the Cross, when we owed the Throne —

“Thou art the Judge. We are bruised thus,
But, the Judgment over, join sides with us!
Thine too is the cause! and not more thine
Thar ours, is the work of these dogs and swine,
Whose life laughs through and spits at their creed,
Who maintain thee in word, and defy thee in deed!

“We withstood Christ then? Be mindful how
At least we withstand Barabba's now!
Was our outrage sore? But the worst we spared,
To have called these — Christians, had we dared!
Let defiance to them pay mistrust of thee,
And Rome make amends for Calvary!

“By the torture, prolonged from age to age,
By the infancy, Israel’s heritage,
By the Ghetto’s plague, by the garb’s disgrace,
By the badge of shame, by the felon’s place,
By the branding-tool, the bloody whip,
And the summons to Christian fellowship, —

“We boast our proof that at least the Jew
Would wrest Christ’s name from the Devil’s crew,
Thy face took never so deep a shade,
But we fought them in it, God our aid!
A trophy to bear, as we march, thy band,
South, East, and on to the Pleasant Land! 1

The Statue and the Bust

This poem was published first in 1855 as an independent issue. A correspondent of an American paper once asked the following questions respecting this poem: —

"1. When, how, and where did it happen? Browning's divine vagueness lets one gather only that the lady's husband was a Riccardi.

2. Who was the lady? who the duke? 3. The magnificent house wherein Florence lodges her préfet is known to all Florentine ball-goers as the Palazzo Riccardi. It was bought by the Riccardi from the Medici in 1639. From none of its windows did the lady gaze at her more than royal lover. From what window, then, if from any? Are the statue and the bust still in their original positions?"

The letter fell into the hands of Mr. Thomas J. Wise, who sent it to Mr. Browning, and received the following answer.

Jan. 8, 1887.

"Dear Mr. Wise,—I have seldom met with such a strange inability to understand what seems the plainest matter possible: 'ball-goers' are probably not history-readers, but any guide-book would confirm what is sufficiently stated in the poem. I will append a note or two, however.

1. 'This story the townsmen tell;' 'when, how, and where,' constitutes the subject of the poem. 2. The lady was the wife of Riccardi; and the duke, Ferdinand, just as the poem says. 3. As it was built by, and inhabited by, the Medici till sold, long after to the Riccardi, it was not from the duke's palace, but a window in that of the Riccardi, that the lady gazed at her lover riding by. The statue is still in its place, looking at the window under which 'now is the empty shrine.' Can anything be clearer? My 'vagueness' leaves what to be 'gathered' when all these things are put down in black and white? Oh, 'ball-goers'!"

There's a palace in Florence, the world knows well, And a statue watches it from the square, And this story of both do our townsmen tell.

Ages ago, a lady there, At the farthest window facing the East Asked, 'Who rides by with the royal air?'"
The bridesmaids' prattle around her ceased;
She leaned forth, one on either hand;
They saw how the blush of the bride increased—

They felt by its beats her heart expand—
As one at each ear and both in a breath
Whispered, "The Great-Duke Ferdinand."

That selfsame instant, underneath,
The Duke rode past in his idle way,
Empty and fine like a swordless sheath.

Gay he rode, with a friend as gay,
Till he threw his head back—"Who is she?"
—"A bride the Riccardi brings home to-day."

Hair in heaps lay heavily
Over a pale brow spirit-pure—
Carved like the heart of the coal-black tree,
Crisped like a war-steed's enc牢ure—
Of vainly sought to dissemble her eyes
Of the blackest black our eyes endure,
And lo, a blade for a knight's emprise
Filled the fine empty sheath of a man,—
The Duke grew straightway brave and wise.

He looked at her, as a lover can;
She looked at him, as one who awakes:
The past was a sleep, and her life began.

Now, love so ordered for both their sakes,
A feast was held that selfsame night
In the pile which the mighty shadow makes.

For Via Larga is three-parts light,
But the palace overshadows one.
Because of a crime, which may God requite!

To Florence and God the wrong was done,
Through the first republic's murder there
By Cosimo and his cursed son.

The Duke (with the statue's face in the square)
Turned in the midst of his multitude
At the bright approach of the bridal pair.

Face to face the lovers stood
A single minute and no more,
While the bridegroom bent as a man subdued—

Bowed till his bonnet brushed the floor—
For the Duke on the lady a kiss conferred,
As the courtly custom was of yore.

In a minute can lovers exchange a word?
If a word did pass, which I do not think,
Only one out of a thousand heard.

That was the bridegroom. At day's brink
He and his bride were alone at last
In a bed chamber by a taper's blink.

Calmly he said that her lot was cast,
That the door she had passed was shut on her
Till the final catafalque repassed.

The world meanwhile, its noise and stir,
Through a certain window facing the East
She could watch like a convent's chronicler.

Since passing the door night lead to a feast,
And a feast might lead to so much beside,
He, of many evils, chose the least.

"Freely I choose too," said the bride—
"Your window and its world suffice,"
Replied the tongue, while the heart replied—

"If I spend the night with that devil twice,
May his window serve as my loop of hell
Whence a damned soul looks on paradise!"

"I fly to the Duke who loves me well,
Sit by his side and laugh at sorrow
Ere I count another ave-bell.

"'T is only the coat of a page to borrow,
And tie my hair in a horse-boy's trim,
And I save my soul—but not to-morrow"—

(She checked herself and her eye grew dim)
"My father furnishes to bless my state:
I must keep it one day more for him.

"Is one day more so long to wait?
Moreover the Duke rides past, I know;
We shall see each other, sure as fate."

She turned on her side and slept. Just so!
So we resolve on a thing and sleep:
So did the lady, ages ago.

That night the Duke said, "Dear or cheap
As the cost of this cup of bliss may prove
To body or soul, I will drain it deep."

And on the morrow, bold with love,
He beckoned the bridegroom (close on call,
As his duty bade, by the Duke's alcove)

And smiled: "'T was a very funeral,
Your lady will think, this feast of ours,—
A shame to efface, what'er befall!"

"What if we break from the Arno bowers,
And try if Petræa, cool and green,
Cure last night's fault with this morning's flowers?"

The bridegroom, not a thought to be seen
On his steady brow and quiet mouth,
Said, "Too much favor for me so mean!"

"But, alas! my lady leaves the South;
Each wind that comes from the Apennine
Is a menace to her tender youth:

"Nor a way exists, the wise opine,
If she quits her palace twice this year,
To avert the flower of life's decline."

Quoth the Duke, "A sage and a kindly fear.
Moreover Petræa is cold this spring;
Be our feast to-night as usual here!"
And then to himself—"Which night shall bring
Thy bride to her lover's embraces, fool—
Or liam the fool, and thou art the king!

"Yet my passion must wait a night, nor cool—
For to-night the Envoy arrives from France
Whose heart I unlock with thyself, my tool.

"I need thee still and might miss perchance—
To-day is not wholly lost, beside,
With its hope of my lady's countenance:

"For I ride — what should I do but ride?
And passing her palace, if I list,
May glance at its window — well betide!"

So said, so done: nor the lady missed
One ray that broke from the ardent brow,
Nor a curl of the lips where the spirit kissed.

Be sure that each renewed the vow,
No morrow's sun should arise and set
And leave them then as it left them now.

But next day passed, and next day yet,
With still fresh cause to wait one day more
Ere each leaped over the parapet.

And still, as love's brief morning wore,
With a gentle start, half smile, half sigh,
They found love not as it seemed before.

They thought it would work infallibly,
But not in despite of heaven and earth:
The rose would blow when the storm passed by.

Meantime they could profit in winter's death
By store of fruits that supplant the rose:
The world and its ways have a certain worth:

And to press a point while these oppose
Were simple folly; better wait:
We lose no friends and we gain no foes.

Meantime, worse fates than a lover's fate,
Who daily may ride and pass and look,
Where his lady watches behind the grate!

And she — she watched the square like a book
Holding one picture and only one,
Which daily to find she undertook:

When the picture was reached the book was done,
And she turned from the picture at night to scheme
Of tearing it out for herself next sun.

So weeks grew months, years; gleam by gleam
The glory dropped from their youth and love,
And both perceived they had dreamed a dream;

Which hovered as dreams do, still above:
But who can take a dream for a truth?

Oh, hide our eyes from the next remove!

One day as the lady saw her youth
Depart, and the silver thread that streaked
Her hair, and, worn by the serpent's tooth,
The brow so puckered, the chin so peaked, —
And wondered who the woman was,
Hollow-eyed and haggard-cheeked,

Fronting her silent in the glass —
"Summon here," she suddenly said,
"Before the rest of my old self pass,

"His, the Carver, a hand to aid,
Who fashions the clay no love will change,
And fixes a beauty never to fade.

"Let Robbia's craft so apt and strange
 Arrest the remains of young and fair,
And rivet them while the seasons range.

"Make me a face on the window there,
Waiting as ever, mute the while,
My love to pass below in the square!

"And let me think that it may beguile
Dreary days which the dead must spend
Down in their darkness under the aisle,

"To say, 'What matters it at the end?
I did no more while my heart was warm
Than does that image, my pale-faced friend.'

"Where is the use of the lip's red charm,
The heaven of hair, the pride of the brow,
And the blood that blues the inside arm —

"Unless we turn, as the soul knows how,
The earthly gift to an end divine?
A lady of clay is as good, I trow."

But long ere Robbia's cornice, fine,
With flowers and fruits which leaves enlace,
Was set where now is the empty shrine —

(And, leaning out of a bright blue space,
As a ghost might lean from a chink of sky,
The passionate pale lady's face —

Eying ever, with earnest eye
And quick-turned neck at its breathless stretch,
Some one who ever is passing by —)

The Duke had sighed like the simplest wretch
In Florence, "Youth — my dream escapes!
Will its record stay?" And he bade them fetch

Some subtle molder of brazen shapes —
"Can the soul, the will, die out of a man
Ere his body find the grave that gapes?

"John of Donay shall effect my plan,
Set me on horseback here aloft,
Alive, as the crafty sculptor can,

"In the very square I have crossed so oft:
That men may admire, when future suns
Shall touch the eyes to a purpose soft,
"While the mouth and the brow stay brave in bronze
Admire and say, 'When he was alive
How he would take his pleasure once!'

"And it shall go hard but I contrive
To listen the while, and laugh in my tomb
At idleness which aspires to strive."

So! While these wait the trump of doom,
How do their spirits pass, I wonder.
Nights and days in the narrow room?

Still, I suppose, they sit and ponder
What a gift life was, ages ago,
Six steps out of the chapel yonder.

Only they see not God, I know,
Nor all that chivalry of his,
The soldier-saints who, row on row,
Burn upward each to his point of bliss —
Since, the end of life being manifest,
He had burned his way through the world to this.

I hear you reproach, "But delay was best,
For their end was a crime." — Oh, a crime will do
As well, I reply, to serve for a test,
As a virtue golden through and through,
Sufficient to vindicate itself
And prove its worth at a moment's view!

Must a game be played for the sake of pelf?
Where a button goes, 't were an epigram
To offer the stamp of the very Gnelph.

The true has no value beyond the sham:
As well the counter as coin, I submit,
When your table's a hat, and your prize, a dram.

Stake your counter as boldly every whit,
Venture as warily, use the same skill,
Do your best, whether winning or losing it,
If you choose to play! — is my principle.
Let a man contend to the uttermost
For his life's set prize, be it what it will!

The counter our lovers staked was lost
As surely as if it were lawfull coin:
And the sin I impute to each frustrate ghost
Is — the unlit lamp and the uncurtained loin,
Though the end in sight was a vice, I say.
You of the virtue (we issue join)
How strive you? De te fabula!

PORPHYRIA'S LOVER

First printed in Mr. Fox's Monthly Repository in 1836, under the signature Z. When issued in Bells and Pomegranates it was grouped with Johannes Agricola in Meditation as No. II. of Maulhouse Cials. The poem has an interest as the earliest, apparently, of Browning's monologues.

THE rain set early in to-night,
The sullen wind was soon awake,
It tore the elm-tops down for spite,
And did its worst to vex the lake:
I listened with heart fit to break.
When glided in Porphyria; straight
She shut the cold out and the storm,
And kneaded and made the cheerless grate
Blaze up, and all the cottage warm;
Which done, she rose, and from her form
Withdraw the dripping cloak and shawl,
And laid her soiled gloves by, untied
Her hat and let the damp hair fall,
And, last, she sat down by my side
And called me, When no voice replied,
She put my arm about her waist,
And made her smooth white shoulder bare
And all her yellow hair displaced,
And, stooping, made my cheek lie there,
And spread, o'er all, her yellow hair,
Murmuring how she loved me — she
Too weak, for all her heart's endeavor,
To set its struggling passion free
From pride, and vainer ties disserver,
And give herself to me forever.
But passion sometimes would prevail.
Nor could to-night's gay feast restrain
A sudden thought of one so pale
For love of her, and all in vain:
So, she was come through wind and rain.
Be sure I looked up at her eyes
Happy and proud! ; at last I knew
Porphyria worshipped me; surprise
Made my heart swell, and still it grew
While I debated what to do,
That moment she was mine, mine, fair,
Perfectly pure and good: I found
A thing to do, and all her hair
In one long yellow string I wound
Three times her little throat around,
And strangled her. No pain felt she;
I am quite sure she felt no pain.
As a shut bud that holds a bee,
I warily oped her lids: again
Laughed the blue eyes without a stain.
And I untightened next the press
About her neck; her cheek once more
Blushed bright beneath my burning kiss:
I propped her head up as before,
Only, this time my shoulder bore
Her head, which droops upon it still:
The smiling rosy little head,
So glad it has its utmost will,
That all it scorned at once is fled,
And I, its love, am gained instead!
Porphyria's love: she guessed not how
Her darling one wish would be heard.
And thus we sit together now,
And all night long we have not stirred,
And yet God has not said a word!"
"CHILDE ROLAND TO THE DARK TOWER CAME"

See Edgar's song in Lear.

My first thought was, he lied in every word,
That hoary cripple, with malicious eye
Askance to watch the working of his lie
On mine, and mouth scarce able to afford
Suppression of the glea, that pursued and scored
Its edge, at one more victim gained thereby.

What else should he be set for, with his staff?
What, save to waylay with his lies, ensnare
All travellers who might find him posted there,
And ask the road? I guessed what skull-like laugh
Would break, what crutch 'gin write my epitaph
For pastime in the dusty thoroughfare.

If at his counsel I should turn aside
Into that ominous tract which, all agree,
Hides the Dark Tower. Yet acquiescingly
I did turn as he pointed: neither pride
Nor hope rekindling at the end desired.
So much as gladness that some end might be.

For, what with my whole world-wide wandering,
What with my search drawn out through years, my hope
Dwindled into a ghost not fit to cope
With that obstreperous joy success would bring,—
I hardly tried now to re bu kin the spring
Of my heart made, finding failure in its scope.

As when a sick man very near to death
Seems dead indeed, and feels begin and end
The tears, and takes the farewell of each friend,
And hears one bid the other go, draw breath
Frederic outside, (''since all is o'er,''' he saith,
''And the blow fallen no grieving can amend;'')

While some discuss if near the other graves
Be room enough for this, and when a day
Suits best for carrying the corpse away,
With care about the banners, scaves and staves:
And still the man hears all, and only craves
He may not shame such tender love and stay.

Thus. I had so long suffered in this quest,
Head failure prophesied so o'er, been writ
So many times among ''The Band'' — to wit,
The knights who to the Dark Tower's search addressed
Their steps—that just to fail as they, seemed best,
And all the doubt was now—should I be fit?

So, quiet as despair, I turned from him,
That hateful cripple, out of his highway
Into the path he pointed. All the day
Had been a dreary one at best, and din
Was settling to its close, yet shot one grim
Red leer to see the plain catch its stray.

For mark! no sooner was I fairly found
Pledged to the plain, after a pace or two,
Then, pausing to throw backward a last view
O'er the safe road, 't was gone; gray plain all round:
Nothing but plain to the horizon's bound.
I might go on; naught else remained to do.

So, on I went. I think I never saw
Such starved ignoble nature; nothing threw:
For flowers—as well expect a cedar grove!
But cockle, spurge, according to their law
Might propagate their kind, with none to awe,
You'd think: a burr had been a treasure trove.

No! penny, inertness and grimace,
In some strange sort, were the land's portion,
''See
Or shut your eyes,''' said Nature peevishly,
''It nothing skills: I cannot help my case:
'T is the Last Judgment's fire must care this place,
Calcine its clods and set my prisoners free.''

If there pushed any ragged thistle-stalk
Above its mates, the head was chopped; the bents
Were jealous else. What made those holes and rents
In the dock's harsh swarth leaves, bruised as to bark
All hope of greenness? 't is a brute must walk
Patching their life out, with a brute's intents.

As for the grass, it grew as scant as hair
In leprosy; thin dry blades prick ed the mud
Which underneath looked kneaded up with blood,
One stiff blind horse, his every bone a stare,
Stood stupefied, however he came there:
Thrust out past service from the devil's stud!

Alive? he might be dead for aught I know,
With that red gaunt and collapsed neck a-strain.
And shut eyes underneath the rusty mane;
Seldom went such grotesqueness with such woe;
I never saw a brute I hated so;
He must be wicked to deserve such pain.

I shut my eyes and turned them on my heart.
As a man calls for wine before he fights,
I asked one draught of earlier, happier sights,
Ere fitly I could hope to play my part.
Think first, fight afterwards— the soldier's art:
One taste of the old time sets all to rights.

Not it! I fancied Cuthbert's reddening face
Beneath its garniture of only gold.
Dear fellow, till I almost felt him fold
An arm in mine to fix me to the place.
That way he used. Alas, one night's disgrace!
Out went my heart's new fire and left it cold.
Giles then, the soul of honor — there he stands
Frank as ten years ago when knighted first.
What honest man should dare (he said) he durst.
Good — but the scene shifts — laugh! what hangman hands
Pin to his breast a parchment? His own hands
Read it. Poor traitor, spit upon and curst!

Better this present than a past like that;
Back therefore to my darkening path again!
No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain.
Will the night send a howlet or a bat?
I asked: when something on the dismal flat
Came to arrest my thoughts and change their train.

A sudden little river crossed my path
As unexpected as a serpent comes.
No sluggish tide congenial to the glooms;
This, as it frothed by, might have been a bath
For the fiend's glowing hoof — to see the wrath
Of its black eddy bespate with flakes and spumes.

So petty yet so spiteful! All along
Low scrubby alders kneeled down over it;
Drenched willows flung their headlong in a fit
Of mute despair, a suicidal throng;
The river which had done them all the wrong,
Whate'er that was, rolled by, deterred no
whit,

Which, while I forded. — good saints, how I feared
To set my foot upon a dead man's cheek,
Each step, or feel the spear I thrust to seek
For hollows, tangled in his hair or beard!
— It may have been a water-rat I spared,
But, ugh! it sounded like a baby's shriek.

Glad was I when I reached the other bank.
Now for a better country. Vain presage!
Who were the strugglers, what war did they wage,
Whose savage trample thus could pad the dank
Soil to a plash? Toads in a poisoned tank,
Or wild cats in a red-hot iron cage —

The fight must so have seemed in that fell cirque.
What penned them there, with all the plain to choose?
No footprint leading to that horrid maws,
None out of it. Mad broomage set to work
Their brains, no doubt, like galley-slaves the Turk
Pits for his pastime, Christians against Jews.

And more than that — a furlong on — why,
there!
What bad use was that engine for, that wheel.
Or brake, not wheel — that harrow fit to reel
Men's bodies out like silk? with all the air
Of Tophet's tool, on earth left mauaire,
Or brought to sharpen its rusty teeth of steel,

Then came a bit of stubbed ground, once a wood,
Next a marsh, it would seem, and now mere earth
Desperate and done with: (so a fool finds mirth,
Makes a thing and then mars it, till his mood
Changes and off he goes!) within a rood —
Bog, clay and rubble, sand and stark black dearth.

Now blotches rankling, colored gay and grim.
Now patches where some leanness of the soil's
Broke into moss or substances like boils;
Then came some palesied oak, a cleft in him
Like a distorted mouth that splits its rim
Gaping at death, and dies while it recoils.

And just as far as ever from the end!
Naught in the distance but the evening,
naught
To point my footstep further! At the thought,
A great black bird, Apolloyn's bosom-friend,
Sailed past, nor beat his wide wing dragon-penned
That brushed my cap — perchance the guide
I sought.

For, looking up, aware I somehow grew,
'Spite of the dusk, the plain had given place
All round to mountains — with such name to grace
Mere ugly heights and heaps now stolen in view.
How thus they had surprised me, — solve it,
you!
How to get from them was no clearer case.

Yet half I seemed to recognize some trick
Of mischief happened to me, God knows when —
In a bad dream perhaps. Here ended, then,
Progress this way. When, in the very nick
Of giving up, one time more, came a click
As when a trap shuts — you're inside the den!

Burningly it came on me all at once.
This was the place! those two hills on the right,
Crouched like two bulls locked horn in horn
in fight:
While to the left, a tall scalped mountain . . .
Dune,
Dotard, a-dozing at the very nonee,
After a life spent training for the sight —

What in the midst lay but the Tower itself?
The round squat turret, blind as the fool's
heart,
Built of brown stone, without a counterpart
In the whole world. The tempest's mocking eel
Points to the shipman thus the unseen shelf
He strikes on, only when the timbers start.
A SOUL’S TRAGEDY

ACT FIRST, BEING WHAT WAS CALLED THE POETRY OF CHIAPPINO’S LIFE; AND ACT SECOND, ITS PROSE

This drama was first printed with Luria as the concluding number of Bells and Pomegranates in April, 1846.

PERSONS

Luitolfo and Eulalia, betrothed lovers.

Chiappino, their friend.

Ossieres, the Pope’s Legate.

Citizens of Faenza.

TIME, 15th. Place, Faenza.

ACT I

Inside Luitolfo’s house. Chiappino, Eulalia.

Eudalia. What is it keeps Luitolfo? Night’s fast falling.

And it was scarce sunset . . . had the ave-hell

Sounded before he sought the Provost’s house? I think not: all he had to say would take

Few minutes, such a very few, to say!

How do you think, Chiappino? If our lord

The Provost were less friendly to your friend

Than everybody here professes him, I should begin to tremble—should not you?

Why are you silent when so many times

I turn and speak to you?

Chiappino. That’s good!

Eu. Why do you laugh?

Ch. Yes. I had fancied nothing that bears price

In the whole world was left to call my own;

And, maybe, felt a little pride thereat.

Up to a single man’s or woman’s love.

Down to the right in my own flesh and blood,

There’s nothing mine. I fancied. — till you

spoke:

— Counting, you see, as “nothing” the permission

To study this peculiar lot of mine

In silence: well, go silence with the rest

Of the world’s good! What can I say, shall serve?

And such was fortunate, yet each of old

Lost, lost! one moment knelled the woe of years.

There they stood, ranged along the hillsides, met

To view the last of me, a living frame

For one more picture! in a sheet of flame

I saw them and I knew them all. And yet

Damon’s the song-horn to my lips I set.

And blew. “Childe Roland to the Dark Tower came!”

Eu. This, — lost you, even more than needs, embitter

Our parting; say your wrongs have cast, for once.

A cloud across your spirit!

Ch. How a cloud?

Eu. No man nor woman loves you, did you say?

Ch. My God, were ’t not for thee!

Eu. Ay, God remains,

Even did men forsake you.

Ch. Oh, not so!

Were ’t not for God, I mean, what hope of truth —

Speaking truth, hearing truth, would stay with man?

I, now — the homeless friendless penniless

Prescribed and exiled wretch who speak to you,

Ought to speak truth, yet could not, for my death,

The thing that tempts me most! help speaking lies

About your friendship and Luitolfo’s courage

And all our township’s equanimity —

Through sheer incompetence to rid myself

Of the old miserable lying trick

Caught from the liars I have lived with — God

Did I not turn to thee? It is thy prompting

I dare to be ashamed of, and thy counsel

Would die along my coward lip, I know;

But I do turn to thee. This craven tongue,

These features which refuse the soul its way,

Reclaim thou! Give me truth — truth, power to speak

And after be sole present to approve

The spoken truth! Or, stay, that spoken truth

Who knows but you, too, may approve?

Eu. Ah, well —

Keep silence then, Chiappino!

Ch. You would hear.

You shall now, — why the thing we please to style

My gratitude to you and all your friends
A SOUL’S TRAGEDY

For service done me, is just gratitude
So much as yours was service; no whit more,
I was born here, so was Luitolfo; both
At one time, much with the same circumstance
Of rank and wealth; and both, up to this night
Of parring company, have side by side.
Still fared, he in the sunshine: I, the shadow.
"Why?" asks the world. "Because," replies
The world.
To its complacent self, "these playfellows,
Who took at church the holy-water drop
Each from the other's finger, and so forth,—
Were of two moods: Luitolfo was the proper
Friend-making, everywhere friend-finding soul,
Fit for the sunshine, so, it followed him.
A happy-tempered bringer of the best
Out of the worst; who bears with what's past cure,
And puts a good face on 't—wisely passive
Where action's fruitless, while he remedies
In silence what the foolish rail against;
A man to smooth such natures as parade
Of opposition must exasperate;
No general gammet-gatherer for the weak
Against the strong, yet over-scrupulous
At lucky junctures; one who won't forego
The after-battle work of binding wounds,
Because, forsooth he'd have to bring himself
To side with wound-inflitters for their leave!"
"Why do you gaze, nor help me to repeat
What comes so glibly from the common mouth,
About Luitolfo and his so-styled friend?
En. Because, that friend's sense is obscured . . .
Ch. I thought
You would be readier with the other half
Of the world's story, my half! Yet, 'tis true,
For all the world does say it. Say your worst!
True, I thank God, I ever said "you sin,"
When a man did sin: if I could not say it,
I glared at him; if I could not glare it,
I prayed against him; then my part seemed over.
God's may begin yet: so it will I trust.
En. If the world outraged you, did we?
Ch. What's "me"
That you use well or ill? It's man in me,
All your successes are an outrage to,
You all, whom sunshine follows, as you say!
Here's our Faenza birthplace; they send here
A provost from Ravenna: how he rules,
You can at times be eloquent about
"Then, end his rule!" "Ah yes, one stroke does that!"
But patience under wrong works slow and sure.
Must violence still bring peace forth? He, beside.
Returns so blandly one's obseiance! ah—
Some latent virtue may be lingering yet,
Some human sympathy which, once excite,
And all the lump were heaved quietly:
So, no more talk of striking, for this time!"
But I, as one of those he rules, won't hear
These pretty takings-up and layings-down
Our cause, just as you think occasion suits.
Enough of earnest, is there? You'll play, will you?
Diversify your tactics, give submission,
Obsequiousness and flattery a turn,
While we die in our misery patient deaths?
We all are outraged then, and I the first;
I, for mankind, resent each shrug and smirk,
Each beck and bend, each . . . all you do and are,
I hate!
En. We share a common censure, then.
"If well you have not poor Luitolfo's part
Nor mine to point out in the wide offens:
Ch. Oh, shall I let you so escape me, lady?
Come, on your own ground, lady, — from yourself.
(Leaving the people's wrong, which most is mine)
What have I got to be so grateful for?
These three last fines, no doubt, one on the other
Paid by Luitolfo?
En. Shame, Chiappino!
Ch. Shame
Fall presently on who deserves it most!
—Which is to see. He paid my fines — my friend,
Your prosperous smooth lover presently,
Then, scarce your wooer, — soon, your husband: well—
I loved you.
En. Hold!
Ch. You knew it, years ago.
When my voice faltered and my eye grew dim
Because you gave me your silk mask to hold—
My voice that greatness when there's need to curse
The people's Provost to their heart's content,
—My eye, the Provost, who hears all men's eyes,
Ranishes now because he cannot hear,—
You knew . . . but you do your parts — my part, I:
So be it! You flourish, I decry: all's well.
En. I hear this for the first time.
Ch. The fault's there? Then my days spoke not, and my nights of fire
Were voiceless? Then the very heart may burst.
Yet all prove naught, because no mining speech
Tells leisurely that thus it is and thus?
En. Eulalia, truce with toxic for this once!
A banished fool, who troubles you to-night
For the last time — why, what's to fear from me?
You knew I loved you!
En. Not so, on my faith!
You were my now-affianced lover's friend—
Came in, went out with him, could speak as he,
All praise your ready parts and pregnant wit;
See how your words come from you in a crowd!
Luitolfo's first to place you o'er himself
In all that challenges respect and love:
Yet you were silent then, who blame me now
I say all this by fascination, sure:
I, all but wed to one I love, yet listen!
It must be, you are wronged, and that the wrongs
Luitolfo pities . . .
Ch. — You too pity? Do!
But hear first what my wrongs are; so began
This talk and so shall end this talk, I say,
Was 't not enough that I must strive (I saw)
To grow so far familiar with your charms
As next contrive some way to win them — which
To do, an age seemed far too brief — for, see!
We all aspire to heaven; and there lies heaven
Above us: go there! Dare we go? no, surely!
How dare we go without a reverence pause,
A growing less night for heaven? Just so,
I dared not speak: the greater fool, it seems!
Was 't not enough to struggle with such folly,
But I must have, beside, the very man
Whose slight free loose and inapposable soul
Gave his tongue scope to say what 'er he would — Must have him load me with his benefits
— For fortune's fiercest stroke?

Eu. Justice to him
That's now entreating, at his risk perhaps,
Justice for you! Did he once call those acts
Of simple friendship — bounties, benefits?
Ch. No: the straight course had been to call them thus.
Then, I had flung them back, and kept myself
Unhaunted, free as he to win the prize
We both sought. But "the gold was dross,
" he said:
"I loved me, and I loved him not: why
spurn
A trifle out of superfluity?
He had forgot in he had done as much."
So had not I! Henceforth, try as I could
To take him at his word, there stood by you
My benefactor; who might speak and laugh
And urge his nothings, even banter me Before you — but my tongue was tied. A dream!

Let's wake: your husband... how you shake at that!
Good — my revenge'.
Eu. Why should I shake? What forced
Or forces me to be Luitolfo's bride?
Ch. There's my revenge, that nothing forces you.
No gratitude, no liking of the eye
Nor longing of the heart, but the poor bond
Of habit — here so many times he came,
So much he spoke, — all these compose the tie
That pulls you from me. Well, he paid my fines,
Nor missed a cloak from wardrobe, dish from

Eu. As we.
Ch. I should be?... that; again!
I, to my friend, my country and my love,
Be as Luitolfo and these Faentines?

Eu. 'Tis vain contending; I would better go,
And I do go — and straight to you he turns
Light of a load; and case of that permits
His visage to repair the natural bland
Gonomy, sore broken late to suit
My discontent. Thus, all are pleased — you, he with himself, and all of you with me
— "Who," say the citizens, "had done far better
In letting people sleep upon their woes,
If not possessed with talent to relieve them
When once awake; — but then I had," they'll
say,
"Doubtless some unknown compensating pride
In what I did; and as I seem content
With running myself, why, so should they be."
And so they are, and so be with his prize:
The devil, when he gets them speedily!
Why does not your Luitolfo come? I long
To don this cloak and take the Lugo path.
It seems you never loved me, then?
Eu. 'Chiappino!'
But I — protest against their claiming me.
I simply say, if that's allowable,
I would not (broadly) do as they have done,
— God curse this townful of born slaves, bred slaves.
Branded into the blood and bone, slaves!

Curse

Whoever loves, above his liberty,
House, land or life! and . . .

[A knocking without.
— bless my hero-friend,

Luitolfo!

Eu. How he knocks!

Ch. "Chiappino, I have run a risk — a risk!"
For when I prayed the Provost (he's my friend)
To grant you a week's respite of the sentence
That confiscates your goods, exiles yourself,
He shrugged his shoulder — I say, shrugged it!

Yes,
And fright of that drove all else from my head,
Here's a good purses of scudi: off with you,
Lest of that shroum come what God only knows!
The scudi — friend, they're trash — no thanks,
I beg!

Take the north gate, — for San Vitale's suburb,
Whose double taxes you appellant against,
In discomposure at your ill-success
Is apt to stone you: there, there — only go!

Besides, Enalalia here looks sleepily.
Shake . . . oh, you hurt me, so you squeeze
my wrist!!

Is it not thus you'll speak, adventurous
friend?

[As he opens the door, Luitolfo rushes in, his garments disordered.

Eu. Luitolfo! Blood?

Luitolfo. There's more — and more of it!
Enalalia — take the garment! No — friend!
You take it and the blood from me — you dare!

Eu. Oh, who has hurt you? where's the wound?

Ch. "Who," say you?
The man with many a torch of virtue yet!
The Provost's friend has proved too frank of speech,
And this comes of it. Miserable hound!
This comes of temporizing, as I said!
Here's fruit of your smooth speeches and soft looks!
Now see my way! As God lives, I go straight
To the palace and do justice, once for all!

Luit. What says he?

Ch. I'll do justice on him.

Luit. Him?

Ch. The Provost.

Luit. I've just killed him.

Eu. Oh, my God!

Luit. My friend, they're on my trace;
they'll have me — now!

They're round him, busy with him: soon they'll find
He's past their help, and then they'll be on
me!

Chiappino, save Enalalia! I forget . . .

Were you not bound for . . .

Ch. Luit. Ah — yes — yes!

That was the point I prayed of him to change.
Well, go — be happy! Is Enalalia safe?
They're on me!

Ch. "Tis through me they reach you, then!
Friend, see the man you are! Lock arms — that's right!

Now tell me what you've done; explain how you, That still professed forbearance, still preached
peace,
Could bring yourself . . .

Luit. What was peace for, Chiappino?
I tried peace: did that promise, when peace failed,
Strife should not follow? All my peaceful days
Were just the prelude to a day like this.
I cried "You call me 'friend': save my true
friend!

Save him, or lose me!"

Ch. But you never said
You meant to tell the Provost thus and thus.

Luit. Why should I say it? What else did
I mean?

Ch. Well? He persisted?

Luit. "Would so order it
You should not trouble him too soon again,"
I saw a meaning in his eye and lip;
I poured my heart's store of indignant words
On him: then — I know not! He retorted,
And I . . . some staff lay there to hand — I
think
He bade his servants thrust me out — I struck . . .

Ah, they come! Fly you, save yourselves, you
two!
The dead back-weight of the beheading axe!
The glowing trip-hook, thumbscrews and the gadge!

Eu. They do come! Torches in the Place!

Farewell,

Chiappino! You can work no good to us —
Much to yourself; believe not, all the world
Must needs be cursed henceforth!

Ch. And you?

Eu. I stay.

Ch. Ha, ha! Now, listen! I am master
here!

This was my coarse disguise; this paper shows
My path of flight and place of refuge — see —
Lugo, Argenta, past San Nicolò,
Ferrara, then to Venice and all's safe!
Put on the cloak! His people have to fetch
A compass round about. There's time enough
Ere they can reach us, so you straightway make
For Lugo . . . nay, he hears not! On with it —
The cloak, Luitolfo, do you hear me? See —
He obeys he knows not how. Then, if I must — Answer me! Do you know the Lugo gate?

Eu. The northwest gate, over the bridge?

Luit. I know.

Ch. Well, there — you are not frightened?
all my route
Is traced in that: at Venice you escape
Their power. Enalalia, I am master here!

[Shouts from without. He pushes out Luitolfo, who complies mechanically.
In time! Nay, help me with him — so! He’s gone.
Eu. What have you done? On you, perchance, all know
The Provost’s hater, will men’s vengeance fall
As our accomplice.
Ch. Mere accomplice? See! [Putting on Luitolfo’s vest.
Now, lady, am I true to my profession,
Or one of these?
Eu. You take Luitolfo’s place?
Ch. Die for him, Eu.
Eu. Well done! [Shouts increase.
Ch. How the people tarry!
I can’t be silent; I must speak: or sing—
How natural to sing now!
Eu. Hush and pray!
We are to die; but even I perceive
’Tis not a very hard thing so to die.
My cousin of the pale-blue tearful eyes,
Poor Cesca, suffers more from one day’s life
With the stern husband; Tish’e heart goes forth
Each evening after that wild son of hers,
To track his thoughtless footstep through the streets:
How easy for them both to die like this!
I am not sure that I could live as they.
Ch. Here they come, crowds! they pass the gate? Yes! — No!
One torch is in the courtyard, Here flock all.
Eu. At least Luitolfo has escaped. What cries!
Ch. If they would drag one to the market-
place,
One might speak there!
Eu. List. list!
Ch. They mount the steps.
(Enter the Populace.)
Ch. I killed the Provost!
The Populace, [Speaking together.] ’Twas
Chiappino, friends!
Our Savior! The best man at last as first!
He who first made us feel what claims we wore,
He also strikes the blow that shatters them,
He at last saves us — our best citizen!
— Oh, have you only courage to speak now?
My eldest son was christened a year since “Cino” to keep Chiappino’s name in mind —
Cino, for shortness merely, you observe!
The city’s in our hands, The guards are fled.
Do you, the cause of all, come down — come up
Come out to counsel us, our chief, our king, Whate’er rewards you! Choose your own reward!
The peril over, its reward begins!
Come and harangue us in the market-place!
Eu. Chiappino?
Ch. Yes — I understand your eyes!
You think I should have promptly disowned
This deed with its strange unforeseen success,
In favor of Luitolfo. But the peril,
So far from ended, hardly seems begun.
To-morrow, rather, when a calm succeeds
We easily shall make him full amends:
And meantime — if we save them as they pray.
And justify the deed by its effects?
Eu. You would, for worlds, you had denied
at once.
Ch. I know my own intention, be assured!
All’s well. Precede us, fellow-citizens!

ACT II

The Market-place. Luitolfo in disguise mingling with the Populace assembled opposite the Provost’s Palace.
1st Bystander, [To Luit.] You, a friend of Luitolfo’s? Then, your friend is vanished,— in all probability killed on the night that his patron the tyrannical Provost was loyally suppressed here, exactly a month ago, by our illustrious fellow-citizen, thrice-noble savior, and new Provost that is like to be, this very morning,—Chiappino!

Luit. He the new Provost?
2d Byst. Up those steps will he go, and beneath yonder pillar stand, while Ogniben, the Pope’s Legate from Ravenna, reads the new dignitary’s title to the people, according to established custom: for which reason, there is the assemblage you inquire about.

Luit. Chiappino — the late Provost’s successor? Impossible! But tell me of that presently. What I would know first of all is, wherefore Luitolfo must so necessarily have been killed on that memorable night?

3d Byst. You were Luitolfo’s friend? So was I.
Never, if you will credit me, did there exist so poor-spirited a milk-sop, He, with all the opportunities in the world, furnished by daily converse with our oppressor, would not stir a finger to help us: and, when Chiappino rose in solitary majesty and . . . how does one go on saying? . . . dealt the godlike blow,—this Luitolfo, not unreasonably fearing the indignation of an aroused and liberated people, fled precipitately. He may have got trodden to death in the press at the southeast gate, when the Provost’s guards fled through it to Ravenna, with their treacherous leader. — If he did not rather hang himself under some hedge.

Luit. Or why not simply have lain perdite in some quiet corner, — such as San Cassiano, where his estate was, — receiving daily intelligence from some sure friend, meanwhile, as to the turn matters were taking here — how, for instance, the Provost was not dead, after all, only wounded — or, as to-day’s news would seem to prove, how Chiappino was not Brutus the Elder, after all, only the new Provost — and this Luitolfo be enabled to watch a favorable opportunity for returning? Might it not have been so?

3d Byst. Why, he may have taken that care of himself, certainly, for he came of a cautious stock. I’ll tell you how his uncle, just such another gingerly treader on tiptoes with finger on lip, — how he met his death in the great plague-year: dico vosibs? Hearing that the seventeenth house in a certain street was in fected, he calculates to pass it in safety by taking plentiful breath, say, when he shall arrive at the eleventh house; then scouring by, holding that breath, till he be got so far on the other side as number twenty-three, and thus elude the danger. — And so did he begin; but, as he arrived at thirteen, we will say, — thinking to improve on his precaution by putting up a little prayer to Saint Neopomucene of Prague, this exhausted so much of his lungs' reserve, that at sixteen it was clean spent, — consequently at the fatal seventeen he inhaled with a vigor and persistence enough to suck you any latent venom out of the heart of a stone — ha, ha.

Luit. [Aside.] (If I had not bent that man the money he wanted last spring, I should fear this bitterness was attributable to me.) Luitello is dead then, one may conclude?

3d By. Why, he had a horse here, and a woman to whom he was affianced; and as they both pass naturally to the new Provost, his friend and heir...

Luit. Ah, I suspected you of imposing on me with your pleasantry! I know Chiappino better.

1st By. (Our friend has the bile! After all, I do not dislike finding somebody very a little this general gape of admiration at Chiappino's glorious qualities.) Pray, how much may you know of what has taken place in Faenza since that memorable night?

Luit. It is most to the purpose, that I know Chiappino to have been by profession a hater of that very office of Provost, you now charge him with proposing to accept.

1st By. Sir, I'll tell you. That night was indeed memorable. Up we rose, a mass of us, men, women, children; out fled the guards with the body of the tyrant; we were to defy the world; but, next gray morning, "What will Rome say?" began everybody. You know we are governed by Ravenna, which is governed by Rome. And quietly into the town, by the Ravenna road, comes on nudeback a portly personage, Ognaiben by name, with the quality of Pontificale Legate; trots briskly through the streets humming a "Cw fremuer gentes," and makes directly for the Provost's Palace, that it faces you. "One Messer Chiappino is your leader? I have known three-and-twenty leaders of revolts!" (laughing gently to himself) — "Give me the help of your arm from my nude to vender steps under the pillar — So! And now, my revolters and good friends, what do you want?" The guards burst into Ravenna last night bearing your wounded Provost; and, having had a little talk with him, I take on myself to come and try apprise the disorderliness, before Rome, hearing of it, resort to another method: 't is I come, and not another, from a certain love I confess to, of composing differences. So, do you understand, you are about to experience this unheard-of tyranny from me, that there shall be no heading nor hanging, nor confiscation nor exile; I insist on your simply pleasing yourselves. And now, pray, what does please you? To live without any government at all? Or having decided for one, to see its minister murdered by the first of your body that chooses to find himself wronged, or disposed for reverting to first principles and a justice anterior to all institutions, — and so will you carry matters, that the rest of the world must at length unite and put down such a den of wild beasts? As for vengeance on what has just taken place, — once for all, the wounded man assures me he cannot conjecture who struck him; and this so earnestly, that one may be sure he knows perfectly well what intimate acquaintance could find admission to speak with him late last evening. I came not for vengeance therefore, but from pure curiosity to hear what you will do next."

And thus he ran on, on, easily and volubly, till he seemed to arrive quite naturally at the praise of law, order, and paternal government by somebody from rather a distance. All our citizens were in the snare, and about to be friends with so congenial an adviser; but that Chiappino suddenly stood forth, spoke out indignant, and set things right again.

Luit. Does he see? I recognize him there!

3d By. Ay, but, mark you, at the end of Chiappino's longest period in praise of a pure republic, — "And by whom do I desire such a government should be administered, perhaps, but by one like yourself?" returns the Legate: thereupon speaking for a quarter of an hour together, on the natural and only legitimate government by the best and wisest. And it should seem there was soon discovered to be no such vast discrepancy at bottom between this and Chiappino's theory, place each in its proper light. "Oh, say you then to my mouth Chiappino: "Ay, in that, I agree," returns Chiappino; and so on.

Luit. But did Chiappino cede at once to this?

1st By. Why, not altogether at once. For instance, he said that the difference between him and all his fellows was, that they seemed all wishing to be kings in one or another way, — "whereas what right," asked he, "has any man to wish to be superior to another?" — "Ah, sir," answers the Legate, — "this is the death of souls, so often as I expect something is really going to be revealed to us by you clearer-seeing, deeper-thinkers — this that your right-hand (to speak by a figure) should be found taking up the weapon it displayed so ostentatiously, not to destroy any dragon in our path, as was prophesied, but simply to cut off its own fellow left-hand yourself set about attacking yourself. For see now! Here are you who, I make sure, glory exceedingly in knowing the noble nature of the soul, its divine impulses, and so forth; and with such a knowledge you stand, as it were, armed to encounter the natural doubts and fears as to that same inherent nobility, which are apt to waylay us, the weaker ones, in the road of life. And when we look eagerly to see them fall before you, lo, round you wheel, only the left-hand gets the blow; one proof of the soul's nobility destroys simply another proof, quite as good, of the same, for you are found delivering an opinion like this. Why, what is this perpetual yearning to exceed, to subdue, to be better than, and a king over one's fellows,—all that you so disclaim,—but the very tendency yourself are most proud of, and under another form, would oppose to it,—only in a lower stage of manifestation? You don't want to be vulgarly superior to your fellows after their poor fashion—
to have me hold solemnly up your gown's tail, or hand you an express of the last importance from the Pope, with all these bystanders notticing how unconcerned you look the while;
but neither does our gaping friend, the burges yonder, want the other kind of kingship, that consists in understanding better than his fellows this and similar points of human nature, nor to roll under his tongue this sweeter morsel still,
—the feeling that, through immense philosophy,
he does not feel, he rather thinks, above
you and me!" And so chattering, they glided off arm-in-arm.

Luit. And the result is .

1st By. Why that, a month having gone by, the indomitable Chiappino, marrying as he will Luitolfo's love—at all events somewhat Luitolfo's wealth—becomes the first inhabitant of Faenza, and a proper aspirant to the Provost-ship; which we assemble here to see conferred on him this morning. The Legato's Guard to clear the way! He will follow presently.

Luit. [Withdrawing a little.] I understand the drift of Eulalia's communications less than ever. Yet she surely said, in so many words, that Chiappino was in urgent danger; wherefore, disregarding her injunction to continue in my retreat and await the result of—what she called, some experiment yet in process—I hasttened here without her leave or knowledge: how could I else? But if this they say be true
—if it were for such a purpose, she and Chiap-mino kept me away . . . Oh, no, no! I must confront him and her before I believe this of them. And at the word, see!

(Enter CHIAPPINO and EUALIA.)

En. We part here, then? The change in your principles would seem to be complete.

Ch. No, now to see how my present course I change my principles, only re-adapt them and more adroitly? I had despaired of what you may call the material instrumentality of life; of ever being able to rightly operate on mankind through such a deranged machinery
as the existing modes of government: but now, if I suddenly discover how to inform these perverted institutions with fresh purpose, bring the functionary limbs once more into immediate communication with, and submission to, the soul
I am about to bestow on them—do you see?
Why should one desire to invent, as long as it remains possible to renew and transform?
When all further hope of the old organization shall be extinct, then, I grant you, it may be time to try and create another.

En. And there being discoverable some hope yet in the hitherto much-abused old system of absolute government by a Provost here, you mean to take your time about endeavoring to realize those visions of a perfect State we once heard of?

Ch. Say, I would fain realize my conception of a palace, for instance, and that there is, abstractedly, but a single way of erecting one perfectly. Here, in the market-place is my allotted building-ground; here I stand without a stone to lay, or a laborer to help me,—stand, too, during a short day of life, close on which the night comes. On the other hand, circumstances suddenly offer me (turn and see it) the old
Provost's house to experiment upon—ruminous, if you please, wrongly constructed at the beginning, and ready to tumble now. But materials abound, a crowd of workmen offer their services: here exists yet a Hall of Audience of originally noble proportions, there a Guest-chamber of symmetrical design enough; and I may restore, enlarge, abolish or unite these to heart's content. Ought I not make the best of such an opportunity, rather than continue to gaze discursively with folded arms on the flat pavement here, while the sun goes slowly down, never to rise again? Since you cannot understand this nor me, it is better we should part as you desire.

En. So, the love breaks away too!

Ch. No, rather my soul's capacity for love widens—needs more than one object to content it,—and, being better instructed, will not persist in seeing all the component parts of love in what is only a single part,—nor in finding that so many and so various loves are all united in the love of a woman,—manifest uses in one instrument, as the savage has his sword, staff, sceptre and idol, all in one club-stick. Love is a very compound thing. The intellectual part of my love I shall give to men, the mighty dead or the illustrious living; and determine to call a mere sensual instinct by as few fine names as possible. What do I lose?

En. Nay, I only think, what do I lose? and, one more word—which shall complete my instruction—does friendship go too? What of Luitolfo, the author of your present prosperity?

Ch. How the author?

En. That blow now called yours . . .

Ch. Struck without principle or purpose, as by a blind natural operation; yet to which all my thought and life directly and advisedly tended. I would have struck it, and could not:
he would have done his utmost to avoid striking it, yet did so. I dispute his right to that deed of mine—a final action with him, from the first effect of which he fled away,—a mere first step with me, on which I base a whole mighty superstructure of good to follow. Could he get good from it?

En. So we profess, so we perform!

(Enter OGNIBEN. EUALIA stands apart.)

Ogniben. I have seen three-and-twenty leaders of revolts. By your leave, sir! Perform?
What does the lady say of performing?

Ch. Only the trite saying, that we must not trust profession, only performance.

Ognib. She'll not say that, sir, when she knows you longer; you'll instruct her better.
Ever judge of men by their professions! Par-though the bright moment of promising is but a moment and cannot be prolonged, yet, if sincere in its moment's extravagant goodness, why, trust it and know the man by it, I say—not by his performance: which is half the world's work, interfere as the world needs must, with its accidents and circumstances: the profession was purely the man's own. I judge people by what they might be,—not are, nor will be.

Ch. But have there not been found, too, performing natures, not merely promising?

Ogni. Plenty. Little Bindo of our town, for instance, promised his friend, great ugly Masaccio, once, "I will repay you!"—for a favor done him. So, when his father came to die, and Bindo succeeded to the inheritance, he sends straightway for Masaccio and shares all with him—gives him half the land, half the money, half the kegs of wine in the cellar.

"Good," say you: and it is good. But had little Bindo found himself possessor of all this wealth some five years before—on the happy night when Masaccio procured him that interview in the garden with his pretty cousin Lisa—instead of being the beggar he then was,—I am bound to believe that in the warm moment of promise he would have given away all the wine-kegs and all the money and all the land, and only reserved to himself some hut on a hill-top hard by, whence he might spend his life in looking and seeing his friend enjoy himself: he meant fully that much, but the world interfered.—To our business! Did I understand you just now within-doors? You are not going to marry your old friend's love, after all?

Ch. I must have a woman that can sympathize with, and appreciate me, I told you.

Ogni. Oh, I remember! You, the greater nature, needs must have a lesser one (—avowedly lesser—contest with you on that score would never do)—such a nature must comprehend you, as the phrase is, accompany and testify of your greatness from point to point onward. Why, that were being not merely as great as yourself, but greater considerably! Meaning, might not merely promising nature as reasonably count on your appreciation of it, rather?—on your keeping close by it, so far as you both go together, and then going on by yourself as far as you please? Thus God serves us.

Ch. And yet a woman that could understand the whole of me, to whom I could reveal alike the strength and the weakness—

Ogni. Ah, my friend, wish for nothing so foolish! Worship your love, give her the best of your. to see; be to her like the western lands (they bring us such strange news of) to the Spanish Court; send her only your lumps of gold, fans of feathers, your spirit-like birds, and fruits and gems! So shall you, what is unseen of you, be supposed altogether a paradise by her,—as these western lands by Spain: though I warrant there is filth, red bahoons, ugly reptiles and squallor enough, which they bring Spain as few samples of as possible. Do you want your mistress to respect your body generally? Offer her your mouth to kiss: don't strip off your boot and put your foot to her lips! You understand my humor by this time? I help men to carry out their own principles: if they please to say two and two make five, I assent, so they will but go on and say, four and four make ten.

Ch. But these are my private affairs; what I desire you to occupy yourself about, is my public appearance presently: for when the people hear that I am appointed Provost, though you and I may thoroughly discern—and easily, of the right principle at bottom of such a movement, and how my republicanism remains thoroughly unaltered, only takes a form of expression hitherto commonly judged (and heretofore by myself) incompatible with its existence,—then thus I reconcile myself to an old form of government instead of proposing a new one—

Ogni. Why, you must deal with people broadly. Begin at a distance from this matter and say,—New truths, old truths! sirs, there is nothing new possible to be revealed to us in the moral world; we know all we shall ever know: and it is for simply reminding us, by their various respective expediency, how we do know this and the other matter, that men get called prophets, poests and the like. A philosopher's life is spent in discovering that, of the half-dozen truths he knew when a child, such an one is a lie, as the world states it in set terms; and then, after a weary lapse of years, and plenty of hard thinking, it becomes a truth again after all, as he happens to newly consider it and view it in a different relation with the others: and so he re-states it, to the confusion of somebody else in good time. As for adding to the original stock of truths,—impossible! Thus, you see the expression of them is the grand business:—you have got a truth in your head about the right way of governing people, and you took a mode of expressing it which now you confess to be imperfect. But what then? There is truth in falsehood, falsehood in truth. No man ever told one great truth, that I know, without the help of a good dozen of lies, at least, generally unconscious ones. And as when a child comes in breathlessly and relates a strange story, you try to conjecture from the very falsities in it what the reality was,—do not conclude that he saw nothing in the sky, because he assuredly did not see a flying horse there as he says,—so, through the contradictory expression, do you see, men should look painfully for, and trust to arrive eventually at, what you call the true principle at bottom. Ah, what an answer is there! to what will it not prove applicable?—"Contradictions? Of course there were," say you!

Ch. Still, the world at large may call it inconsistency, and what shall I urge in reply?

Ogni. Why, look you, when they tax you with tergiversation or duplicity, you may answer—you begin to perceive that, when all's done and said, both great parties in the State, the advocates of change in the present system of things, and the opponents of it, patriot and anti-patriot, are found working together for the common good; and that in the midst of their efforts for and against its progress, the world somehow or other still advances: to which result they contribute in equal proportions.
those who spend their life in pushing it onward, as those who give theirs to the business of pulling it back. Now, if you found the world stand still between the opposite forces, and were glad, I should conceive you: but it steadily advances, you rejoice to see! By the side of such a rejoicer, the man who only winks as he keeps cunning and quiet, and says, "Let yonder hot-headed fellow fight out my battle! I, for one, shall win in the end by the blows he gives, and which I ought to be giving,"—even he seems graceful in his avowal, when one considers that he might say, "I shall win quite as much by the blows our antagonist gives him, blows from which he saves me—I thank the antagonist equally!" Moreover, you may enlarge on the loss of the edge of party-amimosity with age and experience...

Ch. And naturally time must wear off such aspersities: the bitterest adversaries get to discover certain points of similarity between each other, common sympathies—do they not?

Ogri. Ay, had the young David but sat first to dine on his cheeses with the Philistine, he had long discovered an abundance of such common sympathies. He of Gath, it is recorded, was born of a father and mother, had brothers and sisters like another man,—they, no more than the sons of Jesse, were used to eat each other. But, for the sake of one broad antipathy that had existed from the beginning, David slung the stone, cut off the giant's head, made a spoil of it, and after ate his cheeses alone, with the better appetite, for all I can learn. My friend, as you, with a quickened eyesight, go about discerning much good on the worse side, remember that the same process should proportionally magnify and demonstrate to you the much more good on the better side! And when I profess no sympathy for the Goliaths of our time, and you object that a large nature should sympathize with every form of intelligence, and see the good in it, however limited, I answer, "So I do: but preserve the proportions of my sympathy, however finer or wider I may extend its action." I desire to be able, with a quickened eyesight, to discern beauty in corruption where others see foulness only; but I hope I shall also continue to see a reddened beauty in the higher forms of matter, where already everybody sees no foulness at all. I must retain, too, my old power of selection, and choice of appropriation, to apply to such new gifts; else they only dazzle instead of enlightening me. God has his archangels and consorts with them: though he made two, and intimately sees what is good in the worm. Observe, I speak only as you profess to think, and have no right to speak: I do justice to your own principles, that is all.

Ch. But you very well know that the two parties do, on occasion, assume each other's characteristics. What more disgusting, for instance, than to see how promptly the newly emancipated slave will adopt, in his own favor, the very measures of precaution, which pressed sorest on himself as institutions of the tyranny he has just escaped from? Do the classics, hitherto without opinion, get leave to express it? There follows a confederacy immediately, from which—exercise your individual right and dissent, and were be to you!

Ogri. And a journey over the sea to you! That is the generous way. Cry—"Emancipated slaves, the first excess, and off I go!" The first time a poor devil, who has been harnessed steadily his whole life long, finds himself let alone and able to legislate, so, begins pettishly, while he rubs his soles, "Woe be to whoever brings anything in the shape of a stick this way!"—you, rather than give up the very innocent pleasure of carrying one to switch flies with,—you go away, to everybody's sorrow. Yet you were quite reconciled to staying at home while the governors used to pass, every now and then, some such edict as, "Let no man indulge in owning a stick which is not thick enough to chastise our slaves, if need require!" Well, there are pre-ordained hierarchies among us, and a profane vulgar subjected to a different law altogether; yet I am rather sorry you should see it so clearly: for, do you know what is to—well but save you at the Day of Judgment, all you men of genius? It is this: that, while you generally began by pulling down God, and went on to the end of your life in one effort at setting up your own genius in his place,—still, the last, bitterest concession wrung with the utmost unwillingness from the experience of the very loftiest of you, was invariably—would one think it?—that the rest of mankind, down to the lowest of the mass, stood not, nor ever could stand, just on a level and equality with yourselves. That will be a point in the favor of all such, I hope and believe.

Ch. Why, men of genius are usually charged. I think, with doing just the reverse; and at once acknowledging the natural inequality of mankind, by themselves participating in the universal craving after, and deference to, the civil distinctions which represent it. You wonder they pay such undue respect to titles and badges of superior rank.

Ogri. Not I always on your own ground and showing, be it noted! Who doubts that, with a weapon to brandish, a man is the more formidable? Titles and badges are exercised as such a weapon, to which you and I look up wistfully. We could pin lions with it moreover, while in its present owner's bands it hardly prods rats. Nay, better than a mere weapon of easy mastery and obvious use, it is a mysteriously divining-rod that may serve us in dreamed-of ways. Beauty, strength, intellect—men often have none of these, and yet conceive pretty accurately what kind of advantages they would bestow on the possessor. We know at least what it is we make up our mind to forego, and so can apply the fittest substitute in our power. Wanting beauty, we cultivate good-humor; missing wit, we get riches; but the mystic unimaginable operation of that gold collar and string of Latin names which suddenly turned poor stupid little peevish Cecco of our town into natural lord of the best of us—a Duke, he is now—there indeed is a virtue to be reverenced!
A SOUL'S TRAGEDY

Ch. Ay, by the vulgar: not by Messere Stiatta the poet, who pays more assiduous court to him than anybody.

Ogni. What else should Stiatta pay court to? He has talent, not honor and riches: men naturally covet what they have not.

Ch. No; or Cecco would covet talent, which he has not, whereas he covets more riches, of which he has plenty, already.

Ogni. Because a purse added to a purse makes the holder twice as rich; but just such another talent as Stiatta's, added to what he now possesses, what would that profit him? Give the talent a purse indeed, to do something with! But lo, how we keep the good people waiting! I only desired to do justice to the noble sentiments which animate you, and which you are too modest to duly enforce. Come, to our main business; shall we ascend the steps? I am going to propose you for Provost to the people; they know your antecedents, and will put you up with a joyful unanimity: whereon I confirm their choice, Rons! Are you nervous yourself to an effort? Beware the disaster of Messere Stiatta we were talking of, who, determining to keep an equal mind and constant face on whatever might be the fortune of his last new poem with our townsmen, heard too plainly "hiss, hiss, hiss," increase every moment. Till at last the man fell senseless: not perceiving that the portentous sounds had all the while been issuing from between his own nobly clenched teeth, and nostrils were wed by resolve.

Ch. Do you begin to throw off the mask? — to jest with me, having got me effectually into your trap.

Ogni. Where is the trap, my friend? You hear what I engage to do, for my part; you, for yours, have only to fulfill your promise made just now within doors, of professing unlimited obedience to Rome's authority in my person. And I shall authorize no more than the simple re-establishment of the Provostship and the council, the only novel stipulation being a birth of the peculiar circumstances of the time.

Ch. And that stipulation?

Ogni. Just the obvious one — that in the event of the discovery of the actual assailant of the late Provost ...

Ch. Ha!

Ogni. Why, he shall suffer the proper penalty, of course; what did you expect?

Ch. Who heard of this?

Ogni. Rather, who needed to hear of this?

Ch. Can it be, the popular rumor never reached you ...

Ogni. Many more such rumors reach me, friend, than I choose to receive: those which wait longest have best chance. Has the present one sufficiently waited? Now is its time for entry with effect. See the good people crowding about yonder palace-steps — which we may not have to ascend, after all! My good friends! (may, two or three of you will answer every purpose) — who, was it fell upon, and proved nearly the death of your late Provost? His successor desires to hear, that his day of imau-guration may be graced by the act of prompt, bare justice we all anticipate. Who dealt the blow that night, does anybody know?

Luit. [Coming forward].! All, Luitolfo!

Luit. I know the deed, justify and approve it, and stand forth now, to relieve my friend of an unearned responsibility. Having taken thought, I am grown stronger; I shall shrink from nothing that awaits me. Nay, Chiappino — we are friends still: I dare say there is some proof of your superior nature in this starting aside, strange as it seemed at first. So, they tell me, my horse is of the right stock, because — a shadow in the path frightens him into a frenzy, makes him dash my brains out. I understand only the dull male's way of standing stockishly, plodding soberly, suffering on occasion a blow or two with due patience.

Ev. I was determined to justify my choice; Chiappino; to let Luitolfo's nature vitriolate itself. Henceforth we are unindividuated, whatever be our fortune.

Ogni. Now, in these last ten minutes of silence, what have I been doing, deem you? Putting the finishing stroke to a homily of mine, I have long taken thought to perfect, on the text, "Let whoso thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." To your house, Luitolfo! Still silent, my patriotic friend? Well, that is a good sign however. And you will go aside for a time? That is better still. I understand: it would be easy for you to die of remorse here on the spot and shock us all, but you mean to live and grow worthy of coming back to us one day. There, I will tell everybody; and you only do right to believe you must get better as you get older. All men do so: they are worst in childhood, improve in manhood, and get ready in old age for another world. Youth, with its beauty and grace, would seem bestowed on us for such some reason as to make us partly endurable till we have time for really becoming of ourselves, without the absurd delay: when they leave us. The sweetest child we all smile on for his pleasant want of the whole world to break up, or suck in his mouth, seeing no other good in it — would be utterly handled by that world's inhabitants, if he retained those angelic infantine desires when he had grown six feet high, black and bearded. But, little by little, he sees fit to forgone claim after claim on the world, puts up with a less and less share of its good as his proper portion; and when the octogenarian asks barely a sup of gruel and a fire of dry sticks, and thanks you as for his full allowance and right in the common good of life. — hoping nobody may murder him, — he who began by asking and expecting the whole of us to bow down in worship to him — why, I say he is advanced, far onward, very far, nearly out of sight like our friend Chiappino yonder. And now — ay, good-by to you! He turns round the northwest gate: going to Lugano again? Good-by! — And now give thanks to God, the keys of the Provost's palace to me, and yourselves to profitable meditation at home! I have known Four-and-twenty leaders of revolts
A TRAGEDY

I DEDICATE THIS LAST ATTEMPT FOR THE PRESENT AT DRAMATIC POETRY
TO A GREAT DRAMATIC POET;
"WISHING WHAT I WRITE MAY BE READ BY HIS LIGHT;"
IF A PHRASE ORIGINALLY ADDRESSED, BY NOT THE LEAST WORTHY OF HIS CONTEMPORARIES.
MAY BE APPLIED HERE, BY ONE WHOSE SOLE PRIVILEGE IS IN A GRATEFUL ADMIRATION.
To WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR

LONDON, 1849.

PERSONS
Luria, a Moor, Commander of the Florentine Forces.
Husain, a Moor, his friend.
Puccio, the old Florentine Commander, now Luria's Chief Officer.
Braccio, Commissary of the Republic of Florence.
Jacopo (Lapo), his Secretary.
Tiburzio, Commander of the Pisani.
Domizia, a noble Florentine Lady.

TIME, 14—

SCENE. Luria's camp between Florence and Pisa.

ACT I

Braccio, as dictating to his Secretary: Puccio standing by.

Brac. [To Puccio.] Then, you join battle in an hour?
Pucc. Not I;
Luria, the captain.
Brac. [To the Sec.] "In an hour, the battle."
[To Puc.] Sir, let your eye run over this loose digest,
And see if very much of your report
Have slipped away through my civilian phrase.
Does this instruct the Signory aright
How army stands with army?
Puc. [Taking the paper.] All seems here:
—That Luria, seizing with our city's force
The several points of vantage, hill and plain,
Shuts Pisa safe from help on every side,
And, bailing the Lucchese arrived too late,
Must, in the battle he delivers now,
Beat her best troops and first of chiefs.
Brac. —So sure?
Tiburzio's a consummate captain too!
Puc. Luria holds Pisa's fortune in his hand.
Brac. [To the Sec.] "The Signory hold Pisa
In their hand."
Your own proved soldier'ship 'a warrant, sir:
So, while my secretary ends his task.
Have out two horsemen, by the open roads,
To post with it to Florence!
Puc. [Returning the paper.] All seems here;
Unless . . . See Braccio, 'tis my last report!
Since Pisa's outbreak, and my overthrow,
And Luria's hastening at the city's call
To save her, as he only could, no doubt;
Till now that she is saved or sure to be,—
Whatever you tell Florence, I tell you:
Each day's note you, her Commissary, make
Of Luria's movements, I myself supply.
No youngster am I longer, to my cost;
Therefore while Florence gloried in her choice
And vaunted Luria, whom but Luria, still,
As if zeal, courage, prudence, conduct, faith,
Had never met in any man before,
I saw no pressing need to swell the cry.
But now, this last report and I have done:
So, ere to-night comes with its roar of praise,
T were not amiss if some one old 't the trade
Subscribed with, "True, for once rash counsel's best."
This Moor of the bad faith and doubtful race,
This boy to whose untried sagacity,
Raw valor, Florence trusts without reserve
The charge to save her, — justifies her choice
In no point has this stranger failed his friends.
Now praise!" I say this, and it is not here.

Brac. [To the Sec.] Write, "Puccio, superseded in the charge.
By Luria, bears full witness to his worth,
And no reward our Signory can give
Their champion but he'll back it cheerfully."
Aught more? Five minutes hence, both messengers! [Puccio goes.

Brac. [After a pause, and while he slowly tears
the paper into shreds.] I think . . . pray
God, I hold in fit contempt
This warfare's noble art and ordering,
And,—once the brace of prizers fairly matched,
Poleaxe with poleaxe, knife with knife as good,— Spit properly at what men term their skill! —)
Yet here I think our fighter has the odds.
With Pisa's strength diminished thus and thus,
Such points of vantage in our hands and such,
Lucy still off the stage, too,—all's assured;
Luria must win this battle. Write the Court,
That Luria's trial end and sentence pass!

Secretary. Patron,—

Brac. Ay, Lapo?
Sec. If you trip, I fall;
'Tis in self-interest I speak —

Brac. Nay, nay,
You overshoot the mark, my Lapo! Nay!
When did I say pure love's impossible?
I make you daily write those red cheeks thin,
Load your young brow with what concerns it least.
And, when we visit Florence, let you pace
The Piazza by my side as if we talked,
Where all your old acquainances may see:
You 'd die for me, I should not be surprised.
Now then!
Sec. Sir, look about and love yourself!
Step after step, the Signory and you
Tread gay till this tremendous point's to pass;
Which pass not, pass not, ere you ask yourself.
Bears the brain steadily such draughts of fire,
Or too delicious may not prove the pride
Of this long secret trial you dared plan,
Dare execute, you solitare here,
With the gray-headed toothless fools at home,
Who think themselves your lords, such slaves are they?
If they pronounce this sentence as you bid,
Declare the treason, claim its penalty,
And sudden out of all the blaze of life,
On the best minute of his brightest day,
From that adoring army at his back,
'Through Florence' yonns crowds before his face,
Into the dark you beckon Luria...

Brac. Then—
Why, Lapo, when the fighting-people vaunt,
We of the other craft and mystery,
May we not smile demure, the danger past?
Sec. Sir, no, no, no, — the danger, and your spirit
At watch and ward? Where 's danger on your part?
With that thin flitting instantaneous steel
'Gainst the blind bull-front of a brute-force world?
If Luria, that 's to perish sure as fate.
Should have been really guiltless after all?
Brac. Ah, you have thought that?
Sec. Here I sit, your scribe,
And in and out goes Luria, days and nights;
This Puccio comes; the Moor his other friend,
Hussein; they talk — that's all feigned easily;
He speaks (I would not listen if I could),
Reads, orders, consuls: — but he rests sometimes,
I see him stand and eat, sleep stretched an hour
On the lynx-skins yonder; hold his bare black arms
Into the sun from the tent-opening; laugh
When his horse drops the forage from his teeth
And neighs to hear him Hum his Moorish songs.
That man believes in Florence, as the saint
Tied to the wheel believes in God,
Brac. How strange!
Sec. You too have thought that!
Brac. Do but you think too,
And all is saved! I only have to write,
"The man seemed false awhile, proves true at last;
Bury it" — so I write the Signory —
"Bury this trial in your breast forever,
Blot it from things or done or dreamed about!
So Luria shall receive his need to-day
With no suspicion what reverse was near,
As if no meteoric finger flushed
The doom-word just on the destroyer's lip,
Motioned him off, and let life's sun fall straight.
Brac. [Looks to the wall of the tent.] Did he draw that?
Sec. With charcoal, when the watch
Made the report at midnight; Lady Domizia
Spoke of the unfinished Duomo, you remember;
That is his fancy how a Moorish front
Might join to, and complete, the body, — a sketch,—
And again where the cloak hangs, yonder in the shadow.
Brac. He loves that woman.
Sec. She is sent the spy
Of Florence, — spies on you as on him:
Florence, if only for Domizia's sake,
Is surely safe. What shall I write?
Brac. I see —
A Moorish front, nor of such ill design!
Lapo, there's one thing plain and positive;
Man seeks his own good at the whole world's cost.
What? If to lead our troops, stand forth our chiefs,
And hold our fate, and see us at their beck,
Yet render up the charge when peace return,
Have ever proved too much for Florentines,
Even for the best and bravest of ourselves —
If in the struggle when the soldier's sword
Should sink its point before the statist's pen,
And the calm head replace the violent hand.
Virtue on virtue still have fallen away
Before ambition with unwary fate,
Till Florence's self at last in bitterness
Be forced to own such falls the natural end,
And, sparing further to expose her sons
To a vain strife and profitless disgrace,
Declare, "The foreigner, one not my child,
Shall henceforth lead my troops, reach height by height
The glory, then descend into the shame;
So shall rebellion be less guilt in him,
And punishment the easier task for me:"
— If on the best of us such brand she set,
Can I suppose an utter alien here,
This Luria, our inevitable foe,
Confessed a mercenary and a Moor.
Born free from many ties that bind the rest
Of common faith in Heaven or hope on earth,
No past with us, no future, — such a spirit
Shall hold the path from which our stankest broke,
Stand firm where every famed precursor fell?
My Lapo, I will frankly say, these proofs
So duly noted of the man's intent,
Are for the doting fools at home, not me.
The charges here, they may be true or false;
What is set down? Errors and oversights,
A dallying interchange of courtesies
With Pis'a's General, — all that, hour by hour,
Puccio's pale discontent has furnished us,
Of petulant speeches, inconsiderate acts,
Now overhazard, overcaution now;
Even that he loves this lady who believes
She outwits Florence, and whom Florence posted.
Luria.

By my procurement here, to spy on me.
Lest I one minute lose her from my sight —
She who remembering her whole Home's fall,
That nest of traitors strangled in the birth,
Now labors to make Luria (poor device
As plain) the instrument of her revenge!
That she is ever at his ear to prompt
Inordinate conceptions of his worth.
Exorbitant belief in worth's reward.
And after, when sure disappointment follows,
Proportional rage at such a wrong —
Why, all these reasons, while I urge them
most.
Weigh with me less than least; as nothing
Weigh.

Upon that broad man's-heart of his, I go:
On what I know must be, yet while I live
Shall never be, because I live and know,
Brute-force shall not rule Florence! Intellect
May rule her, bad or good as chance supplies:
But intellect it shall be, pure if bad,
And intellect's tradition so kept up!
Till the good come — 't was intellect that ruled,
Not brute-force bringing from the battlefield
The attributes of wisdom, foresight's graces
We lent it there to hire its grossness on:
All which it took for earnest and kept safe.
To show against us in our market-place,
Just as the pummels and tags and swordsman's gear
Fetched from the camp where, at their foolish best,
When all was done they frightened nobody:
Fer in our faces in the street, forsooth.

With our own warrant and allowance. 'No!
The whole procedure's overcharged, — its end
In too strict keeping with the bad first step.
To conquer Pisa was sheer inspiration?
Well then, to perish for a single fault.
Let that be simple justice! There, my Lapo!
A Moorish front ill suits our Duomo's body
Blot it out — and bid Luria's sentence come!
(Luria, who, with Domizia, has entered unobserved
At the close of the last phrase, now advances.)
Luria. And Luria, Luria, what of Luria
now?
Brac. Ah, you so close, sir? Lady Domizia
too?
I said it needs must be a busy moment
For one like you; that you were now i' the thick
Of your duties, doubtless, while we idlers sat...

Lur. No — in that paper. — it was in that paper
What you were saying!
Brac. Oh — my day's despatch!
I guess you to Florence: will you see?
Lur. See your despatch, your last, for the first time?
Well, if I should, now? For in truth, Domizia,
He would be forced to set about another,
In his sly cool way, the true Florentine,
To mention that important circumstance.
So, while he wrote I should gain time, such time!
Do not send this!
Brac. And wherefore?
Lur. These Lucchese
Are not arrived — they never will arrive!
And I must fight to-day, arrived or not,
And I shall beat Tiburzia, that is sure:
And then will be arriving his Lucchese,
But slowly, oh so slowly, just in time
To look upon my battle from the hills,
Like a late moon, of use to nobody!
And I must break my battle up, send forth,
Surround on this side, hold in check on that.
Then comes to-morrow, we negotiate,
You make me send for fresh instructions home,
— Incompleteness, incompleteness!
Brac. Ah, we scribes!
Why, I had registered that very point,
The non-appearance of our foes' ally,
As a most happy fortune; both at once
Were formidable: singly faced, each falls,
Lur. So, no great battle for my Florentines!
No crowning deed, decisive and complete,
For all of them, the simple as the wise,
Old, young, alike, that do not understand
Our wearisome pedantic art of war,
By which we prove retreat may be success,
Delay — best speed — half loss, at times,—
whole gain:
They want results: as if it were their fault!
And you, with warmest wish to be my friend,
Will not be able now to simply say
"Your servant has performed his task
enough!"
You ordered, he has executed: good!
Now walk the streets in holiday attire,
Congratulate your friends, till noon strikes
fierce.
Then form bright groups beneath the Duomo's shade!'
No, you will have to argue and explain,
Persuade them, all is not so ill in the end,
Tense, tire them out! Arrive, arrive, Lucchese!
Domizia. Well, you will triumph for the past
enough,
Whatever be the present chance; no service
Falls to the ground with Florence; she awaits
Her savior, will receive him fittingly.
Lur. Ah, Braccio, you know Florence! Will she, think you,
Receive one — what means "fittingly receive"? —
— Receive compatriots, doubtless — I am none:
And yet Domizia promises so much!
Brac. Kind women still give men a woman's prize.
I know not o'er which gale most boughs will arch,
Nor if the Square will wave red flags or blue.
I should have judged, the fullest of rewards
Our state gave Luria, when she made him chief
Of her whole force, in her best captain's place.
Lur. That, my reward? Florence on my account
Relieved Ser Puccio? — mark you, my reward!
And Puccio's having all the fight's true joy —
Goes here and there, gets close, may fight, himself.
While I must order, stand aloof, o'ersee,
That was my calling, there was my true place!
I should have felt, in some one over me,
Florence impersonate, my visible head,
As I am over Puccio,—taking life
Directly from her eye! They give me you:
But do you cross me, set me half to work?
I enjoy nothing—though I will, for once!
Decide, shall we join battle? may I wait?

Brac. Let us compound the matter; wait till noon:
Then, no arrival,—

Lur. Ah, noon comes too fast!
I wonder, do you guess why I delay
Involuntarily the final blow
As long as possible? Peace follows it!
Florence at peace, and the calm studious heads
Come out again, the penetrating eyes;
As if a spell broke, all’s resumed, each art
You boast the glad heaven, o’er the white palace front.
The interrupted scaffold climbs anew;
The walls are peopled by the painter’s brush;
The statue to its niche ascends to dwell.
The present noise and trouble have retired
And left the eternal past to rule once more;
You speak its speech and read its records plain,
Greece lives with you, each Roman breathes your friend;
But Luria—where will then be Luria’s place?

Dom. Highest in honor, for that past’s own sake,
Of which his actions, sealing up the sum
By saving all that went before from wreck.
Will range as part, with which be worshipped too.

Lur. Then I may walk and watch you in your streets.
Lead the smooth life my rough life helps no more.
So different, so new, so beautiful—
Nor fear that you will tire to see parade
The club that slew the lion, now that crooks
And shepherd-pipes come into use again?
For very lone and silent seems my East
In its drear vastness; still it spreads, and still
No Braccios, no Domizias anywhere—
Not ever more! Well, well, to-day is ours!

Dom. I [To Brac.] Should he not have been one of us?

Lur. Oh, oh!
Not one of you, and so escape the thrill
Of coming into you, of changing thus,— Feeling a soul grow on me that restricts
The boundless unrest of the savage heart!
The sea heaves up, hangs loaded o’er the land,
Breaks there and buries its tumultuous strength;
Horror, and silence, and a pause awhile:
Lo, inland glides the gulf-stream, ailes away,
In rapture of assent, subdued and still,
Neath those strange banks, those unimagined skies.
Well, ’t is not sure the quiet lasts forever!
Your placid heads still find rough hands new work;
Some minute’s chance—there comes the need of mine:
And, all resolved on, I too hear at last.
Oh, you must find some use for me, Ser Braccio!
You hold my strength; ’t were best dispose of it:

What you created, see that you find food for—
I shall be dangerous else!

Brac. How dangerous, sir?

Lur. There are so many ways, Domizia warns me,
And one with half the power that I possess,
—Grows very formidable! Do you doubt?
Why, first, who holds the army . . .

Dom. While we talk,
Morn wears; we keep you from your proper place,
The field.

Lur. Nay, to the field I move no more;
My part is done, and Puccio’s may begin:
I cannot trench upon his province longer
With any face. — You think yourselves so safe?
Why, see—in concert with Tiburzio, now—
One could . . .

Dom. A trumpet!

Lur. My Lucchese at last!
Arrived, as sure as Florence stands! Your leave!

Springs out.

Dom. How plainly is true greatness characterized
By such unconscious sport as Luria’s here,
Strength sharing least the secret of itself!
Do it with head that schemes or hand that acts,
Such save the world which none but they could save,
Yet think what’er they did, that world could do.

Brac. Yes: and how worthy note, that these same great ones
In hand or head, with such unconsciousness
And all its due entailed humility,
Should never shrink, so far as I perceive,
From taking up whatever tool there be
Effects the whole world’s safety or mishap,
Into their mild hands as a thing of course!
The statist finds it natural to lead
The mob who might as easily lead him—
The captain marshals troops born skilled in war—
Statist and captain verily believe!
While we poor scribes . . . you catch me thinking now,
That I shall in this very letter write
What none of you are able! To it, Lapo!

Domizia goes.

This last worst all-affected childish fit
Of Luria’s, this be-praised unconsciousness,
Convinces me; the past was no child’s play:
It was a man bent Pisa,—not a child.
All’s mere dissimulation—to remove
The fear, he best knows we should entertain.
The utmost danger was at hand. Is’t written?
Now make a duplicate, lest this should fail,
And speak your fullest on the other side.
Sec. I noticed he was busily repairing
My half-efficacient of his Duomo sketch,
And, while he spoke of Florence, turned to it,
As the Mage Negro king to Christ the babe.
I judge his childishness the mere relapse
To boyhood of a man who has worked lately,
And presently will work, so, meantime, plays:
Whence, more than ever I believe in him.

Brac. [After a pause.] The sword! At best
The soldier, as he says.
In Florence—the black face, the barbarous name,
For Italy to boast her show of the age,
Her man of men!—To Florence with each letter!

ACT II
NOON

Dom. Well, Florence, shall I reach thee, pierce thy heart
Through all its safeguards? Hate is said to help—
Quicken the eye, invigorate the arm;
And this my hate, made up of many hates,
Might stand in scorn of visible instrument,
And will thee dead: yet do I trust it not.
Nor man's devices nor Heaven's memory
Of wickedness forgot on earth so soon,
But thy own nature—hell and thee I trust,
To keep thee constant in that wickedness,
Where my revenge may meet thee. Turn aside
A single step, for gratitude or shame,—
Grace but this Luria,—this wild mass of rage
I have prepared to launch against thee now,—
With other payment than thy noblest found,
—Give his desert for once its due reward,—
And past thee would my sure destruction roll,
But thou, who mad at our House thy sacrifice,
It cannot be thou wilt except this Moor
From the accustomed fate of zeal and truth:
Thou wilt deny his looked-for recompense,
And then—I reach thee. Old and trained, my sire
Could bow down on his quiet broken heart,
Die awe-struck and submissive, when at last
The strange blow came for the expected wreath;
And Porzio passed in blind bewildemen
To exile, never to return, they say:
Perplexed in his frank simple honest soul,
As if some natural law had changed,—how else
Could Florence, on plain fact pronouncing thus,
Judge Porzio's actions worthy such reward?
But Berto, with the ever-passionate pulse,
—Oh that long night, its dreadful hour on hour,
In which no way of getting his fair fame
From their inexplicable charges free,
Was found, save pouring forth the impatient blood
To show its color whether false or no!
My brothers never had a friend like me
Close in their need to watch the time, then speak,
—Burst with a waking laughter on their dream,
Cry, "Florence was all falseness, so, false here!"
And show them what a simple task remained—
To leave dreams, rise, and punish in God's name.
The city wedded to the wickedness,
None stood by them as I by Luria stand.
So, when the stranger cheated of his due,
Turns on thee as his rapid nature bids,
Then, Florence, think, a hireling at thy throat
For the first outrage, think who bore thy last,
Yet mutely in forlorn obedience died!

He comes—his friend—black faces in the camp
Where moved those peerless brows and eyes of old.

(Enter Luria and Husain.)

Well, and the movement—is it as you hope?
'Tis Luca?

Lur. Ah, the Pisan trumpet merely!

Tiburzio's envoy, I must needs receive.

Dom. Whom I withdraw before; though if I lingered
You could not wonder, for my time fleets fast.
The overtaking night brings such reward!
And where will then be room for me? Yet, praised,
Remember who was first to promise praise,
And envy those who also can perform! [Goes.

Lur. This trumpet from the Pisans?

Hus. In the camp; a very noble presence—Braccio's visage
On Puccio's body—calm and fixed and good;
A man I seem as I had seen before:
Most like, it was some statue had the face.

Lur. Admit him! This will prove the last delay.

Hus. Ay, friend, go on, and die thou going on!

Thou heard'st what the grave woman said but now:
To-night rewards thee. That is well to hear;
But stop not therefore: hear it, and go on!

Lur. Oh, their reward and triumph and the rest
They round me in the ears with, all day long?
All that, I never take for earnest, friend!
Well would it suit us,—their triumphal arch
Or storied pillar,—thee and me, the Moors!
But gratitude in those Italian eyes—
That, we shall get?

Hus. It is too cold an air.
Our sun rose out of yonder mound of mist:
Where is he now? So, I trust none of them.

Lur. Truly?

Hus. I doubt and fear. There stands a wall
'Twixt our expansive and explosive race
And those absorbing, concentrating men.
They use thee.

Lur. And I feel it, Husain! yes, and care not—yes, an alien force like mine
Is only called to play its part outside.
Their different nature; where its sole use seems
To fight with and keep off an adverse force,
As alien,—which repelled, mine too withdraws:
Inside, they know not what to do with me,
Thus I have told them languishingly and oft,
But long since am prepared to learn the worst.

Hus. What is the worst?

Lur. I will forestall them, Husain,
Will speak the destiny they dare not speak—
Banish myself before they find the heart,
I will be first to say, "The work rewards!"
I know, for all your praise, my use is over.
So may it prove!—meanwhile 'tis best I go,
Go carry safe my memories of you all
To other scenes of action, newer lands;"—
Thus leaving them confirmed in their belief
They would not easily have tired of me.

You think this hard to say?
Say or not say,
So thou but go, so they but let thee go!
This hating people, that hate each the other,
And one blandness to us Moors unite—
Locked each to each like slippery snakes, I say,
Which still in all their tangles, hissing tongue
And threatening tail, we'er do each other harm;
While any creature of a better blood,
They seem to fight for, while they circle safe
And never touch it,—pines without a wound,
Withers away beside their eyes and breath;
See thou, if Puccio come not safely out
Of Braccio's grasp, this Braccio sworn his foe,
As Braccio safely from Domizian's toils
Who hates him most! But thou, the friend of ... Come out of them!
Lur.
The Pisan trumpet now!
Hus.
Breathe free—it is an enemy, no friend!
[Goés.
Lur.
He keeps his instincts, no new culture
inars
Their perfect use in him; just so the brutes
Rest not, are anxious without visible cause,
When change is in the elements at work,
Which man's trained senses fail to apprehend,
But here,—he takes the distant chariot-wheel
For thunder, festal flame for lightning's flash,
The finer traits of cultivated life
For treachery and malevolence: I see!
(Enter Tiburzio.)
Lur.
Quick, sir, your message! I but wait your message
To sound the charge. You bring no overtone
For truce?—I would not, for your General's sake,
You spoke of truce: a time to fight is come,
And, whatsoever the fight's event, he keeps
His honest soldier's name to beat me with,
Or leaves me all himself to beat, I trust!
Tiburzio.
I am Tiburzio.
Lur.
You? 'T is—yes... Tiburzio!
You were the last to keep the ford? the valley
From Puccio, when I threw in succors there?
Why, I was on the heights—through the defile
Ten minutes after, when the prey was lost!
You wore an open skull-cap with a twist
Of water-reeds—the plume being hewn away;
While I drove down my battle from the heights,
I saw with my own eyes!
Tib.
And you are Luria
Who sent my cohort, that laid down its arms
In error of the battle-signal's sense,
Back safely to me at the critical time—
One of a hundred deeds, I know you! Therefore
To none but you could I
Lur.
No truce, Tiburzio!
Tib.
Luria, you know the peril imminent
On Pisa,—that you have as in the toils,
Us her last safeguard, all that intercepts
The rage of her implacablest of foes
From Pisa: if we fall to-day, she falls.
Though Lucca will arrive, yet, 't is too late.
You have so plainly here the best of it,
That you must feel, brave soldier as you are,
How dangerous we grow in this extreme,
How truly formidable by despair,
Still, probabilities should have their weight:
The extreme chance is ours, but, that chance failing,
You win this battle. Wherefore say I this?
To be well apprehended when I add,
This danger absolutely comes from you.
Were you, who threaten thus, a Florentine ...
Lur. Sir, I am nearer Florence than her sons.
I can, and have perhaps obliged the State,
Nor paid a mere son's duty.
Tib.
Even so.
Were you the son of Florence, yet endued
With all your present nobleness of soul,
No question, what I must communicate
Would not detach you from her.
Lur.
Me, detach?
Tib.
Time urges. You will ruin presently
Pisa, you never knew, for Florence's sake
You think you know. I have from time to time
Made prize of certain secret missives sent
From Braccio here, the Commissary, home;
And knowing Florence otherwise, I piece
The entire chain out, from these its scattered links.
Your trial occupies the Signory:
They sit in judgment on your conduct now.
When men at home inquire into the acts
Which in the field even foes appreciate
Brief, they are Florentine! You, saving them,
Seek but the sure destruction saviors find.
Lur.
Tiburzio!
Tib.
All the wonder is of course,
I am not here to teach you, nor direct,
Only to loyally apprise—scarcely that.
This is the latest letter, sealed and safe,
As it left here an hour ago. One way
Of two thought free to Florence, I command,
The duplicate is on its read; but this,—
Read it, and then I shall have more to say.
Lur.
Florence!
Tib.
Now, were yourself a Florentine,
This letter, let it hold the worst it can,
Would be no reason you should fall away.
The mother city is the mother still,
And recognition of the children's service
Her own affair; reward—there's no reward!
But you are bound by quite another tie.
Nor nature shows, nor reason, why at first
A foreigner, born friend to all alike,
Should give himself to any special State
More than another, stand by Florence' side
Rather than Pisa; 't is as fair a city
You war against, as that you fight for—famed
As well as she in story, graced no less
With noble heads and patriotic hearts:
Nor to a stranger's eye would either cause,
Stripped of the cumulative loves and hates
Which take importance from familiar view,
Stand as the right and sole to be upheld.
Therefore, should the preponderating gift
Of love and trust, Florence was first to throw,
Which made you hers, not Pisa's, void the scale,—
Old ties dissolving, things resume their place.
And all begins again. Break seal and read!
At least let Pisa offer for you now!
And I, as a good Pisan, shall rejoice.
Though for myself I lose, in gaining you,
This last fight and its opportunity;
The chance it brings of saving Pisa yet,
Or in the turn of battle dying so
That shame should want its extreme bitterness,

_Lur._ Tiburzio, you that fight for Pisa now
As I for Florence . . . say my chance were yours.

You read this letter, and you find . . . no, no!
Too mad!

_Tib._ I read the letter, did they purpose
When I have crushed their foe, to crush me:
well?

_Lur._ You, being their captain, what is it you do?

_Tib._ Why, as it is, all cities are alike;
As Florence pays you, Pisa will pay me.
I shall be as belied, what' er the event,
As you, compare; my weak head, they will say
Prompted this last expeditious, my faint heart
Entailed on them indigible disgrace,
Both which defects ask proper punishment.
Another tenure of obedience, mine!
You are no son of Pisa's: break and read!

_Lur._ And act on what I read? What act were fit?
If the firm-fixed foundation of my faith
In Florence, who to me stands for mankind,
— If that break up and, disimprisoning
From the abyss . . . Ah friend, it cannot be!
You may be very sage, yet — all the world
Having to fail, or your sagacity,
You do not wish to find yourself alone!
What would the world be worth? Whose love be sure?
The world remains: you are deceived!

_Tib._ Your hand!
I lead the vanguard. — If you fall, beside,
The better: I am left to speak! For me,
This very drift: nor would I rejoice
If I could help, it misses its effect;
And after all you will look gallantly
Found dead here with that letter in your breast.

_Lur._ Tiburzio — I would see these people once
And test them ere I answer finally!
At your arrival let the trumpet sound:
If mine return not then the wanted cry
It means that I believe — am Pisa's!

_Tib._ Well! [Goes.]

_Lur._ My heart will have it he speaks true!
My blood
Beats close to this Tiburzio as a friend.
If he had stepped into my watch-tent, night
And the wild desert full of foes around,
I should have broke the bread and given the salt
Secure, and, when my hour of watch was done,
Taken my turn to sleep between his knees
Safe in the untroubled brow and honest cheek.
Oh world, where all things pass and naught abides.
Oh life, the long mutation — is it so?
Is it with life as with the body's change?
— Where, e'en though better follow, good must pass,

Nor manhood's strength can mate with boyhood's grace,
Nor age's wisdom, in its turn, find strength,
But silently the first gift dies away,
And though the new stays, never both at once.
Life's time of savage instinct o'er with me,
It fades and dies away, past trusting more,
As if to punish the ingratitude
With which I turned to grow in these new lights.
And learned to look with European eyes.
Yet it is better, this cold certain way,
Where Braccio's brow tells nothing, Puccio's mouth,
Domizia's eyes reject the searcher: yes!
For on their calm sagacity I lean,
Their sense of right, deliberate choice of good,
Sure, as they know my deeds, they deal with me.
Yes, that is better — that is best of all!
Such faith stays when mere wild belief would go.
Yes — when the desert creature's heart, at fault
Amid the scattering tempest's pillared sands,
Betrays its step into the pathless drift —
The calm instructed eye of man holds fast
By the sole bearing of the visible star,
Sure that when slow the whirling wreck subsides,
The boundaries, lost now, shall be found again,

The palm-trees and the pyramid over all.
Yes: — I trust Florence: Pisa is deceived.

_Enter Braccio, Puccio, and Domizia._

_Brac._ Noon's at an end: no Lucca? You must fight.

_Lur._ Do you remember ever, gentle friends, I am no Florentine?

_Dom._ It is yourself
Who still are forcing us, importunately,
To bear in mind what else we should forget.

_Lur._ For loss! — for what I lose in being none!
No shrewd man, such as you yourselves respect,
But would remind you of the stranger's loss
In natural friends and advocates at home,
Hereditary loves, even rivalships
With precedent for honor and reward.
Still, there's a gain, too! If you take it so,
The stranger's lot has special gain as well.
Do you forget there was my own far East
I might have given away myself to, once,
As now to Florence, and for such a gift,
Stood there like a descended deity?
There, worship waits us: what is it waits here?

[Shows the letter.]

_See!_ Chance has put into my hand the means
Of knowing what I earn, before I work.
Should I fight better, should I fight the worse,
With payment palpably before me? _See!_
Here lies my whole reward! Best learn it now
Or keep it for the end's entire delight?

_Brac._ If you serve Florence as the vulgar serve,
For swordsman's-pay alone, — break seal and read!
In that case, you will find your full desert.

_Lur._ Give me my one last happy moment, friends!
You need me now, and all the graciousness
This letter can contain will hardly balance
The after-feeling that you need no more.
This moment... oh, the East has use with you!
Its sword still flashes — is not flung aside
With the past praise, in a dark corner yet!
How say you? "T is not so with Florentines —
Captains of yours: for them, the ended war
Is but a first step to the peace begun:
He who did well in war, just earns the right
To begin doing well in peace, you know:
And certain my precurors, — would not such
Look to themselves in such a chance as mine,
Secure the ground they trod upon, perhaps?
For I have heard, by fits, or seemed to hear,
Of strange mishap, mistake, ingratitude,
Treachery even. Say that one of you
Surmised this letter carried what might turn
To harm hereafter, cause him prejudice:
What would he do?
Dom. [Hastily.] Thank God and take revenge!
Hurl her own force against the city straight!
And, even at the moment when the foe
Sounded defiance... (Tiburzio's trumpet sounds in the distance.)

Lur. Ah, you Florentines!
So would you do? Wisely for you, no doubt!
My simple Moorish instinct bids me clench
The obligation you relieve me from,
Still deeper! [To Puc.] Sound our answer, I should say,
And thus: [Tearing the paper.] — The battle!
That solves every doubt.

ACT III

AFTERNOON

Puccio, as making a report to Jacopo.
Puc. And here, your captain must report the rest;
For, as I say, the main engagement over
And Luria's special part in it performed,
How could a subaltern like me expect
Leisure or leave to occupy the field
And glean what dropped from his wide harvesting?
I thought, when Lucca at the battle's end
Came up, just as the Pisan centre broke,
That Luria would detach me and prevent
The flying Pisans seeking what they found,
Friends in the rear, a point to rally by,
But no, more honorable proved my post!
I had the anguest captive to escort
Safe to our camp; some other could pursue,
Fight, and be famous; gentle chance was mine
— Tiburzio's wounded spirit must be soothing!
He's in the tent there.

Jacopo. Is the substance down?
I write — "The vanguard beaten and both wings
In full retreat, Tiburzio prisoner" —
And more, — "That they fell back and formed again

On Lucca's coming." Why then, after all,
'Tis half a victory, no conclusive one?
Puc. Two operations where a sole had served.

Jac. And Luria's fault was —?
Puc. Oh, for fault — not much!
He led the attack, a thought impetuously.
— There's commonly more prudence; now, he seemed
To hurry measures, otherwise well judged.
By over-concentrating strength at first
Against the enemy's van, both wings escaped:
That's repairable, yet it is a fault.

(Enter Braccio.)

Jac. As good as a full victory to Florence,
With the advantage of a fault beside —
What is it, Puccio? — that by pressing forward
With too impetuous...

Brac. The report anon!
Thanks, sir — you have elsewhere a charge, I know.
[Leaves.]
There's nothing done but I would do again;
Yet, Lapo, it may be the past provest nothing,
And Luria has kept faithful to the close.

Jac. I was for waiting.

Brac. Yes: so was not I.
He could not choose but tear that letter — true!
Still, certain of his tones, I mind, and looks: —
You saw, too, with a fresher soul than I.
So, Porzio seemed an injured man, they say!
Well, I have gone upon the broad, sure ground.

(Enter Lurio, Puccio, and Donzia.)

Lur. [To Puc.] Say, at his pleasure I will see Tiburzio!
All's at his pleasure.

Dom. [To Lur.] Were I not forewarned
You would reject, as you do constantly,
Praise, — I might tell you how you have deserved
Of Florence by this last and crowning feat:
But words offend.

Lur. Nay, you may praise me now.
I want instruction every hour, I find,
On points where once I saw least need of it;
And praise, I have been used to slight perhaps,
Seems scarce so easily dispensed with now.
After a battle, half one's strength is gone;
The glorious passion in us once appeased,
Our reason's calm cold dreadful voice begins.
All justice, power and beauty scarce appear
Monopolized by Florence, as of late,
To me, the stranger: you, no doubt, may know
Why Pisa needs must bear her rival's yoke.
And peradventure I grow nearer you,
For I, too, want to know and be assured.
When a cause ceases to reward itself,
Its friend seeks fresh susteniments; praise is one,
And here stand you — you, lady, praise me well.
But yours — (your pardon) — is unlearned praise.
To the motive, the endeavor, the heart's self.
Your quick sense looks: you crown and call a right
The soul o' the purpose, ere 't is shaped as act,
You are betraying me! What is it you do? Have it your way, and think my use is over—
Think you are saved and may throw off the mask—
Have it my way, and think more work remains Which I could do,—so, show you fear me not! Or prudent be, or daring, as you choose.
But tell me—tell what I refused to know At noon, lest heart should fail me! Well? That letter?
My fate is sealed at Florence! What is it?
Brac. Sir, I shall not deny what you divine, It is no novelty for innocence To be suspected, but a privilege: The after certain compensation comes.
Charges, I say not whether false or true, Have been preferred against you some time since, Which Florence was bound, plainly, to receive, And which are therefore undergoing now The due investigation. That is all.
I doubt not but your innocence will prove Apparent and illustrious, as to me;
To them this evening, when the trial ends.
Lur. My trial?
Dom. Florence. Florence to the end,
My whole heart thanks thee!
Puc. [To Brac.] What is "trial," sir? It was not for a trial,—surely, no—
I furnished you those notes from time to time? I held myself aggrieved— I am a man—
And I might speak,—ay, and speak mere truth, too,
And yet not mean at bottom of my heart What should assist a—trial, do you say?
You should have told me?
Dom. Nay, go on, go on!
His sentence! Do they sentence him? What is it?
The block,—wheel?
Brac. Sentence there is none as yet, Nor shall I give my own opinion now Of what it should be, or is like to be.
When it is passed, applaud or disapprove! Up to that point, what is there to impugn?
Lur. They are right, then, to try me?
Brac. I assert, Maintain and justify the absolute right Of Florence to do all she can have done In this procedure,—standing on her guard, Receiving even services like yours With utmost fit suspicious wariness, In other matters, keep the mummeries up! Take all the experiences of all the world, Each knowledge that broke through a heart to life,
Each reasoning which, to reach, burnt out a brain, —In other cases, know these, warrant these, And then dispense with these—'t is very well! Let friend trust friend, and love demand love's like, And gratitude be claimed for benefits,— There's grace in that,—and when the fresh heart breaks.
The new brain proves a ruin, what of them? Where is the matter of one moth the more Singed in the candle, at a summer's end?
But Florence is no simple John or James
To have his toy, his fancy, his conceit
That he’s the one excepted man by fate,
And, when fate shows him he’s mistaken
To there,
Die with all good men’s praise, and yield his place
To Paul and George intent to try their chance!
Florence exists because these pass away.
She’s a contrivance to supply a type
Of man, which men’s deficiencies refuse;
She binds so many, that she grows out of them —
Stands steady o’er their numbers, though they change
And pass away — there’s always what upholds,
Always enough to fashion the great show,
As see, you hanging city, in the sun,
Of shapely cloud substantially the same!
A thousand vapors rise and sink again,
Are interwoven, and live their life and die, —
Yet ever hangs the steady show of the air,
Under the sun’s straight influence: that is well,
That is worth heaven should hold, and God should bless!
And so is Florence — the unseen sun above,
Which draws and holds suspended all of us,
Binds transient vapors into a single cloud.
Differing from each and better than they all.
And shall she dare to stake this permanence
On any one man’s faith? Man’s heart is weak,
And its temptations many: let her prove
Each servant to the very uttermost
Before she grant him her reward, I say!
Dom. And as for hearts she chances to mistake,
Wronged hearts, not destined to receive reward,
Though they deserve it, did she only know,
— What should she do for these?
Brac. What does she not?
Say, that she gives them but herself to serve!
Here’s Luria — what had profited his strength,
When half an hour of sober fancying
Had shown him step by step the uselessness
Of strength exerted for strength’s proper sake?
But the truth is, she did create that strength,
Draw to the end the corresponding means.
The world is wide — are we the only men?
Oh, for the time, the social purpose’ sake,
Use words agreed on, bawdy epithets,
Call any man the sole great wise and good!
But shall we therefore, standing by ourselves,
Insult our souls and God with the same speech?
There, swarm the ignoble thousands under him:
What marks us from the hundreds and the tens?
Florence took up, turned all one way the soul
Of Luria with its fires, and here he glows!
She takes me out of all the world as him,
Fixing my coldness till like ice it checks
The fire! So, Braccio, Luria, which is best?
Lur. Ah, brave me? And is this indeed the way
To gain your good word and sincere esteem?
Am I the baited animal that must turn
And fight his baters to deserve their praise?
Obedience is mistake then? Be it so!
Do you indeed remember I stand here
The captain of the conquering army, — mine—
With all your tokens, praise and promise, ready
To show for what their names meant when you gave,
Not what you style them now you take away?
If I call in my troops to arbitrate,
And dash the first enthusiastic thrill
Of victory with this you menace now —
Commend to the instinctive popular sense,
My story first, your comment afterward, —
Will they take, think you, part with you or me?
If I say — I, the laborer they saw work,
Ending my work, ask pay, and find my lords
Have all this while provided silently
Against the day of pay and proving faith,
By what you call my sentence that’s to come —
Will friends advise I wait complacently?
If I meet Florence half-way at their head,
What will you do, my mild antagonist?
Brac. I will rise up like fire, proud and triumphant
That Florence knew you thoroughly and by me,
And so was saved. “See, Italy.” I’ll say,
“The crown of our precautions! Here’s a man
Was far advanced, just touched on the belief
Less subtle cities had accorded long;
But we were wiser: at the end comes this!”
And from that minute, where is Luria? Lost!
The very stones of Florence cry against
The all-exacting, naught-enduring fool,
Who thus resents her first probation, flouts
As if he, only, shone and cast no shade,
He, only, walked the earth with privilege
Against suspicion, from where angels fear;
He, for the first inquisitive mother’s word,
Must turn, and stand on his defence, forsooth!
Reward? You will not be worth punishment!
Lur. And Florence knew me thus! Thus I have lived,
— And thus you, with the clear fine intellect,
Braccio, the cold acute instructed mind,
Out of the stir, so calm and unconfused,
Reported me — how could you otherwise!
Ay? — and what dropped from you, just now, moreover?
Your information, Puccio? — Did your skill,
Your understanding sympathy approve
Such a report of me? Was this the end?
Or is even this the end? Can I stop here?
You, lady, with the woman’s stand apart,
The heart to see with, past man’s brain and eyes,
. . . I cannot fathom why you should destroy
The unoffending one, you call your friend —
Still, lessened by the good examples here
Of friendship, ’tis but natural I ask
Had you a further aim, in aught you urged,
Than your friend’s profit — in all those instances
Of perfidy, all Florence wrought of wrong —
All I remember now for the first time?
Dom. I am a daughter of the Traversari,
Sister of Porzio and of Berto both,
So, have foreseen all that has come to pass,
I knew that Florence that could doubt their faith,
Must needs mistrust a stranger's — dealing Punishment, would deny him his reward.
And I believed, the shame they bore and died,
He would not hear, but live and fight against —
Seeing he was of other stuff than they.

Lur. Hear them! All these against one foreigner.
And all this while, where is, in the whole world,
Is his good faith a single witness?

Tib. Who has entered unseen during the preceding dialogue?

Here!
Thus I bear witness, not in word but deed.
I live for Pisa; she's not lost to-day
By many chances — much prevents from that!
Her army has been beaten, I am here,
But Lucca comes at last, one happy chance!
I rather would see Pisa three times lost
Than saved by any traitor, even by you;
The example of a traitor's happy fortune,
Would bring more evil in the end than good;
Pisa rejects the traitor, craves yourself!
In her name, resign forthwith to you
My charge, — the highest office, sword and shield!
You shall not, by my counsel, turn on Florence.
Your army, give her calumni that ground —
Nor bring one soldier: be you all we gain!
And all she'll lose, — a head to deck some bridge,
And save the cost o' the crown should deck the head.
Leave her to perish in her perfidy,
Plague-stricken and stripped naked to all eyes,
A proverb and a by-word in all months!
Go you to Pisa! Florence is my place —
Leave me to tell her of the rectitude,
I, from the first, told Pisa, knowing it.
To Pisa!

Dom. Ah my Braccio, are you caught?

Brac. Puccio, good soldier and good citizen.
Whom I have ever kept beneath my eye,
Ready as fit, to serve in this event.
Florence, who clear foretold it from the first —
Through me, she gives you the command and charge
She takes, through me, from him who held it late!
A painful trial, very sore, was yours:
All that could draw out, marshal in array
The selfish passions 'gainst the public good —
Slights, scorn, neglects, were heaped on you to bear:
And ever you did bear and bow the head!
It had been sorry trial, to precede
Your feet, hold up the promise of reward
For luring glean; your footsteps kept the track
Through dark and doubt: take all the light at once!
Trial is over, consummation shines;
Well have you served, as well henceforth command!

Pur. No, no . . . I dare not! I am grateful, glad:
But Luria — you shall understand he's wronged:
And he's my captain — this is not the way
We soldiers climb to fortune: think again!
The sentence is not even passed, beside!
I dare not: where's the soldier could?

Lur. Now, Florence —
Is it to be? You will know all the strength
Of the savage — to your neck the proof must go?
You will prove the brute nature? Ah, I see!
The savage plainly is impassible —
He keeps his calm way through insulting words,
Sarcastic looks, sharp gestures — one of which
Would stop you, fatal to your finer sense,
But if he stubbornly advance, march mete
Without a mark upon his callous hide,
Through the mere 'brushwood you grow angry with.
And leave the tatters of your flesh upon,
You have to learn that when the true bar comes.
The murr mid-forest, the grand obstacle,
Which when you reach, you give the labor up,
Nor dash on, but lie down composed before —
He goes against it, like the brute he is:
It falls before him, or he dies in his course.
I kept my course through past ingratitude:
I saw — it does seem, now, as if I saw,
Could not but see, those insults as they fell,
Ay, let them glance from off me, very like,
Laughing, perhaps, to think the quality
You grew so bold on, while you so despised
The Moor's dull mute inappraisive mood.
Was saving you: I bore and kept my course.
Now real wrong front me: see if I succumb!
Florence withstands me? I will punish her.

At night my sentence will arrive, you say.
Till then I cannot, if I would, rebel — Unauthorized to lay my office down,
Retaining my full power to will and do:
After — it is to see. Tiburzio, thanks!
Go; you are free: join Lucca! I suspend
All further operations till to-night.
Thank you, and for the silence most of all!
[To Brac.] Let my complacent bland accuser go
Carry his self-approving head and heart
Safe through the army which would trample him
Dead in a moment at my word or sign!
Go, sir, to Florence; tell friends what I say —
That while I wait my sentence, theirs waits them!
[To Dom.] You, lady, — you have black Italian eyes!
I would be generous if I might: oh, yes —
For I remember how so oft you seemed Inclined at heart to break the barrier down
Which Florence finds God built between us both.
Alas, for generosity! this hour
Asks retribution: bear it as you may,
I must — the Moor — the savage, — pardon you!
Puccio, my trusty soldier, see them forth!
ACT IV
EVENING

Enter Puccio and Jacopo.

Puc. What Luria will do? Ah, 't is yours, fair sir;
Your and your subtle-witted master's part,
To tell me that; I tell you what he can.

Jac. Friend, you mistake my station: I observe
The game, watch how my betters play, no more.

Puc. But mankind are not pieces -- there's your fault!
You cannot push them, and, the first move made,
Lean back and study what the next shall be,
In confidence that, when 't is fixed upon,
You find just where you left them, blacks and whites:
Men go on moving when your hand's away.
You build, I notice, firm on Luria's faith
This whole time, -- firmer than I choose to build,
Who never doubted it -- of old, that is --
With Luria in his ordinary mind,
But now, oppression makes the wise man mad:
How do I know he will not turn and stand
And hold his own against you, as he may?
Suppose he but withdraw to Pisa -- well, --
Then, even if all happen to your wish,
Which is a chance ...

Jac. Nay -- 't was an oversight,
Not waiting till the proper warrant came:
You could not take what was not ours to give.
But when at night the sentence really comes,
Our city authorizes past dispute
Luria's removal and transfers the charge,
You will perceive your duty and accept?

Puc. Accept what? master-rolls of soldiers' names?
An array upon paper? I want men.
The hearts as well as hands -- and where's a heart
But beats with Luria, in the multitude
I come from walking through by Luria's side?
You gave them Luria, set him thus to grow,
Head-like, upon their trunk: one heart feeds both,
They feel him there, live twice, and well know why.
-- For they do know, if you are ignorant,
Who kept his own place and respected theirs,
Managed their sweat, yet never spared his blood,
All was your act: another might have served --
There's peradventure no such dearth of heads --
But you chose Luria: so, they grew one flesh,
And now, for nothing they can understand,
Luria removed, off is to roll the head;
The body's mine -- much I shall do with it!

Jac. That's at the worst.

Puc. No -- at the best, it is!
Best, do you hear? I saw them by his side.
Only we two with Luria in the camp,
Are left that keep the secret? You think that?
Hear what I know: from rear to van, no heart
But felt the quiet patient hero there
Was wronged, nor in the moveless ranks an eye
But glancing told its fellow the whole story
Of that convicted silent knot of spies
Who passed through them to Florence; they might pass --

No breast but gladiator beat when free of such:
Our troops will catch up Luria, close him round,
Bear him to Florence as their natural lord,
Partake his fortune, live or die with him.

Jac. And by mistake catch up along with him
Puccio, no doubt, compelled in self despite
To still continue second in command!

Puc. No, sir, no second nor so fortunate!
Your tricks succeed with me too well for that!
I am as you have made me, live and die
To serve your end -- a mere trained fighting-back,
With words, you laugh at while they leave your mouth.
For my life's rule and ordinance of God!
I have to do my duty, keep my faith,
And earn my praise, and guard against my blame
As I was trained. I shall accept your charge,
And fight against one better than myself,
Spite of my heart's conviction of his worth --
That, you may count on! -- just as hitherto
I have gone on, persuaded I was wronged,
Slighted, insulted, terms we learn by rote, --
All because Luria superseded me --
Because the better nature, fresh-inspired,
Mounted above me to its proper place!
What mattered all the kindly graciousness,
The cordial brother's-bearing? This was clear --
I, once the captain, now was subaltern,
And so must keep complaining like a fool!
Go, take the curse of a lost soul, I say!
You neither play your puppets to the end,
Nor treat the real man, -- for his realness' sake
Thrust rudely in their place, -- with such regard
As might console them for their altered rank.
Me, the mere steady soldier, you depose
For Luria, and here's all your pet deserves!
Of what account, then, is your laughing-stock?
One word for all: whatever Luria does,
-- If backed by his ignoble troops he turns,
Revenge himself, and Florence go to ground, --
Or, for a signal everlasting shame,
He pardon you, simply seek better friends,
Side with the Pisans and Lucrese for change
-- And if I, pledged to ingrates past belief,
Dare fight against a man such fools call false,
Who, inasmuch as he was true, fights me, --
Whichever way he win, he wins for worth,
For every soldier, for all true and good!
Sir, chronicling the rest, omit not this!

(As they go, enter LURIA and Husain.)

Hus. Saw'st thou? -- For they are gone!
The world lies bare
Before thee, to be tasted, felt and seen
Like what it is, now Florence goes away!
Thou livest now, with men art man again!
Those Florentines were all to thee of old;
But Braccio, but Domizia, gone is each,
Again love as thou likest, hate as free!
Turn to no Braccios nor Donzizus now,
To ask, before thy very limits dare move,
If Florence' welfare be concerned thereby!

Lur. So clear what Florence must expect of me?

Hus. Both armies against Florence! Take-revenge!
Wide, deep — to live upon, in feeling now,—
And, after live, in memory, year by year.
And, with the dear conviction, die at last!
She lies now at thy pleasure: pleasure have!
Their vaunted intellect that gilds our sense,
And blends with life, to show it better by,
— How think'st thou? — I have turned that light on them!
They called our thirst of war a transient thing;
"The battle-element must pass away
From life," they said, "and leave a tranquil
world."
— Master, I took their light and turned it full
On that dull turgid vein they said would burst
And pass away; and as I looked on life,
Still everywhere I tracked this, though it hid
And shifted, lay so silent as it thought.
Changed shape and hue yet ever was the same.
Why, 't was all fighting, all their nobler life!
All work was fighting, every harm — defeat,
And every joy obtained — a victory!
Be not their dupe!
Their dupe? That hour is past!
Here stand'st thou in the glory and the calm:
All is determined. Silence for me now!

[Husain goes.

Lur. Have I heard all?

Dom. [.Advancing from the background.] No,
Luria, I remain!

Not from the motives these have urged on thee,
Ig noble, insufficient, incomplete,
And pregnant each with sure seeds of decay,
As failing of sustenance from thyself.
Neither from low revenge, nor selfishness.
Nor savage lust of power, nor one, nor all,
Shalt thou reproach Florence! — I proclaim
The angel in thee, and reject the sprites
Which ineffectual crowd about his strength,
And mingle with his work and claim a share!
Inconsciously to the anguest end
Thou hast arisen: second not in rank
So much as time, to him who first ordained
That Florence, thou art to destroy, should be.
Yet him a star, too, guided, who broke first
The pride of lonely power, the life apart,
And made the eminences, each to each,
Lean o'er the level world and let it lie.
Safe from the thunder henceforth 'neath their tops!
So the few famous men of old combined,
And let the multitude rise underneath,
And reach them and unite — so Florence grew:
Braccio speaks true, it was well worth the price.
But when the sheltered many grew in pride
And grudged the station of the elected ones,
Who, greater than their kind, are truly great
Only in voluntary servitude — I proclaim.
Time was for thee to rise, and thou art here.
Such plague possessed this Florence: who can tell

There lie beneath thee thine own multitudes!
Sawst thou?

Lur. I saw.

Hus. Then, hold thy course, my king!
The years return. Let thy heart have its way:
Ah, they would play with thee as with all else,
Turn thee to use, and fashion thee anew.
Find out God's fault in thee as in the rest?
Oh watch, oh listen only to theserends
Once at their occupation! Ere we know!
The free great heaven is shut, their stifling pall
Drops till it frets the very tingling hair.
So weighs it on our head, — and, for the earth,
Our common earth is tethered up and down,
Over and across — "here shalt thou move,"
they cry!

Lur. Ay, Husain?

Hus. So have they spoiled all beside!
So stands a man grit round with Florentines, Priests, graybeards, Braccios, women, boys and spies.
All in one tale, all singing the same song,
How thou must house, and live at bed and board.
Take pledge and give it, go every way.
Breathe to their measure, make thy blood beat
time
With theirs — or, all is nothing — thou art
lost —
A savage, how shouldst thou perceive as they?
Feel glad to stand 'neath God's closed naked
hand!
Look up to it! Why, down they pull thy neck.
Lest it crush thee, who feel'st it and wouldst
kiss,
Without their priests that needs must glove it
first.
Lest peradventure flesh offend thy lip.
Love woman! Why, a very beast thou art!
Thou must .

Lur. Peace, Husain!

Hus. Ay, but, spoiling all,
For all, else true things, substituting false,
That they should dare spoil, of all instincts,
thine!
Should dare to take thee with thine instincts up,
Thy battle-ardors, like a ball of fire,
And class them and allow them place and play
So far, no farther — unabashed the while!
Thou with the soul that never can rest —
Thou born to do, undo, and do again,
And never to be still, — wouldst thou make war?
Oh, that is commendable, just and right!
"Come over," say they, "have the honor due
In living out thy nature! Fight thy best:
It is to be for Florence, not thyself!
For thee, it were a horror and a plague;
For as, when war is made for Florence, see,
How all is changed: the fire that fed on earth
Now towers to heaven!"!

Lur. And what sealed up so long
My Husain's mouth?

Hus. Oh friend, oh lord — for me,
What am I? — I was silent at thy side,
Who a part of thee. It is thy hand,
Thy foot that glows when in the heart fresh
blood
Boils up, thou heart of me! Now, live again,
THE MIGHTY GIRTH AND GREATNESS AT THE HEART

Of those so perfect pillars of the grove
She pulled down in her envy?—Who as I,
The light weak parasite born but to twine
Round each of them and, measuring them, live?
My light love keeps the matchless circle safe,
My slender life proves what has passed away.
I lived when they departed; lived to cling
To thee, the mighty stranger; thou wouldst rise
And burst the thralldom, and avenge, I knew.
I have done nothing; all was thy strong hole.
But a bird's weight can break the infant tree
Which after holds an aery in its arms,
And 't was my care that ought should warp thy spire.
From rising to the height; the roof is reached
O' the forest, break through, see extend the sky!

Go on to Florence, Luria!—'Tis man's cause!
Fail thou, and thine own full were least to dread!
Thou keepest Florence in her evil way,
Encourage her sin so much the more—
And while the ignoble past is justified,
Thou all the surer wert the future growth,
The chiefs to come, the Lurias yet unborn.
That, greater than thyself, are reached o'er thee
Who giv'st the vantage-ground their foes require,
As o'er my prostrate House thyself wast reached!
Man calleth, God requites thee! All is said,
The mission of my House fulfilled at last:
And the mere woman, speaking for herself,
Reserves speech—it is now no woman's time.

Luria. Thus at the last must figure Luria, then!
Doing the various work of all his friends,
And answering every purpose save his own,
No doubt, 'tis well for them to wish; but him—
After the exploit what were left? Perchance
A little pride upon the swarthy brow,
At having brought successfully to bear
'Gainst Florence' self her own especial arms,
—Her craftiness, impelled by fiercer strength
From Moorish blood than feeds the northern wit.
But after!—once the easy vengeance willed.
Beautiful Florence at a word laid low—
'Not in her domes and towers and palaces,
Not even in a dream, that outrage!—low,
As shamed in her own eyes henceforth forever,
Low, for the rival cities round to laugh,
Conquered and pardoned by a hirering Moor!
—For him, who did the irreparable wrong.
What would be left, his life's illusion fled. —
What hope or trust in the forlorn wide world?
How strange that Florence should mistake me
so!
Whence grew this? What withdrew her faith
from me?
Some cause! These fretful-blooded children talk
Against their mother,—they are wronged, they say—
Notable wrongs her smile makes up again!
So, taking fire at each supposed offence,
They may speak rashly, suffer for their speech:

But what could it have been in word or deed
Thus injured me? Some one word spoken more
Out of my heart, and all had changed perhaps.
My fault, it must have been,—for, what gain they?
Why risk the danger? See, what I could do!
And my fault, wherefore visit upon them,
My Florentines? The notable revenge
I meditated! To stay passively,
Attend their summons, be as they dispose!
Why, if my very soldiers keep the rank,
And if my chieftains acquiesce, what then?
I ruin Florence, teach her friends mistrust,
Confirm her enemies in harsh belief.
And when she finds one day, as find she must,
The strange mistake, and how my heart was hers,
Shall it console me, that my Florentines
Walk with a saddler step, in graver guise,
Who took me with such frankness, praised me so,
At the glad outset? Had they loved me less,
They had less feared what seemed a change in me,
And after all, who did the harm? Not they!
How could they interpose with those old fools
I — the council? Suffer for those old fools' sake—
They, who made pictures of me, sang the songs
About my battles? Ah, we Moors get blind
Out of our proper world, where we can see!
The sun that guides is closer to us! There —
There, my own orb! He sinks from out the sky!

Why, there! a whole day has he blessed the land,
My land, our Florence all about the hills,
The fields and gardens, vineyards, olive-groinds,
All have been blest — and yet we Florentines,
With souls intent upon our battle here,
Found that he rose too soon, or set too late,
Gave us no vantage, or gave Pisa much —
Therefore we wronged him! Does he turn in ire
To burn the earth that cannot understand?
Or drop out quietly, and leave the sky,
His task once ended? Night wipes blame away.

Another morning from my East shall spring
And find all eyes at leisure, all disposed
To watch and understand its work, no doubt.
So, praise the new sun, the successor praise,
Praise the new Luria and forget the old!

—Strange! This is all I brought from my own land
To help me: Europe would supply the rest,
All needs beside, all other helps save one!
I thought of adverse fortune, battle lost,
The natural upbraiding of the loser,
And then this quiet remedy to seek
At end of the disastrous day.

—Strange! This was my happy triumph-morning:
Florence
Is saved: I drink this, and ere night, — die!

T is sought!
Luria and Puccio

Lur. I thought to do this, not to talk this:—
Not, but—'tis Lupo.

One.
Yet to an understanding ear enough;
And all that my brief stay permits, beside.
Nor must you blame me, as I sought to teach
My elder in command, or threw a doubt
Upon the very skill, it comforts me
To know I leave—your steady soldiery
Which never failed me yet, because it seemed
A stranger's eye might haply note defect,
That skill, through use and custom, overlooks—
I have gone into the old cares once more,
As if I had to come and save again
Florence—that May—that morning! 'Tis night now.

Well—'tis broke off with?...

Luc. Of the past campaign
You spoke—of measures to be kept in mind
For future use.

Lur. True, so... but, time—no time!
As we'll end here: remember this, and me!

Farewell now!

Luc. Dare I speak?

Lur. South o' the river—
How is the second stream called... no—the third?

Luc. Pisa.
Lur. And a stone's-cast from the fording-place,
To the cast—the little mount, name's?

Luc. Lupo.
Lur. Ay!—there the tower, and all that side is safe!
With San Romano, west of Evola,
San Miniato, Scala, Empoli,
Five towers in all,—forget not!

Luc. Fear not me!
Lur. Nor to memorialize the Council now,
I the easy hour, on those battalions' claim,
Who forced a pass by Staggia on the hills,
And kept the Sienez at check!

Luc. One word—
Sir, I must speak! That you submit yourself
To Florence' bidding, howsoever it prove,
And give up the command to me—is much,
Too much, perhaps: but what you tell me now,
Even will affect the other course you choose—
Poor as it may be, perils even that!
Refuge you seek at Pisa: yet these plans
All militate for Florence, all conclude
Your formidable work to make her queen
Of the country,—which her rivals rose against
When you began it,—which to interrupt,
Luis would buy you off at any price!
You cannot mean to sue for Lupa's help,
With this made perfect and on record?

Lur. At Pisa, and for refuge, do you say?
Luc. Where are you going, then? You must decide
On leaving us, a silent fugitive,
Alone, at night—you, stealing through our lines.
Who were this morning's Luria,—you escape
To painfully begin the world once more,
With such a past, as it had never been!
Where are you going?

Lur. Not so far, my Puccio,
But that I hope to hear, enjoy and praise
If you mind praise from your old captain yet
Each happy blow you strike for Florence!

Luc. Ay, but ere you gain your shelter, what may come?
For see—that nothing's surely known as yet,

Still—truth must out—I apprehend the worst.
If mere suspicion stood for certainty
Before, there's nothing can arrest the step
Of Florence; toward your ruin, once on foot.
Forgive her fifty times, it matters not!
And having disbelieved your innocence,
How can she trust your magnanimity?
You may do harm to her—why then, you will!
And Florence is sagacious in pursuit.

Have you a friend to count on?

Lur. One sure friend.

Luc. Potent?

Lur. All-potent.

Luc. And he is apprised?

Lur. He waits me.

Luc. So!—Then I, put in your place,
Calling my profit of all done by you,
Calling your labors mine, reaping their fruit.
To this, the State's gift, now add yours besides—
That I may take as my peculiar store
These your instructions to work Florence good,
And if, by putting some few happily
In practice, I should both advantage her
And draw down honor on myself,—what then?

Lur. Do it, my Puccio! I shall know and praise!

Luc. Though so, men say, 'mark what we gain by change—'

—A Puccio for a Luria!"

Lur. Even so!

Luc. Then, not for fifty hundred Florences
Would I accept one office save my own,
Fill any other than my rightful post
Here at your feet, my captain and my lord!
That such a cloud should break, such trouble be,
Ere a man settle, soul and body, down
Into his true place and take rest forever!
Here were my wise eyes fixed on your right hand,
And so the bad thoughts came and the worse words.
And all went wrong and painfully enough,—
No wonder,—till the right spot stumbled on,
All the jar stops, and there is peace at once!
I am yours now,—a tool your right hand wields!

God's love, that I should live, the man I am,
On orders, warrants, patents and the like,
As if there were no glowing eye 't the world
To glance straight inspiration to my brain,
No glorious heart to give mine twice the beats!
For, see—my doubt, where is it?—fear! 't is flown!

And Florence and her anger are a tale
To scarce a child! Why, half-a-dozen words
Will tell her, spoken as I now can speak,
Her error, my past folly—and all's right,
And you are Luria, our great chief again!
Or at the worst—which worst were best of all—
To exile or to death I follow you!

Lur. Thanks, Puccio! Let me use the privilege
You grant me: if I still command you,—stay!
Remain here, my viceroy, it shall be,
And not successor; let me, as of old,
Still serve the State, my spirit prompting yours—
Still triumph, one for both. There! Leave me now!
You cannot disobey my first command?
Remember what I spoke of Jacopo,
And what you promised to concert with him!
Send him to speak with me—nay, no farewell!
You shall be by me when the sentence comes.

So, there's one Florentine returns again!
Out of the genial morning company.
One face is left to take into the night.

(Enter Jacopo.)

Jac. I wait for your command, sir.

Lur. What, so soon?
I thank your ready presence and fair word.
I used to notice you in early days
As of the other species, so to speak,
Those watchers of the lives of us who act—
That weigh our motives, scrutinize our thoughts.
So, I proposed this to your faculty
As you would tell me, were a town to take
That is, of old, I am departing hence
Under these imputations; that is naught—
I leave no friend on whom they may rebound,
Hardly a name behind me in the land,
Being a stranger: all the more behooves
That I regard how altered were the case
With natives of the country, Florentines
On whom the like mischance should fall: the roots
O' the tree survive the ruin of the trunk—
No root of mine will thrive, you understand.
But I had predecessors, Florentines,
Accused as I am now, and punished so—
The Traversari: you know more than I
How stigmatized they are and lost in shame.
Now Puccio, who succeeds me in command,
Both served them and succeeded, in due time;
He knows the way, holds proper documents,
And has the power to lay the simple truth
Before an active spirit, as I count yours:
And also there's Tiburzio, my new friend,
Will, at a word, confirm such evidence,
He being the great chivalric soul we know.
I put it to your tact, sir—we're 't not well,
—A grace, though but for contrast's sake, no
more,—
If you who witness, and have borne a share
Voluntarily in my mischance,
Should, of your proper motion, set your skill
To indicate—that is, investigate
The right or wrong of what mischance befell
Those famous citizens, your countrymen?
Nay, you shall promise nothing; but reflect,
And if your sense of justice prompt you—
good!

Jac. And if, the trial past, their fame stand clear
To all men's eyes, as yours, my lord, to mine—
Their ghosts may sleep in quiet satisfied!
For me, a straw thrown up into the air,
My testimony goes for a straw's worth.
I used to hold by the instructed brain,
And move with Braccio as my master-wind;
The heart leads swifter: I must move with you
As greatest now, who ever were the best.
So, let the last and humblest of your servants
Accept your charge, as Braccio's heretofore,
And tender homage by obeying you!

[Jacopo goes.]

Lur. Another!—Luria goes not poorly forth,
If we could wait! The only fault's with time;
All men become good creatures: but so slow!

(Enter Domizia.)

Lur. Ah, you once more?

Dom. Domizia, whom you knew,
Performed her task, and died with it. "Tis I,
Another woman, you have never known,
Let the past sleep now!

Lur. I have done with it.

Dom. How inexhaustibly the spirit grows!
One object, she seemed meanwhile born to reach
With her whole energies and die content, —
So like a wall at the world's edge it stood,
With naught beyond to live for,—is that reached? —

Already are new undreamed energies
Outgrowing under, and extending further
To a new object; there's another world.
See! I have told the purpose of my life;  'T is gained: you are decided, well or ill—
You march on Florence, or submit to her—
My work is done with you, your brow declares.
But—leave you?—More of you seems yet to reach:
I stay for what I just begin to see.

Lur. So that you turn not to the past!

Dom. You trace
Nothing but ill in it—my selfish impulse.
Which sought its end and disregarded yours?

Lur. Speak not against your nature: best, each keep
His own—you, yours most, now that I keep mine,
—At least, fall by it, having too weakly stood,
God's finger marks distinctions, all so fine,
We would confound: the lesser has its use.
Which, when it apes the greater, is foregone.
I, born a Moor, lived half a Florentine;
But, punished properly, can end, a Moor.
Beside, there's something makes me understand
Your nature: I have seen it.
Dom. Aught like mine?
Lur. In my own East... if you would stool and help
My barbarous miistration! It sounds ill;
Yet there's no wrong at bottom: rather, praise.
Dom. Well?
Lur. We have creatures there, which if you saw
The first time, you would doubtless marvel at
For their surpassing beauty, craft and strength.
And though it were a lively moment's shock
When you first found the purpose of forked tongue
That seem innocuous in their lambent play,
Yet, once made known such grace requires such guard.
Your reason soon would acquiesce, I think.
In wisdom which made all things for the best—
So, take them, good with ill, contentedly
The prominent beauty with the latent sting.
I am glad to have seen you wondrous Florentine:
Yet...
Dom. I am here to listen.
Lur. My own East!
How nearer God we were! He glows above
With scarce an intervention, presses close
And palpitatingly, his soul o'er ours;
We feel him, nor by painful reason know!
The everlasting minute of creation
Is felt there; now it is, as it was then;
All changes at his instantaneous will,
Not by the operation of a law
Whose maker is elsewhere at other work.
His hand is still engaged upon his world;
Man's praise can forward it, man's prayer guard.
For is not God all-mighty? To reconstitute
The world, erase old things and make them new,
What costs it Him? So, man breathes nobly there.
And inasmuch as feeling, the East's gift,
Is quick and transient—comes, and lo, is gone—
While Northern thought is slow and durable,
Surely a mission was reserved for me,
Who, born with a perception of the power
And use of the North's thought for us of the East,
Should have remained, turned knowledge to account,
Giving thought's character and permanence
To the too transitory feeling there—
Writing God's message plain in mortal words.
Instead of which, I leave my fated held
For this where such a task is needed least.
Where all are born consummate in the art
I just perceive a chance of making mine—
And then, deserting thus my early post,
I wonder that the men I come among Mistake me! There, how all had understood,
Still brought fresh stuff for me to stamp and keep.
Fresh instinct to translate them into law!
Me, who...

Dom. Who here the greater task achieve,
More needful even: who have brought fresh stuff
For us to mould, interpret and prove right.
—New feeling fresh from God, which, could we know
O' the instant, where had been our need of it?
—Whose life re-teaches us what life should be,
What faith is, loyalty and simplesness,
All, once revealed but taught us so long since
That, having mere tradition of the fact,—
Truth copied falteringly from copies faint.
The early traits all dropped away,—we said
On sight of faith like yours, "So looks not faith
We understand, described and praised before."
But still, the feat was dared; and though at first
It suffered from our haste, yet trace by trace
Old memories reappear, old truth returns.
Our slow thought does its work, and all's re-known.
Oh noble Luria! What you have decreed
I see not, but no animal revenge.
No brute-like punishment of bad by worse—
It cannot be, the gross and vulgar way
Traced for me by convention and mistake,
Has gained that calm approving eye and brow!
Spare Florence, after all! Let Luria trust.
To his own soul, be whom I trust with mine!

Lur. In time!
Dom. How, Luria?
Lur. It is midnight now.
And they arrive from Florence with my fate.
Dom. I hear no step.

Lur. (Enter Tiberzio, Braccio, and Puccio.)
Has. The man returned from Florence!
Lur. He seeks thee.
Lur. And I only wait for him.

Has. A movement of the Luccese troops
Southward—
Lur. Toward Florence? Have out instantly...
Ah, old use clings! Puccio must care henceforth.
In—quick—'tis nearly midnight! Bid him come.

Lur. Tiburzio?—not at Pisa?
Tib. I return
From Florence: I serve Pisa, and must think
By such procedure I have served her best.
A people is but the attempt of many
To rise to the completer life of one;
And those who live as models for the mass
Are singly of more value than they all.
Such man are you, and such a time is this,
That your sole fate concerns a nation more
Than much apparent welfare: that to prove
Your rectitude, and duly crown the same,
Imports as far beyond to-day's event,
A battle's loss or gain: man's mass remains,

Keep but God's model safe, new men will rise
To take its mould, and other days to prove
How great a good was Luria's glory. True —
I might go try my fortune as you urged.
And, joining Lucca, helped by your disgrace,
Repair our harm — so were to-day's work done;
But where leave Luria for our sons to see?
No, I look farther. I have testified
(Declaring my submission to your arms)
Her full success to Florence, making clear
Your probity, as none else could: I spoke,
And out it gone!

Lur. Ah — until Braccio spoke!
Brac. Till Braccio told in just a word the whole —
His lapse to error, his return to knowledge;
Which told, Nay. Luria, I should droop
the head,
I whom shame rests with! Yet I dare look up,
Whence yet she seemed to grudge I should stand on:
Then, stooping down to take off her pattens,
She bore them defiantly, in each hand one,
Planted together before her breast.
And its bale, as good as a lance in rest,
Close on her heels, the dingy satins
Of a female something past me flittered,
With lips as much too white, as a streak
Lay far too red on each hollow cheek:
And it seemed the very door-hinge pitied
All that was left of a woman once,
Holding at least its tongue for the nonce.
Then a tall yellow man, like the Penitent Thief,
With his jaw bound up in a handkerchief,
And eyelids screwed together tight,
Led himself in by some inner light.
And, except from him, from each that entered,
I got the same interrogation —
"What, you the alien, you have ventured
To take with us, the elect, your station?
A carer for none of it, a Gallo!"
Thus, plain as print, I read the glance
At a common prey, in each countenance
As of huntsman giving his bounds the tallyho.
And, when the door's cry drowned their wonder,
The draught, it always sent in shuttting.
Made the flame of the single tallow candle
In the cracked square lantern I stood under,
Shoot its blue lip at me, rebuffing
As it were, the lackluster cause of scandal:
I verily fancied the zealous light
(In the chapel's secret, too!) for spite
Would shudder itself clean off the wick,
With the airs of a Saint John's Candlestick.
There was no standing it much longer,
"Good folks," thought I, as resolve grew stronger,
"This way you perform the Grand-Inquisitor
When the weather sends you a chance visitor?
You are the men, and wisdom shall die with you.
And none of the old Seven Churches vie with you!
But still, despite the pretty perfection
To which you carry your trick of exclusiveness,
And, taking God's word under wise protection
Correct its tendency to diffusiveness,
And bid one reach it over hot ploughshares,
Still, as I say, though you've found salvation.
If I should choose to cry, as now, 'Share!
See if the best of you bars me my ration!
I prefer, if you please, for my expounder
Of the laws of the feast, the feast's own Founder;
Mine's the same right with your poorest and pickiest.
Supposing I don the marriage vestiment
So, shut your mouth and open your Testament,
And carve me my portion at your quickliest!"
Accordingly, as a shoemaker's lad
With wizen face in want of soap,
And wet apron wound round his waist like a rope,
After stopping outside, for his cough was bad,
To get the fit over, poor gentle creature.
And so avoid disturbing the preacher
- Passed in, I sent my elbow spikewise.
At the shutting door, and entered likewise,
Received the hinge's accustomed greeting.
And crossed the threshold's magic pentacle,
And found myself in full convention,
- To wit, in Zion Chapel Meeting.
On the Christmas-Eve of Forty-nine,
Which, calling its flock to their special clover,
Found all assembled and one sheep over,
Whose lot, as the weather pleased, was mine.

I very soon had enough of it.
The hot smell and the human noises,
And my neighbor's coat, the greasy cuff of it,
Were a pebble-stone that a child's hand poises.
Compared with the pig-of-lead-like pressure
Of the preaching man's immense stupidity,
As he poured his doctrine forth, full measure,
To meet his audience's avidity.
You needed not the wit of the Sibyl
To guess the cause of it all, in a twinkling;
No sooner our friend had got an inkling
Of treasure hid in the Holy Bible,
Where'er 't was the thought first struck him,
How death, at antwares, might dunk him
Deeper than the grave, and quench
The gin-shop's light in hell's grim drench
Than he handled it so, in fine irreverence,
As to hug the book of books to pieces:
And, a patchwork of chapters and texts in sevence,
Not improved by the private dog's ears and creases,
Having clothed his own soul with, he'd fain see equipt yours.
So tossed you again your Holy Scriptures,
And you picked them up, in a sense, no doubt:
Nay, had but a single face of my neighbors
Appeared to suspect that the preacher's labors
Were help which the world could be saved without.
'Tis odds but I might have borne in quiet
A qualm or two at my spiritual diet,
Or (who can tell?) perchance even muster
Somewhat to urge in behalf of the sermon:
But the flock sat on, divinely flushed,
Surfin, moonlight, its gaze on Hermon
With such content in every smiile.
As the devil inside us loves to rattle.
My old fat woman purred with pleasure,
And thumb round thumb went twirling faster,
While she, to his periods keeping measure,
Maternally devoured the pastor.
The man with the handkerchief untied it.
Showed us a horrible wen inside it,
Gave his eyelids yet another screwing,
And rocked himself as the woman was doing.
The shoemaker's lad, discreetly choking,
Kept down his cough. 'T was too provoking!
My gorge rose at the nonsense and stuff of it:
So, saying like Eve when she plucked the apple,
"I wanted a taste, and now there's enough of it!
I flung out of the little chapel.
IV

There was a hui in the rain, a hill
In the wind too; the moon was risen,
And would have shown out pure and full,
But for the ramparted cloud-prison,
Block on block built up in the West,
For what purpose the wind knows best,
Who changes his mind continually,
And the empty other half of the sky
Seemed in its silence as if it knew
What, any moment, might look through
A chance gap in that fortress nivy: --
Through its fissures you got hints
Of the flying moon, by the shifting tints,
Now, a dull lion-color, now, brassy
Burning to yellow, and whitest yellow,
Like furnace-smoke just ere flames bellow,
All simmering with intense strain
To let her through, -- then blank again,
At the hope of her appearance failing.

Just by the chapel a break in the railing
Shows a narrow path directly across;
"Tis ever dry walking there, on the moss —
Besides, you go gently all the way up-hill,
I stooped under and soon felt better;
My head grew lighter, my limbs more supple,
As I walked on, glad to have slpt the fetter.
My mind was full of the scene I had left,
That plaid flock, that pastor-viceregent,
— How this outside was pure and different!
The sermon, now — what a mingled weft
Of good and ill! Were either less,
Its fellow had colored the whole distinctly;
But alas for the excellent earnestness,
And the truths, quite true if stated succinctly,
But as surely false, in their quaint presentation,
However to pastor and flock's contentment!
Say rather, such truths looked false to your eyes,
With his provings and parallels twisted and twined,
Till how could you know them, grown double their size
In the natural fog of the good man's mind,
Like yonder spots of our roadside lamps,
Haloed about with the common's damp?
Truth remains true, the fault's in the prover;
The zeal was good, and the aspiration;
And yet, and yet, yet, fifty times over,
Pharaoh received no demonstration,
By his Baker's dream of Baskets Three,
Of the doctrine of the Trinity,—
Although, as our preacher thus embellished it,
Apparently his hearers relished it
With so unfeigned a gust — who knows if
They did not prefer our friend to Joseph?
But so it is everywhere, one way with all of them!
These people have really felt, no doubt,
A something, the motion they style the Call of them;
And this is their method of bringing about,
By a mechanism of words and tones,
(So many texts in so many groans)
A sort of reviving and reproducing,
More or less perfectly, (who can tell?)
The mood itself, which strengthens by using;

And how that happens, I understand well.
A tune was born in my head last week,
Out of the thump-thump and shrick-shrick
Of the train, as I came by it, up from Manchester:
And when, next week, I take it back again,
My head will sing to the engine's clack again.
While it only makes my neighbor's haunches stir,
—Finding no dormant musical sprout
In him, as in me, to be jolted out,
'Tis the taught already that profits by teaching:
He gets no more from the railway's preaching
Than, from this preacher who does the rail's office, 1:
Whom therefore the flock cast a jealous eye on,
Still, why paint over their door "Mount Zion.
To which all flesh shall come, saith the prophecy?

But wherefore be harsh on a single case?
After how many modes, this Christmas-Eve,
Does the self-same weary thing take place?
The same endeavor to make you believe,
And with much the same effect, no more:
Each method abundantly convincing,
As I say, to those convinced before,
But scarce to be swallowed without wincing
By the not-as-yet-convinced. For me,
I have my own church equally:
And in this church my faith sprang first!
(I said, as I reached the rising ground,
And the wind began again, with a burst
Of rain in my face, and a glad rebound
From the heart beneath, as if, God speeding me,
I entered his church-door, nature-healing me)
—In youth I looked to these very skies,
And probing their immensities,
I found God there, his visible power;
Yet felt in my heart, amid all its sense
Of the power, an equal evidence
That his love, there too, was the nobler dower.
For the loving worm within its clot
Were diviner than a loveless god
Amid his worlds, I will dare to say.
You know what I mean: God's all, man's
But also, God, whose pleasure brought
Man into being, stands away
As it were a handbreadth off, to give
Room for the newly-made to live.
And look at him from a place apart,
And use his gifts of brain and heart,
Given, indeed, but to keep forever.
Who speaks of man, then, must not sever
Man's very elements from man.
Saying, "But all is God's, unless one plan
Was to create man and then leave him
Able, his own word saith, to grieve him,
But able to glorify him too,
As a mere machine could never do,
That prayed or praised, all unaware
Of its fitness for aught but praise and prayer.
Made perfect as a thing of course.
Man, therefore, stands on his own stock
Of love and power as a pin-point rock:

[Signature]
And, looking to God who ordained divorce
Of the rock from his boundless continent.
Sees, in his power made evident,
Only excess by a million-fold
Over the power God gave man in the mould.
For, note : man's hand, first formed to carry
A few pounds' weight, when taught to marry
Its strength with an engine's, lifts a mountain,
—Advancing in power by one degree;
And why count steps through eternity?
But love is the ever-sprunging fountain:
Man may enlarge or narrow his bed
For the water's play, but the water-head—
How can be multiply or reduce it?
As easy create it, as cause it to cease;
He may profit by it, or abuse it,
But 'tis not a thing to bear increase
As power does: be love less or more
In the heart of man, he keeps it shut
Or open it wide, as he pleases, but
Love's sum remains what it was before,
So, gaz ing up, in my youth, at love
As seen through power, ever above
All need's which make it manifest,
My soul brought all to a single test—
That he, the Eternal First and Last.
Who, in his power, had so surpassed
All man conceives of what is might—
Whose wisdom, too, showed infinite,
Would prove as infinitely good;
Would never, (my soul understood,)
With power to work all love desires,
Bestow even less than man requires;
That he who endlessly was teaching,
Above my spirit's utmost reaching,
What love can do in the leaf or stone,
(So that to master this alone,
This done in the stone or leaf for me,
I must go on learning endlessly
Would never need that I, in turn,
Should point him out defect unheeded,
And show that God had yet to learn
What the meanest human creature needed.
— Not life, to wit, for a few short years,
Tracking his way through doubts and fears.
While the stupid earth on which I stay
Suffers no change, but passive adds
Its myriad years to myriads,
Though I, he gave it to, decay,
Seeing death come and choose about me,
And my dearest ones depart without me.
No ! love which, on earth, amid all the shows of it,
Has ever seen the sole good of life in it,
The love, ever growing there, spite of the strife in it,
Shall arise, made perfect, from death's repose of it.
And I shall behold thee, face to face,
O God, and in thy light trace
How in all I loved here, still want thou!
Whom pressing to, as I fain would now.
I shall find as able to satiate
The love, thy gift, as my spirit's wonder
Thou art able to quicken and sublimate,
With this sky of thine, that I now walk under
And glory in thee for, as I gazed
Thus, thus! Oh, let men keep their ways
Of seeking thee in a narrow shrine—
Be this my way! And this is mine!

VI
For lo, what think you? suddenly
The rain and the wind ceased, and the sky
Received at once the full fruition
Of the moon's consummate apparition.
The black cloud-barricade was riven,
Rimed beneath her feet, and driven
Deep in the West; while, bare and breathless,
North and South and East lay ready
For a glorious thing that, damntless, deathless.
Sprang across them and stood steady,
'Twas a moon-rainbow, vast and perfect,
From heaven to heaven extending, perfect
As the mother-moon's self, full in face.
It rose, distinctly at the base
With its seven proper colors lap
Which still, in the rising, were compressed,
Until at last they coalesced,
And suprême the spectral creature lorded
In a triumph of whitest white,
— Above which intervened the night.
But above night too, like only the next,
The second of a wondrous sequence,
Reaching in rare and rarer frequence,
Till the heaven of heavens were circumflexed.
Another rainbow rose, a mightier,
Fainter, flusher and flightier,
Rapture dying along its verge.
Oh, whose foot shall I see emerge,
Whose, from the straining topmost dark.
On to the keystone of that are?

VII
This sight was shown me, there and then.
Me, one out of a world of men,
Singed forth, as the chance might hap
To another it, a proper desire.
Where I heard noise and you saw flame,
Some one man knew God called his name.
For me, I think I said, "Appear!
Good were it to be ever here,
If thon wilt, let me build to thee
Service-tabernacles three,
Where, forever in thy presence,
In ecstatic acquiescence,
Far alien from thriftless learning
And ignorance's undiscerning,
I may worship and remain!"
Thus at the show above me, gazing
With upturned eyes, I felt my brain
Glutted with the glory, blazing
Throughout its whole mass, over and under,
Until at length it burst asunder
And out of it bodily there streamed,
The too-nuch glory, as it seemed,
Passing from out me to the ground,
Then palely serpentining round
Into the dark with mazy error.

VIII
All at once I looked up with terror.
He was there,
He himself with his human air,
On the narrow pathway, just before.
I saw the back of him. no more—
He had left the chapel, then, as I.
I forgot all about the sky.
No face: only the sight
Of a sweepy garment, vast and white,
With a hem that I could recognize.
I felt terror, no surprise;
My mind filled with the cataract
At one bound of the mighty fact.

"I remember, he did say
 Doubtless that, to this world's end,
Where two or three should meet and pray,
He would be in the midst, their friend;
Certainly he was there with them!"
And my pulses leaped for joy
Of the golden thought without alloy,
That I saw his very vesture's hem.
Then rushed the blood back, cold and clear,
With a fresh enhancing shiver of fear;
And I hastened, cried out while I pressed
To the salvation of the vest,

"But not so, Lord! It cannot be
That thou, indeed, art leaving me—
Me, that have despised thy friends?
Did my heart make no amends?
Though the love of God—above
His power, diest hear me place his love.
And that was leaving the world for thee.
Therefore thou must not turn from me
As I had chosen the other part!
Folly and pride o'ercame my heart.
Our best is bad, nor hears thy test;
Still, it should be our very best,
I thought it best that thou, the spirit,
Be worshipped in spirit and in truth,
And in beauty, as even we require it—
Not in the forms burlesque, uncouth,
I left but now, as scarcely fitted
For thee: I knew not what I pitied.
But, all I felt there, right or wrong,
What is it to thee, who curest sinning?
Am I not weak as thou art strong?
I have looked to thee from the beginning.
Straight up to thee through all the world
Which, like an idle scroll, lay furred
To nothingness on either side:
And since the time thou wast descried,
Spire of the weak here, so have I
Lived ever, and so faint would die,
Living and dying, thee before!
But if thou leavest me—"

As it carried me after with its motion:
What shall I say?—as a path were hollowed
And a man went weltering through the ocean.
Sucked along in the flying wake
Of the luminous water-snake,
Darkness and cold were cloven, as through
I passed, upborne yet walking too.
And I turned to myself at intervals,—
"So he said, so it befalls.
God who registers the cup
Of more cold water, for his sake
To a disciple rendered up,
Disdains not his own thesis to sake
At the poorest love was ever offered:
And because my heart I proffered,
With true love trembling at the brink,
He suffers me to follow him
Forever, my own way,—dispensed
From seeking to be influenced
By all the less immediate ways.
That earth, in worship manifold,
Adopts to reach, by prayer and praise,
The garment's hem, which, lo, I hold!"
With popes and kings in their porphyry wombs,
All famishing in expectation
Of the main altar's consummation.
For see, for see, the rapturous moment
Approaches, and earth's best endowment
Blends with heaven's; the taper-fires
Pant up, the winding brazen spires
Heave loftier yet the baldachin;
The incense-gaspings, long kept in.
Snapire in clouds; the organ blantly
Holds his breath and grovels latent,
As if God's hushing finger grazed him,
(like Behemoth when he praised him)
At the silver bell's shrill tinkling,
Quick cold drops of terror sprinkling
On the sudden pavement strewn
With faces of the multitude.
Earth breaks up, time drops away,
In flows heaven, with its new day
Of endless life, when He who trod,
Very man and very God.
This earth in weakness, shame and pain,
Dying the death whose signs remain
Up vondon on the accursed tree,—
Shall come again, no more to be
Of captivity the thrall,
But the one God. All in all.
King of kings, Lord of lords.
As His servant John received the words,
"I died, and live forevermore!!

XI
Yet I was left outside the door,
"Why sit I here on the threshold-stone,
Left till He return, alone
Save for the garment's extreme fold
Abandoned still to bless my hold?"
My reason, to my doubt, replied,
As if a book were opened wide,
And at a certain page I traced
Every record undefaced,
Added by successive years,—
The harvesting of these stray cars
Simply gleaned, and in one sheaf
Bound together for belief.
Yes, I said—that he will go
And sit with these in turn. I know.
Their faith's heart beats, though her head swings
 Too giddily to guide her limbs,
Disabl'd by their paisly-stroke
From propping mine. Though Rome's gross yoke
Drops off, no more to be endured,
Her teaching is not so obscured
By errors and perversities,
That no truth shines athwart the lies:
And he, whose eye detects a spark
Even where, to man's, the whole seems dark,
May well see flame where each beholder
Acknowledges the embers shoulder.
But I, a mere man, fear to quit
The clue God gave me as most fit
To guide my footsteps through life's maze.
Because himself discerns all ways
Open to reach him: I, a man
Able to mark where faith began
To swerve aside, till from its summit
Judgment drops her damning plummet.
 Pronouncing such a fatal space
Departed from the founder's base:
He will not bid me enter too,
But rather sit, as now I do,
Awaiting his return outside.
—"Twas thus my reason straight replied
And joyously, I turned, and pressed
The garment's skirt upon my breast,
Until, refresh'd his blessing me,
My heart cried:—"What has been abusing me
That I should wait here lonely and coldly,
Instead of rising, entering boldly,
Baring truth's face, and letting drift
Her veils of hies as they choose to shift?
Do these men praise him? I will raise
My voice up to their point of praise!
I see the error, but above
The scope of error, see the love.
Oh, love of those first Christian days!
Fanned so soon into a blaze
From the spark preserved by the trampled sect,
That the antique sovereign Intellect
Which then sat ruling in the world,
Like a change in dreams, was hurled
From the throne he reigned upon:
You looked up and he was gone,
Gone, his glory of the pen.
Love, with Greece and Rome in ken,
Bade her scribes abhor the trick
Of poetry and rhetoric.
And exult with hearts set free,
In blessed immobility
Scrawled, perchance, on some torn sheet
Leaving Sallust incomplete.
Gone, his pride of sculptor, painter!
Love, while able to acquaint her
While the thousand statues yet
Fresh from chisel, pictures wet
From brush, she saw on every side,
Chose rather with an infant's pride
To frame those portents which impart
Such unction to true Christian Art,
Gone, music too! The air was stirred
By happy wings: Terpander's bird
(That, when the cold came, fled away)
Would tarry not the wintry day.
As more-enduring sculpture must,
Till filthy saints re-buckled the gust
With which they chance'd to get a sight
Of some dear naked Aphrodite
They glanced a thought above the toes of
By breaking zealously her nose off.
Love, surely, from that music's lingering,
Might have filched her organ-fingerling.
Nor chosen rather to set prayings
To hog-grunts, praises to horse-neighings.
Love was the startling thing, the new:
Love was the all-sufficient too:
And seeing that, you see the rest:
As a babe can find its mother's breast
As well in darkness as in light.
Love shut our eyes, and all seemed right.
True, the world's eyes are open now:
Less need for me to disallow
Some few that keep Love's zone unblanked.
Rustic as ever to be suckled,
Lulled by the same old baby-prattle
With intermixture of the rattle,
When she would have them creep, stand steady
Upon their feet, or walk already,
Not to speak of trying to climb,
I will be wise another time,
And not desire a wall between us,
When next I see a church-roof cover
So many species of one genus,
All with foreheads bearingower
Written above the earnest eyes of them;
All with breasts that beat for beauty,
Whether subdued, to the surprise of them,
In noble daring, steadfast duty,
The heroism in passion, or in action,—
Or, lowered for sense’s satisfaction,
To the mere outside of human creatures,
Mere perfect form and faultless features.
What? with all Rome here, whence to levy
Such contributions to their appetite,
With women and men in a gorgeous bevy,
They take, as it were, a padlock, clap it tight.
On their southern eyes, restrained from reading,
On the glories of their ancient reading,
On the beauties of their modern singing,
On the wonders of the builder’s bringing,
On the majesties of Art around them,—
And, all these loves, late struggling incessant,
When faith has at last united and bound them,
They offer up to God for a present?
Why, I will, on the whole, be rather proud of it,—
And, only taking the act in reference
To the other recipients who might have allowed it,
I will rejoice that God had the preference.”

XII
So I summed up my new resolves:
Too much love there can never be.
And where the intellect devolves
Its function on love exclusively.
I, a man who possesses both,
Will accept the provision, nothing loth.
Will feast my love, then depart elsewhere,
That my intellect may find its share.
And ponder, O soul, the while thou departest,
And see thou applaud the great heart of the artist.
Who, examining the capabilities
Of the block of marble he has to fashion
Into a type of thought or passion,—
Not always, using obvious facilities,
Shapes it, as any artist can.
Into a perfect symmetrical man,
Complete from head to foot of the life-size,
Such as old Adam stood in his wife’s eyes,—
But, now and then, bravely aspires to consummate
A Colossus by no means so easy to come at,
And uses the whole of his block for the bust,
Leaving the mind of the public to finish it,
Since cut it ruefully short he must:
On the face alone he expends his devotion,
He rather would not than resolve to diminish it,
—Saying, “Amplaud me for this grand notion
Of what a face may be! As for completing it
In breast and body and limbs, do that, you!”
All hail! I fancy how, happily meeting it,
A trunk and legs would perfect the statue,
Could man carve so as to answer volition.
And how much nobler than petty evils,
Were a hope to find, in my spirit-travels,
Some artist of another ambition,
Who having a block to carve, no bigger,
Has spent his power on the opposite quest,
And believed to begin at the feet was best—
For so may I see, ere I die, the whole figure!

XIII
No sooner said than out in the night!—
My heart beat lighter and more light:
And still, as before, I was walking swift,
With my senses settling fast and steadily,
But my body caught up in the whirl and drift
Of the vesture’s amplitude, still eddying
On, just before me, still to be followed,
As it carried me after with its motion:
What shall I say?—as a path were hollowed,
And a man went waltzing through the ocean,
Sucked along in the flying wake
Of the luminous water-snake.

XIV
Alone! I am left alone once more—
(Save for the garment’s extreme fold
Abandoned still to bless my hold)
Alone, beside the entrance-door
Of a sort of temple—perhaps a college,
—Like nothing I ever saw before
At home in England, to my knowledge.
The tall old quaint irregular town!
It may be . . . though which, I can’t affirm . . .
any
Of the famous middle-age towns of Germany;
And this flight of stairs where I sit down,
is it Halle, Weimar, Cassel, Frankfort,
Or Göttingen, I have to thank for ‘t?
It may be Göttingen,—most likely,
Through the open door I catch obliquely
Glimpses of a lecture-hall;
And not a bad assembly neither.
Ranged decent and symmetrical
On benches, waiting what’s to see there;
Which, holding still by the vesture’s hem,
I also resolve to see with them.
Cautions this time how I suffer to slip
The chance of joining in fellowship
With any that call themselves his friends;
As these folks do, I have a notion.
But hist—a buzzing and emotion!
All settle themselves, the while ascends
By the creaking rail to the lecture-desk,
Step by step, deliberative
Because of his eranium’s over-freight,
Three parts sublime to one grotesque,
If I have proved an accurate guesser.
The hawk-nosed, high-cheekboned Professor
I felt at once as if there ran
A shoot of love from my heart to the man—
That sallow virgin-minded studious
Martyr to mild enthusiasm,
As he uttered a kind of cough-preludions
That woke my sympathetic spasm,
(Beside some spitting that made me sorry)
And stood, surveying his auditory.
With a wan pure look, well-nigh celestial,—
These blue eyes had survived so much!
While, under the foot they could not smutch,
Lay all the fleshly and the bestial.
Over he bowed, and arranged his notes,
Till the auditor's clearing of throats
Was done with, died into a silence;
And, when each glance was upward sent,
Each bearded mouth composed intent,
And a pin might be heard drop half a mile or more.
He pushed back higher his spectacles,
Let the eyes stream out like lamps from cells,
And giving his head of hair—a bale
Of undressed tow, for color and quantity—
One rapid and impatient shake,
(As our own young England accounts a jainty tie)
When about to impart, on mature digestion,
Some thrilling view of the surplice-quotation—
The Professor's grave voice, sweet though hoarse, Broke into his Christmas-Eve discourse.

xv

And he began it by observing
How reason dictated that men
Should rectify the natural swerving,
By a reversion, now and then,
To the well-heads of knowledge, few
And far away, whence rolling grew
The life-stream wide whereat we drink,
Consumed, as we woulds must think,
With waters alien to the source;
To do which, aimed this eve's discourse;
Since, where could be a fitter time
For tracing backward to its prime,
This Christianity, this lake,
This reservoir, whereat we slake,
From one or other bank, our thirst?
So, he proposed inquiring first
Into the various sources whence
This Myth of Christ is derivable;
Demanding from the evidence
(Since plainly no such life was livable)
How these phenomena should class?
Whether 'twere best opine Christ was,
Or never was at all, or whether
He was and was not, both together—
It matters little for the name,
So the idea be left the same.
Only, for practical purpose sake,
"Was it obviously as well to take
The popular story,—understanding
How the magnitude of the time,
And the pean's prejudice, expanding
Fact into fable fit for the clime,
Had, by slow and sure degrees, translated it
Into this myth, this Individual,—
Which when reason had strained and abated it
Of foreign matter, left for residuum.
A Man! — a right true man, however,
Whose work was worth a man's endeavor:
Work, that gave warrant almost sufficient
To his disciples, for rather believing
He was just omnipotent and omniscient.

As it gives to us, for as frankly receiving
His word, their tradition,—which, though it
Meant
Something entirely different
From all that those who only heard it,
In their simplicity thought and averred it,
Had yet a meaning quite as respectable:
For, among other doctrines deflectable,
Was he not surely the first to insist on
The natural sovereignty of our race—
Here the lecturer came to a pausing-place.
And while his cough, like a droghty piston,
Tried to dislodge the husk that grew to him,
I seized the occasion of bidding adieu to him,
The vesture still within my hand.

xvi

I could interpret its command.
This time he would not bid me enter
The exhausted air-bell of the Critic.
Truth's atmosphere may grow mephitic
When Papist struggles with Dissenter, Impugnating its pristine clarity.
—One, by his daily face's vulgarity,
Its must of broken meat and garlic;
—One, by his soul's too-much presuming
To turn the frankincense's fuming
And vapors of the candle starlike
Into the cloud her wings she knows on.
Each, that thus sets the pure air seething,
May poison it for healthy breathing—
But the Critic leaves no air to poison;
Pumps out with ruthless ingenuity
Atom by atom, and leaves you—vacuity.
Thus much of Christ does he reject?
And what retain? His intellect?
What is it I must reverence duly?
Poor intellect for worship, truly,
Which tells me simply what was told
If mere morality, bereft
Of the God in Christ, be all that's left?
Elsewhere by voices manifold:
With this advantage, that the stater
Made nowise the important stumble
Of adding, he, the sage and humble,
Was also one with the Creator.
You urge Christ's followers' simplicity:
But how does shifting blame evade it?
Have wisdom's words no more felicity?
The stumbling-block, his speech—who laid it?
How comes it that for one found able
To sift the truth of it from fable,
Millions believe it to the letter?
Christ's goodness, then— does that fare better?
Strange goodness, which upon the score
Of being goodness, the mere due
Of man to fellow-man, much more
To God — should take another view
Of its possessor's privilege.
And bid him rule his race! You pledge
Your fealty to such rule? What, all—
From heavenly John and Attic Paul,
And that brave weather-battered Peter,
Whose stout faith only stood completer
For buffets, sinning to be parodied,
As, more his hands battered nets, they hardened,—
All, down to you, the man of men,
Professing here at Göttingen,
Compose Christ's flock! They, you and I,
Are sheep of a good man! And why?
The goodness,—how did he acquire it?
Was it self-gained, did God inspire it?
Choose which: then tell me, on what ground
Should its possessor dare propound
His claim to rise over us an inch?
Were goodness all some man's invention,
Who arbitrarily made mention
What we should follow, and whence flinch,—
What qualities might take the style
Of right and wrong,—and had such guessing
Met with as general acquiescing
As graced the alphabet erewhile,
When A got leave an Ox to be,
No Camel (quoth the Jews) like G,—
For thus inventing things and title
Worship were that man's fit requital.
But if the common conscience must
Be ultimately judge, adjust
Its apt name to each quality
Already known,—I would decree
Worship for such mere demonstration
And simple work of nomenclature,
Only the day I praised, not nature,
But Harvey, for the circulation.
I would praise such a Christ, with pride
And joy, that he, as none beside,
Had taught us how to keep the mind
God gave him, as God gave his kind,
Firer than they from fleshly taint:
I would call such a Christ our Saint,
As I declare our Poet, him
Whose insight makes all others dim:
A thousand poets pried at life,
And only one amid the strife
Rose to be Shakespeare: each shall take
His crown, I'd say, for the world's sake—
Though some objected——'Had we seen
The heart and head of each, what screen
Was broken there to give them light,
While in ourselves it shuts the sight,
We should no more admire, perchance,
That those wired truth out at a glance,
Than marvel how the bat discerns
Some pitch-dark caverns fifty turns,
Led by a finer tact, a gift
He boasts, which other birds must shift.
Without, and grope as best they can.'
No, freely I would praise the man,—
Nor one wit more, if he contended
That gift of his from God descended.
Ah friend, what gift of man's does not?
No nearer something, by a jot,
Rise an infinity of nothing;
Then one: take Enclid for your teacher:
Distinguish kinds: do crownings, clothings,
Make that creator which was creature?
Multiply gifts upon man's head,
And what, when all's done, shall be said
But—the more gifted he, we see!
That one's made Christ, this other, Pilate,
And this might be all that has been,—
So what is there to frown or smile at?
What is left for us, save in growth
Of soul, to rise up, far past both,
From the gift looking to the giver,
And from the cistern to the river,
And from the finite to infinity,
And from man's dust to God's divinity?

XVII

Take all in a word: the truth in God's breast
Lies trace for trace upon ours impressed:
Though he is so bright and we so dim,
We are made in his image to witness him:
And were no eye in ear to tell,
Instructed by no inner sense,
The light of heaven from the dark of hell,
That light would want its evidence,—
Though justice, good and truth were still Divine, if, by some demon's will,
Hatred and wrong had been proclaimed
Law through the worlds, and right misnamed.
No mere exposition of morality
Made or in part or in totality,
Should win you to give it worship, therefore:
And, if no better proof you will care for,
—Whom do you count the worst man upon earth?
Be sure, he knows, in his conscience, more
Of what right is, than arrives at birth
In the best man's acts that we bow before:
This last knows better—true, but my fact is,
'T is one thing to know, and another to practice.
And thence I conclude that the real God-function
Is to furnish a motive and injunction
For practising what we know already.
And such an injunction and such a motive
As the God: in Christ, do you waive, and ''heady,
High-minded,' hang your tablet-votive
Outside the fane on a finger-post?
Morality to the uttermost,
Supreme in Christ as we all confess,
Why need we prove would avail no jot
To make him God, if God he were not?
What is the point where himself lays stress?
Does the precept run—'Believe in good,
In justice, truth, now satisfied?
For the first time'?—or, 'Believe in me,
Who lived and died, yet essentially
Am Lord of Life'?—Whoever can take
The same to his heart and for more love's sake
Conceive of the love,—that man obtains
A new truth; no conviction gains
Of an old one only, made intense
By a fresh appeal to his faded sense.

XVIII

Can it be that he stays inside?
Is the vesture left me to commune with?
Could my soul find aught to sing in tune with Even at this lecture, if she tried?
Oh, let me at lowest sympathize
With the lurking drop of blood that lies
In the desiccated brain's white roots
Without throb for Christ's attributes,
As the lecturer makes his special boast!
If love's dead there, it has left a ghost.
Admire we, how from heart to brain
(Though to say so strike the doctors dumb)
One instinct rises and falls again,
Restoring the equilibrium.
And how when the Critic had done his best,
And the pearl of price, at reason's test,
Lay dust and ashes lexicable
On the Professor's lecture-table,—
When we looked for the inference and monition
That our faith, reduced to such condition,
Be swept forthwith to its natural dust-hole,—
He bids us, when we least expect it,
Take back our faith,—if it be not just whole,
Yet a pearl indeed, as his tests affect it,
Which fact pays damage done rewardingly.
So, prize our dust and ashes accordingly!
"Go home and venerate the myth
I thus have experimented with—
This man, continue to adore him
Rather than all who went before him,
And all who ever followed after!"—
Surely for this I may praise you, my brother!
Will you take the praise in tears or laughter?
That some point gained; can I compass another?
Unlearned love was safe from spurning—
Can't we respect your loveless learning?
Let us at least give learning honor!
What laurels had we showered upon her,
Girding her loins up to perturb
Our theory of the Middle Verb;
Or Turk-like brandishing a semicircular
O'er anapests in comic-trimmer;
Or carping the halt and maimed "Ikudes."
While we lounged on at our indebted ease;
Instead of which, a tricksy demon
Sets her at Titus or Philemon!
When ignorance wags his ears of leather
And hates God's word, 'tis altogether;
Nor leaves he his congenial thistles
To go and browse on Paul's Epistles.
—And you, the audience, who might ravage
The world wide, evinably savage,
Nor heed the cry of the retriever,
More than Hery Heine (before his fever),—
I do not tell a lie soarrant
As say my passion's wings are furled up,
And, without plainest heavenly warrant,
I were ready and glad to give the world up—
But still, when you rub brow meticuloas,
And ponder the profit of turning holy
If not for God's, for your own sake solely,
—God forbid I should find you ridiculous!
Deduce from this lecture all that cases you,
Nay, call yourselves, if the calling pleases you,
"Christians,"—abhor the deist's pravity,—
Go on, you shall no more move my gravity
Than, when I see boys ride a cockhorse,
I find it in my heart to embarrass them
By hinting that their stick's a mock horse,
And they really carry what they say carries them.

XIX

So sat I talking with my mind,
I did not long to leave the door
And find a new church, as before.
But rather was quiet and inclined
To prolong and enjoy the gentle resting
From further tracking and trying and testing.
"This tolerance is a genial mood!"
Said I, and a little pause ensued.)
"One trims the bark 'twixt shed and shelf,
And sees, each side, the good effects of it,
A value for religion's self,
A carelessness about the sects of it,
Let me enjoy my own conviction,
Not watch my neighbor's faith with fretfulness,
Still spying there some dereliction
Of truth, perversity, forgetfulness!
Better a mild indifferentism,
Teaching that both our faiths (though duller
His shine through a dull spirit's prism)
Originally had one color!
Better pursue a pilgrimage
Through ancient and through modern times
To many peoples, various climes,
Where I may see saint, savage, sage
Fuse their respective creeds in one
Before the general Father's throne!"

XX

"T was the horrible storm began afresh!
The black night caught me in his mesh,
Whirled me up, and flung me prone,
I was left on the college-step alone.
I looked, and far there, ever fleeting
Far, far away, the reeding gesture,
And looming of the lessening vesture!—
Swept forward from my stupid hand.
While I watched my foolish heart expand
In the lazy glow of benevolence,
O'er the various modes of man's belief,
I sprang up with fear's vehemence.
Needs must there be one way, our chief
Best way of worship: let me strive
To find it, and when found, contrive
My fellows also take their share!
This constitutes my earthly care:
God's is above it and distinct.
For I, a man, with men am linked
And not a brute with brutes; no gain
That I experience, must remain
Unshared: but should my best endeavor
To share it, fail—subsisteth ever
God's care above, and I exult.
That God, by God's own ways occult,
May—doh! I will believe—bring back
All wanderers to a single track.
Meantime, I can but testify
God's care for me—no more, can I—
It is but for myself I know;
The world rolls witnessing around me
Only to leave me as it found me;
Men cry there, but my ear is slow:
Their races flourish or decay
—What boots it; while you lucid way
Loaded with stars divides the vault?
But soon my soul repairs its fault
When, sharpening sense's hebetude,
She turns on my own life! So viewed,
No mere mote's-breath but teems immense
With witnessing of providence:
And wise to me if when I look
Upon that record, the sole book
Unsealed to me, I take no heed
Of any warning that I read!
Have I been sure, this Christmas-Eve,
God's own hand did the rainbow weave,
Whereby the truth from heaven slid
Into my soul?—I cannot bid
The world admitt he stooped to heal
My soul, as if in a thunder-pearl
Where one heard noise, and one saw flame,
I only knew he named my name:
But what is the world to me, for sorrow
Or joy in the heaven, when to-morrow
It drops the remark, with just-turned head,
Then, on again, "That man is dead"?
Yes, but for me — my name called, — drawn
As a conscript's lot from the lap's black yawn,
He has dipt into on a battle-dawn:
Bid out of life by a nod, a glance,
Stumbling, mute-mazed, at nature's chance,
With a rapid finger circled round,
Fixed to the first poor inch of ground
To fight from, where his foot was found;
Whose ear but a minute since lay free
To the wide camp's buzz and gossip —
Summoned, a solitary man,
To end his life where his life began,
From the safe glad rear, to the dreadful van!
Soul of mine, hadst thou caught and held
By the hem of the vesture! —

xxi

And I caught
At the flying robe, and unrepelled
Was lapped again in its folds full-fraught
With warmth and wonder and delight,
God's mercy being infinite.
For scarce had the words escaped my tongue,
When, at a passionate bound, I sprung
Out of the wondrous world of rain,
Into the little chapel again.

xxii

How else was I found there, bolt upright
On my bench, as if I had never left it?
Never hung out on the common at night,
Nor met the storm and wedge-like clift it,
Seen the rare show of Peter's successor,
Or the laboratory of the Professor!
For the Vision, that was true, I wist,
True as that heaven and earth exist.
There sat my friend, the yellow and tall,
With his neck and its wen in the selfsame place;
Yet my nearest neighbor's check showed gall.
She had slid away a contemptuous space;
And the old fat woman, late so placable,
Eyed me with symptoms, hardly mistakable,
Of her milk of kindness turning rancid.
In short, a spectator might have fancied
That I had nodded, betrayed by slumber,
Yet kept my seat, a warning ghastly.
Through the head of the sermon, nine in number,
Woke up now at the tenth and last.
But again, could such disgrace have happened?
Each friend at my elbow had surely mused it;
And, as for the sermon, where did my nap end?
Unless I heard it, could I have judged it?
Could I report as I do at the close?
First, the preacher speaks through his nose:
Second, his gesture is too emphatic:
Thirdly, to waive what's pedagogic,
The subject-matter itself lacks logic:
Fourthly, the English is ungrammatic.
Great news! the preacher is found no Pascal,
Whom, if I pleased, I might to the task call
Of making square to a finite eye
The circle of infinity,
And find so all-but-just-succeeding!
Great news! the sermon proves no reading
Where bee-like in the flowers I bury me,
Like Taylor's, the immortal Jeremy!
And now that I know the very worst of him,
What was it I thought to obtain at first of him?
Ha! Is God mocked, as he asks?
Shall I take on me to change his tasks,
And dare, dispatched to a river-head
For a simple draught of the element,
Neglect the thing for which he sent,
And return with another thing instead?
— Saying, "Because the water found
Welling up from underground,
Is mingled with the taints of earth,
While thou, I know, dost laugh at deaath,
And couldst, at wink or word, convulse
The world with the leap of a river-pulse,
— Therefore I turned from the ooings muddily,
And bring thee a chalice I found, instead:
See the brave veins in the breccia ruddy!
One would suppose that the marble bled,
What matters the water? A hope I have nursed:
The waterless cup will quench my thirst."
— Better have knelt at the poorest stream
That trickles in pain from the straitest rift!
For the less or the more is all God's gift,
Who blocks up or breaks wide the granite-seam,
And here, is there water or not, to drink?
I then, in ignorance and weakness,
Taking God's help, have attained to think
My heart does best to receive in meekness
That mode of worship, as most to his mind,
Where earthly aids being cast behind,
His All in All appears serene
With the thinnest human veil between,
Letting the mystic humps, the seven,
The many motions of his spirit,
Pass, as they list, to earth from heaven.
For the preacher's merit or demerit,
It were to be wished the flaws were fewer
In the earthen vessel, holding treasure
Which lies as safe in a golden ever;
But the main thing is, does it hold good measure?
Heaven soon sets right all other matters! —
Ask, else, these ruins of humanity.
This flesh worn out to rags and tatters,
This soul at struggle with insanity.
Who then take comfort — can I doubt?
— Which an empire gained, were a loss without.
May it be mine! And let us hope
That no worse blessing befall the Pope,
Turned sick at last of today's buffoonery.
Of posturings and petticoatings;
Beside his Bourbon bully's gloatings
In the bloody orgies of drunk poltroonery
Nor may the Professor forego its peace
At Göttingen presently, when, in the dusk
Of his life, if his cough, as I fear, should increase,
Prophesied of by that horrible husk —
When thicker and thicker the darkness fills
The world through his misty spectacles,
And he grogs for something more substantial Than a fable, myth or personification, —
May Christ do for him what no mere man shall,
And stand confessed as the God of salvation!
Meantime, in the still recurring fear
Lost myself, at unawares, be found,
While attacking the choice of my neighbors round.
With none of my own made — I choose here!
The giving out of the hymn reclains me;
I have done: and if any blames me,
Thinking that merely to touch in brevity
The topics I dwell on, were unlawful, —
Or worse, that I trench, with undue levity,
On the bounds of the holy and the awful. —
I praise the heart, and pity the head of him,
And refer myself to Thee, instead of him,
Who head and heart alike discernest,
Looking below light speech we utter.
When frathly spurne and frequent sputter
Prove that the soul's depths boil in earnest!
May truth shine out, stand ever before us!
I put up pencil and join chorus
To Hezibah Tune, without further apology,
The last five verses of the third section
Of the seventeenth hymn of Whitefield's Collection.
To conclude with the doxology.

EASTER-DAY

I

How very hard it is to be
A Christian! Hard for you and me,
— Not the mere task of making real
That duty up to its ideal,
Effecting thus, complete and whole
A purpose of the human soul
For that is always hard to do;
But hard, I mean, for me and you
To realize it, more or less,
With even the moderate success
Which commonly repays our strife.
To carry out the aims of life,
"This aim is greater," you will say,
"And so more arduous every way,
But the importance of their fruits
Still proves to man, in all pursuits,
Proportional encouragement.
Then, what if it be God's intent
That labor to this one result
Should seem unduly difficult?"
Ah, that's a question in the dark
And the sole thing that I remark
Upon the difficulty, this:
We do not see it where it is,
At the beginning of the race:
As we proceed, it shifts its place,
And where we looked for crowns to fall,
We find the tugs to come, — that's all.

II

At first you say, "The whole, or chief
Of difficulties, is belief.
Could I believe once thoroughly,
The rest were simple. What? Am I
An idiot, do you think, — a beast?

Prove to me, only that the least
Command of God is God's indeed,
And what injunction shall I need
To pay obedience? Death so high,
When time must end, eternally.
Begin, — and cannot compute,
Weigh less and gain together, suit
My actions to the balance drawn,
And give my body to be sown
Asunder, hacked in pieces, tied
To horses, stoned, burned, crucified,
Like any martyr of the list?
How gladly! — if I make acquit,
Through the brief minute's fierce annoy,
Of God's eternity of joy."

III

And certainly you name the point
Whereon all turns: for could you joint
This flexible finite life once tight
Into the fixed and infinite,
You, safe inside, would spurn what's out,
With carelessness enough, no doubt —
Would spurn mere life: but when time brings
To their next stage your reasonings,
Your eyes, late wide, begin to wink
Nor see the path so well, I think.

IV

You say, "Faith may be, one agrees,
A touchstone for God's purposes,
Even as ourselves conceive of them.
Could he acquit us or condemn
For holding what no hand can loose,
Rejecting when we can't but choose?
As well award the victor's wreath
To whosoever should take breath
Only each minute while he lived
Grant heaven, because a man contrived
To see its sunlight every day.
He walked forth on the public way.
You must mix some uncertainty
With faith, if you would have faith be.
Why, what but faith, do we abhor
And idolize each other for —
Faith in our evil or our good,
Which is or is not understood
A right by those we love or those
We hate, thence called our friends or foes?
Your mistress saw your spirit's grace,
When, turning from the ugly face,
I found belief in it too hard;
And she and I have our reward.
— Yet here a doubt peeps: well for us
Weak beings, to go using thus
A touchstone for our little ends,
Trying with faith the foes and friends;
— But God, bethink you! I would fain
Conceive of the Creator's reign
As based upon exact law.
Than creatures built by with applause.
In all God's acts — (as Plato cries
He doth) — he should geometrize,
Whence, I desiderate" . . .

V

You would grow as a natural tree,
CHRISTMAS-EVE AND EASTER-DAY

Stand as a rock, soar up like fire,
The world's so perfect and entire,
Quite above faith, so right and fit! Go then, walk up and down in it.
No. That creation's travail, grandest—
Contrive your music from its means,
Without or let or hindrance, friend! That's an old story, and its end
As old—you come back (be sincere) With every question you put here (Here where there once was, and is still,
We think, a living oracle,
Whose answers you stand carping at)
This time flung back unanswered flat,—
Beside, perhaps, as many more
As those that drove you out before,
Now added, where was little need,
Questions impossible, indeed,
To us who sat still, all and each.
Persuaded that our earth had speech,
Of God's, writ down, no matter if
In cursive type or hieroglyph,—
Which one fact freed us from the yoke
Of guessing why He never spoke,
You come back in no better plight
Than when you left us,—am I right?

VI

So, the old process, I conclude,
Goes on, the reasoning's pursued
Further. You own, " 'Tis well aversion,
A scientific faith's absurd,
—Frustrates the very end 't was meant
To serve. So, I would rest content
With an apparent probability,
But, probably, the chance must lie
Clear on one side,—lie all in rough,
So long as there be just enough
To pin my faith in, though it hap
Only at points: from gap to gap
One hangs up a huge curtain so,
Grandly, nor seeks to have it go
Foulless and flat along the wall.
What care I if some interval
Of life less plainly may depend
On God? I'd hang there to the end;
And thus I should not find it hard
To be a Christian and debarred
From trailing on the earth, till furled
Away by death,—Renounce the world!
Were that a mighty hardship? Plan
A pleasant life, and straight some man
Besides you, with, if he thought fit,
Abundant means to compass it,
Shall turn deliberate aside
To try and live as, if you tried
You clearly might, yet most despise.
One friend of mine wears out his eyes,
Slighting the stupid joys of sense.
In patient hope that, ten years hence,
'Somewhat completer,' he may say,
'My list of cedars came!'—While just the other who most laughs
At him, above all epitaphs
Aspires to have his tomb describe
Himself as sole among the tribe
Of snuff-box-fanciers, who possessed
A Grignon with the Regent's crest.

So that, subdued, as you want,
Whatever stands predominant
Among my earthly appetites
For tastes and smells and sounds and sights,
I shall be done with that at length.
To gain a palm-branch and a throne,
Which fifty people undertake
To do, and gladly, for the sake
Of giving a Semitic guess,
Or playing pawns at blindfold chess."

Good; and the next thing is,—look round For evidence enough! 'Tis found,
No doubt: as is your sort of mind,
So is your sort of search: you'll find
What you desire, and that is to be
A Christian. What says history?
How comforting a point it were
To find some mummy-scrub declare
There lived a Moses! Better still,
Prove Jonah's whale translatable
Into some quicksand of the seas,
Isle, cavern, rock, or what you please,
That faith might flap her wings and crow
From such an eminence! Or, no—
The human heart's best, you prefer
Making that prove the minister
To truth; you probe its wants and needs.
And hopes and fears, then try what creeds
Meet these most aptly,—resolve
That faith plucks such substantial fruit
Wherever these two correspond,
She little needs to look beyond
And puzzle out who Orpheus was,
Or Dionysus Zagrius.
You'll find sufficient, as I say,
The mind of man is that arrow way;
You wanted to believe; your pains
Are crowned—you do; and what remains?
"Renounce the world!"—Ah, were it done
By merely cutting one by one
Your limbs off, with your wise head last,
How easy were it!—how soon past,
If once in the believing mood!
"Such is man's usual gratitude,
Such thanks to God do we return,
For not exacting that we should
A single gift of life, forget
One real gain—only taste them so
With gravity and temperance,
That those mild virtues may enhance
Such pleasures, rather than abstract—
Last spice of which will be the fact
Of love discerned in every gift;
While, when the scene of life shall shift,
And the gay heart be taught to ache,
As sorrows and privations take
The place of joy,—the thing that seems
More misery, under human schemes,
Become regarded by the light—
Of love, as very near or quite
As good a gift as joy before.
So plain is it that, all the more
A dispensation's merciful,
More pettishly we try and call
Briers, thistles, from our private plot,
To near God's ground where thorns are not!"
From this, why not escape some sins
By such a method?

Then begins
To the old point revulsion new—
For 't is just this I bring you to—
If after all we should mistake
And so renounce life for the sake
Of death and nothing else? You hear
Each friend we jeered at, send the jeer
Back to ourselves with good effect—
There were my beetles to collect!
My box—a trifle, I confess.
But here I hold it, nevertheless!"
Poor idiots, let us pluck up heart
And answer we, the better part
Have chosen, though 't were only hope—
Nor envy moles like you that grope
A^mid your veritable muck.
More than the grasshoppers would truck,
For yours, their passionate life away,
That spends itself in leaps all day
To reach the sun, you want the eyes
To see, as they the wings to rise
And match the noble hearts of them!
Thus the contemner we contemn,—
And, when doubt strikes us, thus we ward
Its stroke off, caught upon our guard,
—Not struck enough to overturn
Our faith, but shake it—make us learn
What I began with, and, I wis,
End, having proved,—how hard it is
To be a Christian!

"Proved, or not,
How'er you wis, small thanks, I wot.
You get of mine, for taking pains
To make it hard to me. Who gains
By that, I wonder? Here I live
In trusting ease; and here you drive
At causing me to lose what most Yourself would mourn for had you lost!"

But, do you see, my friend, that thus
You leave Saint Paul for Eschylus?
—Who made his Titan's arch-device
The giving men blind hopes to spice
The meal of life with, else devour'd
In bitter haste, while lo, death loured
Before them at the platter's edge!
If faith should be, as I allege,
Quite other than a condiment
To heighten flavors with, or meant—
(Like that brave curry of his Grace)
To take at need the victuals' place?
If, having dined, you would digest
Besides, and turning to your rest
Should find instead . . .

Now, you shall see
And judge if a mere folly
Pricks on my speaking! I resolve
To utter—yes, it shall devolve
On you to hear as solemn, strange
And dread a thing as in the range
CHRISTMAS-EVE AND EASTER-DAY

Of facts, or fancies, if God will—
E'er happened to our kind! I still Stand in the cloud and, while it wraps
My face, oueht not to speak; perhaps;
Seeing that if I carry through
My purpose, if my words in you
Find a live actual listener.
My story, reason must aver
False after all—the happy chance!
While, if each human countenance
I meet in London day by day,
Be what I fear,—my warnings fray
No one, and no one they convert,
And no one helps me to assert
How hard it is to really be
A Christian, and in vacancy
I pour this story!

XIV

I commence
By trying to inform you, whence
It comes that every Easter-night
As now, I sit up, watch, till light,
Upon those chimney-stacks and roofs,
Give, through my window-pane, gray proofs
That Easter-Day is breaking slow.
On such a night, three years ago,
It chanced that I had cause to cross
The common, where the chapel was,
Our friend spoke of, the other day—
You've not forgotten, I dare say.
I fell to musing of the time
So close, the blessed matin-prime
All hearts leap up at, in some guise—
One could not well do otherwise.
Insensibly my thoughts were bent
Toward the main point; I overwent
Much the same ground of reasoning
As you and I just now. One thing
Remained, however—one that tasked
My soul to answer; and I asked,
Fairly and frankly, what might be
That History, that Faith, to me
—Me there—not me in some domain
Built up and peopled by my brain,
Weighing its merits as one weighs Mere theories for blame or praise,
—The kingcraft of the Lucemons,
Or Forster's scheme, its pros and cons,—
But my faith there, or none at all.
"How were my case, now, did I fall
Dead here, this minute—should I lie
Faithful or faithless?" Note that I
Inclined thus ever!—little prone
For instance, when I lay alone
In childhood, to go calm to sleep
And leave a closet where might keep
His watch perdue some murderer
Waiting till twelve o'clock to stir,
As good authentic legends tell:
"He might—but how improbable!
How little likely to deserve
The pains and trial to the nerve
Of thrusting head into the dark!"
—Urged my old nurse, and bade me mark
Beside, that, should the dreadful scout
Really lie hid there, and leap out
At first turn of the rusty key,

Mine were small gain that she could see,
Killed not in bed but on the floor,
And losing one night's sleep the more,
Told you, I would deny it. Hurry burst
The door ope, know my fate at first.
This time, indeed, the closet penned
No such assassin: but a friend
Rather, peeped out to guard me, fit
For counsel, Common Sense, to wit,
Who said a good deal that might pass,—
Heartening, impartial too, it was,
Judge else:—"For, soberly now,—who Should be a Christian if not you?"
(Hear how he smoothed me down.) "One takes
A whole life, sees what course it makes
Mainly, and not by fits and starts—
In spite of stoppage which imparts
Fresh value to the general speed.
A life, with none, would fly indeed:
Your progressing is slower—right!
We deal with progress and not flight.
Through baffling senses passionate,
Fancies as restless,—with a freight
Of knowledge cumbersome enough
To sink your ship when waves grow rough,
Though meant for ballast in the hold,—
I find, mid dangers manifold
The good bark answers to the helm
Where faith sits, easier to o'erwhelm
Than some stout peasant's heavenly guide,
Whose hard head could not, if it tried,
Conceive a doubt, nor understand
How senses horner than his hand
Should 'tice the Christian off his guard.
More happy! But shall we award
Less honor to the hull which, dogged
By storms, a mere wreck, waterlogged,
Masts by the board, her bulwarks gone
And stanchions going, yet bears on,—
Than to mere lifeboats, built to save,
And triumph o'er the breaking wave?"
Make perfect your good ship as these,
And what were her performances!"
I added—"Would the ship reach home?
I wish indeed 'God's kingdom come'—
The day when I shall see appear
His bidding, as my duty, clear
From doubt! And it shall dawn, that day,
Some future season's Easter-day
Prove, not impossibly, the time—
Yes, that were striking—fates would chime
So aptly! Easter-morn, to bring
The Judgment!—deeper in the spring
Than now, however, when there's snow
Capping the hills; for earth must show
All signs of meaning to pursue
Her tasks as she was wont to do
—the skylark, taken by surprise
As we ourselves, shall recognize Sudden the end. For suddenly
It comes; the dreadfulness must be
In that: all warrants the belief—
'At night it cometh like a thief.'
I fancy why the trumpet blows;
—Plainly, to wake one. From repose
We shall start up, at last awake
From life, that insane dream we take
For waking now, because it seems,
And as, when now we wake from dreams,
We laugh, while we recall them, 'Fool,
To let the chance slip, linger cool!
When such adventure offered! Just
A bridge to cross, a dwarf to thrust
Aside, a wicked naug to stab —
And, lo ye, I had kissed Queen Mab!'
So shall we marvel why we grudged
Our labor here, and idly judged
Of heaven, we might have gained, but lose!
Lost? 'Talk of loss, and I refuse
To plead at all! You speak no worse
Nor better than my ancient nurse
When she would tell me in my youth
I well deserved that shapes uncoth
Frighted and teased me in my sleep:
Why could I not in memory keep
Her precept for the evil's cure?
Pinch your own arm, boy, and be sure You'll wake forthwith!";

xv

And as I said
This nonsense, throwing back my head
With light compleancout laugh, I found
Suddenly all the midnight round
One fire. The dome of heaven had stood
As made up of a multitude
Of handbreadth cloudlets, one vast rack
Of ripples infinite and black,
From sky to sky. Sudden there went,
Like horror and astonishment,
A fierce vindicative scribble of red
Quick flame across, as if one said
'The angry scribe of Judgment: ' There
Burn it!" And straight I was aware
That the whole ribwork round, minute
Cloud touching cloud beyond compute,
Was tinted, each with its own spot
Of burning at the core, till clot
Jammed against clot, and spilt its fire
Over all heaven, which 'gan suspire
As famed to measure equable, —
Just so great confagations kill
Night overhead, and rise and sink,
Reflected. Now the fire would shrink
And wither off the blasted face
Of heaven, and I distrinct might trace
The sharp black ridgy outlines left
Unburned like network — then, each cleft
The fire had been sucked back into,
Regorged, and out it surging flew
Furiously, and night withered inflamed,
Till, tolerating to be tamed
No longer, certain rays world-wide
Shot downwardly. On every side
Caught past escape, the earth was lit ;
As if a dragon's nostril split
And all his famished ire overflowed;
Then, as he winced at his lord's gaud,
Back he inhaled: whereas I found
The clouds into vast pillars bound,
Based on the corners of the earth,
Propping the skies at top: a dearth
Of fire i' the violet intervals,
Leaving exposed the utmost walls
Of time, about to tumble in
And end the world.

xvi

I felt begin
The Judgment-Day: to retrocede
Was too late now. "In very deed,"
(I uttered to myself) "that Day!"
The intuition burned away
All darkness from my spirit too:
There, stood I, found and fixed. I knew,
Choosing the world. The choice was made;
And naked and disguiseless stayed,
And unevadable, the fact.
And my brain held all the same compact
Its senses, nor my heart declined
Its office; rather, both combined
To help me in this juncture. I
Lost not a second, — agony
Gave boldness: since my life had end
And my choice with it — best defend,
Applaud both! I resolved to say,
"So was I framed by thee, such way
I put to use thy senses here!
It was so beautiful, so near,
Thy world, — what could I then but choose
My part there? Nor did I refuse
To look above the transient boon
Of time; but it was hard so soon
As in a short life, to give up
Such beauty: I could put the cup,
Undrained of half its fulness, by;
But, to renounce it utterly,
That was too hard! Nor did the cry
Which bade renounce it, touch my brain
Authentically deep and plain
Enough to make my lips let go.
But thou, who knowest all, dost know
Whether I was not, life's brief while,
Evaehoring to reconcile
 Those lips (too tardily, alas!)
To letting the dear remnant pass,
One day, — some drops of earthly good
Untasted! Is it for this mood,
That thou, whose earth delights so well,
Hast made its complement a hell?"

xvii

A final belch of fire like blood,
Overbroke all heaven in one flood
Of doom. Then fire was sky, and sky
Fire, and both, one brief ecstasy,
Then ashes. But I heard no noise
(Whatever was) because a voice
Beside me spoke thus, "Life is done,
Time ends, Eternity's begun,
And thou art judged forevermore."

xviii

I looked up; all seemed as before;
Of that cloud-Tophet overhead
No trace was left: I saw instead
The common round me, and the sky
Above, stretched-drear and emptily
Of life. 'T was the last watch of night,
Except what brings the morning quite;
When the armed angel, conscience-clear,
His task nigh done, leans o'er his spear
And gazes on the earth he guards,
Safe one night more through all its wards,
Till God relieve him at his post.

"A dream — a waking dream at most!"
(I spoke out quick, that I might shake
The horrid nightmare off, and wake.)

"The world gone, yet the world is here?
Are not all things as they appear?
Is Judgment past for me alone?
— And where had place the great white throne?
The rising of the quick and dead?
Where stood they, small and great? Who read
The sentence from the opened book?"
So, by degrees, the blood forsook
My heart, and let it beat afresh;
I knew I should break through the mesh
Of horror, and breathe presently:
When, lo, again, the voice by me!

XIX

I saw ... O brother, 'mid far sands
The palm-tree-cinctured city stands;
Bright-white beneath, as heaven, bright-blue,
Leans o'er it, while the years pursue
Their course, mable to abate
Its paradisal laugh at fate!
One morn, the Arab staggered blind
Or a new tract of death, calcined
To ashes, silence, nothingness,
—
And strives, with dizzy wits, to guess
Whence fell the blow. What if, 'twixt skies
And prostrate earth, he should surprise
The imaged vapor, head to foot,
Surveying, motionless and mute,
Its work, ere, in a whirlwind rapt
It vanish up again? — So hapt
My chance. He stood there. Like the smoke
Pillared o'er Sodom, when day broke, —
I saw him. One magnific pall
Mantled in massive fold and fall
His head, and coiled in snaky swathes
About his feet; night's black, that bathes
All else, broke, grizzled with despair,
Against the soul of blackness there.
A gesture told the mood within —
That wrapped right hand which based the chin,
That intense meditation fixed
On his procedure, pity mixed
With the fulfilment of decree.
Motionless, thus, he spoke to me,
Who fell before his feet, a mass,
No man now.

XX

"All is come to pass.
Such shows are over for each soul
They had respect to. In the roll
Of Judgment which convinced mankind
Of sin, stood many, bold and blind,
Terror must burn the truth into:
Their fate for them! — thou hast to do
With absolute omnipotence,
Able its judgments to dispense
To the whole race, as every one
Were its sole object. Judgment done,
God is, thou art, — the rest is hurled
To nothingness for thee. This world,
This finite life, thou hast preferred,
Disbelief of God's plain word,

To heaven and to infinity.
Here the probation was for thee,
To show thy soul the earthly mixed
With heavenly, it must choose betwixt.
The earthly joys by the world is here —
A taint, in each, distinct as well;
The heavenly lifted, faint and rare,
Above them, but as truly were
Taintless, so, in their nature, best.
Thy choice was earth: thou didst attest
"I was fitter spirit should subserve
The flesh, than flesh refine to nerve
Beneath the spirit's play. Advance
No claim to their inheritance
Who chose the spirit's fugitive
Brief gleams, and yearned, 'This were to live
Indeed, if rays, completely pure
From flesh that dulls them, could endure,—
Not shoot in meteor-light athwart
Our earth, to show how cold and swart
It lies beneath their fire, but stand
As stars do, destined to expand,
Prove veritable worlds, our home!'
 Thou saidst, — 'Let spirit star the dome
Of sky, that flesh may miss no peak,
No nook of earth, — I shall not seek
Its service further! ' — Thou art shut
Out of the heaven of spirit; glut
Thy sense upon the world: 't is thine
Forever — take it!"

XXI

"How? Is mine,
The world?" (I cried, while my soul broke
Out in a transport). " Hast thou spoke
Plainly in that? Earth's exquisite Treasuries of wonder and delight
For me?"

XXII

The austere voice returned, —
"So soon made happy? Hadst thou learned
What God accounteth happiness,
Thou wouldst not find it hard to guess
What hell may be his punishment
For those who doubt if God invent
Better than they. Let such men rest
Content with what they judged the best.
Let the unjust usurp at will:
The filthy shall be filthy still:
Miser, there waits the gold for thee!
Hater, indulge thine enmity!
And thou, whose heaven self-ordained
Was, to enjoy earth unrestrained,
Do it! Take all the ancient show!
The woods shall wave, the rivers flow,
And men apparently pursue
Their works, as they were wont to do,
While living in probation yet.
I promise not thou shalt forget
The past, now gone to its account;
But leave thee with the old amount
Of faculties, nor less nor more,
Unvisited, as heretofore,
By God's free spirit, that makes an end.
So, once more, take thy world! Expand
Eternity upon its shows
Flung thee as freely as one rose
Out of a summer's oubience.
Over the Eden-barrier whence
Thou art excluded. Knock in vain!"

XXIII
I sat up. All was still again,
I breathed free: to my heart, back fled
The warmth. "But, all the world!" — I said,
I stooped and picked a leaf of fern,
And recollected I might learn
From books, how many myriad sorts
Of fern exist, to trust reports,
Each as distinct and beautiful
As this, the very first I call.
Think, from the first leaf to the last!
Conceive, then, earth's resources! Vast Exhaustless beauty, endless change—
Of wonder! And this foot shall range
Alps, Andes,—and this eye devour
The bee-bird and the aloe-flower?

XXIV
Then the voice: "Welcome so to rate
The arras-folds that variate
The earth. God's antechamber, well!
The wise, who waited there, could tell
By these, what royalties in store
Lay one step past the entrance-door.
For whom, was reckoned, not too much,
This life's munificence? For such
As thou,—a race, wheresof scarce one
Was able, in a million,
To feel that any marvel lay
In objects round his feet all day;
Scarce one, in many millions more,
Willing, if able, to explore
The secret, minuter charm!
—Brave souls, a fern-leaf could disarm
Of power to cope with God's intent,—
Or scared if the south firmament
With north-fire did its wings reflect!
All partial beauty was a pledge
Of beauty in its plenitude:
But since the pledge sufficed thy mood,
Retain it! plenitude be theirs
Who looked above!"

XXV
Though sharp despair
Shot through me, I held up, bore on,
"What matter though my trust were gone
From natural things? Henceforth my part
Be less with nature than with art!
For art supplants, gives mainly worth
To nature; 'tis man stamps the earth —
And I will seek his impress, seek
The statuary of the Greek
Italy's painting — there my choice
Shall fix!"

XXVI
"Obtain it!" said the voice,
"The one form with its single act,
Which sculptors labored to abstract,
The one face, painters tried to draw,
With its one look, from thongs they saw.
And that perfection in their soul,
These only hinted at? The whole,
They were but parts of? What each laid
His claim to glory on? —afraid
His fellow-men should give him rank
By mere tentative which he shrank
Smitten at heart from, all the more,
That gazers pressed in to adore!
'Shall I be judged by only these?
If such his soul's capacities,
Even while he trod the earth, — think, now,
What pomp in Buonarroti's brow,
With its new palace-brain where dwells
Superb the soul, unvexed by cells
That crumbled with the transient clay!
What visions will his right hand's sway
Still turn to forms, as still they burst
Upon him? How will he quench thirst,
Titanically infantine,
Laid at the breast of the Divine?
Doth it confound thee, — this first page
Emblazoning man's heritage?
Can this alone absorb thy sight,
As pages were not infinite,
Like the omnipotence which tasks
Itself to furnish all that asks
The soul it means to satiate?
What was the world, the starry state
Of the broad skies, — what, all displays
Of power and beauty internixed,
Which now thy soul is chained betwixt,—
What else than needful furniture
For life's first stage? God's work, be sure,
No more spreads wasted, than falls scant!
He filled, did not exceed, man's want
Of beauty in this life. But through Life pieces, — and what has earth to do,
Its utmost beauty's appanage,
With the requirement of next stage?
Did God pronounce earth 'very good'?
Needs must it be, while understood
For man's preparatory state;
Naught here to heighten nor abate;
Transfer the same completeness here,
To serve a new state's use, — and dear
Deficiency gapes every side!
The good, tried once, were bad, tried.
See the enveloping, rocky niche,
Sufficient for the sleep in which
The lizard breathes for ages safe:
Split the mould — and as light would chafe
The creature's new world-widened sense,
Dazzled to death at evid-nee
Of all the sounds and sights that broke
Immercens at the chisel's stroke, —
So, in God's eye, the earth's first stuff
Was, neither more nor less, enough
To house man's soul, man's need fulfil.
Man reckoned it immeasurable?
So thinks the lizard of his vault!
Could God be taken in default.
Short of contrivances, by you, —
Or reached, ere ready to pursue
His progress through eternity?
That chambered rock, the lizard's world,
Your easy mallet's blow has hurled
To nothingness forever; — so,
Has God abolished at a blow
This world, wherein his saints were pent, —
Who, though found grateful and content,
With the provision there, as thou,
Yet knew he would not disallow
Their spirit's hunger, felt as well,—
Unsated,—not unsatiable,
As paradise gives proof. Deride
Their choice now; thou who sit'st outside!''

I cried in anguish: "Mind, the mind,
So miserably cast behind,
To gain what had been wisely lost!
Oh, let me strive to make the most
Of the poor stinted soul, I nipped.
Of budding wings, else now equipped
For voyage from summer isle to isle!
And though she needs must reconcile
Ambition to the life on ground,
Still, I can profit by late found
But precious knowledge. Mind is best—I
Will seize mind, forget the rest,
And try how far my tethered strength
May crawl in this poor breadth and length.
Let me, since I can fly no more,
At least spin dervish-like about (Till giddy rapture almost doubt
I fly) through circling sciences,
Philosophies and histories!
Should the whirl slacken there, then verse,
Fining to music, shall asperse
Fresh and fresh fire-dew, till I strain
Intoxicate, half-break my chain!
Not joyless, though more favored feet
Stand calm, where I want wings to beat
The floor. At least earth's bond is broke!"

Then (sickening even while I spoke):
"Let me alone! No answer, pray,
To this! I know what thou wilt say!
All still is earth's,—to know, as much
As its truths, we must if we touch
With sense, or apprehend in soul,
What matter? I have reached the goal—
Wherefore does knowledge serve!'' will burn
My eyes, too sure, at every turn!
I cannot look back now, nor stake
Bliss on the race, for running's sake.
The goal's a ruin like the rest!''
"And so much worse: thy latter quest,
(Added the voice,)" that even on earth—
Whenever, in man's soul, had birth
Those intuitions, grasps of guess,
Which pull the more into the less,
Making the finite comprehend
Infinity,—the bard would spend
Such praise alone, upon his craft,
As, when wind-lyres obey the waft,
Goes to the craftsman who arranged
The seven strings, changed them and rechanged—
Knowing it was the South that harped.
He felt his song, in singing, warped;
Distinguished his and God's part: whence
A world of spirit as of sense
Was plain to him, yet not too plain,
Which he could traverse, not remain
A guest in:— else were permanent
Heaven on the earth its gleams were meant
To sting with hunger for full light,—
Made visible in verse, despite
The veiling weakness,—truth by means
Of fable, showing while it screens,—
Since highest truth, man e'er supplied,
Was ever fable on outside.
Such gleams made bright the earth an age;
Now the whole sun's his heritage!
Take up thy world, it is allowed,
Thou who hast entered in the cloud!"

Then I—"Behold, my spirit bleeds,
Catches no more at broken reeds,—
But lies flower those reeds above:
I let the world go, and take love!
Love survives in me, albeit those
I love be henceforth masks and shows,
Not living man and women: still
I mind how love repaired all ill,
Cured wrong, soothed grief, made earth amends
With parents, brothers, children, friends!
Some semblance of a woman yet
With eyes to help me to forget,
Shall look on me; and I will match
Departed love with love, attach
Old memories to new dreams, nor scorn
The poorest of the grains of corn
I save from shipwreck on this isle,
Trusting its barrenness may smile
With happy foodful green one day,
More precious for the pains. I pray,—
Leave to love, only!"

At the word,
The form, I looked to have been stirred
With pity and approval, rose
O'er me, as when the headsman throws
Axe over shoulder to make end—
I fell prone, letting him expend
His wrath, while thus the inflicting voice
Smote me. "Is this thy final choice?
Love is the best? 'T is somewhat late!
And all thou dost enumerate
Of power and beauty in the world,
The mightiness of love was curled
Inextricably round about,
Love lay within it and without,
To clasp thee,—but in vain! Thy soul
Still shrunk from him who made the whole,
Still set deliberate aside
His love!—Now take love! Well betide
Thy tardy conscience! Haste to take
The show of love for the name's sake,
Remembering every moment who,
Beside creating thee unto
These ends, and these for thee, was said
To undergo death in thy stead
In flesh like thine: so ran the tale.
What doubt in thee could countervail
Belief in it? Upon the ground
'That in the story had been found
Too much love! How could God love so?'
He who in all his works below
Adapted to the needs of man,
Made love the basis of the plan,—
Did love, as was demonstrated:
While man, who was so fit instead
To hate, as every day gave proof,—
Man thought man, for his kind’s behoof,
Both could and did invent that scheme
Of perfect love; ’twould well be seen
Cain’s nature thou wast wont to praise,
Not tally with God’s usual ways!"

And I cowered deprecatingly—
‘Thou Love of God!’ Or let me die,
Or grant what shall seem heaven almost!
Let me not know that all is lost,
Though lost it be—leave me not tied
To this despair, this corpse-like bride!
Let that old life seem mine—no more—
With limitation as before.
With darkness, hunger, toil, distress:
Be all the earth a wilderness!
Only let me go on, go on,
Still hoping ever and anon
To reach one eve the Better Land!"

Then did the form expand, expand—
I knew him through the dread disguise
As the whole God within his eyes
Embraced me.

When I lived again,
The day was breaking,—the gray plain
I rose from, silvered thick with dew,

Was this a vision? False or true?
Since then, three varied years are spent,
And commonly my mind is bent
To think it was a dream,—be sure
A mere dream and distemper—
The last day’s watching: then the night,—
The shock of that strange Northern Light

Set my head swimming, bred in me
A dream. And so I live, you see,
Go through the world, try, prove, reject,
Prefer, still struggling to effect
My warfare; happy that I can
Be crossed and thwarted as a man,
Not left in God’s contempt apart,
With ghastly smooth life, dead at heart,
Tame in earth’s puddock as her prize.
Thank God, she still each method tries
To catch me, who may yet escape,
She knows,—the fiend in angel’s shape!
Thank God, no paradise stands barred
To entry, and I find it hard
To be a Christian, as I said!
Still ever now and then my head
Raised glad, sinks mournful—all grows drear
Spite of the sunshine, while I fear
And think, “How dreadful to be grudged
No ease henceforth, as one that’s judged,
Condemned to earth forever, shut
From heaven!”

But Easter-Day breaks! But Christ rises! Mercy every way
Is infinite,—and who can say?

MEN AND WOMEN

London and Florence, 184-185—

In making his final distribution of poems
Browning gave the above title and dates to the thirteen poems which follow, but the title was originally given by him to two volumes pub-ished in 1855. The other poems are dispersed among the several groups already named, with the exception of In a Balcony, which appeared by itself.

The six-foot Swiss tube, braced about with bark.
Which helps the hunter’s voice from Alp to Alp—
Exchange, our harp for that,—who hinders
you?

But here’s your fault; grown men want thought, you think;
Thought’s what they mean by verse, and seek in verse;
Boys seek for images and melody,
Men must have reason—so, you aim at men.
Quite otherwise! Objects throng our youth,
’tis true;
We see and hear and do not wonder much:
If you could tell us what they mean, indeed!
As German Boehme never cared for plants
Until it happed, a-walking in the fields,
He noticed all at once that plants could speak,
Nay, turned with loosened tongue to talk with
him.
That day the daisy had an eye indeed—
Collaborated with the cowslip on such themes!
We find them extant yet in Jacob's prose;
But by the time youth slips a stage or two While reading prose in that tough book he wrote
(Collating and emending the same
And settling on the sense most to our mind,
We shut the clasps and find life's summer past.
Then, who helps more, pray, to repair our loss
Another Boehme with a tougher book
And subtler meanings of what roses say,—
Or some stout Mage like him of Halberstadt,
John, who made things Boehme wrote thoughts about?
He with a "look you!" vents a brace of rhymes,
And in there breaks the sudden rose herself.
Over us, under, round us every side,
Nay, in and out the tables and the chairs
And musty volumes, Boehme's book and all,—
Buries us with a glory, young once more,
Pouring heaven into this shut house of life.

So come, the harp back to your heart again!
You are a poet, though your poem's naught.
The best of all you showed before, believe.
Was your own boy-face o'er the finer chords
Bent, following the cherub at the top
That points to God with his paired half-moon wings.

HOW IT STRIKES A CONTEMPORARY

I only knew one poet in my life:
And this, or something like it, was his way.

You saw go up and down Valladolid,
A man of mark, to know next time you saw
His very serviceable suit of black
Was courtly once and conscientious still,
And many might have worn it, though none
did:
The cloak, that somewhat shone and showed the threads,
Had purpose, and the ruff, significance.
He walked and tapped the pavement with his cane,
Scenting the world, looking it full in face.
An old dog, bald and blindish, at his heels.
They turned up, now, the alley by the church,
That leads nowhither; now, they breathed
themselves
On the main promenade just at the wrong time:
You'd come upon his scrutinizing hat,
Making a peaked shade blacker than itself
Against the single window spared some house
Intact yet with its mouldered Moorish work,
Or else surprise the ferrel of his stick
Trying the mortar's temper 'tween the chinks
Of some new shop a-building, French and fine.

He stood and watched the cobbler at his trade,
The man who slices lemons into drink,
The coffee-roaster's brazier, and the boys
That volunteer to help him turn his winch.
He glanced o'er books on stalls with half an
eye,
And fly-leaf ballads on the vendor's string,
And broad-edge hold-print posters by the wall.
He took such cognizance of men and things,
If any beat a horse, you felt he saw;
If any cursed a woman, he took note;
Yet stared at nobody,—you stared at him,
And found, less to your pleasure than surprise,
He seemed to know you and expect as much.
So, next time that a neighbor's tongue was loosed,
It marked the shameful and notorious fact,
We had among us, not so much a spy,
As a recording chief-inquisitor.
The town's true master if the town but knew!
We merely kept a governor for form,
While this man walked about and took account
Of all thought, said and acted, then went home,
And wrote it fully to our Lord the King
Who has an itch to know things, he knows why,
And reads them in his bedroom of a night.
Oh, you might smile! there wanted not a touch,
A tag of . . . well, it was not wholly easy
As back into your mind the man's look came.
Stricken in years a little,—such a brow
His eyes had to live under!—clear as flint
On either side the formidable nose
Curved, cut and colored like an eagle's claw.
Had he to do with A's surprising fate?
When altogether old B disappeared
And young C get his mistress,—was't our
friend,
His letter to the King, that did it all?
What paid the bloodless man for so much pains?
Our Lord the King has favorites manifold,
And shifts his ministry some once a month;
Our city gets new governors at whiles,—
But never word or sign, that I could hear,
Notified to this man about the streets
The King's approval of those letters commed
The last thing duly at the dead of night.
Did the man love his office? Frowned our
Lord,
Exhorting when none heard—"Beseech me
not!"
Too far above my people,—beneath me!
I set the watch,—how should the people know?
Forget them, keep me all the more in mind!
Was some such understanding 'twixt the two?

I found no truth in one report at least—
That if you tracked him to his home, down lunes
Beyond the Jewry, and as clean to pace,
You found he ate his supper in a room
Blazing with lights, four Titans on the wall.
And twenty naked girls to change his plate!
Poor man, he lived another kind of life.
In that new stuccoed third house by the bridge,
Fresh-painted, rather smart than otherwise!
The whole street might o'erlook him as he sat
Leg crossing leg, one foot on the dog's back,
Playing a decent cabbage with his maid
(Daem thy, you're sure her name was o'er the cheese.
And fruit, three red halves of starved winter-
Or treat of radishes in April. Nine,
Ten, struck the church clock, straight to bed went he.

My father, like the man of sense he was,
Would point him out to me a dozen times;
"Set—S't," he'd whisper, "the Corregador!"
I had been used to think that personage
Was one with lacquered breeches, lustrous belt.
And feathers like a forest in his hat,
Who blew a trumpet and proclaimed the news,
Announced the bull-fights, gave each church
its turn,
And memorized the miracle in vogue!
He had a great observance from us boys;
We were in error; that was not the man.

I'd like now, yet had haply been afraid.
To have just looked, when this man came to die,
And seen who lined the clean gay garret-sides
And stood about the neat low trundle-bed.
With the heavenly manner of relieving guard,
Here had been, mark, the general-in-chief,
Through a whole campaign of the world's life and death,
Doing the King's work all the dim day long.
In his old coat and up to knees in mud.
Smoked like a herring, dined on a crust,—
And, now the day was won, relieved at once!
No further show or need for that old coat.
You are sure, for one thing! Bless us, all the while How sprucely we are dressed out, you and I! A second, and the angels after that.
Well, I could never write a verse, — could you?
Let 's to the Prado and make the most of time.

ARTEMIS PROLOGIZES

Upon the first proof of this poem Browning wrote: "I had better say perhaps that the above is nearly all retained of a tragedy I composed much against my endeavor, while in bed with a fever two years ago — it went farther into the story of Hippolytus and Aricia; but when I got well, putting only thus much down at once, I soon forgot the remainder." The notes contain an interesting defence by Browning of the form of his Greek names.

I AM a goddess of the ambrosial courts.
And save by Here, Queen of Pride, surpassed
By none whose temples whiten this the world.
Through heaven I roll my lucid moon along;
I shed in hell o'er my pale people peace;
On earth I, caring for the creatures, guard
Each pregnant yellow wolf and fox-bitch sleek,
And every feathered mother's callow brood.
And all that love green haws and loneliness.

Of men, the chaste adore me, hanging crowns
Of poppies red to blackness, bell and stem,
Upon my image at Athenai here;
And this dead Youth, Aesecypios bends above,
Was dearest to me. He, my basking step
To follow through the wild-wood leafy ways,
And chase the panting stag, or swift with darts
Stop the swift ounce, or lay the leopard low.
Neglected homage to another god:
Whence Aphrodite, by no midnight smoke
Of tapers felled, in jealousy dispatched
A noisome beast that, as the gilded stings,
Possessed his stepdame Phaïdra for himself
The son of Theseus her great absent spouse.
Hippolytus exclaiming in his rage
Against the fury of the Queen, she judged
Life insupportable; and, pricked at heart
An Amazonian stranger's race should dare
To scorn her, perished by the murderous cord:
Yet, ere she perished, blasted in a scroll
The fame of him her swerving made not swerve.
And Theseus, read, returning, and believed,
And exiled, in the blindness of his wrath,
The man without a crime who, last as first,
Loyal, divulged not to his sire the truth
Now Theseus from Poseidon had obtained
That of his wishes should be granted three,
And one he imprecated straight — "Alas!
May ne'er Hippolytus reach other lands!"
Poseidon heard, aï aï! And scarce the prince
Had stepped into the fixed boots of the car
That give the feet a stay against the strength
Of the Hieronian horses, and around
His body flung the rein, and urged their speed
Along the rocks and shingles of the shore,
When from the gaping wave a monster flung
His obscene body in the courser's path,
These, mad with terror, as the sea-bull sprawled
Wallowing about their feet, lost care of him
That reared them; and the master-chariot-pole
Snapping beneath their plumes like a reed,
Hippolytus, whose feet were tramelled fast,
Was yet dragged forward by the circling rein
Which either hand directed; nor they quenched
The frenzy of their flight before each trace,
Wheel-spoke and splinter of the woeful car.
Each boulder-stone, sharp stub and spiny shell,
Huge fish-bone wrecked and wreathed amid the sands.
On that detested beach, was bright with blood
And morsels of his flesh; then fell the steeds
Head foremost, crashing in their nooned fronts,
Shivering with sweat, each white eye horror-fixed.
His people, who had witnessed all afar,
Bore back the ruins of Hippolytus.
But when his sire, too swoln with pride, rejoiced
Indomitable as a man foredoomed
That vast Poseidon had fulfilled his prayer,
L, in a flood of glory visible,
Stood o'er my dying votary and, deed
By deed, revealed, as all took place, the truth.
Then Theseus lay the woefullest of men.
And worthily; but ere the death-veils hid
His face, the murdered prince full pardon breathed
To his rash sire. Whereth Athenai wails.
So I, who ne'er forsake my votaries,
Lest in the cross-way none the honey-cake
Should render, nor pour out on the dog's hot life;
Lest at my name the priests disconsolate
Should dress my image with some faded poor
Few crowns, made favors of, nor dare object
Such slackness to my worshippers who turn
Elsewhere the trusting heart and loaded hand,
As they had climbed Olympus to report
Of Artemis and nowhere found her throne—
Linterposed: and, this eventful night,—
(While round the funeral pyre the populace
Stood with fierce light on their black robes
Which bound
Each sobbing head, while yet their hair they clipped.
O'er the dead body of their withered prince,
And, in his palace, Theseus prostrated
On the cold earth, his brow cold as the slab
'Twas bruised on, grommed away the heavy grief—
As the pyre fell, and down the cross logs crashed
Sending a crowd of sparkles through the night,
And the gay fire, clave with mystery,
Towered like a serpent o'er the clotted jars
Of wine, dissolving oils and frankincense,
And splendid gums like gold,—my potency
Conveyed the perished man to my retreat
In the thrice-venerable forest here.
And this white-bearded sage who squeezes now
The berried plant, is Poibos' son of fame,
Asclepius, whom my radiant brother taught
The doctrine of every herb and flower and root,
'To know their secret virtue and express
The saving soul of all: who so has soothed
With layers the torn brow and murdered cheeks,
Composed the hair and brought its gloss again,
And called the red bloom to the pale skin back,
And laid the strips and jagged ends of flesh
Even once more, and slacked the sinew's knot
Of every tortured limb—that now he lies
As if mere sleep possessed him underneath
These interwoven oaks and pines. Oh cheer,
Divine preserver of the healing rod,
Thy snake, with ardent threat and hurling eye,
Twines his lithe spires around! I say, much cheer
Proceed thou with thy wisest pharmacies!
And ye, white crowd of woodland sister-nymphs,
Fly, as the sage directs, these buds and leaves
That strew the turf around the twain! While I await,
In fitting silence, the event.

AN EPISTLE

CONTAINING THE STRANGE MEDICAL EXPERIENCE OF KARSHISH, THE ARAB PHYSICIAN

KARSHISH, the picker-up of learning's crumbs,
The not-incurious in God's handiwork
(This man's flesh he hath admirably made,
Blown like a bubble, kneaded like a paste,
To coop up and keep down on earth a space
That puff of vapor from his mouth, man's soul)
—To Abib, all-sagacious in our art,
Breeder in me of what poor skill I boast,
Like me inquisitive how pricks and cracks

Befall the flesh through too much stress and strain,
Whereby the wily vapor fain would slip
Back and rejoin its source before the term,—
And apost in contrivance (under God)
To baffle it by deftly stopping such:—
The vagrant Scholar to his Sage at home Sends greeting (health and knowledge, fame with peace)
Three samples of true snake-stone — rarer still,
One of the other sort, the melon-shaped,
(But fitter, pounded fine, for charms than drugs)
And writeth now the twenty-second time

My journeyings were brought to Jericho:
Thus I resume. Who studious in our art
Shall count a little labor unrepaid?
I have shed sweat enough, left flesh and bone
On many a flinty furlong of this land.
Also, the country-side is all on fire
With rumors of a marching hitherward:
Some say Vesuvius cometh, some, his son.
A black lynx surriled and pricked a tufted ear;
Last of my blood inflamed his yellow balls;
I cried and threw my staff and he was gone.
Twice have the robbers stripped and beaten me,
And once a town declared me for a spy;
But at the end, I reach Jerusalem,
Since this poor covert where I pass the night,
This Bethany, lies scarce the distance hence
A man with plague-sores at the third degree
Rums till he drops down dead. Thou laughest here!
'Sooth, it elates me, thus reposed and safe,
To void the stuffing of my travel-scrip
And share with thee whatever Jewry yields.
A viscid choler is observable
In tertians, I was nearly bold to say;
And falling-sickness hath a happier cure
Than our school wots of: there's a spider here
Weaves no web, watches on the ledge of tombs.
Sprinkled with mottles on an ash-gray back;
Take five and drop them ... but who knows his mind,
The Syrian runagate I trust this to?
His service payeth me a sublimate
Blown up his nose to help the ailing eye.
Rest wait: I reach Jerusalem at morn,
There set in order my experiences,
Gather what most deserves, and give thee all
Or I might add, Judaea's gum-tragacanth
Scales off in purer flakes, shines clearer-grained.
Cracks 'twixt the pestle and the porphyry,
In fine exceeds our produce. Scalp-disease
Confounds me, crossing so with leprosy—
Thou hadst admired one sort I gained at Zour—
But zeal outruns discretion. Here I end.

Yet stay: my Syrian blinketh gratefully,
Protesteth his devotion is my price—
Suppose I write what harms not, though he steal?
I half resolve to tell thee, yet I blush,
What set me off a-writing first of all.
An itch I had, a sting to write, a tang!
For, be it this town’s barrenness— or else:
The Man had something in the look of him—
His case has struck me far more than ‘t is worth.

So, pardon if— (lest presently I lose
In the great press of novelty at hand
The care and pains this somehow stole from me)
I bid thee take the thing while fresh in mind,
Almost in sight— for, wilt thou have the truth?
The very man is gone from me but now,
Whose ailment is the subject of discourse.
Thus then, and let thy better wit help all!

'T is but a case of mania— subinduced
By epilepsy, at the turning-point
Of trance prolonged unduly some three days;
When, by the exhibition of some drug
Or spell, exorcization, stroke of art
Unknown to me and which ’t were well to know,
The evil thing out-breaking all at once
Left the man whole and sound of body indeed,—
But, flinging 'so to speak' life's gates too wide,
Making a clear house of it too suddenly,
The first consent that entered might inscribe
Whatever it was minded on the wall
So plainly at that vantage, as it were,
(First come, first served) that nothing subsequent Attaineth to erase those fancy-scratches
The just-retumed and new-established soul
 Hath gotten now so thoroughly by heart
That henceforth she will read or these or none.
And first— the man's own firm conviction rests
That he was dead (in fact they buried him)
— That he was dead and then restored to life
By a Nazarene physician of his tribe:
— 'Sayeth, the same bade 'Rise,' and he did rise.

"Such cases are diurnal," thou wilt cry,
Not so this signment— not, that such a fate,
Instead of giving way to time and health,
Should eat itself into the life of life,
As saffron tingeth flesh, blood, bones and all!
For see, how he takes up the after-life.
The man—it is one Lazarus a Jew,
Sanguine, proportioned, fifty years of age,
The body's habit whollyurable.
As much, indeed, beyond the common health
As he were made and put aside to show.
Think, could we penetrate by any drug
And bathe the wearied soul and worried flesh,
And bring it clear and fair, by three days’ sleep!
Whence has the man the balm that brightens all?
This grown man eyes the world now like a child.
Some elders of his tribe, I should premise,
Led in their friend, obedient as a sheep,
To bear my inquisition. While they spoke,
Now sharply, now with sorrow,— told the case,—
He listened not except I spoke to him,
But folded his two hands and let them talk.
Watching the flies that buzzed; and yet no fool,
And that 's a sample how his years must go.
Look, if a beggar, in fixed middle-life,
Should find a treasure,— can he use the same
With straitened habits and with tastes starved small,
And take at once to his impoverished brain
The sudden element that changes things,
That sets the undreamed-of rapture at his hand
And puts the cheap old joy in the scorned dust?
Is he not such an one as moves to mirth—
Warily parsimonious, when no need,
Wasteful as drunkenness at undue times?
All prudent counsel as to what betides;
The golden mean, is lost on such an one:
The man's fantastic will is the man's law, —
So here—we call the treasure knowledge, say,
Increased beyond the fleshly faculty—
Heaven opened to a soul while yet on earth,
Earth forced on a soul's use while seeing heaven:
The man is witless of the size, the sum,
The value in proportion of all things,
Or whether it be little or be much.
Discourse to him of prodigious armaments
Assembled to besiege his city now,
And of the passing of a mile with gourds—
’Tis one! Then take it on the other side,
Speak of some trifling fact,— he will gaze rapt
With stupor at its very littleness.
(Far as I see) as if in that indeed
He sought prodigious import, whole results;
And so will turn to us the bystanders
In ever the same stupor (note this point)
That we too see not with his opened eyes,
Wonder and doubt come wrongly into play,
Preposterously, at cross purposes.
Should his child sicken unto death,— why, look
For scarce abatement of his cheerfulness,
Or pretermintion of the daily craft!
While a word, gesture, glance from that same child
At play or in the school or laid asleep
Will startle him to an agony of fear,
Exasperation, just as like. Demand
The reason why— "'Tis but a word," object—
The man sits stilled, he regards thee as our lord
Wlio lived there in the pyramidal alone,
Looked at us (dost thou mind?) when, being young,
We both would unadvisedly recite
Some charm's beginning, from that book of his,
Able to bid the sun thro' wide and burst
All into stars, as suns grown old are wont.
They and the child have each a veil alike
Thrown o'er your heads, from under which ye both
Stretch your blind hands and trifle with a match
Over a mine of Greek fire, did ye know!
He holds on firmly to some thread of life—
(It is the life to lead perforcefully)
Which runs across some vast distracting orb
Of glory on either side that meagre thread,
Which, conscious of, he must not enter yet—
The spiritual life around the earthly life:
The law of that is known to him as this.
His heart and brain move there, his feet stay here.
So is the man perplexed with impulses
Sudden to start off crosswise, not straight on,
Proclaiming what is right and wrong across,
And not along, this black thread through the

"It should be" balked by "here it cannot be."

And oft the man's soul springs into his face
As if he saw again and heard again
His sage that bade him "Rise" and he did rise.

Something, a word, a tick of the blood within Admonishes: then back he sinks at once
To ashes, who was very fire before,
In sedulous recurrence to his trade
Whereby he earneth him the daily bread;
And studiously the lumber for that pride.

Professedly the futility that he knows
God's secret, while he holds the thread of life,
Indeed the especial marking of the man
Is prone submission to the heavenly will—
Seeing it, what it is, and why it is.
"Sayeth, he will wait patient to the last
For that same death which must restore his Being
To equilibrium, body loosening soul
Divorced even now by premature full growth:
He will live, nay, it pleaseth him to live
So long as God please, and just how God please.
He will even seeketh not to please God more
(Which meaneth, otherwise) than as God please.
Hence, I perceive not he affects to preach
The doctrine of his sect whate'er it be,
Make proselytes as madmen thirst to do:
How can he give his neighbor the real ground,
His own conviction? Ardent as he is—
Call his great truth a lie, why, still the old
"Be it as God please" reassureth him.
I probed the sore as thy disciple should:
"How, beast," said I, "this stolid carelessness
Sufficeth thee, when Rome is on her march
To stamp out like a little spark thy town,
Thy tribe, thy crazy tale and thee at once?"
He merely looked with his large eyes on me,
The man is apathetic, you deduce?
Contrariwise, he loves both old and young,
Able and weak, affects the very brutes
And birds—how say I? flowers of the field—
As a wise workman recognizeth tools
In a master's workshop, loving what they make.

Thus is the man as harmless as a lamb:
Only impatient, let him do his best,
At ignorance and carelessness and sin—
And indignation which is promptly curbed:
As when in certain travel I have feigned
To be an ignoramus in our art
According to some preconceived design,
And hap-ped to hear the land's practitioners,
Stepped in conceit subdued by ignorance,
Prattle fantastically on disease,
Its cause and cure—and I must hold my peace!

Thou wilt object—Why have I not ere this Sought out the sage himself, the Nazarene
Who wrought this cure, inquiring at the source,
Conferring with the frankness that befits?

Alas! it grieveth me, the learned leech
Perisned in a tumult many years ago,
Accessed—our learning's fate—of wizardry,
Rebellion, to the setting up a rule
And creed prodigious as described to me,
His death, which happened when the earthquake fell
(Prefiguring as soon appeared, the loss
To occult learning in our lord the sage
Who lived there in the pyramid alone)
Was wrought by the mad people—that's their wont!
On vain recourse, as I conjecture it,
To his tried virtue, for miraculous help—
How could he stop the earthquake? That's their way!
The other imputations must be lies:
But take one, though I loathe to give it thee,
In mere respect for any good man's fame.
(And after all, our patient Lazarus
Is stark mad; should we count on what he says?
Perhaps not: though in writing to a leech
"I'm well to keep back nothing of a case.)
This man so cored regards theurer, then,
As—God forgive me? who but God himself,
Creator and sustainer of the world,
That came and dwelt in flesh on it awhile!—
"Sayeth that such an one was born and lived,
Taught, healed the sick, broke bread at his own house,
Then died, with Lazarus by, for aught I know,
And yet was... what I said nor choose to repeat,
And must have so avouchoned himself, in fact,
In hearing of this very Lazarus
Who saith—but why all this of what he saith?
Why write of trivial matters, things of price
Calling at every moment for remark?
Noticed on the margin of a pool
Blue-flowering borage, the Aleppo sort,
Aboundeth, very nitrous. It is strange!

Thy pardon for this long and tedious case,
Which, now that I review it, needs must seem
Unduly dwelt on, prolixly set forth!
Nor I myself discern in what is writ
Good cause for the peculiar interest
And awe indeed this man has touched me with,
Perhaps the journey's end, the weariness
Had wrought upon me first. I met him thus:
I crossed a ridge of short sharp broken hills
Like an old lion's cheek teeth. Out there came
A moon made like a face with certain spots
Multiform, manifold, and menacing:
Then a wind rose behind me. So we met
In this old sleepy town at midnight,
The man and I. I send thee what is writ.
Regard it as a chance, a matter risked
To this ambiguous Syrian—he may lose,
Or steal, or give it thee with equal good.
Jerusalem's repose shall make amends
For time this letter wastes, thy time and mine;
Till when, once more thy pardon and fare
well?

The very God! think, Abib; dost thou think?
So, the All-Great, were the All-Loving too—
PICTOR IGNATUS

Florence, 15—

I COULD have painted pictures like that youth's
Ye praise so. How my soul springs up! No bar Stayed me—ah, thought which saddens while it soothes!
—Never did fate forbid me, star by star,
To outburst on your night with all my gift
Of fires from God: nor would my flesh have shrunk
From seconding my soul, with eyes uplift
And wide to heaven, or, straight like thunder, sunk
To the centre, of an instant; or around
Turned calmly and inquisitive, to scan
The license and the limit, space and bound,
Allowed to truth made visible in man.
And, like that youth ye praise so, all I saw,
Over the canvas could my hand have flung,
Each face obedient to its passion's law,
Each passion clear proclaimed without a
tongue;
Whether hope rose at once in all the blood,
A-tiptoe for the blessing of embrace.
Or Rapture drooped the eyes, as when her brood Full down the nesting dove's heart to its place;
Or confidence lit swift the forehead up,
And locked the mouth fast, like a castle
brayed,—
O human faces, hath it spilt, my cup?
What did ye give me that I have not saved?
Nor will I say I have not dreamed (how well!)
Of going—I, in each new picture,—forth,
As, making new hearts beat and bosoms swell,
To Pope or Kaiser, East, West, South, or North.
Bound for the calmly satisfied great State,
Or glad aspiring little burgh, it went,
Flowers cast upon the car which bore the freight,
Through old streets named afresh from the event.
Till it reached home, where learned age should speak,
My face, and youth, the star not yet distinct
Above his hair, lie learning at my feet!—
Oh, thus to live, I and my picture, linked
With love about, and praise, till life should end,
And then not go to heaven, but linger here,
Here on my earth, earth's every man my friend,
The thought grew frightful, 't was so wildly dear.
But a voice changed it. Glimpses of such sights
Have scared me, like the revels through a door
Of some strange house of idols at its rites!
This world seemed not the world it was before:
Mixed with my loving trusting ones, there trooped
Who summoned those cold faces that began
To press on me and judge me? Though I stooped
Shrinking, as from the soldiery a nun,
They drew me forth, and spite of me enough!
These buy and sell our pictures, take and give,
Count them for garniture and household-stuff,
And where they live needs must our pictures live.
And see their faces, listen to their prate,
Partakers of their daily pettiness,
Discussed, — "This I love, or this I hate,
This likes me more, and this affects me less!"
Wherefore I chose my portion. If at whiles
My heart sinks, as monotonous I paint
These endless cloisters and eternal aisles
With the same series, Virgin, Babe and Saint,
With the same cold calm beautiful regard,—
At least no merchant trafics in my heart;
The sanctuary's gloom at least shall ward
Vain tongues from where my pictures stand apart:
Only prayer breaks the silence of the shrine
While, blackening in the daily candle-smoke,
They moulder on the damp wall's travertine,
'Mid echoes the light footstep never woke.
So, di me pictures! surely, gently die!
O youth, men praise so,— holds their praise its worth?
Blown harshly, keeps the trumpet its golden cry?
Tastes sweet the water with such specks of earth?

FRA LIPPO LIPPI

I am poor brother Lippo, by your leave!
You need not clap your torches to my face.
Zooks, what's to blame? you think you see a monk!
What, 't is past midnight, and you go the rounds?
And here you catch me at an alley's end
Where sportive ladies leave their doors ajar?
The Carmine's my cloister: hunt it up,
Do,—harry out, if you must show your zeal,
Whatever rat, th' re, haps on his wrong hole,
And nip each softling of a wee white mouse,
Weke, weke, that's crept to kep him company!
Aha, you know your betters! Then, you'll take

Your hand away that's fiddling on my throat,
And please to know me likewise. Who am I?
Why, one, sir, who is lodging with a friend.
Three streets off—he's a certain... how d' ye call?

Master—a... Cosimo of the Medici,
I the house that caps the corner. Boh! you were best!
Remember and tell me, the day you're hanged,
How you affected such a gullet's-gripe!
But you, sir, it concerns you that your knives
Pick up a manner nor discredited you:
Zooks, are we pilchards, that they sweep the streets.
And count fair prize what comes into their net?
He's Judas to a tittle, that man is!
Just such a face! Why, sir, you make amends.
Lord, I'm not angry! Bid your hangdogs go
Drink out this quarter-florin to the health
Of the munificent House that harbors me
(And many more beside, lads! more beside!)
And all's come square again. I'd like his face—
His, elbowing on his comrade in the door
With the pike and lantern,— for the slave that holds
John Baptist's head a-dangle by the hair
With one hand ("Look you, now," as who should say)
And his weapon in the other, yet unwiped!
It's not your chance to have a bit of chalk,
A wood-coal or the like? or you should see!
Yes, I'm the painter, since you style me so.
What, brother Lippo's doings, up and down,
You know them and they take you? like enough!
I saw the proper twinkle in your eye—
'Tell you, I liked your looks at very first,
Let's sit and set things straight now, hip to harnack.
Here's spring come, and the nights one makes up bands
To roam the town and sing out carnival,
And I've been three weeks shut within my mew,
A-painting for the great man, saints and saints.
And saints again. I could not paint all night—
Ouf! I leaned out of window for fresh air.
There came a hurry of feet and little feet,
A sweep of lute-strings, laughs, and whiffs of song,

Flower o' the broom,
Take away love, and our earth is a tomb!
Flower o' the quince,
I let Lisa go, and what good in life since?
Flower o' the thyme—and so on. Round they went,

Searce had they turned the corner when a titter
Like the skipping of rabbits by moonlight,— three slim shapes,
And a face that looked up... zooks, sir, flesh and blood,
That's all I'm made of! Into shreds it went,
Curtain and counterpane and coverlet,
All the bed-furniture—a dozen knots,
There was a ladder! Down I let myself,
Hands and feet, scrambling somehow, and so dropped,
And after them. I came up with the fun
Hard, by Saint Lawrence, hail fellow, well met.

Flower of the rose,
If I've been merry, what matter who knows?
And so as I was stealing back again
To get to bed and have a bit of sleep
Ere I rise up tomorrow and go work
On Jerome knocking at his poor old breast.
With his great round stone to subdue the flesh,
You snap me of the sudden. Ah, I see!
Though your eye twinklest still, you shake your head.

Mine, 's shaved — a monk, you say — the sting 's in that!
If Master Cosimo announced himself.
Mum's the word naturally: but a monk!
Come, what am I a beast for? tell us, now!
I was a baby when my mother died
And father died and left me in the street.
I starved there. God knows how, a year or two
On fig-skins, melon-parings, rinds and shucks,
Refuse and rubbish. One fine frosty day,
My stomach being empty as your hat,
The wind doubled me up and down I went,
Old Aunt Lapaccesa trusted me with one hand,
Its fellow was a stinger as I knew I!
And so along the wall, over the bridge,
By the straight eut to the convent. Six words there,
While I stood munching my first bread that month:
"No, boy, you're minded," quoth the good fat father,
Wiping his own mouth. 't was reaction-time —
"To quit this very miserable world?"
Will you renounce ... " the mouthful of bread?" thought I!
By no means! Brief, they made a monk of me;
I did renounce the world, its pride and greed,
Palace, farm, villa, shop, and banking-house.
Trash, such as these poor devils of Medici
Have given their hearts to — all at eight years old.
Well, say, I found in time, you may be sure,
'T was not for nothing — the good bellyful.
The warm serge and the rope that goes all round.
And day-long blessed idleness beside!
"Let 's see what the urchin's for " — that came next.
Not overmuch their way, I must confess.
Such a to-do! They tried me with their books:
Lord, they'd have taught me Latin in pure waste!

Flower o' the clove.
All the Latin I construe is ' amo.' I love.
But, mind you, when a boy starves in the streets
Eight years together, as my fortune was,
Watching folk's faces to know who will fling
The bit of half-stripped grape-bunch he desires,
And who will curse or kick him for his pains —
Which gentleman pre-occupational and fine,
Holding a candle to the Sacrament.
Will wink and let him lift a plate and catch
The droppings of the wax to sell again.
Or holla for the Eight and have him whipped —

How say I? — nay, which dog bites, which lets drop.
His bone from the heap of offal in the street. —
Why, soul and sense of him grow sharp alike.
He learns the look of things, and none the less
For admonition from the hunger-pinch.
I had a store of such remarks, be sure,
Which, after I found leisure, turned to use.
I drew men's faces on my copy-books,
Scribbled them within the antiphonary's margin,
Joined legs and arms to the long music-notes,
Found eyes and nose and chin for X's and B's,
And made a string of purses of the world
Between the ins and outs of verb and noun.
On the wall, the bench, the door. The monks looked black.
"Nay," quoth the Prior, "turn him out, d' ye say?
In no wise. Lose a crow and catch a lark.
What if at last we get our man of parts,
We Carmelites, like those Camaldolese
And Preaching Friars, to do our church up fine
And put the front on it that ought to be!"
And hereupon he bade me dumb away.
Thank you! my head being crammed, the walls a blank.
Never was such prompt disemburdening.
First, every sort of monk, the black and white,
I drew them; fat and lean; then, folk at church,
From good old gossips waiting to confess.
Their cibis of barrel-droppings, candle-ends, —
To the breathless fellow at the altar-foot.
Fresh from his murder, safe and sitting there
With the little children round him in a row
Of admiration, half for his beard and half
For that white anger of his victim's son.
Shaking a fist at him with one fierce arm.
Signing himself with the other because of Christ.
(Whose sad face on the cross sees only this After the passion of a thousand years)
Till some poor girl, her apron o'er her head,
(Which the intense eyes looked through) came at eve
On tiptoe, said a word, dropped in a loaf.
Her pair of earrings and a bunch of flowers
The brute took growing, prayed, and so was gone.
I painted all, then cried " 'Tis ask and have;
Choose, for more's ready!" — laid the ladder flat.
And showed my covered bit of cloister-wall.
The monks closed in a circle and praised loud
Till checked, taught what to see and not to see.
Being simple bodies. — "That's the very man!
Look at the boy who stoops to pat the dog!
That woman's like the Prior's niece who comes
To care about his asthma: it's the life!"
But there my triumph's straw-fire flared and funked;
Their betters took their turn to see and say:
The Prior and the learned pulled a face
And stopped all that in no time. — "How?
What's here?"
Quite from the mark of painting, bless us all!
Faces, arms, legs, and bodies like the true
As much as pea and pen! it's devil's game!
Your business is not to catch men with show,
With homage to the perishable clay.
But lift them over it, ignore it all,
Make them forget there's such a thing as flesh.
Your business is to paint the souls of men—
Man's soul, and it's a fire, smoke... no, it's not...

It's vapor done up like a new-born babe —
In that shape when you die it leaves your mouth.
It's... well, what matters talking, it's the soul!
Give us no more of body than shows soul!
Here's Giotto, with his Saint a-praising God,
That sets us praising.— why not stop with him?
Why put all thoughts of praise out of our head
With wonder at lines, colors, and what not?
Paint the soul, never mind the legs and arms!
Rub all out, try it a second time.
Oh, that white smallish female with the breasts,
She's just my niece... Herodias, I would say—

Who went and danced and got men's heads cut off!
Have it all out! Now, is this sense, I ask?
A fine way to paint soul, by painting body
So ill, the eye can't stop there, must go further
And can't fare worse! Thus, yellow does for white
When what you put for yellow's simply black,
And any sort of meaning looks intense
When all beside itself means and looks naught,
Why can't a painter lift each foot in turn,
Left foot and right foot, go a double step,
Make his flesh liker and his soul more like,
Both in their order? Take the prettiest face,
The Prior's niece... patron-saint—is it so pretty
You can't discover if it means hope, fear,
Sorrow or joy? won't beauty go with these?
Suppose I've made her eyes all right and blue,
Can't I take breath and try to add life's flash,
And then add soul and heighten them three-fold?
Or say there's beauty with no soul at all—
(I never saw it — put the case the same—)
If you get simple beauty and naught else,
You get about the best thing God invents;
That's somewhat: and you'll find the soul you have missed,
Within yourself, when you return him thanks.
"Rah all out!" Well, well, there's my life,
in short,

And such a thing has gone on ever since.
I'm grown a man no doubt, I've broken bounds:
You should not take a fellow eight years old
And make him swear to never kiss the girls.
I'm my own master, paint now as I please—
Having a friend, you see, in the Corner-house!
Lord, it's fast holding by the rings in front—
Those great rings serve more purposes than just
To plant a flag in, or tie up a horse!
And yet the old schooling sticks, the old grave eyes
Are peeping o'er my shoulder as I work,
The heads shake still—"It's art's decline, my son!
You're not of the true painters, great and old;
Brother Angelico's the man, you'll find;

Brother Lorenzo stands his single peer:
Flag on at flesh, you'll never make the third!"

Flower o' the pine,
You keep your mistr... manners, and I'll stick to mine!
I'm not the third, then: bless us, they must know!
Don't you think they're the likeliest to know,
They with their Latin? So, I swallow my rage,

Clench my teeth, suck my lips in tight, and paint
To please them — sometimes do and sometimes don't;
For, doing most, there's pretty sure to come
A turn, some warm eye finds me at my saints—
A laugh, a cry, the business of the world—
(Loi-enzo, Death for us all, and his own life for each!)
And my whole soul revolves, the cup runs over,
The world and life's too big to pass for a dream,
And I do these wild things in sheer despite,
And play the fooleries you catch me at,
In pure rage! The old mill-house, out at grass
After hard years, throws up his stiff heels so,
Although the miller does not preach to him.
The only good of grass is to make chaff.
What would men have? Do they like grass or no—

May they or may n't they? all I want's the thing Settled forever one way. As it is,
You tell too many lies and hurt yourself:
You don't like what you only like too much,
You do like what, if given you at your word,
You find abundantly detestable.
For me, I think I speak as I was taught;
I always see the garden and God there
A-making man's wife: and, my lesson learned,
The value and significance of flesh,—
I can't muleen ten minutes afterwards.

You understand me: I'm a beast, I know.
But see, now — why, I see as certainly
As that the morning-star's about to shine,
What will hap some day. We've a youngster here
Comes to our convent, studies what I do,
Sluncees and stares and lets no atom drop:
His name is Guidi — he'll not mind the monks—

They call him Hulking Tom, he lets them talk—
He picks my practice up — he'll paint apace,
I hope so — though I never live so long,
I know what's sure to follow. You be judge!
You speak no Latin more than I, behike;
However, you're my man, you've seen the world
—The beauty and the wonder and the power,
The shapes of things, their colors, lights and shades,
Changes, surprises, — and God made it all!
—For what? Do you feel thankful, ay or no,

For this fair town's face, yonder river's line,
The mountain round it and the sky above,
Much more the figures of man, woman, child.
These are the frame to? What's it all about? To be passed over, despised? or dwelt upon? Wondered at? oh, this last of course! — you say.

But why not do as well as say, — paint these Just as they are, careless what comes of it? God's works — paint any one, and count it crime To let a truth slip. Don't object, "His works Are here already; nature is complete: Suppose you reproduce her — (which you can't). There's no advantage! you must beat her, then." For, didn't you mark? we're made so that we love.

First, when we see them painted, things we have passed Perhaps a hundred times nor cared to see; And so they are better, painted — better to us, Which is the same thing. Art was given for that; God uses us to help each other so,

Lending our minds out. Have you noticed, now,

Your condition's hanging face? A bit of chalk, And trust me but you should, though! How much more, If I drew higher things with the same truth! That were to take the Prior's pulpit-place, Interpreted God to all of you! Oh, oh, It makes me mad to see what men shall do And we in our graves! This world's no blot for us, Nor blank; it means intensely, and means good

To find its meaning is my meat and drink. "Ay, but you don't so instigate to prayer!"

Strikes in the Prior: " when your meaning's plain

It does not say to folk — remember mutins, Or, mind you fast next Friday!" Why, for this

What need of art at all? A skull and bones, Two bits of stick nailed crosswise, or, what's best, A bell to chime the hour with, does as well, I painted a Saint Lawrence six months since At Prato, splash'd the fresco in fine style: "How looks my painting, now the scaffold's down?"

I ask a brother: "Hubby," he returns — "Already not one pliz of your three slaves Who turn the Beacon off his toasted side, But 'scratched and prodded to our heart's content, The pious people have so eased their own With coming to say prayers there in a rage: We get on fast to see the bricks beneath, Expect another job this time next year, For pity and religion grow 't the crowd — Your painting serves its purpose!" Hang the fools!

— That is — you'll not mistake an idle word Spoke in a huff by a poor monk, God wot, Tasting the air this spicy night which turns The unaccustomed head like Chianti wine! Oh, the church knows! don't misreport me, now!

It's natural a poor monk out of bounds Should have his apt word to excuse himself: And hearken how I plot to make amends. I have bethought me: I shall paint a piece . . . There's for you! Give me six months, then go, see Something in Sant' Ambrogio's! Bless the nuns! They want a cast o' my office. I shall paint God in the midst, Madonna and her babe, Ringed by a bowery, flowery angel-broad, Lilies and vestments and white faces, sweet As puff on puff of graced omissions. When ladies crowd to Church at midsummer, And then if the front, of course a saint or two —

Saint John, because he saves the Florentines, Saint Ambrose, who puts down in black and white The convent's friends and gives them a long day, And Job, I must have him there past mistake, The man of Uz (and Us without the s, Painters who need his patience). Well, all these Secured at their devotion, up shall come Out of a corner when you least expect, As one by a dark stair into a great light, Music and talking, who but Lippo! /!— Mazed, motionless, and mossstruck — I'm in the man!

Back I shrink — what is this I see and hear? I, caught up with my monk's-things by mistake,

My old serge gown and rope that goes all round, I, in this presence, this pure company! Where's a hole, where's a corner for escape? Then steps a sweet angelic slip of a thing Forward, puts out a soft palm — "Not so fast!"

— Addresses the celestial presence, "may He made you and devised you, after all, Though he's none of you! God Saint John there draw — His came-hair make up a painting-brush? We come to brother Lippo for all that, Ist' perfec't oops!" So, all smile I shuffle sideways with my blushing face Under the cover of a hundred wings Thrown like a spread of kirtles when you're gay And play hot cockles, all the doors being shut, Till, wholly unexpected, in there pops The hothead husband! Thus I scuttle off To some safe bench behind, not letting go The palm of her, the little lily thing That spoke the good word for me in the nick, Like the Prior's niece . . . Saint Lucy, I would say, And so all's saved for me, and for the church A pretty picture gained. Go, six months hence! Your hand, sir, and good-by: no lights, no lights!

The street's washed, and I know my own way back, Don't fear me! There's the gray beginning. Zooks!
Andrea del Sarto

Called "The Faultless Painter"

But do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once:
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish,
You turn your face, but does it bring your heart?
I'll work then for your friend's friend, never fear,
Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too his own price,
And shut the money into this small hand
When next it takes mine. Will it? tenderly?
Oh, I'll content him,—but to-morrow, Love!
I often am much wearier than you think,
This evening more than usual, and it seems
As if—forgive now—should you let me sit
Here by the window with your hand in mine
And look a half-hour forth on Fiesole,
Both of one mind, as married people use,
Quietly, quietly the evening through,
I might get up to-morrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever. Let us try,
To-morrow, how shall you be glad for this!
Your soft hand is a woman of itself,
And mine the man's bared breast she curls inside.
Don't count the time lost, neither; you must serve.
For each of the five pictures we require:
It saves a model. So! keep looking so—
My serpent intuition, beauty, rounds on rounds!
How could you ever prick those perfect ears,
Even to put the pearl there! oh, so sweet—
My face, my moon, my everybody's moon,
Which everybody looks on and calls his,
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn,
While she looks—no one's: very dear, no less.
You smile? why, there's my picture ready made.
There's what we painters call our harmony!
A common grayness silvers everything,—
All in a twilight, you and I alike.
—You, at the point of your first pride in me
(That's gone you know),—but I, at every point;
My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned down.
To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole,
There's the bell chinking from the chapel-top;—
That length of convent-wall across the way
Holds the trees safer, huddled more inside;
The last monk leaves the garden; days decrease,
And autumn grows, autumn in everything.
Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape
As if I saw alike my work and self
And all that I was born to be and do,
A twilight-piece. Love, we are in God's hand.
How strange now looks the life he makes us lead;
So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
I feel he laid the fetter: let it lie!
This chamber for example—turn your head—
All that's behind us! You don't understand

Nor care to understand about my art,
But you can hear at least when people speak:
And that cartoon, the second from the door
—It is the thing, Love! so such thing should be—
Behold Madonna!—I am bold to say,
I can do with my pencil what I know,
What I see, what at bottom of my heart
I wish for, if I ever wish so deep—
Do easily, too—when I saw perfectly,
I do not boast, perhaps: yourself are judge,
Who listened to the Legate's talk last week,
And just as much they used to say in France.
At any rate 't is easy, all of it!
No sketches first, no studies, that's long past:
I do what many dream of all their lives,
—Dream? strive to do, and agonize to do,
And fail in doing. I could count twenty such
On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,
Who strive—you don't know how the others strive
To paint a little thing like that you smeared
Carelessly passing with your robes afloat,—
Yet do much less, so much less. Someone says,
I know his name, no matter—so much less!
Well, less is more, Lucrezia: I am judged.
There burns a truer light of God in them.
In their vexed beating stuffed and stopped-up brain,
Heart, or what'er else, than goes on to prompt
This low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine.
Their works drop groundward, but themselves, I know.
Reach many a time a heaven that's shut to me,
Enter and take their place there sure enough,
Though they come back and cannot tell the world.
My works are nearer heaven, but I sit here.

The sudden blood of these men! at a word—
Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too.
I, painting from myself and to myself,
Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame
Or their praise either. Somebody remarks
Morello's outline there is wrongly traced,
His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,
Rightly traced and well ordered; what of that?
Speak as they please, what does the mountain care?
Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-gray
Pleas'd and perfect with my art: the worse!
I know both what I want and what might gain,
And yet how profitless to know, to sigh
—Had I been two, another and myself,
Our head would have o'erlooked the world!"

No doubt.

Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth
The Urbinate who died five years ago.
("T is copied, George Vasari sent it me.)
Well, I can fancy how he did it all,
Pouring his soul, with kings and popes to see,
Reaching, that heaven might so replenish him.
Above and through his art—for it gives way;
That arm is wrongly put—and there again
A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines.
Its body, so to speak: its soul is right,
ANDREA DEL SARTO

He means right — that, a child may understand.
Still, what an arm! and I could alter it.
But all the play, the insight and the stretch
Out of me, out of me! And wherefore out?
Had you enjoined them on me, given me soul,
We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!

Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think —
More than I merit, yes, by many times.
But had you — oh, with the same perfect brow,
And perfect eyes, and more than perfect mouth,
And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird
The Fowler's pipe, and follows to the snare —
Had you, with these the same, but brought a mind!

Some women do so. Had the mouth there urged
"God and the glory: never care for gain.
The present by the future, what is that?
Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo!
Raphael is waiting: up to God, all three!"

I might have done it for you. So it seems:
Perhaps not. All is as God overrules,
Beside, incentives come from the soul's self;
The rest avail not. Why do I need you?

What wife had Raphael, or has Agnolo?
In this world, who can do a thing, will not;
And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:
Yet the will a somewhat — somewhat, too, the power —
And thus we half-men struggle. At the end,
God, I conclude, compensates, punishes.
'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
That I am something underrated here,
Poor this long while, despised, to speak the truth.

I dared not, do you know, leave home all day,
For fear of changing on the Paris lords,
The best is when they pass and look aside;
But they speak sometimes; I must bear it all.
Well may they speak! That Francis, that first time,
And that long festival year at Fontainebleau!
I surely then could sometimes leave the ground,
Put on the glory, Raphael's daily wear.

In that humane great monarch's golden look,
One finger in his beard or twisted curl
Over his mouth's good mark that made the smile,
The jingle of his gold chain in my ear.
I painting proudly with his breath on me,
All his court round him, seeing with his eyes,
Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of souls
Profuse, my hand kept plying by those hearts.
And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond,
This in the background, waiting on my work.

To grow the issue with a last reward!
A good time, was it not, my kingly days?
And had you not grown restless . . . . but I knew
'Tis done and past; 'twas right, my instinct said;

Too live the life grew, golden and not gray,
And I'm the weak-eyed but no sun should tempt
Out of the grange whose four walls make his world.
How could it end in any other way?

You called me, and I came home to your heart.
The triumph was — to reach and stay there;
Since
I reached it ere the triumph, what is lost?
Let my hands frame your face in your hair's gold.

You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
"Raphael did this, Andrea painted that;
The Roman's is the better when you pray,
But still the other's Virgin was his wife." —

Men will excuse me. I am glad to judge
Both pictures in your presence: clearer grows
My better fortune. I resolve to think.
For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
To Raphael . . . . I have known it all these years . . . .

(When the young man was flaming out his thoughts
Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
Too lifted up in heart because of it)

"Friend, there's a certain sorry little scrub
Goes up and down our Florence, none cares how,
Who, were he set to plan and execute
As you are, pricked on by your popes and kings,
Would bring thisewnt into that brow of yours!"

To Raphael! — And indeed the aim is wrong.
I hardly dare . . . . yet, only you to see.
Give the chalk here — quick, thus the line should go!

Ay, but the soul! he's Raphael! rub it out!
Still, all I care for, if he spoke the truth.
What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
Do you forget already words like those?
If really there was such a chance, so lost —
Is, whether you're — not grateful — but more pleased.

Well, let me think so. And you smile indeed!
This hour has been an hour! Another smile?
If you would sit thus by me every night
I should work better, do you comprehend?
I mean that I should earn more, give you more.
See, it is settled dusk now; there's a star;
Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the wall,
The owls speak the name we call them by.
Come from the window, love, — come in, at last,
Inside the melancholy little house.
We built to be so gay with. God is just.
King Francis may forgive me; oft at nights
When I look up from painting, eyes tired out,
The walls become illuminated, brick from brick
Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright gold,
That gold of his I did cement them with!

Let us but love each other. Must you go?
That Cousin here again? he waits outside?
Must see you — you, and not with me? Those loans?
More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for that?
Well, let the miles buy life, have you more to spend?
While hand and eye and something of a heart
Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth?

I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
The gray remainder of the evening out,
Idly, you call it, and muse perfectly
How I could paint, were I but back in France;
One picture, just one more — the Virgin's face,
Not yours this time! I want you at my side
To hear them — that is, Michel Agnolo —
Judge all I do and tell you of its worth,
Will you? To-morrow, satisfy your friend.
I take the subjects for his corridor,
Finish the portrait out of hand — there, there,
And throw him in another thing or two
If he demands; the whole should prove enough
To pay for this same Cousin's freak. Beside,
What's better and what's all I care about,
Get you the thirteen scandal for the ruff!
Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does be,
The Cousin! what does he please you more?

I am grown peaceful as old age to-night.
I regret little, I would change still less.
Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
The very wrong to Francis! — it is true
I took his coin, was tempted and complied,
And built this house and sinned, and all is said.
My father and my mother died of want.
Well, had I riches of my own? you see
How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot.
They were born poor, lived poor, and poor they died:
And I have labored somewhat in my time
And not been paid profusely. Some good son
Paint my two hundred pictures — let him try!
No doubt, there's something strikes a balance.
Yes,
You loved me quite enough, it seems to-night.
This must suffice me here. What would one have?

In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more chance —
Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,
Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
For Leonard, Raphael, Agnolo and me
To cover — the three first without a wife,
While I have mine! So — still they overcome
Because there's still Lucrezia, — as I choose.

Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love.

THE BISHOP ORDERS HIS TOMB AT SAINT PRAXED'S CHURCH

ROME, 15—

This poem was first published in Hood's Magazine, March, 1845, with the title The Tomb at Saint Praxed's (Rome, 15—).

Vanity, saith the preacher, vanity!
Draw round my bed: is Angelina keeping back?
Nephews — sons mine ... ah God, I know not!

Well!

She, men would have to be your mother once,
Old Gandolf envied me, so fair she was!
What's done is done, and she is dead beside,
Dead long ago, and I am Bishop since,
And as she died so must we die ourselves,
And thence ye may perceive the world's a dream,
Life, how and what is it? As here I lie
In this state-chamber, dying by degrees,

Hours and long hours in the dead night, I ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" Peace, peace seems all,
Saint Praxed's ever was the church for peace;
And so, about this tomb of mine, I fought
With tooth and nail to save my niche, ye know:
— Old Gandolf cozened me, despite my care;
Shrewd was that snatch from out the corner South
He grasped his carrion with, God curse the same!
Yet still my niche is not so cramped but thence
One sees the pulpit o' the epistle-side,
And somewhat of the choir, those silent seats,
And up into the aevy dome where live
The angels, and a sunbeam's sure to lurk:
And I shall fill my slab of basalt there,
And heath my tabernacle take my rest,
With those nine columns round me, two and two,
The odd one at my feet where Anselm stands:
Peach-blossom marble all, the rare, the ripe
As fresh-poured red wine of a mighty pulse,
— Old Gandolf with his galtry onion-stone,
Put me where I may look at him! True peach,
Rosy and flawless: how I earned the prize!
Draw close; that conflagration of my church
— What then? So much was saved if aught were missed!
My sons, ye would not be my death? Go dig
The white-grape vineyard where the oil-press stood,
Drop water gently till the surface sink,
And if ye find ... Ah God, I know not, I! ...
Bedded in store of rotten fig-leaves soft,
And corded up in a tight olive-trail,
Some lump, ah God, of _lapis lazuli_,
Big as a Jew's head cut off at the nape,
Blue as a vein o'er the Madonna's breast ...
Sons, all have I bequeathed you, villas, all,
That brave Frascati villa with its bath,
So, let the blue lump pisse between my knees,
Like God the Father's globe on both his hands
Ye worship in the Jesu Church so gay,
For Gandolf shall not choose but see and burst!
Swift as a weaver's shuttle flit our years:
Man goeth to the grave, and where is he?
Did I say basalt for my slab, sons? Black —
'T was ever a lime-green-black I meant! How else shall ye contrast my frieze to come beneath?
The base-relief in bronze ye promised me,
Those Pans and Nymphis ye wot of, and perchance
Some tripod, thrysus, with a vase or so,
The Saviour at his sermon on the mount,
Saint Praxed in a glory, and one Pan
Ready to twitch the Nymphis last garment off,
And Moses with the tables ... but I know
Ye mark me not! What do they whisper thee,
Child of my bowels, Anselm? Ah, ye hope
To reveal down my villas while I grasp
Bricked o'er with beggar's mouldy travertine
Which Gandolf from his tomb-top chuckles at!
Nay, boys, ye love me — all of Jasper, then!
'T is Jasper ye stand pledged to, lest I grieve:
My bath must needs be left behind, alas!
One block, pure green as a pistachio-nut,
There's plenty Jasper somewhere in the world —
And have I not Saint Praxed's ear to pray
Horses for ye, and brown Greek man scripts,
And mistresses with great smooth marly limbs? — That's if ye carve my epitaph aright,
Choice Latin, picked phrase, Tully's every word,
No gaudy ware like Gandolf's second line —
Tully, my masters? Upian serves his need!
And then how shall I lie through centuries,
And hear the blessed matter of the mass,
And see God made and eaten all day long,
And feel the steady candle-flame, and taste
Good strong thick stupeying incense-smoke!
For as I lie here, hours of the dead night,
Dying in state and by such slow degrees,
I hold my arms as if they clasped a crook,
And stretch my feet forth straight as stone can point.
And let the bedclothes, for a mortcloth, drop
Into great laps and folds of sculptor's-work;
And as you tapers dindle, and strange thoughts
Grow, with a certain humming in my ears,
About the life before I lived this life,
And this life too, popes, cardinals and priests,
Saint Praxed at his sermon on the sound.
Your tall pale mother with her talking eyes,
And new-found agate urns as fresh as day,
And marble's language, Latin pure, discreet.
Aha, fructescat quoth our friend?
No Tully, said I, Upian at the best!
Evil and brief hath been my pilgrimage,
All lapis, all, sons! Else I give the Pope
My villas! Will ye ever eat my heart?
Ever your eyes were as a lizard's quick,
They glitter like your mother's for my soul,
Or ye would heighten my impoverished frieze,
Price out its starved design, and fill my case
With grapes, and add a visor and a Term,
And to the tripod ye would tie a lynx
That in his struggle throws the thyrsus down,
To comfort me on my entablature
Whereon I am to lie till I must ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" There, leave me, there!
For ye have stabbed me with ingratitude
To death — ye wish it — God, ye wish it!
Stone —
Gritstone, a-crumble! Clammy squares which swell
As if the corpse they keep were oozing through
And no more lapis to delight the world!
Well, go! I bless ye. Fewer tapers there,
But in a row: and, going, turn your backs
— Aye, like departing altar-ministrants,
And leave me in my church, the church for
peace,
That I may watch at leisure if he beers —
Old Gandolf — at me, from his onion-stone,
As still he envied me, so fair she was!

EISHOP BLOUGRAM'S APOLOGY

No more wine? then we'll push back chairs and talk.
A final glass for me, though: cool, i' faith! We ought to have our Abbey back, you see.
It's different, preaching in basilicas,
And doing duty in some masterpiece.
Like this of brother Pugin's, bless his heart!
I doubt if they're half-baked, those chalk rosettes,
Ciphers and stucco-twiddlings everywhere:
It's just like breathing in a lime-kiln: eh?
These hot long ceremonies of our church
Cost us a little — oh, they pay the price,
You take me — amply pay it! Now, we'll talk

So, you despise me, Mr. Gigadibs,
No depreciation, — nay, I beg you, sir!
Beside 't is our engagement: don't you know,
I promised, if you'd watch a dinner out,
We'd see truth dawn together? — truth that peeps
Over the glasses' edge when dinner's done,
And body gets its sop and holds its noise
And leaves soul free a little. Now's the time:
Truth's break of day! You do despise me then.
And if I say, " despise me," — never fear!
I know you do not in a certain sense —
Not in my arm-chair, for example: here,
I well imagine you respect my place
(Status, entourage, worldly circumstance)
Quite to its value — very much indeed:
— Are up to the protesting eyes of you
In pride at being seated here for once —
You'll turn it to such capital account!
When somebody, through years and years to come,
Hints of the bishop,— names me — that's
enough:
"Bloogram? I knew him" — (into it you slide)
"Dined with him once, a Corpus Christi Day,
All alone, we two; he's a clever man;
And after dinner, — why, the wine you
know,
Oh, there was wine, and good! — what with the wine...
'Faith, we began upon all sorts of talk!
He's no bad fellow, Bloogram; he had seen
Something of mine he relished, some review:
He's quite above their humming in his heart.
Half-said as much, indeed — the thing's his trade.
I warrant, Bloogram's skeptical at times:
How otherwise? I liked him, I confess!"
Che che, my dear sir, as we say at Rome,
Don't you protest now? It's fair give and take;
You have had your turn and spoken your home-
truths:
The hand'd mine now, and here you follow suit.

Thus much conceded, still the first fact stays —
You do despise me; your ideal of life
Is not the bishop's; you would not be I.
You would like better to be Goethe, now,
Or Buonaparte, or, bless me, lower still.
Count D'Orsay, — so you did what you preferred.
Spoke as you thought, and, as you could not help,
Believed or disbelieved, no matter.
So long as on that point, which
You loosed your mind, we did
yourself.
That, my ideal never ca
Upon that element of truth and worth
Never be base ! for say they make me Pope —
(They can't — suppose it for our argument!)
Why, there I am at my tether's end, I've reached
My height, and not a height which pleases you:
An unbelieving Pope won't do, you say.
It's like those eerie stories nurses tell,
Of how some actor on a stage played Death,
With pasteboard crown, sham orb and tinselled dart,
And called himself the monarch of the world;
Then, going in the fire-room afterward,
Because the play was done, to shift himself,
Got touched upon the sleeve familiarly,
The moment he had shut the closet door,
By Death himself. Thus God might touch a Pope
At unawares, ask what his babbles mean,
And whose part he presumed to play just now.
Best be yourself, imperial, plain and true!

So, drawing comfortable breath again,
You weigh and find, whatever more or less
I boast of my ideal realized
Is nothing in the balance when opposed
To your ideal, your grand simple life,
Of which you will not realize one jot.
I am much, you are nothing; you would be all,
I would be merely much: you beat me there.

No, friend, you do not beat me: hearken why!
The common problem, yours, mine, every one's,
Is — not to fancy what were fair in life
Provided it could be, — but, finding first
What may be, then find how to make it fair
Up to our means: a very different thing!
No abstract intellectual plan of life
Quite irrespective of life's plainest laws,
But one, a man, who is man and nothing more,
May lead within a world which (by your leave)
Is Rome or London, not Fool's-paradise.
Embellish Rome, idealize away,
Make paradise of London if you can,
You're welcome, may, you're wise,
A simile!

We mortals cross the ocean of this world
Each in his average cabin of a life;
The best's not big, the worst yields elbow-room.
Now for our six months' voyage — how prepare?
You come on shipboard with a landsman's list
Of things he calls convenient; so they are!
An India screen is pretty furniture,
A piano-forte is a fine resource.
All Balzac's novels occupy one shelf,
The new edition fifty volumes long;
And little Greek books, with the funny type
They get up well at Leipzig, fill the next:
Go on! slabb'd marble, what a bath it makes!
And Parma's pride, the Jerome, let us add!
T were pleasant could Correggio's fleeting glow
Hang full in face of one where'er one roams,
Since he more than the others brings with him
Italy's self. — the marvellous Modenese! —
Yet was not on your list before, perhaps.

— Alas, friend, here's the agent... is't the name?
The captain, or whoever's master here —
You see him screw his face up; what's his cry
Ere you set foot on shipboard? "Six feet square!"
If you won't understand what six feet mean,
Compute and purchase stores accordingly —
And if, in pique because he overhauls
Your Jerome, piano, bath, you come on board bare — why, you cut a figure at the first.
While sympathetic landsmen see you off;
Not afterward, when long ere half seas over,
You peep up from your utterly naked boards
Into some sung and well-appointed berth.
Like mine for instance (try the cooler jug —
Put back the other, but don't jog the ice!)
And mortified you mutter, "Well and good;
He sits enjoying his sea-furniture;
'Tis stont and proper, and there's store of it:
Though I've the better notion, all agree,
Of filling rooms up. — Hang the carpenter,
Neat ship-shape fixings and contrivances
I would have brought my Jerome, frame and all!

And meantime you bring nothing: never mind —
You've proved your artist-nature: what you don't
You might bring, so despise me, as I say.

Now come, let's backward to the starting-place,
See my way: we're two college friends, suppose,
Prepare together for our voyage, then;
Each note and check the other in his work, —
Here's mine, a bishop's outfit; criticise!
What's wrong? why won't you be a bishop too?

Why first, you don't believe, you don't and can't.
(Not statedly, that is, and fixedly
And absolutely and exclusively)
In any revelation called divine.
No dogmas nail your faith; and what remains
But say so, like the honest man you are?
First, therefore, overhaul theology!
Nay, I too, not a fool, you please to think,
Must find believing every whit as hard:
And if I do not frankly say as much,
The ugly consequence is clear enough.

Now wait, my friend: well, I do not believe —
If you'll accept no faith that is not fixed,
Absolute and exclusive, as you say.
You're wrong — I mean to prove it in due time.
Meanwhile, I know where difficulties lie
I could not, cannot solve, nor ever shall,
So give up hope accordingly to solve —
(To you, and over the wine). Our dogmas then
With both of us, though in unlike degree,
Missing full credence — overboard with them!
I mean to meet you on your own premise:
Good, there go mine in company with yours!
And now what are we? unbelievers both,
Calm and complete, determinately fixed
To-day, to-morrow, and forever, pray?
You'll guarantee me that? Not so, I think!
In no wise! all we've gained is, that belief.
As unbelief before, shakes us by its fits.
Confounds us like its predecessor. Where's
The gain? how can we guard our unbelief.
Make it bear fruit to us? — the problem here.
Just when we are safest, there's a sunset-touch,
A fancy from a flower-bell, some one's death,
A chorus-sounding from the Rupeids.
And that's enough for fifty hopes and fears
As old and new at once as nature's self.
To rap and knock and enter in our soul.
Take hands and dance there, a fantastic ring,
Round the ancient idol, on his base again. —
The grand Perhaps! We look on helplessly.
There the old misgivings, crooked questions are.
This good God, — what he could do, if he would.
Would, if he could — then must have done long since.
If so, when, where and how? some way must be.
Once feel about, and soon or late you hit
Some sense, in which it might be, after all.
Why not, "The Way, the Truth, the Life?""
That way
Over the mountain, which who stands upon
Is apt to doubt if it be meant for a road;
While, if he views it from the waste itself.
Up goes the line there, plain from base to brow,
Not vague, unmistakable! what's a break or two
Seen from the unbroken desert either side?
And then (to bring in fresh philosophy)
What if the breaks themselves should prove at last
The most consummate of contrivances
To train a man's eye, teach him what is faith?
And so we stumble at truth's very test!
All we have gained then by our unbelief
Is a life of doubt diversified by faith.
For one of faith diversified by doubt:
We called the chess-board white, — we call it black.
"Well," you rejoin. "the end's no worse, at least;
We've reason for both colors on the board;
Why not confess then, where I drop the faith
And you the doubt, that I'm as right as you?"

Because, friend, in the next place, this being so,
And both things even, — faith and unbelief
Left to a man's choice, — we'll proceed a step,
Returning to our image, which I like.
A man's choice, yes — but a cabin-passenger's —
The man made for the special life o' the world.
Do you forget him? I remember though!
Consult our ship's conditions and you find
One and but one choice suitable to all;
The choice, that you unluckily prefer,
Turning things topsy-turvy — they or it
Going to the ground. Belief or unbelief
Bears upon life, determines its whole course,
Begins at its beginning. See the world
Such as it is. — you made it not, nor I;
I mean to take it as it is. — and you,
Not so you'll take it. — though you get naught else.
I know the special kind of life I like.
What suits the most my idiosyncrasy,
Brings out the best of me and bears me fruit
In power, peace, pleasantness and length of days.
I find that positive belief does this.
For me, and unbelief, no whit of this.
— For you, it does, however? — that, we'll try!
'Tis clear, I cannot lead my life. at least,
Induce the world to let me peaceably
Without declaring at the outset, "Friends, I absolutely and peremptorily Believe!" — I say, faith is my waking life;
One sleeps, indeed, and dreams at intervals,
We know, but waking's the main point with us.
And my provision's for life's waking part.
Accordingly, I use heart, head and hand
All day. I build, scheme, study, and make friends;
And when night overtakes me, down I lie,
Sleep, dream a little. and get done with it,
The sooner the better, to begin afresh.
What's midnight doubt before the dayspring's faith?
You, the philosopher, that disbelieve,
That recognize the night, give dreams their weight —
To be consistent you should keep your bed.
Abstain from healthy acts that prove you man,
For fear you drowse perhaps at unawares!
And certainly at night you'll sleep and dream,
Live through the day and bustle as you please.
And so you live to sleep as I to wake,
To unbelieve as I to still believe?
Well, and the common sense o' the world calls you
Bed-ridden, — and its good things come to me.
Its estimation, which is half the fight,
That's the first-cabin comfort I assure:—
The next... but you perceive with half an eye!
Come. come, it's best believing, if we may;
You can't but own that!

Next, concede again,
If once we choose belief, on all accounts
We can't be too decisive in our faith.
Conclusive and exclusive in its terms,
To suit the world which gives us the good things.
In every man's career are certain points
Whereon he dares not be indifferent; The world detects him clearly, if he dare, As baffled at the game, and losing life, He may care little or he may care much For riches, honor, pleasure, work, repose. Since various theories of life and life's Success are extant which might easily Comport with either estimate of these;
And whose chooses wealth or poverty, Labor or quiet, is not judged a fool
Because his fellow would choose otherwise:
We let him choose upon his own account
So long as he's consistent with his choice.
But certain points, left wholly to himself, When once a man has arbitrated on,
We say he must succeed there or go hang.
Thus, he should wed the woman he loves most
Or needs most, whatsoever the love or need —
For he can't wed twice. Then, he must avouch, Or follow, at the least, sufficiently.
The form of faith his conscience holds the best,
Whate'er the process of conviction was:
For nothing can compensate his mistake
On such a point, the man himself being judge:
He cannot wed twice, nor twice lose his soul.

Well now, there's one great form of Christian faith
I happened to be born in — which to teach
Was given me as I grew up, on all hands,
As best and readiest means of living by;
The same on examination being proved
The most pronounced moreover, fixed, precise
And absolute form of faith in the whole world —
Accordingly, most potent of all forms
For working on the world. Observe, my friend!
Such as you know me, I am free to say
In these hard latter days which hamper one,
Myself — by no immoderate exercise
Of intellect and learning, but the tact
To let external forces work for me,
Bid the street's stones be bread and they are bread;
Bid Peter's creed, or rather, Hildebrand's,
Exalt me o'er my fellows in the world
And make my life an ease and joy and pride;
It does so, which for me is a great point gained,
Who have a soul and body that exact
A comfortable care in many ways.
There's power in me and will to dominate
Which I must exercise, they hurt me else:
In many ways I need mankind's respect,
Obedience, and the love that's born of fear:
While at the same time, there's a taste I have,
A toy of soul, a titillating thing,
Refuses to digest these dainties crude.
The naked life is gross till clothed upon;
I must take what men offer, with a grace
As though I would not, could I help it, take!
An uniform I wear though over-rich
Something imposed on me, no choice of mine;
No fancy dress worn for pure fancy's sake
And despicable therefore! now folk kneel
And kiss my hand — of course the Church's hand.
Thus I am made, thus life is best for me,
And thus that it should be I have procured;
And thus it could not be another way,
I venture to imagine.

You'll reply,
So far my choice, no doubt, is a success;
But were I made of better elements,
With nobler instincts, purer tastes, like you,
I hardly would account the thing success
Though it did all for me I say.

But, friend,
We speak of what is; not of what might be,
And how 'twere better if 't were otherwise.
I am the man you see here plain enough:
Grant I'm a beast, why, beasts must lead beasts' lives!
Suppose I own at once to tail and claws;
The tailless man exceeds me: but being failed
I'll lash out lion fashion, and leave apes
To dock their stump and dress their haunches up.
My business is not to remake myself,
But make the absolute best of what God made,
Or — our first simile — though you prove me doomed
To a viler berth still, to the steerage-hole,
The sheep-pen or the pigsty, I should strive
To make what use of each were possible;
And as this cabin gets upholstered,
That hatch should rustle with sufficient straw.

But, friend, I don't acknowledge quite so fast
I fail of all your manhood's lofty tastes
Enumerated so complacently,
On the mere ground that you forsooth can find
In this particular life I choose to lead
No fit provision for them. Can you not?
Say you, my fault is I address myself
To grasper estimators than should judge?
And that's no way of holding up the soul,
Which, nobler, needs men's praise perhaps, yet knows
One wise man's verdict outweighs all the fools' —
Would like the two, but, forced to choose, takes that.
I pine among my million imbeciles
(You think) aware some dozen men of sense
Eye me and know me, whether I believe
In the last winking Virgin, as I vow,
And am a fool, or disbelieve in her
And am a knave, — approve in neither case,
Withhold their voices though I look their way;
Like Verdi when, at his worst opera's end
(The thing they gave at Florence, — what's its name?)
While the mad houseful's plaudits near outhang
His orchestra of salt-box, tongs, and bones,
He looks through all the roaring and the wreaths
Where sits Rossini patient in his stall.

Nay, friend, I meet you with an answer here —
That even your prime men who appraise their kind
Are men still, catch a wheel within a wheel,
See more in a truth than the truth's simple self,
Confuse themselves. You see lads walk the street
Sixty the minute; what's to note in that?
You see one lad o'erstride a chimney-stack;
Him you must watch — he's sure to fall, yet stands!
Our interest's on the dangerous edge of things.

The honest thief, the tender murderer,

The superstitious atheist, demirep

That loves and saves her soul in new French books

We watch while these in equilibrium keep

The giddy line midway: one step aside.

They're chafed and done with. I, then, keep the line

Before your sages — just the men to shrink

From the gross weights, coarse scales and

They offer their refinement. Fool or knave?

Why needs a bishop be a fool or knave

When there's a thousand diamond weights between?

So, I enlist them. Your picked twelve, you'll find.

Profess themselves indignant, scandalized

At thus being held unable to explain

How a superior man who disbelieves

May not believe as well: that's Schelling's face!

It's through my coming in the tail of time,

Nicking the minute with a happy tact.

Had I been born three hundred years ago

They'd say, "What's strange? Blongram of course believes;"

And, seventy years since, "disbelieves of course.

But now, He may believe; and yet, and yet

How can He?" All eyes turn with interest.

While men began to go off the line on either side

You, for example, clever to a fault.

The rough and ready man who write apace.

Read somewhat seldom, think perhaps even less

You disbelieve! Who wonders and who cares?

Lord So-and-So — his coat bedecked with wax.

All Peter's chains about his waist, his back

Brave with the needlework of noodledom —

Believes! Again, who wonders and who cares?

But I, the man of sense and learning too.

The able to think yet act, the this, the that,

I, to believe at this late time of day!

Enough; you see, I need not fear contempt.

— Except it's yours! Admire me as these may,

You don't. But whom at least do you admire?

Present your own perfection, your ideal,

Your pattern man for a minute — oh, make haste!

Is it Napoleon you would have us grow?

Concede the means; allow his head and hand,

(A large concession, clever as you are)

Good! In our common primal element

Of unbelief (we can't believe, you know

We're still at that admission, recollect?)

Where do you find — apart from, towering o'er

The secondary temporary aims

Which satisfy the gross taste you despise —

Where do you find his star? — his crazy trust

God knows through what or in what? it's alive

And shines and leads him, and that's all we want.

Have we aught in our sober night shall point

Such ends as his were, and direct the means

Of working out our purpose straight as his,

Nor bring a moment's trouble on success

With after-care to justify the same?

— Be a Napoleon, and yet disbelieve —

Why, the man's mad, friend, take his light away!

What's the vague good o' the world, for which you dare

With comfort to yourself blow millions up?

We neither of us see it! we do not

The blown-up millions—matter of their brains

And within: of their bowels and so forth,

In that bewildering entanglement

Of horrible eventualities

Past calculation to the end of time!

Can I mistake for some clear word of God

(Which were my ample warrant for it all)

His puffs of hazy instinct, idle talk,

"The State, that's I," quack-nonsense about
crowns,

And (when one beats the man to his last hold)

A vague idea of setting things to rights,

Policing people efficaciously,

More to their profit, most of all to his own;

The whole to end that smallest of ends

By an Austrian marriage, cant to us the Church,

And resurrection of the old régime?

Would I, who hope to live a dozen years,

Fight Austerlitz for reasons such and such?

No: for, concede me but the merest chance

Doubt may be wrong — there's judgment, life to come!

With just that chance, I dare not. Doubt proves right?

This present life is all? — you offer me

Its dozen noisy years, without a chance

That wedding an archduchess, wearing lace,

And getting called by divers new-coined names.

Will drive off ugly thoughts and let me dine,

Sleep, read and chat in quiet as I like?

Therefore I will not.

Take another case;

Fit up the cabin yet another way.

What say you to the poets? shall we write

Hamlet, Othello — make the world our own,

Without a risk to run of either sort?

I can't! — to put the strongest reason first.

"But try," you urge, "the trying shall suffice;

The aim, if reached or not, makes great the life:

Try to be Shakespeare, leave the rest to fate!"

Spare my self-knowledge — there's no fooling me!

If I prefer remaining my poor self,

I say not in self-dispraise but praise.

If I'm a Shakespeare, let the well alone;

Why should I try to be what now I am?

If I'm no Shakespeare, as too probable, —

His power and consciousness and self-delight

And all we want in common, shall I find

Tiring forever? while on points of taste

Wherewith, to speak it humbly, he and I

Are dowered alike — I'll ask you, I or he.

Which in our two lives realizes most?

Much, he imagined — somewhat, I possess.

He had the imagination; stick to that!
Let him say, "In the face of my soul's works
Your world is worthless and I touch it not Lost I should wrong them" — I'll withdraw my plea.
But does he say so? look upon his life!
Himself, who only can, gives judgment there.
He leaves his towers and gorgeous palaces
To build the trimmest house in Stratford town;
Saves money, spends it, owns the worth of things.

Giovanni Romano’s pictures, Dowland’s lute;
Enjoy a show, respects the puppets, too,
And none more, had he seen its entry once,
Than “Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal.”
Why then should I who play that personage,
The very Pandulph Shakespeare’s fancy made,
Be told that had the poet chanced to start
From where I stand now (some degree like mine)
Being just the goal he ran his race to reach!
He would have run the whole race back, forsooth.
And left being Pandulph, to begin write plays?
Ah, the earth’s best can be but the earth’s best!
Did Shakespeare live, he could but sit at home
And get himself in dreams the Vatican,
Greek busts, Venetian paintings, Roman walls,
And English books, none equal to his own,
Which I read, bound in gold (he never did).
—Term’s fall, Naples’ bay, and Gothard’s top—

Eh, friend? I could not fancy one of these;
But, as I pour this claret, there they are;
I’ve gained them — crossed Saint Gothard last July.
With ten mules to the carriage and a bed
Slung inside; is my hap the worse for that?
We want the same things, Shakespeare and myself.
And what I want, I have: he, gifted more,
Could fancy he too had them when he liked,
But not so thoroughly that, if fate allowed,
He would not have them also in my sense.
We play one game; I send the ball aloft
No less adroitly that of fifty strokes
Scarcely five go over the wall so wide and high
Which sends them back to me: I wish and get.
He struck balls higher and with better skill,
But at a poor fence level with his head,
And hit — his Stratford house, a coat of arms,
Successful dealings in his grain and wool.
—While I receive heaven’s incense in my nose
And style myself the cousin of Queen Bess.
Ask him, if this life’s all, who wins the game?
Believe — and our whole argument breaks up.
Enthusiasm — the best thing; I repeat;
Only, we can’t command it; fire and life
Are all, dead matter’s nothing, we agree
And be it a mad dream or God’s very breath,
The fact's the same. — belief’s the fire, once in us,
Makes of all else mere stuff to show itself:
We penetrate our life with such a glow
As fire lends wood and iron — this turns steel,
That burns to ash — all’s one, fire proves its power.
For good or ill, since men call flame success.
But paint a fire, it will not therefore burn.

Light one in me, I'll find it food enough!
Why, to be Luther — that’s a life to lead,
Incomparably better than my own.
He comes, reveals God’s earth for God, he says,
Sets up God’s rule again by simple means,
Reopens a shut book, and all is done,
He flared out in the flaring of mankind:
Such Luther’s luck was: how shall such be mine?
If he succeeded, nothing’s left to do;
And if he did not altogether — well,
Strauss is the next advance. All Strauss should be
I might be also. But to what result?
He looks upon no future: Luther did.
What can I gain on the denying side?
Ice makes no conflagration. State the facts,
Read the text right, emancipate the world —
The emancipated world enjoys itself.
With scarce a thank-you: Blongram told it first
It could not owe a farthing, — not to him
More than Saint Paul! ’t would press its pay.
you think?
Then add there’s still that plagny hundredth chance
Strauss may be wrong. And so a risk is run —
For what gain? not for Luther’s, who secured
A real heaven in his heart throughout his life,
Supposing death a little altered things.

“Ay, but since really you lack faith,” you cry.
“You run the same risk really on all sides,
In cool indifference as bold unbelieb.
As well be Strauss as swing ’twixt Paul and him.
It’s not worth having, such imperfect faith,
No more available to do faith’s work
Than unbelieb like mine. Whole faith, or none!”

Softly, my friend! I must dispute that point.
Once own the use of faith, I’ll find you faith.
We’re back on Christian ground. You call for faith:
I show you doubt, to prove that faith exists.
The more of doubt, the stronger faith, I say.
If faith o’ercomes doubt? How I know it does?
By life and man’s free will, God gave for that!
To mould life as we choose it, shows our choice:
That’s our one act, the previous word’s his own.
You criticise the soul? it reared this tree —
This broad life and whatever fruit it bears!
What matter though I doubt at every pore,
Head-doubts, heart-doubts, doubts at my fingers’ ends,
Doubts in the trivial work of every day,
Doubts at the very bases of my soul
In the grand moments when she probes herself
If finally I have a life to show,
The thing I did, brought out in evidence
Against the thing done to me underground
By hell and all its brood, for aught I know?
I say, whence sprang this? shows it faith or doubt? All’s doubt in me; where’s break of faith in this? It is the idea, the feeling and the love, God means mankind should strive for and show forth Whatever be the process to that end,— And not historic knowledge, logic sound, And metaphysical acumen, sure! "What think ye of Christ," friend? when all’s done and said. Like you this Christianity or not? It may be false, but will you wish it true? Has it your vote to be so if it can? Trust you an instinct silenced long ago That will break silence and enjoin you love What mortified philosophy is hoarse, And all in vain, with bidding you despise? If you desire faith — then you’ve faith enough: What else seeks God — may, what else seek ourselves? You form a notion of me, we’ll suppose, On hearsay: it’s a favorable one: "But still!" (you add), "there was no such good man. Because of contradiction in the facts, One proves, for instance, he was born in Rome, This Blougram; yet throughout the tales of him I see he figures as an Englishman, Well, the two things are reconcilable. But would I rather you discovered that, Subjoining — "Still, what matter though they be? Blougram concerns me naught, born here or there." Pure faith indeed — you know not what you ask! Naked belief in God the Omnipotent, Omniscent, Omnipresent, sears too much The sense of conscious creatures to be borne. It were the seeing him, no flesh shall dare. Some think, Creation’s meant to show him forth! I say it’s meant to hide him all it can. And that’s what all the blessed evil’s for. Its use in Time is to environ us, Our breath, our drop of dew, with shield enough Against that sight till we can bear its stress. Under a vertical sun, the exposed brain And lidsless eye and disemprisoned heart Less certainly would wither up at once Than mind, confronted with the truth of him. But time and earth case-harden us to live; The feeblest sense is trusted most: the child Feels God a moment, icorns o’er the place, Plays on and grows to be a man like us. With me, faith means perpetual unbelief. Kept quiet like the snake neath Michael’s foot Who stands calm just because he feels it writhe. Or, if that’s too ambitious, — here’s my box — I need the excitement of a pinch Threatening the torso of the inside-nose Nigh on the imminent sneeze that never comes. ‘Leave it in peace," advise the simple folk: Make it aware of peace by itching-fits, Say I — let doubt occasion still more faith! You’ll say, once all believed, man, woman, child, In that dear middle-age these noodles praise. How you’d exult if I could put you back Six hundred years, blot out cosmogony, Geology, ethnology, what not, (Greek endings, each the little passing-bell That signifies some faith’s about to die), And set you square with Genesis again,— When such a traveller told you his last news, He saw the ark a-top of Ararat But did not climb there since ‘t was getting dusk And robber-bands infest the mountain’s foot! How should you feel, I ask, in such an age, How act? As other people felt and did; With soul more blank than this decanter’s knob, Believe — and yet lie, kill, rob, fornicate, Full in belief’s face, like the beast you’d be! No, when the fight begins within himself, A man’s worth something. God stoops o’er his head, Satan looks up between his feet — both tug — He’s left, himself, i’ the middle: the soul wakes And grows. Prolong that battle through his life! Never leave growing till the life to come! Here, we’ve got callons to the Virgin’s winks That used to puzzle people wholesomely: Men have outgrown the shame of being fools. What are the laws of nature, not to bend If the Church bid them? — brother Newman asks. Up with the Immaculate Conception, then — On to the rack with faith! — is my advice. Will not that harry us upon our knees, Knocking our breasts, "It can’t be — yet it shall! Who am I, the worm, to argue with my Pope? Low things confound the high things!" and so forth. That’s better than acquitting God with grace As some folk do. He’s tried — no case is proved. Philosophy is lenient — he may go! You’ll say, the old system’s not so obsolete But men believe still: ay, but who and where? King Bomba’s lazarouni foster yet The sacred flame, so Antonelli writes; But even of these, what ragamuffin-saint Believes God watches him continually, As he believes in fire that it will burn, Or rain that it will drench him? Break fire’s law, Sin against rain, although the penalty Be just a sin or soaking? "No," he smiles; "These laws are laws that can enforce them-selves."

The sum of all is — yes, my doubt is great. My faith’s still greater, then my faith’s enough.
I have read much, thought much, experienced much.
Yet would die rather than avow my fear.
The Naples' liquefaction may be false,
When set to happen by the palace-clock
According to the clouds or dinner-time.
I hear you recommend, I might at least
Eliminate, dear Sir, my fear.
Since I adopt it; keeping what I must
And leaving what I can—such points as this.
I won't— that is, I can't throw one away.
Supposing there's no truth in what I hold
About the need of trial to man's faith,
Still, when you bid me purify the same,
To such a process I discern no end.
Clearing off one excrescence to see two,
There's ever a next in size, now grown as big,
That meets the knife: I cut and cut again!
First cut the Liquefaction, what comes last
But Fichte's clever cut at God himself?
Experimentalize on sacred things!
I trust nor hand nor eye nor heart nor brain
To stop betimes: they all get drunk alike.
The first step, I am master not to take.

You'd find the cutting-process to your taste
As much as leaving growths of lies unpruned,
Nor see more danger in it,—you retort.
Your taste's worth mine; but my taste proves more wise
When we consider that the steadfast hold
On the extreme end of the chain of faith
Gives all the advantage, makes the difference
With the rough purblind mass we seek to rule:
We are their lords, or they are free of us,
Just as we tighten or relax our hold.
So, other matters equal, we'll revert
To the first problem—which, if solved my way
And thrown into the balance, turns the scale—
How we may lead a comfortable life.
How suit our luggage to the cabin's size.

Of course you are remarking all this time
How narrowly and grossly I view life,
Respect the creature-comforts, care to rule
The masses, and regard complacently
"The cabin," in our old phrase. Well, I do.
I act for, talk for, live for this world now,
As this world prizes action, life and talk:
No prejudice to what next world may prove,
Whose new laws and requirements, my best pledge
To observe then, is that I observe these now,
Shall do hereafter what I do meanwhile.
Let us concede (gratuitously though)
Next life relieves the soul of body, yields
Pure spiritual enjoyment: well, my friend.
Why lose this life if the meantime, since its use
May be to make the next life more intense?

Do you know, I have often had a dream
(Work it up in your next month's article)
Of man's poor spirit in its progress, still Losing true life forever and a day
Through ever trying to be and ever being
In the evolution of successive spheres—
Before its actual sphere and place of life,
Halfway into the next, which having reached,
It shoots with corresponding foolery
Halfway into the next still, on and off!
As when a traveller, bound from North to South,
Scouts fur in Russia: what's its use in France?
In France, spurs flannel: where's its need in Spain?
In Spain drops cloth, too cumbersome for Algerians!
Linen goes next, and last the skin itself,
A superfluity at Timbuctoo.
When, through his journey, was the fool at ease?

I'm at ease now, friend; worldly in this world,
I take and like its way of life; I think
My brothers, who administer the means,
Live better for my comfort—that's good too;
And God, if he pronounce upon such life,
Approves my service, which is better still.
If he keep silence,—why, for you or me
Or that brute beast pulled-up in to-day's "Times,"
What odds is't, save to ourselves, what life we lead?

You meet me at this issue: you declare,—
All special-pleading done with—truth is truth,
And justifies itself by undreamed ways.
You don't fear but it's better, if we doubt,
To say so, act up to our truth perceived
However feebly. Do then,—act away!
'Tis there I'm on the watch for you. How one acts
Is, both of us agree, our chief concern:
And how you'll act is what I fain would see
If, like the candid person you appear,
You dare to make the most of your life's scheme
As I of mine, live up to its full law
Since there's no higher law that counterchecks,
Put natural religion to the test.
You've just demolished the revealed with—quick,
Down to the root of all that checks your will,
All prohibition to lie, kill and thieves,
Or even to be an atheistic priest!
Suppose a pricking to incontinence—
Philosophers deduce you chastity.
Or shame, from just the fact that at the first
Whoso embraced a woman in the field,
Threw club down and forewent his brains beside,
So, stand a ready victim in the reach
Of any brother savage, club in hand;
Hence saw the use of going out of sight
In wood or cave to prosecute his loves:
I read this in a French book t'other day.
Does law so analyzed coerce you much?
Oh, men spin clouds of fuzz where matters end,
But who you reach where the first thread begins,
You'll soon cut that,—which means you can,
but won't,
Through certain instincts, blind, unreasoned-out.
You dare not set aside, you can't tell why,
But there they are, and so you let them rule.
Then, friend, you seem as much a slave as I,
A liar, conscious coward and hypocrite,
At yours, I knew beforehand, so enjoyed,
What now I should be—as, permit the word,
I pretty well imagine your whole range
And stretch of teneter twenty years to come.
We both have minds and bodies much alike:
In truth's name, don't you want my bishopric,
My daily bread, my influence, and my state?
You're young. I'm old; you must be old one day;
Will you and then, as I do hour by hour,
Women their lovers kneel to, who cut curls
From your fat lap-dog's ear to grace a brooch—
Dukes, who petition just to kiss your ring—
With much beside you know or may conceive?
Suppose we die to-morrow: well, here am I,
Such were my gains, life bore this fruit to me,
While writing all the same my articles
On music, poetry, the fictile vase
Found at Alban, chess, Anacreon's Greek,
But you—the highest honor in your life,
The thing you'll crown yourself with, all your days,
Is—dining here and drinking this last glass
I pour you out in sign of amity,
Before we part forever. Of your power
And social influence, worldly worth in short,
Judge what's my estimation by the tact,
I do not desist to enjoin, beseech,
Hint secrecy on one of all these words!
You're shrewd and know that should you publish one
The world would brand the lie—my enemies first,
Who'd sneer—"the bishop's an arch-hypocrite
And knave perhaps, but not so frank a fool." Whereas I should not dare for both my ears
Breathe one such syllable, smile one such smile,
Before the chaplain who reflects myself—
My shade's so much more potent than your flesh.
What's your reward, self-abnegating friend?
Stood you confessed of those exceptional
And privileged great natures that dwarf mine—
A zelot with a mad ideal in reach,
A poet just about to print his ode,
A statesman with a scheme to stop this war,
An artist whose religion is his art—
I should have nothing to object; such men
Carry the fire, all things grow warm to them,
Their drugget's worth my purple, they beat me.
But you—you're just as little those as I
You, Gigadibs, who, thirty years of age,
Write stately for Blackwood's Magazine,
Believe you see two points in Hamlet's soul
Unseized by the Germans yet—which view
And string you'll print—
Meantime the best you have to show being still
That lively lightsome article we took Almost for the true Dickens, what's its name?
"The Shun and Cellar, or Whitechapel life
Limned after dark!" it made me laugh, I know,
And pleased a month, and brought you in ten pounds.
—Success I recognize and compliment,
And therefore give you, if you choose, three words.
(The card and pencil-scratch is quite enough)
Which whether here, in Dublin or New York,
Will get you, prompt as at my eyebrow’s wink,
Such terms as never you aspired to get
In all our own reviews and some not ours.
Go write your lively sketches! be the first
"Blougram, or The Eccentric Confidence"
Or better simply say, "The Outward-bound,"
Why, men as soon would throw it in my teeth
As copy and quote the infancy chalked broad
About me on the church-door opposite.
You will not wait for that experience though,
I fancy, hovsoever you decide.
To discontinue — not detesting, not
Defaming, but at least — despising me!

Over his wine so smiled and talked his hour
Sylvester Blougram, styled in partibus
Episcopus, nec non — (the dence knows what It’s changed to by our novel hierarchy)
With Gigadib the literary man,
Who played with spoons, explored his plate’s design,
And raged the olive-stones about its edge,
While the great bishop rolled him out a mind
Long crumpled, till creased consciousness lay smooth.

For Blougram, he believed, say, half he spoke.
The other portion, as he shaped it thus
For argumentatory purposes,
He felt his foe was foolish to dispute.
Some arbitrary accidental thoughts
That crossed his mind, amusing because new,
He chose to represent as fixtures there,
Invariable convictions (such they seemed
Beside his interlocutor’s loose cards
Flung daily down, and not the same way twice),
While certain hell-deep instincts, man’s weak tongue
Is never bold to utter in their truth
Because styled hell-deep ('t is an old mistake
To place hell at the bottom of the earth),
He ignored these, — not having in readiness
Their nomenclature and philosophy:
He said true things, but called them by wrong names.
"On the whole," he thought, "I justify myself
On every point where cavillers like this
Oppugn my life: he tries one kind of fence,
I close. he’s worsted, that’s enough for him.
He’s on the ground: if ground should break away
I take my stand on, there’s a firmer yet
Beneath it, both of us may sink and reach.
His ground was over mine and broke the first:
So, let him sit with me this many a year!"

He did not sit five minutes. Just a week
Sufficed his sudden healthy vehemence.
Something had struck him in the "Outward-bound"
Another way than Blougram’s purpose was:
And having bought, not cabin-furniture

But settler’s-implements (enough for three)
And started for Australia — there, I hope,
By this time he has tested his first plough,
And studied his last chapter of Saint John.

CLEON

"As certain also of your own poets have said"

CLEON the poet (from the sprinkled isles,
Lily on lily, that overlace the sea,
And laugh their pride when the light wave hisps
"Greece") —
To Protus in his Tyranny: much health!

They give thy letter to me, even now:
I read and seen as if I heard thee speak.
The master of thy galley still unites
Gift after gift; they block my court at last
And pile themselves along its portico
Royal with sunset, like a thought of thee:
And one white she-slave from the group dispersed
Of black and white slaves (like the chequer-work
Pavement, at once my nation’s work and gift,
Now covered with this settle-down of doves),
One lyric woman, in her crowns vest
Woven of sea-wools, with her two white hands
Commends to me the strainer and the cup
Thy lip hath bettered ere it blesses mine.

Well-consulted, king, in thy munificence!
For so shall men remark, in such an act
Of love for him whose song gives life its joy,
Thy recognition of the use of life;
Nor call thy spirit barely adequate
To help on life in straight ways, broad enough
For vulgar souls, by ruling and the rest.
Thou, in the daily building of thy tower, —
Whether in fierce and sudden spasms of toil,
Or through dim hulls of unapparent growth,
Or when the general work ’mid good acclaim
Climbed with the eye to cheer the architect, —
Dost never engage in work for mere work’s sake —
Hadst ever in thy heart the hinging hope
Of some eventual rest a-top of it.
Whence, all the tumult of the building hushed,
Thou first of men mightest look out to the East:
The vulgar saw thy tower, thou sawest the sun.

For this, I promise on thy festival
To pour libation, looking o’er the sea,
Making this slave narrate thy fortunes, speak
Thy great words, and describe thy royal face —
Wishing thee wholly where Zeus lives the most,
Within the eventual element of calm,

Thy letter's first requirement meets me here.
It is as thou hast heard: in one short life
I, Cleon, have effected all those things
Thou wonderingly dost enumerate.
That epodi on thy hundred plates of gold
Is mine, — and also mine the little chant,
So sure to rise from every fishing-bark
When, lights at prow, the seamen haul their net.
The image of the sun-god on the phaethon turn from the sun's self to see, is nine; The Pocile, o'er-storied its whole length, As thou didst hear, with painting, is mine too. I know the true proportions of a man And woman also, not observed before; And I have written three books on the soul, Proving absurd all written hitherto, And putting us to ignorance again. For now, as why, I have combined the moods, Inventing one. In brief, all arts are mine; Thus much the people know and recognize, Throughout our seventeen islands. Marvel not, We of these latter days, with greater mind Than our forerunners, since more composite, Look not so great, beside their simple way, To a judge who only sees one way at once, One mind-point and no other at a time, — Compares the small part of a man of us With some whole man of the heroic age. Great in his way — not ours, nor meant for ours. And ours is greater, had we skill to know: For, what we call this life of men on earth, This sequence of the soul's achievements here Being, as I find much reason to conceive, Intended to be viewed eventually As a great whole, not analyzed to parts, But each part having reference to all, — How shall a certain part, pronounced complete, Endure effacement by another part? Was the thing done? — then, what's to do again? See, in the chequered pavement opposite, Suppose the artist made a perfect rhomb, And next a lozenge, then a trapezoid — He did not overlay them, superimpose The new upon the old and blot it out, But laid them on a level in his work, Making at last a picture; there it lies. So, first the perfect separate forms were made. The portions of mankind; and after, so, Occurred the combination of the same, For where had been a progress, otherwise? Mankind, made up of all the single men, — In such a synthesis the labor ends, Now mark me! these divine men of old time Have reached, thou sayest well, each at one point. The outside verge that rounds our faculty; And where they reached, who can do more than reach? It takes but little water just to touch At some one point the inside of a sphere, And, as we turn the sphere, touch all the rest In due succession: but the finer air Which not so palpably nor obviously, Though no less universally, can touch The whole circumference of that emptied sphere, Fills it more fully than the water did; Holds thrice the weight of water in itself Resolved into a subtler element. And yet the vapors call the sphere first full Up to the visible height — and after, void; Not knowing air's more hidden properties. And thus our soul, misconceived, cries out to Zeus To vindicate his purpose in our life: Why stay we on the earth unless to grow? Long since, I knew, wrote the fiction out, That he or other god descended here And, once for all, showed simultaneously What, in its nature, never can be shown, Peaceful or in succession; — showed, I say, The worth both absolute and relative Of all his children from the birth of time, His instruments for all appointed work. I now go on to image; might we hear The judgment which should give the due to each, Show where the labor lay and where the ease, And prove Zeus' self, the latent everywhere! This is a dream: — but no dream, let us hope, That years and days, the summers and the springs, Follow each other with unwaning powers. The grapes which dye thy wine are richer far, Through culture, than the wild wealth of the rock; The savoy plum than the savage-tasted drupe; The pastured honey-bee drops choicer sweet; The flowers turn double, and the leaves turn flowers; That young and tender crescent-moon, thy slave, Sleeping above her robe as buoyed by clouds, Refines upon the women of my youth. What, and the soul alone deteriorates? I have not chanted verse like Homer, no — Nor swept string like Terpander, no — nor carved And painted men like Phidias and his friend: I am not great as they are, point by point. But I have entered into sympathy With these four, running these into one soul, Who, separate, ignored each other's art. Say, is it nothing that I know them all? The wild flower was the larger; I have dashed Rose-blood upon its petals, pricked its cup's Honey with wine, and driven its seed to fruit, And show a better flower if not so large: I stand myself. Refer this to the gods Whose gift alone it is! which, shall I dare (All pride apart) upon the absurd pretext That such a gift by chance lay in my hand, Discourse of lightly or depreciate? It might have fallen to another's hand: what then? I pass too surely: let at least truth stay! And next, of what thou followest on to ask. This being with me as I declare, O king, My works, in all these varicolored kinds, So done by me, accepted so by men Thou askest, if (my soul thus in men's hearts) I must not be accounted to attain The very crown and proper end of life? Inquiring thence how, now life closely up, I face death with success in my right hand: Whether I fear death less than dost thyself The fortunate of men? " For" (writest thou) "Thou leavest much behind, while I leave naught. Thy life stays in the poems men shall sing, The pictures men shall study; while my life, Complete and whole now in its power and joy, Dies altogether with my brain and arm. Is lost indeed; since, what survives myself?
The brazen statue to o'erlook my grave,
Set on the promontory which I named,
And that — some supple courtier of my heir
Shall use its robed and sceptred arm, perhaps,
To fix the rope to, which best drags it down,
I go then: triumph thou, who dost not go!"

Nay, thou art worthy of hearing my whole mind.
Is this apparent, when thou turn'st to muse
Upon the scheme of earth and man in chieft.
That admiration grows as knowledge grows?
That imperfection means perfection hid,
Reserved in part, to grace the after-time?
If, in the morning of philosophy,
Ere aught had been recorded, my perceived,
Thou, with the light now in thee, couldst have looked
On all earth's tenantry, from worm to bird,
Ere man, her last, appeared upon the stage —
Thou wouldst have seen them perfect, and deign
The perfectness of others yet unseen.

Conceding which, — had Zeus then questioned thee,
"Shall I go on a step, improve on this,
Do more for visible creatures than is done?"
Thou wouldst have answered, "Ay, by making each
Grow conscious in himself — by that alone.
All's perfect else: the shell sticks fast the rock,
The fish strikes through the sea, the snake both swims
And slides, forth range the beasts, the birds take flight,
Till life's mechanisms can no further go —
And all this joy in natural life is put
Like fire from off thy finger into each,
So exquisitely perfect is the same,
But 'tis pure fire, and they mere matter are;
It has them, not they it: and so I choose
For man, thy last premeditated work
(If I might add a glory to the scheme),
That a third thing should stand apart from both
A quality arise within his soul,
Which, intro-active, made to supervise
And feel the force it has, may view itself,
And so be happy." Man might live at first
The animal life: but is there nothing more?
In due time, let him critically learn
How he lives; and, the more he gets to know
Of his own life's adaptabilities.
The more-joy-giving will his life become.
Thus man, who hath this quality, is best.

But thou, king, hadst more reasonably said:
"Let progress end at once, — man make no step
Beyond the natural man, the better beast,
Using his senses, not the sense of sense."
In man there's failure, only since he left
The lower and unconscious forms of life.
We called it an advance, the rendering plain
Man's spirit might grow consciouss of man's life,
And, by new lore so added to the old,
Take each step higher over the brute's head.
This grew the only life, the pleasure-house,
Watch tower and treasure-fortress of the soul,
Which whole surrounding flats of natural life
Seemed only fit to yield subsistence to;
A tower that crowns a country. But alas,
The soul now climbs it just to perish there!
For thence we have discovered ("tis no dream —
We know this, which we had not else perceived)
That there's a world of capability
For joy, spread round about us, meant for us,
Inviting us; and still the soul craves all.
And still the flesh replies, "Take no yet more
Than ere thou clombest the tower to look abroad!
Nay, so much less us that fatigue has brought Deduction to it." We struggle, faint to enlarge
Our bounded physical recipiency.
Increase our power, supply fresh oil to life,
Repair the waste of age and sickness: no,
It skills not! life's inadequate to joy,
As the soul sees joy, tempting life to take.
They praise a fountain in my garden here
Wherewith a Naiad sends the water-bow
Thin from her tube; she smiles to see it rise,
What if told her, it is just a thread
From that great river which the hills shut up,
And mock her with my leave to take the same?
The artificer has given her one small tube
Past power to widen or exchange — what boots
To know she might spout oceans if she could?
She cannot lift beyond her first thin thread:
And so a man can use but a man's joy
While he sees God's: "Is it for Zeus to boast,
"See, man, how happy I live, and despair
That I may be still happier — for thy use!"
If this were so, we could not thank our lord,
As hearts beat on to doing; 'tis not so
Malice it is not. Is it carelessness?
Still, no. If care — where is the sign? I ask.
And get no answer, and agree in sum,
O king, with thy profound discouragement,
Who seest the wider but to sigh the more.
Most progress is most failure: thou sayest well.

The last point now: — thou dost except a case —
Holding joy not impossible to one
With artist-gifts — to such a man as I
Who leave behind me living works indeed;
For, such a poem, such a painting lives,
What? dost thou verily trip upon a word,
Confound the accurate view of what joy is (Caught somewhat clearer by my eyes than thine)
With feeling joy? confound the knowing how
And showing how to live (my faculty)!
With actually living? — Otherwise
Where is the artist's vantage o'er the king?
Because in my great epos I display
How divers men young, strong, fair, wise, can act —
Is this as though I acted? if I paint.
Carve the young Phoebus, am I therefore young?
Methinks I'm older that I bowed myself
The many years of pain that taught me art!
Indeed, to know is something, and to prove
How all this beauty might be enjoyed, is more:
But, knowing naught, to enjoy is something too.
You rower, with the moulded muscles there,
Lowering the sail, is nearer it than I.
Lean write love-songs: thy fair slave's an ode.
I get to sing of love, when grown too gray.
For being beloved: she turns to that young man.
The muscles all a-ripple on his back.
I know the joy of kingship: well, thou art king!

"But," sayest thou — (and I marvel, I repeat,
To find thee trip on such a mere word: "what
Thou writest, paintest, stays; that does not die:
Supply survives, because we sing her songs,
And Eschylus, because we read his plays!"
Why, if they live still, let them come and take Thy slave in my despite, drink from thy cup.
Speak in my place. Thou diest while I survive?
Say rather that my fate is deadlier still,
In this, that every day my sense of joy
Grows more acute, my soul intensifies
By power and insight) more enlarged, more keen;
While every day my hairs fall more and more.
My hand shakes, and the heavy years increase —
The horror quickening still from year to year,
The consummation coming past escape,
When I shall know most, and yet least enjoy.

When all my works wherein I prove my worth,
Being present still to mock me in men's mouths,
Alive still, in the praise of such as thou,
I, I the feeling, thinking, acting man,
The man who loved his life so ever-much,
Sleep in my urn. It is so horrible.
I dare at times imagine to my need
Some future state revealed to us by Zeus,
Unlimited in capability.
For joy, as this is in desire for joy,
To seek which, the joy-hunger forces us:
That, stung by straitness of our life, made strait
On purpose to make prized the life at large —
Freed by the throbbing impulse we call death,
We burst there as the worm into the fly.
Who, while a worm still, wants his wings. But no!
Zeus has not yet revealed it; and alas,
He must have done so, were it possible.

Live long and happy, and in that thought die:
Glad for what was! Farewell. And for the rest,
I cannot tell thy messenger aright.
Where to deliver what he bears of thing?
To one called Paulus; we have heard his fame
Indeed, if Christus be not one with him —
I know not, nor am troubled much to know.
Thou canst not think a mere barbarian Jew,
As Paulus proves to be, one circumcised.
Hath access to a secret shunt from us?
Thou wrongest our philosophy, O king,
In stooping to inquire of such an one.
As if his answer could impose at all!
He writeth, doth he? well, and he may write.
Oh, the Jew infidel scholars! certain slaves.
Who touched on this same isle, preached him
And Christ;
And (as I gathered from a bystander)
Their doctrine could be held by no same man.

ONE WORD MORE

RUDEL TO THE LADY OF TRIPOLI

Originally published in Bells and Pomegranates as the first of two poems, Cristina being the other, under the title Queen Worship.

I

I know a Mount, the gracious Sun perceives
First, when he visits, last, too, when he leaves
The world; and, kindly favored, it repays
The day-long glory of his steadfast gaze
By no change of its large calm front of snow,
And underneath the Mount, a Flower I know.
He cannot have perceived, that changes ever
At his approach; and, in the lost endeavor
To live his life, has parted, one by one,
With all a flower's true graces, for the grace
Of being but a foolish mimic sun,
With ray-like florets round a disk-like face.
Men nobly call by many a name the Mount
As over many a land of theirs its large
Calm front of snow like a triumphal targe
Is reared, and still with old names, fresh names vie.
Each to its proper praise and own account:
Men call the Flower the Sunflower, sportively.

II

Oh, Angel of the East, one, one gold look
Across the waters to this twilight mook,
— The far sad waters, Angel, to this mook!

III

Dear Pilgrim, art thou for the East indeed?
Go! — saying ever as thou dost proceed,
That I, French Rudel, choose for my device
A sunflower outspread like a sacrifice
Before its idol. See! These inexpert
And hurried fingers could not fail to hurt
The woven picture; 'tis a woman's skill
Indeed; but nothing baffled me, so ill
Or well, the work is finished. Say, men feed
On songs I sing, and therefore bask the bees
On my flower's breast as on a platform broad:
But, as the flower's concern is not for these
But solely for the sun, so men applaud
In vain this Rudel, he not looking here
But to the East — the East! Go, say this, Pilgrim dear!

ONE WORD MORE

TO E. B. B.

London, September, 1855

Originally appended to the collection of Poems called Men and Women, the greater portion of which has now been, more correctly, distributed under the other titles of this edition. R. B.

I

There they are, my fifty men and women
Naming me the fifty poems finished!
Take them, Love, the book and me together:
Where the heart lies, let the brain lie also.
Rafael made a century of sonnets,
Made and wrote them in a certain volume
Dusted with the silver-pointed pencil
Else he only used to draw Madonnas:
These, the world might view—but one, the volume.

Who that one, you ask? Your heart instructs you,
Did she live and love it all her lifetime?
Did she drop, his lady of the sonnets,
Die, and let it drop beside her pillow?
Where it lay in place of Rafael's glory,
Rafael's cheek so dutchons and so loving
Check, the world was wont to hail a painter's,
Rafael's cheek, her love had turned a poet's?

You and I would rather read that volume,
(Taken to his bearing bosom by it)
Lean and list the bosom-beats of Rafael,
Would we not? than wonder at Madonnas—
Her, San Sisto names, and Her, Foligno,
Her, that visits Florence in a vision,
Her, that's left with lies in the Louvre—
Seen by us and all the world in circle.

You and I will never read that volume,
Guido Reni, like his own eye's apple
Guarded long the treasure-book and loved it,
Guido Reni dying, all Bologna
Cried, and the world cried too, "Ours, the treasure!"
Suddenly, as rare things will, it vanished.

Dante once prepared to paint an angel:
Whom to please? You whisper "Beatrice."
While he mused and traced it and retraced it, (Peradventure with a pen corroded
Still by drops of that hot ink he dipped for,
When, his left-hand i' the hair o' the wicked,
Back he held the brow and pricked its stigma,
Bit into the live man's flesh for parchment,
Loosed him, laughed to see the writing rankle,
Let the wretch go festering through Florence) —
Dante, who loved well because he hated,
Hated wickedness that hinder's loving,
Dante standing, studying his angel,
In there broke the folk of his Inferno.
Says he — "Certain people of importance" (Such he gave his daily dreadful line to)
"Entered and would seize, sooths, the poet." Says the poet — "Then I stopped my painting."

You and I would rather see that angel,
Painted by the tenderness of Dante.
Would we not?—than read a fresh Inferno.

What of Rafael's sonnets, Dante's picture?
This: no artist lives and loves, that longs not
Once, and only once, and for one only,
(Ah, the prize!) to find his love a language
Fit and fair and simple and sufficient—
Using nature that's an art to others,
Not, this one time, art that's turned his nature.
Ay, of all the artists living, loving,
None but would forgo his proper dowry,—
Does he paint? he fain would write a poem,—
Does he write? he fain would paint a picture,
Put to proof art alien to the artist's,
Once, and only once, and for one only,
So to be the man and leave the artist,
Gain the man's joy, miss the artist's sorrow.

Wherefore? Heaven's gift takes earth's abatement!
He who smiles the rock and spreads the water,
Bidding drink and live a crowd beneath him,
Even he, the minute makes immortal.
Proves, perchance, but mortal in the minute,
Desecrates, belike, the deed in doing.
While he smiles, how can he but remember,
So he smote before, in such a peril,
When they stood and mocked — "Shall smiling help us?"
When they drank and sneered — "A stroke is easy!"
When they wiped their mouths and went their journey,
Throwing him for thanks — "But drought was pleasant."
Thus old memories mar the actual triumph;
Thus the doing savors of disrelish;
Thus achievement backs a gracious somewhat;
O'er-importuned brows becloud the mandate,
Carelessness or consciousness — the gesture,
For he hears an ancient wrong about him,
Sees art and knows again those phalanxed faces,
Hears, yet one time more, the 'customed prelude —
"How shouldst thou, of all men, smite, and save us?"
Guesses what is like to prove the sequel —
"Egypt's flesh-pots — nay, the drought was better."

Oh, the crowd must have emphatic warrant!
Their's, the Sini-forehead's cloven brilliancy,
Right-arm's red-sweep, tongue's imperial flat.
Never dares the man put off the prophet.

Did he love one face from out the thousands,
(Were she Jethro's daughter, white and wifely,
Were she but the Ethiopian bondslave,) He would envy yon dumb patient camel,
Keeping a reserve of scanty water.
Meant to save his own life in the desert;
Ready in the desert to deliver
(Kneeling down to let his breast be opened)
Hoard and life together for his mistress.
XII
I shall never, in the years remaining,
Paint you pictures, no, nor carve you statues,
Make you music that should all-express me;
So it seems: I stand on my attainment.
This of verse alone, one life allows me;
Verse and nothing else have I to give you.
Other heights in other lives, God willing:
All the gifts from all the heights, your own,
Love!

XIII
Yet a semblance of resource avails us—
Shade so finely touched, love's sense must seize it.
Take these lines, look lovingly and nearly.
Lines I write the first time and the last time.
He who works in fresco, steals a hair-brush,
Curbs the liberal hand, subservient proudly,
Gramps his spirit, crowds its all in little,
Makes a strange art of an art familiar,
Fills his lady's missal-marge with flowerets.
He who blows through bronze, may breathe through silver.
Fitty sees made a shambrous princess,
He who writes, may write for once as I do.

XIV
Love, you saw me gather men and women,
Live or dead or fashioned by my fancy.
Enter each and all, and use their service,
Speak from every mouth,—the speech, a poem.
Hardly shall I tell my joys and sorrows,
Hopes and fears, belief and disbelieving:
I am mine and yours—the rest be all men's,
Karshish, Cenon, Norbert, and the fifty.
Let me speak this once in my true person,
Not as Lippo, Rolando, or Andrea,
Though the fruit of speech be just this sentence:
Pray you, look on these my men and women.
Take and keep my fifty poems finished;
Where my heart lies, let my brain lie also!
Poor the speech; be how I speak, for all things.

XV
Not but that you know me! Lo, the moon's self!
Here in London, yonder late in Florence,
Still we find her face, the thrice-transfigured.
Curving on a sky incrusted with color,
Drifted over Fiesole by twilight,
Came she, our new crescent of a hair's-breadth.
Fell she flared it, lumping Samminiato,
Rounder 'twixt the cypress and rounder,
Perfect till the nightingales applaud'd.
Now, a piece of her old self, impoverished,
Hard to greet, she traverses the house-roofs,
Hurries with unhandsome thrift of silver,
Goes spiritedly, glad to finish.

XVI
What, there's nothing in the moon noteworthy?
Nay: for if that moon could love a mortal,
Use, to charm him so to fit a fancy,
All her magic ('tis the old sweet mythes),
She would turn a new side to her mortal,
Side unseen of herdsman, huntsman, steersman—
Blank to Zoroaster on his terrace,
Blind to Galileo on his turret,
Dumb to Homer, dumb to Keats—him, even!
Think, the wonder of the moonstruck mortal—
When she turns round, comes again in heaven,
Opens out anew for worse or better!
Proves she like some portent of an iceberg
Swimming full upon the ship it founders,
Hungry with huge teeth of splintered crystals?
Proves she as the paved work of a sapphire
Seen by Moses when he climbed the mountain?
Moses, Aaron, Nadab and Abihu
Climbed and saw the very God, the Highest,
Stand upon the paved work of a sapphire,
Like the bodied heaven in his clearness
Shone the stone, the sapphire of that paved work,
When they ate and drank and saw God also!

XVII
What were seen? None knows, none ever shall know.
Only this is sure—the sight were other,
Not the moon's same side, born late in Florence,
Dying now impoverished here in London.
God be thanked, the meanest of his creatures
Boasts two soul-sides, one to face the world with,
One to show a woman when he loves her!

XVIII
This I say of me, but think of you, Love!
This to you—yourself my moon of poets!
Ah, but that's the world's side, there's the wonder,
Thus they see you, praise you, think they know you?
There, in turn I stand with them and praise you—
Out of my own self, I dare to phrase it,
But the best is when I glide from out them,
Cross a step or two of dubious twilight,
Come out on the other side, the novel,
Silent silver lights and darks undreamed of,
Where I hush and bless myself with silence.

XIX
Oh, their Rafael of the dear Madonnas,
Oh, their Dante of the dread Inferno,
Wrote one song—and in my brain I sing it,
Drew one angel—borne, see, on my bosom!

IN A BALCONY

Written in 1833, partly at Bagni di Lucca, partly at Rome. It was included in the original series of Men and Women and there divided into three parts.

PERSONS

Norbert.
Constance.
The Queen.

Constance and Norbert.

Norbert. Now!
Constance. Not now!
Nor. Give me them again, those hands:
Put them upon my forehead, how it throbs!
Press them before my eyes, the fire comes through!
You cruellest, you dearest in the world,
Let me! The Queen must grant what’er I ask —
How can I gain you and not ask the Queen?
There she stays waiting for me, here stand you;
Some time or other this was to be asked;
Now is the one time — what I ask, I gain:
Let me ask now, Love!
Con. Do, and ruin us!
Nor. Let it be now, Love! All my soul breaks forth.
How I do love you! Give my love its way!
A man can have but one life and one death,
One heaven, one hell. Let me fulfill my fate —
Grant me my heaven now! Let me know you mine.
Prove you mine, write my name upon your brow,
Hold you and have you, and then die away,
If God please, with completion in my soul!

Con. I am not yours then? How content this man!
I am not his — who change into himself,
Have passed into his heart and beat its beats,
Who give my hands to him, my eyes, my hair,
Give all that was of me away to him —
So well, that now, my spirit turned his own,
Takes part with him against the woman here,
Bids him not stumble at so mere a straw
As caring that the world be cognizant
How he loves her and how she worships him.
You have this woman, not as yet that world.
Go on, I bid, nor stop to care for me
By saving what I cease to care about,
The courtly name and pride of circumstance —
The name you’ll pick up and be garnered with
Just for the poor parade’s sake, nothing more;
Just that the world may slip from under you —
Just that the world may cry, ”So much for him —
The man predestined to the heap of crowns:
There goes his chance of winning one, at least!”
Nor. The world!
Con. You love it! Love me quite as well,
And see if I shall pray for this in vain!
Why must you ponder what it knows or thinks?
Nor. You pray for — what, in vain?
Con. Oh my heart’s heart,
How I do love you, Norbert! That is right:
But listen, or I take my hands away!
You say, ”let it be now:” you would go now
And tell the Queen, perhaps six steps from us,
You love me — so you do, thank God!
Nor. Thank God!
Con. Yes, Norbert, — but you faint would tell your love,
And, what succeeds the telling, ask of her
My hand. Now take this rose and look at it,
Listening to me. You are the minister,
The Queen’s first favorite, nor without a cause,
To-night: completes your wonderful year’s-work
(This palace-feast is held to celebrate)
Made memorable by her life’s success.
The junction of two crowns, on her sole head,
Her house had only dreamed of ancienly:
That this mere dream is grown a stable truth,
To-night’s feast makes authentic. Whose the praise?
Whose genius, patience, energy, achieved
What turned the many heads and broke the hearts?
You are the fate, your minute’s in the heaven.
Next comes the Queen’s turn. “Name your own reward?”

With leave to clash the past, chain the to-come,
Put out an arm and touch and take the sun
And fix it ever full-faced on your earth,
Possess yourself supremely of her life, —
You choose the single thing she will not grant;
Nay, very declaration of which choice
Will turn the scale and neutralize your work:
At best she will forgive you, if she can.
You think I’ll let you choose — her cousin’s hand?
Nor. Wait. First, do you retain your old belief
The Queen is generous, — may, is just?
Con. There, there! So men make women love them, while they know
No more of women’s hearts than . . . look you here,
You that are just and generous beside.
Make it your own case! For example now,
I’ll say — I let you kiss me, hold my hands —
Why? do you know why? I’ll instruct you,
Then —
The kiss, because you have a name at court;
This hand and this, that you may shut in each
A jewel, if you please to pick up such.
That’s horrible? Apply it to the Queen —
Suppose I am the Queen to whom you speak.
”I was a nameless man; you needed me:
Why did I proffer you my aid? there stood
A certain pretty cousin at your side.
Why did I make such common cause with you?
Access to her had not been easy else.
IN A BALCONY

You give my labor here abundant praise?
"Faith, labor, which she overlooked, grew
play.
How shall your gratitude discharge itself?
Give me her hand!"

Nor.

And still I urge the same.
Is the Queen just? just — generous or no?
Con. Yes, just.
You love a rose: no harm
in that:
But was it for the rose's sake or mine
You put it in your bosom? mine, you said —
Then, mine you still must say or else be false.
You told the Queen you served her for herself;
If so, to serve her was to serve yourself.
She thinks, for all your unbelieving face!
I know her. In the hall, six steps from us,
One sees the twenty pictures; there 's a life
Better than life, and yet no life at all.
Conceive her born in such a magic dome,
Pictures all round her! why, she sees the world,
Can recognize its given things and facts,
The fight of giants or the feast of gods,
Sages in senate, beauties at the bath.
Chases and battles, the whole earth's display,
Landscape and sea-piece, down to flowers and fruit —
And who shall question that she knows them all,
In better semblance than the things outside?
Yet bring into the silent gallery
Some live thing to contrast in breath and blood,
Some lion, with the painted lion there —
You think she 'l l understand composedly?
— Say, " that's his fellow in the hunting-piece
Yonder, I've turned to praise a hundred times!"

Not so. Her knowledge of our actual earth,
Its hopes and fears, concerns and sympathies,
Must be too far, too mediate, too unreal.
The real exists for us outside, not her:
How should it, with that life in these four walls,
That father and that mother, first to last
No father and no mother — friends, a heap,
Lovers, no lack — a husband in due time,
And every one of them alike a lie!
Things painted by a Rubens out of naught
Into what kindness, friendship, love should be;
All better, all more grandiose than the life,
Only no life: mere cloth and surface-paint,
You feel, while you admire. How should she feel?
Yet now that she has stood thus fifty years
The sole spectator in that gallery,
You think to bring this warm real struggling
love
In to her of a sudden, and suppose
She 'l l keep her state untroubled? Here 's the truth —
She 'l apprehend truth's value at a glance,
Prefer it to the pictured loyalty?
You only have to say, "So men are made,
For this they act; the thing has many names,
But this the right one: and now, Queen, be just!"
Your life slips back; you lose her at the word:
You do not even for amends gain me.
He will not understand! oh, Norbert, Norbert,
Do you not understand?

Nor.
The Queen 's the Queen,
I am myself — no picture, but alive
In every nerve and every muscle, here
At the palace-window over the people's street,
As she in the gallery where the pictures glow:
The good of life is precious to us both,
She cannot love; what do I want with rule?
When first I saw your face a year ago
I knew my life's good, my soul heard one voice —
"The woman wonder, there 's no use of life
But just to obtain her! heap earth's woes in one,
And bear them — make a pile of all earth's joys
And spurn them, as they help or help not this; Only, obtain her!" How was it to be?
I found you were the cousin of the Queen;
I must then serve the Queen to get to you.
No other way. Suppose there had been one,
And I, by saying prayers to some white star
With promise of my body and my soul,
Might gain you, — should I pray the star or no?
Instead, there was the Queen to serve! I served.

Helped, did what other servants failed to do.
Neither she sought nor I declared my end.
Her good is hers, my recompense be mine, —
I therefore name you as that recompense.
She dreamed that such a thing could never be?
Let her wake now. She thinks there was more cause
In love of power, high fame, pure loyalty?
Perhaps she fancies men wear out their lives
Chasing such shades. Then, I've a fancy too;
I worked because I want you with my soul:
I therefore ask your hand. Let it be now!

Con. Had I not loved you from the very first,
Were I not yours, could we not steal out thus
So wickedly, so wildly, and so well,
You might become impatient. What's conceived
Of us without here, by the folk within?
Where are you now? immersed in cares of state?
Where am I now? intent on festal robes —
We two, embracing under death's spread hand!
What was this thought for, what that seruple
of yours
Which broke the council up? — to bring about
One minute's meeting in the corridor!
And then the sudden snares, strange secrecies,
Complots inscrutable, deep telegraphs,
Long-planned chance-meetings, hazards of a
look,
"Does she know? does she not know? saved or lost?"
A year of this compression's ecstasy
All goes for nothing! you would give this up
For the old way, the open way, the world's,
His way who beats, and his who sells his wife!
What tempts you? — their notorious happiness
Makes you ashamed of ours? The best you'll gain
Will be — the Queen grants all that you require,
Conceals the cousin, rides herself of you
And me at once, and gives us ample leave
To live like our five hundred happy friends.
The world will show us with officious hand
Our chamber-entry, and stand sentinel
Where we so oft have stolen across its traps!
Get the world's warrant, ring the falcons' feet,
And make it duty to be bold and swift,
Which long ago was nature. Have it so!
We never hawked by rights till flung from fire?

Oh, the man's thought! no woman's such a fool.

Nor. Yes, the man's thought and my thought, which is more —
One made to love you, let the world take note! Have I done worthy work? be love's the praise,
Though hampered by restrictions, barred against
By set forms, blinded by forced secrecy!
Set free my love, and see what love can do
Shown in my life — what work will spring from that!

The world is used to have its business done
On other grounds, find great effects produced,
For power's sake, fame's sake, motives in men's mouth.

So, good! but let my low ground shame their high!
Truth is the strong thing. Let man's life be true!
And love's the truth of mine. Time prove the rest!
I choose to wear you stamped all over me,
Your name upon my forehead and my breast,
You, from the sword's blade to the ribbon's edge,
That men may see, all over, you in me —
That pale loves may die out of their pretence
In face of mine, shames thrown on love fall off.

Permit this, Constance! Love has been so long
Subdued in me, eating me through and through,
That now 'tis all of me and must have way.
Think of my work, that chaos of intrigues,
Those hopes and fears, surprises and delays,
That long endeavor, earnest, patient, slow,
Trembling at last to its assured result:
Then think of this revulsion! I resume
Life after death, (it is no less than life,
After such long unlively laboring days,
And liberate to beauty life's great need
O' the beautiful, which, while it prompted work,
Suppressed itself erewhile. This eve's the time.

This eve intense with you first trembling star
We seem to pant and reach; scarce aught between
The earth that rises and the heaven that bends;
All nature self-abandoned, every tree
Flung as it will, pursuing its own thoughts
And fixed so, every flower and every weed,
No pride, no shame, no victory, no defeat;
All under God, each measured by itself.
These statues round us stand abrupt, distinct,
The strong in strength, the weak in weakness fixed.
The Muse forever wedded to her lyre,
Nymph to her fawn, and Silence to her rose:
See God's approval on his universe!

Let us do so — aspire to live as these
In harmony with truth, ourselves being true!
Take the first way, and let the second come!
My first is to possess myself of you;
The music sets the march-step — forward, then!
And there's the Queen, I go to claim you of,
The world in witness, wonder and amazement,
Our flower of life breaks open, No delay!

Con. And so shall we be ruined, both of us.
Norbert, I know her to the skin and bone:
You do not know her, were not born to it,
To feel what she can see or cannot see.
Love, she is generous, — ay, despite your smile,
Generous as you are: for, in that thin frame
Pain-twisted, punctured through and through with cares,
There lived a lavish soul until it starved,
Debarred of healthy food. Look to the soul —
Pity that, stoop to that, ere you begin
(The true man's way) on justice and your rights,
Exactions and acquittance of the past!
Begin so — see what justice she will deal!
We women hate a debt as men a gift.
Suppose her some poor keeper of a school
Whose business is to sit through summer months
And dole out children leave to go and play,
Herself superior to such lightness — she
In the arm-chair's state and pedagogic pomp —
To the life, the laughter, sun and youth outside:
We wonder such a face looks black on us?
I do not bid you wake her tenderness,
(That were vain truly — none is left to wake,)
But, let her think her justice is engaged
To take the shape of tenderness, and mark
If she'll not coldly pay its warmest debt!
Does she love me, I ask you? not a whit:
Yet, thinking that her justice was engaged
To help a kinswoman, she took me up —
Did more on that bare ground than other loves
Would do on greater argument. For me,
I have no equivalent of such cold kind
To pay her with, but love alone to give
If I give anything. I give her love:
I feel I ought to help her, and I will.
So, for her sake, as yours, I tell you twice
That women hate a debt as men a gift.
If I were you, I could obtain this grace —
Could lay the whole I did to love's account,
Nor yet be very false as courtiers go —
Declaring my success was recompense;
It would be so, in fact: what were it else?
And then, once loose her generosity, —
Oh, how I see it then, were I but you
To turn it, let it seem to move itself,
And make it offer what I really take,
Accepting just, in the poor cousin's hand,
Her value as the next thing to the Queen's —
Since none love Queens directly, none dare that,
And a thing's shadow or a name's mere echo
Suffices those who miss the name and thing:
You pick up just a ribbon she has worn,
To keep in proof how near her breath you came.

Say, I'm so near I seem a piece of her —

367

Ask for me that way — oh, you understand,
You'd find the same gift yielded with a grace.
Which, if you make the least show to ex-tort...
— You'll see! and when you have ruined both of us,
Dissertate on the Queen's ingratitude!
Nor. Then, if I turn it that way, you consent?
"T is not my way; I have more hope in truth:
Still, if you won't have truth — why, this indeed,
Were scarcely false, as I'd express the sense.
Will you remain here?
Con. O best heart of mine,
How I have loved you! then, you take my way?
Are mine as you have been her minister,
Work out my thought, give it effect for me,
Paint plain my poor conceit and make it serve?
Love that withered woman everything —
Life, fortune, you, remember! Take my leave,
Help me to pay her! Stand upon your rights?
You, with my rose, my hands, my heart on you?
Your rights are mine — you have no rights but mine.
Nor. Remain here. How you know me!
Con. Ah, but still —
[He breaks from her; she remains. Dance-music from within.

(Enter the Queen.)

Queen. Constance? She is here as he said.
Speak quick!
Is it so? Is it true or false? One word!
Con. True.
Queen. Mercifulest Mother, thanks to thee!
Con. Madam?
Queen. I love you, Constance, from my soul.
Now say once more, with any words you will.
"T is true, all true, as true as that I speak.
Con. Why should you doubt it?
Queen. Ah, why doubt? why doubt?
Dear, make me see it! Do you see it so?
None see themselves; another sees them best.
You say "why doubt it?" — you see him and me.
It is because the Mother has such grace
That if we had but faith — wherein we fail —
Whate'er we yearn for would be granted us;
Yet still we let our whims prescribe despair,
Our fancies thwart and cramp our will and power,
And while accepting life, abuse its use.
Constance, I had abused the hope of love
And being loved, as truly as you palm
The hope of seeing Egypt from that plot.
Con. Heaven!
Queen. But it was so, Constance, it was so!
Men say — or do men say it? fancies say —"
"Stop here, your life is set, you are grown old.
Too late — no love for you, too late for love —
Leave love to girls. Be queen; let Constance
love!"
One takes the hint — half meets it like a child,
Ashamed at any feelings that oppose.
"Oh love, true, never think of love again!"

I am a queen: I rule, not love, forsooth;
So it goes on; so a face grows like this,
Hair like this hair, poor arms as lean as these.
Till, — nay, it does not end so, I thank God!
Con. I cannot understand —
Queen. The happier you!
Constance, I know not how it is with men:
For women I am a woman now like you!
There is no good of life but love — but love!
What else looks good, is some shade flung from love;
Love gilds it, gives it worth. Be warned by me,
Never you cheat yourself one instant! Love,
Give love, ask only love, and leave the rest!
O Constance, how I love you!
Con. I love you.
Queen. I do believe that all is come through you.
I took you to my heart to keep it warm
When the last chance of love seemed dead in me;
I thought your fresh youth warmed my withered heart.
Oh, I am very old now, am I not?
Not so! it is true and it shall be true!
Con. Tell it me: let me judge if true or false.
Queen. Ah, but I fear you! you will look at me
And say, "she's old, she's grown unlovely quite
Who ne'er was beauteous: men want beauty still."
Well, so I feared — the curse! so I felt sure!
Con. Be calm. And now you feel not sure, you say?
Queen. Constance, he came, — the coming was not strange
Do not I stand and see men come and go?
I turned a half look from my pedestal
Where I grow marble — "one young man the more!
He will love some one; that is naught to me;
What would be with my marble stateliness?"
Yet this seemed somewhat worse than heretofore;
The man more gracious, youthful, like a god,
And I still older, with less flesh to change —
We two those dear extremes that long to touch.
It seemed still harder when he first began
To labor at those state-affairs, absorbed
The old way for the old end — interest.
Oh, to live with a thousand beating hearts
Around you, swift eyes, serviceable hands.
Professing they've no care but for your cause.
Thought but to help you, love but for yourself.
And you the marble statue all the time
They praise and point at as preferred to life,
Yet leave for the first breathing woman's smile,
First dancer's, gypsy's, or street baahline's!
Why, how I have ground my teeth to hear men's speech
Stifled for fear it should alarm my ear,
Their gait subdued lest step should startle me.
Their eyes declined, such quenched to respect.
Their hands alert, such treasure to preserve,
While not a man of them broke rank and spoke,
Wrote me a vulgar letter all of love,
Or caught my hand and pressed it like a hand!
There have been moments, if the sentinel
Lowering his halberd to salute the queen,
Had thung it brutally and clasped my knees,
I would have stooped and kissed him with my soul.

Con. Who could have comprehended?
Queen. Ay, who — who?
Why, no one, Constance, but this one who did.
Not they, not you, not I. Even now perhaps
It comes too late — would you but tell the truth.
Con. I wait to tell it.
Queen. Well, you see, he came,
Outfaced the others, did a work this year
Exceeds in value all was ever done.
You know — it is not I who say it — all
Say it. And so (a second pang and worse)
I grew aware not only of what he did,
But why so wondrously, Oh, never work
Like his was done for work's ignoble sake
Souls need a finer aim to light and lure!
I felt, I saw, he loved — loved somebody.
And Constance, my dear Constance, do you know,
I did believe this while 't was you he loved.
Con. Me, madam?
Queen. It did seem to me, your face
Met him where'er he looked: and whom but you
Was such a man to love? It seemed to me,
You saw he loved you, and approved his love,
And both of you were in intelligence.
You could not loiter in that garden, step
Into this balcony, but I straight was stung
And forced to understand. It seemed so true,
So right, so beautiful, so like you both,
That all this work should have been done by him
Not for the vulgar hope of recompense.
But that at last — suppose, some might like you
Borne on to claim his due reward of me,
He might say, "Give her hand and pay me so."
And I (O Constance, you shall love me now!) I thought, surmounting all the bitterness,
"And he shall have it. I will make her blest,
My flower of youth, my woman's self that was,
My happiest woman's self that might have been!
These two shall have their joy and leave me here!"
Yes — yes!
Con. Thanks!
Queen. And the word was on my lips
When he burst in upon me. I looked to hear
A mere calm statement of his just desire
For payment of his labor. When — O heaven,
How can I tell you? lightening on my eyes
And thunder in my ears proved that first word
Which told 't was love of me, of me, did all—
He loved me — from the first step to the last,
Loved me!

Con. You hardly saw, scarce heard him speak
Of love: what if you should mistake?

Queen. No, no —
No mistake! Ha, there shall be no mistake!
He had not dared to hint the love he felt —
You were my reflex — (how I understood!)
He said you were the ribbon I had worn,
He kissed my hand, he looked into my eyes,
And love, love came at end of every phrase.
Love is began; this much the way to pass;
The rest is easy. Constance, I am young!
I will learn, I will place my life on you,
Teach me but how to keep what I have won!
Am I so old? This hair was early gray;
But joy ere now has brought hair brown again,
And joy will bring the cheek's red back, I feel,
I could sing once too; that was in my youth.
Still, when men paint me, they declare me...
yes,
Beautiful — for the last French painter did!
I know they flatter somewhat; you are frank —
I trust you. How I loved you from the first!
Some queens would hardly seek a cousin out
And set her by their side to take the eye:
I must have felt that good would come from you,
I am not generous — like him — like you!
But he is not your lover after all:
It was not you he looked at. Saw you him?
You have not been mistaking words or looks?
He said you were the reflex of myself.
And yet he is not such a paragon
To you, to younger women who may choose
Among a thousand Norberts. Speak the truth!
You know you never named his name to me:
You know, I cannot give him up — ah God,
Not up now, even to you!
Con. Then calm yourself.
Queen. See, I am old — look here, you happy girl!
I will not play the fool, deceive — ah, whom?
'Tis all gone: put your cheek beside my cheek
And what a contrast does the moon behold!
But then I set my life upon one chance,
The last chance and the best — am I not left,
My soul, myself? All women love great men
If young or old; it is in all the tales:
Young beauties love old poets who can love —
Why should not he, the poems in my soul,
The passionate faith, the pride of sacrifice,
Life-long, death-long? I throw them at his feet.
Who cares to see the fountain's very shape,
Whether it be a Triton's or a Nymph's
That pours the foam, makes rainbows all around?
You could not praise indeed the empty cone;
But I'll pour floods of love and hide myself.
How will I love him! Cannot men love love?
Who was a queen and loved a poet once
Humpbacked, a dwarf? ah, women can do that!
Well, but men too; at least, they tell you so.
They love so many women in their youth,
And even in age they all love whom they please;
And yet the best of them confide to friends
That 'tis not beauty makes the lasting love —
They spend a day with such and tire the next:
They like soul,—well then, they like phantasy, Novel beloved. Let us confess the truth, Horrible thought it be, that prejudice, Prescription... curses! they will love a queen, They will, they do: and will not, does not—he? Con. How can he? You are wedded: 'tis a name

We know, but still a bond. Your rank remains, His rank remains. How can he, nobly souled As you believe and I incline to think, Aspire to be your favorite, shame and all? Queen. Hear her! There, there now—could she love like me? What did I say of smooth-cheeked youth and grace? See all it does or could do! so youth loves! Oh, tell him, Constance, you could never do What I will—you, it was not born in! I Will drive these difficulties far and fast As yonder mists curling before the moon, I'll use my light too, gloriously retrieve My youth from its enforced calamity, Dissolve that hateful marriage, and be his. His own in the eyes alike of God and man. Con. You will do—dare do... pause on what you say! Queen. Hear her! I thank you, sweet, for that surprise.

You have the fair face: for the soul, see mine! I have the strong soul: let me teach you, here. I think I have borne enough and long enough, And patiently enough, the world remarks, To have my own way now, unblamed by all. It does so happen: I rejoice for it! This most unhoped-for issue cuts the knot. There's not a better way of settling claims Than this; God sends the accident express; And were it for my subjects' good, no more, 'T were best thus ordered. I am thankful now. Mute, passive, acquiescent, I receive, And bless God simply, or should almost fear To walk so smoothly to my ends at last. Why, how I battle obstacles, spurn fate! How strong I am! Could Norbert see me now? Con. Let me consider. It is all too strange. Queen. You, Constance, learn of me; do you, like me! You are young, beautiful: my own, best girl, You will have many lovers, and love one— Light hair, not hair like Norbert's, to suit yours. Taller than he is, since yourself are tall. Love him, like me! Give all away to him: Think never of yourself; throw by your pride, Hope, fear,—your own good as you saw it once, And love him simply for his very self. Remember, I (and what am I to you?) Would give up all for one, leave throne, lose life. Do all but just unlove him! He loves me. Con. He shall.

Queen. You, step inside my inmost heart! Give me your own heart: let us have one heart! I'll come to you for counsel; "this he says, This he does; what should this amount to, pray? Beseech you, change it into current coin! Is that worth kisses? Shall I please him there?"

And then we'll speak in turn of you—what else? Your love, according to your beauty's worth. For you shall have some noble love, all gold: Whom choose you? we will get him at your choice.

—Constance, I leave you. Just a minute since, I felt as I must die or be alone Breathing my soul into an ear like yours: Now, I would face the world with my new life, Wear my new crown. I'll walk around the rooms, And then come back and tell you how it feels, How soon a smile of God can change the world! How we are made for happiness—how work Grows play, adversity a winning fight! True, I have lost so many years: what then? Many remain: God has been very good. You, stay here! 'Tis as different from dreams, From the mind's cold calm estimate of bliss, As these stone statues from the flesh and blood.

The comfort thou hast caused mankind, God's moon! [She goes out, leaving Constance. Dance-music from within.

(Norbert enters.)

Nor. Well? we have but one minute and one word!

Con. I am yours, Norbert!

Nor. Yes, mine.

Con. Not till now!

You were mine. Now I give myself to you. Con. Your own! I know the thriftier way Of giving—happily, 'tis the wiser way. Meaning to give a treasure, I might dole Coin after coin out (each, as that were all, With a new largess still at each despair) And force you keep in sight the deed, preserve Exhaustless till the end the my part and yours, My giving and your taking: both our joys Dying together. Is it the wiser way? I choose the simpler; I give all at once. Know what you have to trust to, trade upon! Use it, abuse it,—anything but think Hereafter. "'Tis all I known she loved me so, And what my means, I might have thriven with it." This is your means. I give you all myself. Nor. I take you and thank God.

Con. Look on through years! We cannot kiss, a second day like this; Else were this earth no earth.

Nor. With this day's heat We shall go on through years of cold.

Con. So, best! I try to see those years— I think I see. You walk quick and new warmth comes; you look back And lay all to the first glow— not sit down Forever brooding on a day like this While seeing embers whiten and love die, Yes, love lives best in its effect; and mine, Full in its own life, yearns to live in yours.

Nor. Just so. I take and know you all at once.

Your soul is disengaged so easily,
Your face is there, I know you; give me time,
Let me be proud and think you shall know me.
My soul is slower: in a life I roll
The minute out whereto you condense yours—
The whole slow circle round you I must move.
To be just you. I look to a long life
To decompose this minute, prove its worth.
'T is the sparks' long succession one by one Shall show you, in the end, what fire was Crammed
In that stone more you struck: how could you know?
If it lay ever unproved in your sight,
As now my heart lies? your own warmth would hide
Its coldness, were it cold,
Con. But how prove, how?
Nor. Prove in my life, you ask?
Con. Quick, Norbert—how?
Nor. That's easy told. I count life just a stuff
To try the soul's strength on, educe the man.
Who keeps one end in view makes all things serve
As with the body—he who hurrs a lance
Or heaps up stone on stone, shows strength alike:
So must I seize and task all means to prove
And show this soul of mine, you crown as yours,
And justify us both.
Con. Could you write books,
Paint pictures! One sits down in poverty
And writes or paints, with pity for the rich.
Nor. And loves one's painting and one's writing, then,
And not one's mistress! All is best, believe,
And we best as no other than we are.
We live, and they experiment on life—
Those poets, painters, all who stand aloof
To overlook the farther. Let us be
The thing they look at! I might take your face
And write of it and paint it—to what end?
For whom? what pale dietress in the air
Feeds, smiling sadly, her fine ghost-like form
With earth's real blood and breath, the baneous life
She makes despised forever? You are mine,
Made for me, not for others in the world,
Nor yet for that which I should call my art.
The cold calm power to see how far you look.
I come to you; I leave you not, to write
Or paint. You are, I am: let Rubens there Paint us!
Con. So, best!
Nor. I understand your soul,
You live, and rightly sympathize with life,
With action, power, success. This way is straight:
And time were short beside, to let me change
The craft my childhood learnt: my craft shall serve.
Men set me here to subjugate, enclose,
Mamrs their barren lives, and force thence fruit
First for themselves, and afterward for me
In the due title; the task of some one soul,
Through ways of work appointed by the world.
I am not bid create—men see no star
Transiguring my brow to warrant that—
But find and bind and bring to bear their wills.
So I began: to-night sees how I end.
What if it see, too, power's first outbreak here
Amid the warmth, surprise and sympathy,
And instincts of the heart that teach the head?
What if the people have discerned at length
The dawn of the next nature, novel brain
Whose will they venture in the place of theirs,
Whose work, they trust, shall find them as novel ways.
To untried heights which yet he only sees?
I felt it when you kissed me. See this Queen,
This people—in our phrase this mass of men—
See how the mass lies passive to my hand
Now that my hand is plastic, with you by
To make the muscles iron! Oh, an end
Shall crown this issue as this crowds the first!
My will be on the people! then, the strain,
The grappling of the potter with his clay,
The long uncertain struggle,—the success
And consummation of the spirit-work,
Some vase shape to the curb of the god's lip,
While rounded fair for human sense to see
The Graces in a dance men recognize
With turbulent applause and laughs of heart!
So triumph ever shall renew itself;
Ever shall end in efforts higher yet,
Ever begin...
Con. I ever helping?
Nor. Thus!
(As he embraces her, the QUEEN enters.)
Con. Hist, madam! So have I performed my part.
You see your gratitude's true decency,
Norbert? a little slow in seeing it!
Begin, to end the sooner! What's a kiss?
Nor. Constance?
Con. Why, must I teach it you again?
You want a witness to your dulness, sir?
What was I saying those ten minutes long?
Then I repeat—when some young handsome
man
Like you has acted out a part like yours,
Is pleased to fall in love with one beyond,
So very far beyond him, as he says—
So hopelessly in love that but to speak
Would prove him mad,—he thinks judiciously,
And makes some insignificant good soul,
Like me, his friend, adviser, confidant,
And very stalking-horse to cover him
In following after what he dares not face—
When his end's gained—(sir, do you understand?)
When she he dares not face, has loved him
first,
—May I not say so, madam?—to his hope,
And overpasses so his wildest dream,
With glad consent of all, and most of her—
The confidant who brought the same about
Why, in the moment when such joy explodes,
I do hold that the merest gentleman
Will not start rudely from the stalking-horse,
Dismiss it with a "There, enough of you!"
Forget it, show his back unmannerly;
But like a liberal heart will rather turn
May still be right: I may do well to speak
And make authentic what appears a dream
To even myself. For, what she says is true:
Yes, Norbert — what you spoke just now of love,
Devotion, stirred no novel sense in me,
But justifeld a warmth felt long before.
Yes, from the first — I loved you, I shall say:
Strange! but I do grow stronger, nor 'tis said.
Your courage helps mine: you did well to speak
To-night, the night that crowns your twelve-months’ toil:
But still I had not waited to discern
Your heart so long, believe me! From the first
The source of so much zeal was almost plain,
In absence even of your own words just now
Which hazarded the truth. "T is very strange,
But takes a happy ending — in your love
Which mine meets: be it so! as you choose me,
So I choose you.

NOR.
And worthily you choose.
I will not be unworthy your esteem,
No, madam. I do love you; I will meet
Your nature, now I know it. This was well.
I see, — you dare and you are justified:
But none had ventured such experiment,
Less versed than you in nobleness of heart,
Less confident of finding such in me,
I joy that thus you test me ere you grant
The dearest, richest, beautesmost and best
Of women to my arms: 'tis like yourself.
So — back again into my part's set words —
Devotion to the uttermost is yours,
But no, you cannot, madam, even you,
Create in me the love our Constance does.
Or — something truer to the tragic phrase —
Not you magnolia-bell superb with scent
Invites a certain insect — that's myself —
But the small eye-flower nearer to the ground.
I take this lady.

CON.
Stay — not hers, the trap —
Stay, Norbert — that mistake were worst of all!
He is too cunning, madam! It was I,
I, Norbert, who...

NOR.
You, was it, Constance? Then,
But for the grace of this divinest hour
Which gives me you, I might not pardon here!
I am the Queen's; she only knows my brain:
She may experiment upon my heart
And instruct her too by the result.
But you, Sweet, you who know me, who so long
Have told my heartbeats over, held my life
In those white hands of yours, — it is not well!

CON. Tush! I have said it, did I not say it all?
The life, for her — the heartbeats, for her sake!

NOR. Enough! my cheek grows red, I think.
Your test?
There's not the meanest woman in the world,
Not she I least could love in all the world,
Whom, did she love me, had love proved itself,
I dare insult as you insult me now.
Constance. I could say, if it must be said,
"Take back the soul you offer. I keep mine!"
But — "Take the soul still quivering on your hand,
The soul so offered, which I cannot use,
And, please you, give it to some playful friend.
For — what's the trifle he requires me with?"
IN A BALCONY

1. tempt a woman, to amuse a man,
That two may mock her heart if it succumb?
No: fearing God and standing 'neath his
heaven,
I would not dare insult a woman so,
Were she the meanest woman in the world,
And he, I cared to please, ten emperors!
Con. Norbert!
Nor. I love once as I live but once.
What case is this to think or talk about?
I love you. Would it mend the case at all
If such a step as this killed love in me?
Your part were done: account to God for it!
But mine — could murdered love get up again,
And kneel to whom you please to designate,
And make you mirth? It is too horrible.
You did not know this, Constance? now you
know
That body and soul have each one life, but
one:
And here's my love, here, living, at your feet.
Con. See the Queen! Norbert — this one more last word —
If thus you have taken jest for earnest — thus Loved me in earnest . . .
Nor. Ah, no jest holds here!
Where is the laughter in which jests break up,
And what this horror that grows palpable?
Madam; why grasp you thus the balcony?
Have I done ill? Have I not spoken truth?
How could I other? Was it not your test,
To try me, what my love for Constance meant?
Madam, your royal soul itself approves,
The first, that I should choose thus! so one takes A beggar, — asks him, what would buy his child?
And then approves the expected lunch of scorn
Returned as something noble from the rags.
Speak, Constance, I'm the beggar! Ha, what's this?
You two glare each at each like panthers now.
Constance, the world fades; only you stand
there.
You did not, in to-night's wild whirl of things,
Sell me — your soul of souls, for any price?
No — no — 'tis easy to believe in you!
Was it your love's mad trial to o'er top
Mine by this vain self-sacrifice? well, still —
Though I might curse, I love you. I am love
And cannot change: love's self is at your feet!

[The Queen goes out.]

Con. Feel my heart; let it die against your own!
Nor. Against my own. Explain not; let this
be!
This is life's height.

[They both kneel.]

Con. Yours, yours, yours!
Nor. You and I —
Why care by what meanders we are here
I the centre of the labyrinth? Men have died
Trying to find this place, which we have found.
Con. Found, found!
Nor. Sweet, never fear what she can do!
We are past harm now.

Con. On the breast of God.
I thought of men — as if you were a man.
Tempting him with a crown!
Nor. This must end here:
It is too perfect.
Con. There's the music stopped.
What measured heavy tread? It is one blaze
About me and within me.
Nor. Oh, some death
Will run its sudden finger round this spark
And sever us from the rest!
Con. And so do well.
Now the doors open,
Nor. T is the guard comes.
Con. Kiss!

BEN KARSHOOK'S WISDOM

The eighth line of the fourteenth section of
One Word More reads,
"Kashish, Cleon, Norbert and the fifty."
Originally it read,
"Karshook, Cleon, Norbert and the fifty."
The reference apparently was to the poem written in April, 1854, and printed in The Keepsake.

Originally it read,

"'Wou'd a man 'scape the red?'
Rabbi Ben Karshook saith,
"See that he turn to God
The day before his death."

"Ay, could a man inquire
When it shall come!" I say.
The Rabbi's eye shoots fire —
"Then let him turn to-day!"

Quoth a young Sadducee:
"Reader of many rolls,
Is it so certain we
Have, as they tell us, souls?"

"Son, there is no reply!"
The Rabbi bit his beard:
"Certain, a soul have I —
We may have none," he sneered.

Thus Karshook, the Hiram's Hammer,
The Right-hand Temple-column,
Taught babies in grace their grammar,
And struck the simple, solemn,
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

The volume bearing the title Dramatis Personæ was published in 1834 and the contents remained unchanged in subsequent editions except that two short poems were added in the edition of 1868. The first poem was however originally entitled James Lee. The first six stanzas of the sixth section of the poem were first printed in 1836 in Mr. Fox's The Monthly Repository, and bore the title merely Lines, with the signature Z.

JAMES LEE'S WIFE

JAMES LEE'S WIFE SPEAKS AT THE WINDOW

Ah, Love, but a day
And the world has changed!
The sun's away,
And the bird estranged;
The wind has dropped,
And the sky's deranged;
Summer has stopped.

Look in my eyes!
Wilt thou change too?
Should I fear surprise?
Shall I find aught new
In the old and dear,
In the good and true,
With the changing year?

Thou art a man,
But I am thy love.
For the lake, its swan;
For the dell its dove;
And for thee — (oh, haste!)
Me, to bend above,
Me, to hold embraced.

BY THE FIRESIDE

Is all our fire of shipwreck wood,
Oak and pine?
Oh, for the ills half-understood,
The dim dead woe
Long ago
Befallen this bitter coast of France!
Well, poor sailors took their chance;
I take mine.

A ruddy shaft our fire must shoot
O'er the sea:
Do sailors eye the casement — nute
Drenched and stark,
From their bark —
And envy, gnash their teeth for hate
O' the warm safe house and happy freight
— Thee and me?

God help you, sailors, at your need!
Spare the curse!
For some ships, safe in port indeed,

Rot and rust,
Run to dust,
All through worms i' the wood, which crept,
Guawed our hearts out while we slept:
That is worse.

Who lived here before us two?
Old-world pairs.
Did a woman ever — would I knew! —
Watch the man
With whom began
Love's voyage full-sail,— (now gnash your teeth!)
When planks start, open hell beneath Unawares?

III

IN THE DOORWAY

The swallow has set her six young on the rail,
And looks seaward:
The water's in stripes like a snake, olive-pale
To the leeward, —
On the weather-side, black, spotted white with the wind.
"Good fortune departs, and disaster's behind," —
Hark, the wind with its wants and its infinite wail!

Our fig-tree, that leaned for the saltiness, has furled
Her five fingers,
Each leaf like a hand opened wide to the world
Where there lingered
No glint of the gold, Summer sent for her sake:
How the vines writhe in rows, each impaled on its stake!
My heart shrivels up and my spirit shrinks curled.

Yet here are we two; we have love, house enough,
With the field there,
This house of four rooms, that field red and rough,
Though it yield there,
For the rabbit that robs, scarce a blade or a bent;
If a magpie alight now, it seems an event;
And they both will be gone at November's rebuff.

But why must cold spread? but wherefore bring change
To the spirit,
God meant should make his with an infinite range,
And inherit
His power to put life in the darkness and cold?
Oh, live and love worthily, bear and be bold!
Whom Summer made friends of, let Winter estrange!

iv
ALONG THE BEACH
I will be quiet and talk with you,
And reason why you are wrong.
You wanted my love — is that much true?
And so I did love, so I do:
What has come of it all along?

I took you — how could I otherwise?
For a world to me, and more;
For all, love greatens and glorifies
Till God's aglow, to the loving eyes,
In what was mere earth before.

Yes, earth — yes, mere ignoble earth!
Now do I miss-state, mistake?
Do I wrong your weakness and call it worth?
Expect all harvest, dread no dearth,
Seal my sense up for your sake?

Oh, Love, Love, no, Love! not so, indeed!
You were just weak earth, I knew:
With much in you waste, with many a weed,
And plenty of passions run to seed,
But a little good grain too.

And such as you were, I took you for mine:
Did not you find me yours,
To watch the olive and wait the vine,
And wonder when rivers of oil and wine
Would flow, as the Book assures?

Well, and if none of these good things came,
What did the failure prove?
The man was my whole world, all the same,
With his flowers to praise or his weeds to blame,
And, either or both, to love.

Yet this turns now to a fault — there! there!
That I do love, watch too long,
And wait too well, and weary and wear;
And 'tis all an old story, and my despair
Fit subject for some new song:

"How the light, light love, he has wings to fly
At suspicion of a bond:
My wisdom has bidden your pleasure good-by,
Which will turn up next in a laughing eye,
And why should you look beyond?"

v
ON THE CLIFF
I leaned on the turf,
I looked at a rock
Left dry by the surf:

For the turf, to call it grass were to mock:
Dead to the roots, so deep was done
The work of the summer sun,
And the rock lay flat
As an anvil's face;
No iron like that!
Baked dry; of a weed, of a shell, no trace:
Sunshine outside, but ice at the core,
Death's altar by the lone shore.

On the turf, sprang gay
With his films of blue,
No cricket. I'll say,
But a warhorse, barded and chanfroned too,
The gift of a quixote-mage to his knight,
Real fairy, with wings all right.

On the rock, they search
Like a drop of fire
From a brandished torch,
Fall two red fans of a butterfly:
No turf, no rock: in their ugly stead,
See, wonderful blue and red!

Is it not so
With the minds of men?
The level and low,
The burnt and bare, in themselves; but then
With such a blue and red grace, not theirs,—
Love settling unawares!

vi
READING A BOOK, UNDER THE CLIFF
"Still ailing, Wind? Wilt he appeased or no?
Which needs the other's office, thou or I?
Dost want to be disburdened of a woe,
And can, in truth, my voice unite
Its links, and let it go?

"Art thou a dumb, wronged thing that would be righted,
Entrust this thy cause to me? Forbear!
No tongue can mend such pleadings; faith, required
With falsehood, — love, at last aware
Of scorn, — hopes, early blighted,—

"We have them; but I know not any tone
So fit as thine to falter forth a sorrow:
Dost think men would go mad without a moan,
If they knew any way to borrow
A pathos like thy own?

"Which sigh wouldst mock, of all the sighs?
The one
So long escaping from lips starved and blue,
That lasts while on her pallet-bed the nun
Stretches her length; her foot comes through
The straw she shivers on;

"You had not thought she was so tall: and spent,
Her shrunk lids open, her lean fingers shut
Close, close, their sharp and livid nails indent
The clammy palm; then all is mute:
That way, the spirit went.

"Or wouldst thou rather that I understand
Thy will to help me? — like the dog I found
Once, pacing sad this solitary strand.
Who would not take my food, poor hound,
But whined and licked my hand."

All this, and more, comes from some young man's pride
Of power to see — in failure and mistake,
Relinquishment, disgrace, on every side,—
Merely examples for his sake,
Helps to his path tripped:
Instances he must — simply recognize?
Oh, more than so! — must, with a learner's zeal,
Make doubly prominent, twice emphasize,
By added touches that reveal
The god in babe's disguise.

Oh, he knows what defeat means, and the rest!
Himself the undefeated that shall be:
Failure, disgrace, he flings them you to test,—
His triumph, in eternity
Too plainly manifest!

Whence, judge if he learn forthwith what the wind
Means in its moaning — by the happy prompt
Instinctive way of youth. I mean; for kind
Calm years, exacting their account
Of pain, mature the mind:

And some midsummer morning, at the lull
Just about daybreak, as he looks across
A sparkling foreign country, wonderful
To the sea's edge for gloom and gloss,
Next minute must annul,

Then, when the wind begins among the vines,
So low, so low, what shall it say but this?
"Here is the change beginning, here the lines
Cirruscrescbe beauty, set to bliss
The limit time assigns."

Nothing can be as it has been before;
Better, so call it, only not the same.
To draw one beauty into our hearts' core,
And keep it changeless, such our claim;
so answered, — Nevermore!

Simple? Why this is the old wow o' the world;
Time, to whose rise and fall we live and die.
Rise with it, then! Rejoice that man is hurled
From change to change unceasingly,
His soul's wings never furled!

That's a new question; still replies the fact,
Nothing endures: the wind moans, saying so:

We morn in acquiescence: there's life's pact.
Perhaps probation do I know?
God does: endure his act!

Only, for man, how bitter not to grave
On his soul's hands' palms one fair good wise thing
Just as he grasped it! For himself, death's wave;
While time first washes — ah, the sting! —
Over all he'd sink to save.

AMONG THE ROCKS

Oh, good gigantic smile o' the brown old earth,
This autumn morning! How he sets his bones
To bask i' the sun, and thrusts out knees and feet
For the ripple to run over in its mirth;
Listening the while, where on the heap of stones
The white breast of the sea-lark twitters sweet.

That is the doctrine, simple, ancient, true;
Such is life's trial, as old earth smiles and knows.
If you loved only what were worth your love.
Love were clear gain, and wholly well for you;
Make the low nature better by your throes!
Give earth yourself, go up for gain above!

BESIDE THE DRAWING-BOARD

I

"As like as a Hand to another Hand!"
Whosoever said that foolish thing,
Could not have studied to understand
The councils of God in fashioning,
Out of the infinite love of his heart,
This Hand, whose beauty I praise, apart
From the world of wonder left to praise,
If I tried to learn the other ways
Of love in its skill, or love in its power,
"As like as a Hand to another Hand!"
Who said that, never took his stand,
Found and followed, like me, an hour,
The beauty in this, — how free, how fine
To fear, almost, — of the limit-line!
As I looked at this, and learned and drew,
Drew and learned, and looked again,
While fast the happy minutes flew,
Its beauty mounted into my brain,
And a fancy seized me; I was fain
To efface my work, begin anew,
Kiss what before I only drew;
Ay, laying the red chalk 'twixt my lips.
With soul to help if the mere lips failed,
I kissed all right where the drawing ailed,
Kissed fast the grace that somehow slips
Still from one's soulless finger-tips.
"Tis a clay cast, the perfect thing,
From Hand live once, dead long ago:
Princess-like it wears the ring
To fancy's eye, by which we know
That here at length a master found
His match, a proud lone soul its mate,
As soaring genius sank to ground,
And pencil could not emulate
The beauty in this,—how free, how fine
To tear almost!—of the limit-line.
Long ago the god, like me
The worm, learned, each in our degree:
Locked and loved, learned and drew,
Drew and learned and loved again,
While fast the happy minutes flew,
'Till beauty mounted into his brain
And on the finger which outvied
His art he placed the ring that's there,
Still by fancy's eye desired,
In token of a marriage rare:
For him on earth, his art's despair,
For him in heaven, his soul's fit bride.

Little girl with the poor coarse hand
I turned from to a cold clay cast—
I have my lesson, understand
The worth of flesh and blood at last!
Nothing but beauty in a Hand?
Because he could not change the hue,
Mend the lines and make them true
To this which met his soul's demand,—
Would Da Vinci turn from you?
I hear him laugh my woes to scorn—
"The fool forsooth is all forlorn
Because the beauty, she thinks best,
Lived long ago or was never born,
Because no beauty bears the test
In this rough peasant Hand! Confessed
'Art is null and study void!'—
So sayest thou? So said not I,
Who threw the faulty pencil by,
And years instead of hours employed.
Learning the veritable use
Of flesh and bone and nerve beneath
Lines and hue of the outer sheath,
If haply I might reproduce
One-motive of the powers profuse,
Flesh and bone and nerve that make
The poorest coarsest human hand
An object worthy to be scanned
A whole life long for their sole sake.
Shall earth and the cramped moment-space
Yield the heavenly crowning grace?
Now the parts and then the whole!
Who art thou, with stinted soul
And stunted body, thus to cry,
'I love,—shall that be life's strait dole?
I must live beloved or die!'
This peasant hand that spins the wool
And bakes the bread, why lives it on.
Poor and coarse with beauty gone,—
What use survives the beauty?"—Fool!

Go, little girl with the poor coarse hand!
I have my lesson, shall understand.
Mrs. Orr's Life, II. 385, there is an account of the destruction of the church referred to in the poem.

Oh, the beautiful girl, too white,
Who lived at Pornic, down by the sea,
Just where the sea and the Loire unite!
And a boasted name in Brittany
She bore, which I will not write.

Too white, for the flower of life is red:
Her flesh was the soft seraphine screen
Of a soul that is meant (her parents said)
To just see earth, and hardly be seen,
And blossom in heaven instead.

Yet earth saw one thing, one how fair!
One grace that grew to its full on earth:
Smiles might be sparse on her cheek so spare,
And her waist want half a girdle's girth,
But she had her great gold hair.

Hair, such a wonder of flix and doss,
Freshness and fragrance-- floods of it, too!
Gold, did I say? Nay, gold's mere dress:
Here, Life smiled, "Think what I meant to do!"
And Love sighed, "Fancy my loss!"

So, when she died, it was scarce more strange
Than that, when delicate evening dies,
And you follow its spent sun's pallid range,
There's a shoot of color startles the skies
With sudden, violent change.

That, while the breath was nearly to seek,
As they put the little cross to her lips,
She changed: a spot came out on her cheek,
A spark from her eye in mid-eclipse,
And she broke forth, "I must speak!"

"Not my hair!" made the girl her moan--
"All the rest is gone or to go;
But the last, last grace, my all, my own,
Let it stay in the grave, that the ghosts may know!
Leave my poor gold hair alone!"

The passion thus vented, dead lay she;
Her parents sobbed their worst on that;
All friends joined in, nor observed degree:
For indeed the hair was to wonder at,
As it spread -- not flowing free.

But curled around her brow, like a crown,
And coiled beside her cheeks, like a cap,
And curled about her neck -- ay, down
To her breast, pressed flat, without a gap!
The gold, it reached her gown.

All kissed that face, like a silver wedge
Mid the yellow wealth, nor disturbed its hair:
E'en the priest allowed death's privilege,
As he planted the crucifix with care.
On her breast, 'twixt edge and edge.

And thus was she buried, inviolate
Of body and soul, in the very space

By the altar; keeping saintly state
In Pornic church, for her pride of race,
Pure life and piteous fate.

And in after-time would your fresh tear fall,
Though your mouth might twitch with a dubious smile,
As they told you of gold, both robe and pall,
How she prayed them leave it alone awhile,
So it never was touched at all.

Years flew; this legend grew at last
The life of the lady; all she had done,
All been, in the memories fading fast.
Of lover and friend, was summed in one
Sentence survivors passed:

To wit, she was meant for heaven, not earth;
Had turned an angel before the time;
Yet, since she was mortal, in such dearth
Of frailty, all you could count a crime
Was -- she knew her gold hair's worth.

At little pleasant Pornic church,
It chanced, the pavement wanted repair,
Was taken to pieces: left in the lurch,
A certain sacred space lay bare,
And the boys began research.

'Twas the space where our sires would lay a saint,
A benefactor. — a bishop, suppose,
A baron with armor-adornments quaint,
Dame with chased ring and jewelled rose,
Things sanctity saves from taint;

So we come to find them in after-days
When the corpse is presumed to have done with gauds
Of use to the living, in many ways:
For the boys get pelt, and the town applauds,
And the church deserves the praise.

They grubbed with a will: and at length — O cor
Humanum, pacta serva, and the rest! —
They found — no gaud they were prying for,
No ring, no rose, but — who would have guessed? —
A double Louis-d'or!

Here was a case for the priest: he heard,
Marked, inwardly digested, laid
Finger on nose, smiled, "There's a bird
'Chirps in my ear:'" then, "Bring a spade,
Dig deeper!" — he gave the word.

And lo, when they came to the coffin-lid,
Or rotten planks which composed it once,
Why, there lay the girl's skull wedged amid
A mint of money, it served for the nonce
To hold in its hair-heaps hid!

Hid there? Why? Could the girl be vont
(Shed the stainless soul) to treasure up
Money, earth's trash and heaven's affront?
    Had a spider found out the communion-cup,
    Was a toad in the christening-font?

Truth is truth: too true it was.
    Gold! She hoarded and hugged it first,
Longed for it, leaned over it, loved it — alas —
    Till the rumor grew to a head and burst,
And she cried, at the final pass,

"Talk not of God, my heart is stone!
    Nor lover nor friend — be gold for both!
Gold I lack; and, my all, my own,
    It shall hide in my hair; I scarce die loth
If they let my hair alone!"

Louis-d'or, some six times five,
    And dully double, every piece,
Now, do you see? With the priest to shrieve,
    With parents preventing her soul's release
By kisses that kept alive, —

With heaven's gold gates about to ope,
    With friends' praise, gold-like, lingering still,
An instinct had hidden the girl's hand grope
    For gold, the true sort — "Gold in heaven, if you will;" But I keep earth's too, I hope."

Enough! The priest took the grave's grim yield:
    The parents, they eyed that price of sin
As if thirty pieces lay revealed
    On the place to bury strangers in,
The hideous Potter's Field.

But the priest bethought him: "'Milk that's spilt!"
    — You know the adage! Watch and pray!
Saints tumble to earth with so slight a tilt!
    It would build a new altar; that, we may!"
And the altar therewith was built.

Why I deliver this horrible verse?
    As the text of a sermon, which now I preach:
Evil or good may be better or worse
    In the human heart, but the mixture of each
Is a marvel and a curse.

The candid incline to surmise of late
    That the Christian faith proves false, I find;
For our Essays-and-Reviews' debate
    Begins to tell on the public mind,
And Colenso's words have weight:

I still, to suppose it true, for my part,
    See reasons and reasons; this, to begin:
'Tis the faith that launched Point-blank her dart
    At the head of a lie — taught Original Sin,
The Corruption of Man's Heart.

THE WORST OF IT

Would it were I had been false, not you!
    I that am nothing, not you that are all:
I, never the worse for a touch or two
    On my speckled hide; not you, the pride

Of the day, my swan, that a first fleck's fall
    On her wonder of white must unset, undo!
I had dipped in life's struggle and, out again,
    Bore specks of it here, there, easy to see.
When I found my swan and the cure was plain;
    The dull turned bright as I caught your white
On my bosom: you saved me — saved in vain
    If you ruined yourself, and all through me!

Yes, all through the speckled beast that I am,
    Who taught you to stoop; you gave me yourself,
And bound your soul by the vows that damn:
    Since on better thought you break, as you ought.
Vows — words, no angel set down, some elf
    Mistook, — for an oath, an epigram!

Yes, might I judge you, here were my heart,
    And a hundred its like, to treat as you pleased!
I choose to be yours, for my proper part,
    Yours, leave or take, or mar me or make;
If I acquiesce, why should you be teased
    With the conscience-prick and the memory-smart?

But what will God say? Oh, my sweet,
    Think, and be sorry you did this thing!
 Though earth were unworthy to feel your feet,
    There's a heaven above may deserve your love:
Should you forfeit heaven for a snapt gold ring
    And a promise broke, were it just or meet? And I to have tempted you! I, who tried
    Your soul, no doubt, till it sank! Unwise,
I loved, and was lowly, loved and aspired
    Loved, grieving or glad, till I made you mad,
And you meant to have hated and despised —
    Whereas, you deceived me nor inquired!

She, ruined? How? No heaven for her?
    Crowns to give, and none for the brow
That looked like marble and smelt like myrrh?
    Shall the robe be worn, and the palm-branch borne,
And she go graceless, she graeced now
    Beyond all saints, as themselves aver?

Hardly! That must be understood!
    The earth is your place of penance, then;
And what will it prove? I desire your good,
    But, plot as I may, I can find no way
How a blow should fall, such as falls on men,
    Nor prove too much for your womanhood.

It will come, I suspect, at the end of life,
    When you walk alone, and review the past;
And I, who so long shall have done with strife,
    And journeyed my stage and earned my wage
And retired as was right, — I am called at last
    When the devil stabs you, to lend the knife.

He stabs for the minute of trivial wrong,
    Nor the other hours are able to save,
The happy, that lasted my whole life long:
For a promise broke, not for first words spoke,
The true, the only, that turn my grave
To a blaze of joy and a crush of song.

Witness beforehand! Off I trip
On a safe path gay through the flowers you flung:
My very name made great by your lip,
And my heart aglow with the good I know
Of a perfect year when we both were young,
And I tasted the angels' fellowship.

And witness, moreover . . . Ah, but wait!
I spy the loop whence an arrow shoots!
It may be for yourself, when you meditate,
That you grieve—for slain ruth, murdered truth:
"Though falsehood escape in the end, what boots?
How truth would have triumphed!"—you sigh too late.

Ay, who would have triumphed like you, I say!
Well, it is lost now; well, you must hear,
Abide and grow fit for a better day:
You should hardly grudge, could I be your judge!

But hush! For you, can be no despair:
There's amends: 'tis a secret: hope and pray!

For I was true at least—oh, true enough!
And, Dear, truth is not so good as it seems!
Command me to conscience! Idle stuff!
Much help is in mine, as I mope and pine,
And skulk through day, and scowl in my dreams
At my swan's obtaining the crow's rebuff.

Men tell me of truth now—"False!" I cry:
of beauty—"A mask, friend! Look beneath!"
We take our own method, the devil and I.
With pleasant and fair and wise and rare:
And the best we wish to what lives, is—death;
Which even in wishing, perhaps we lie!

Far better commit a fault and have done
As you, Dear!—forever; and choose the pure,
And look where the healing waters run
And strive and strain to be good again,
And a place in the other world ensure.
All glass and gold, with God for its sun.

Misery! What shall I say or do?
I cannot advise, or, at least, persuade:
Most like, you are glad you deceived me—
No whit of the wrong: you endured too long,
Have done no evil and want no aid,
Will live the old life out and chance the new.

And your sentence is written all the same,
And I can do nothing,—pray, perhaps:
But somehow the world pursues its game,—
If I pray, if I curse,—for better or worse:

And my faith is torn to a thousand scraps,
And my heart feels ice while my words breathe flame.

Dear, I look from my hiding-place.
Are you still so fair? Have you still the eyes?
Be happy! Add but the other grace,
Be good! Why want what the angels vaunt?
I knew you once: but in Paradise,
If we meet, I will pass nor turn my face.

DÍS ALITER VISUM

OR, LE BYRON DE NOS JOURS

STOP, let me have the truth of that!
Is that all true? I say, the day
Ten years ago when both of us
Met on a morning, friends—as thus
We meet this evening, friends or what?

Did you—because I took your arm
And sildily smiled, "A mass of brass
That sea looks, blazing underneath!"
While up the cliff-road edged with heath,
We took the turns nor came to harm—

Did you consider, "Now makes twice
That I have seen her, walked and talked
With this poor pretty thoughtful thing,
Whose worth I weigh: she tries to sing;
Draws, hopes in time the eye grows nice;

"Reads verse and thinks she understands;
Loves all, at any rate, that's great,
Good, beautiful; but much as we
Down at the bath-house love the sea,
Who breathe its salt and bruise its sands:

"While . . . do but follow the fishing-gull
That flaps and floats from wave to wave!
There's the sea-lover, fair my friend!
What then? Be patient, mark and mend!
Had you the making of your skull?"

And did you, when we faced the church
With spire and sad slate roof, aloof
From human fellowship so far,
Where a few graveyard crosses are,
And garlands for the swallow's perch,—

Did you determine, as we stepped O'er the lone stone fence, "Let me get
Her for myself, and what's the earth
With all its art, verse, music, worth—
Compared with love, found, gained, and kept?

"Schumann's our music-maker now;
Has his march—movement youth and mouth?
Ingres's the modern man that paints;
Which will lean on me, of his saints?
Heine for songs; for kisses, how?"

And did you, when we entered, reached
The votive frigate, soft aloft
Riding on air this hundred years,
Safe-smiling at old hopes and fears,—
Did you draw profit while she preached?
Resolving, "Fools we wise men grow!
Yes, I could easily blurt out curst
Some question that might find reply
As prompt in her stopped lips, dropped eye,
And rush of red to cheek and brow:

"Thus were a match made, sure and fast,
Mid the blue weed-flowers round the mound
Where, issuing, we shall stand and stay
For one more look at baths and bay.
Sands, sea-gulls, and the old church last—

A match 'twixt me, bent, wagged and lam'd
Famous, however, for verse and worse.
Sure of the Fortieth spare Arm-chair
When gout and glory seat me there
So, one whose love-freaks pass unblamed,—

"And this young beauty, round and sound
As a mountain-apple, youth and truth
With loves and doves, at all events
With money in the Three per Cents;
Whose choice of me would seem profound:—

"She might take me as I take her.
Perfect the hour would pass, alas!
Climb high, love high, what matter? Still,
Feet, feelings, must descend the hill;
An hour's perfection can't recur.

"Then follows Paris and full time
For both to reason: 'Thins with us!'
She'll sigh, 'Thus girls give body and soul
At first word, think they gain the goal,
When 'tis the starting-place they climb!

"My friend makes verse and gets renown;
Have they all fifty years, his peers?
He knows the world, firm, quiet and gay;
Boys will become as much one day:
They're fools; he cheated, with beard less brown.

'For boys say, Love me or I die!
He did not say, The truth is, youth
I want, who am old and know too much;
'If I catch youth: lend me sight and touch!
Drop heart's blood where life's wheels grate dry.'

"While I should make rejoinder" — (then
It was no doubt, you ceased that least Light pressure of my arm in yours)—
"I can conceive of cheaper cues
For a yawning-fit o'er books and men.

"What? All I am, was, and might be,
All, books taught, art brought, life's whole strife,
Painful results since precious, just
Were firly exchang'd, in wise disgust,
For two cheeks freshened by youth and sea?

"All for a nosegay! — what came first;
With fields on flower, untried each side;
I rally, need my books and men,
And find a nosegay: ' drop it, then,
No match yet made for best or worst!'"
What did the other do? You be judge!
Look at you, Edith! Here are we both!
Give him his six whole years: I grudge
None of the life with you, may, loathe
Myself that I grudged his start in advance
Of me who could overtake and pass.
But, as if he loved you! No, not he,
Nor any one else in the world, 't is plain:
Who ever heard that another, free
As I, young, prosperous, sound and sane,
Pour'd life out, proffered it — "Half a glance
Of those eyes of yours and I drop the glass!"

Handsome, were you? 'T is more than they held,
More than they said; I was 'ware and watched:
I was the scapegrace, this rat bellowed
The cat, this tool got his whiskers scratched:
The others? No head that was turned, no heart
Broken, my lady, assure yourself!
Each soon made his mind up; so and so
Married a dancer, such and such
Stole his friend's wife, stagnated slow,
Or murdered, unable to do as much,
And muttered of peace where he had no part:
While, hid in the closet, laid on the shelf,

On the whole, you were let alone, I think!
So, you looked to the other, who acquiesced;
My rival, the proud man, — prize your pink
Of poets! A poet he was! I've guessed:
He rhymed you his rubbish nobody read.
Loved you and doted you — did not I laugh!
There was a prize! But we both were tried.
Oh, heart of mine, marked broad with her mark.
Tekel, found wanting, set aside,
Scorn'd! See, I bleed these tears in the dark
Till comfort come and the last be bled:
He? He is tagging your epitaph.

If it would only come over again!
— Time to be patient with me, and probe
This heart till you punctured the proper vein,
Just to learn what blood is: twitch the rose
From that blank lay-figure your fancy draped,
Prick the leathern heart till the — verses spirit!

And late it was easy; late, you walked
Where a friend might meet you; Edith's
name
Arose to one's lip if one laughed or talked;
If I heard good news, you heard the same;
When I woke, I knew that your breath escaped;
I could bite my time, keep alive, alert.

And alive I shall keep and long, you will see!
I knew a man, was kicked like a dog
From gutter to cesspool; what cared he So long as he picked from the filth his prog? He saw youth, beauty and genius die,
And jollily lived to his hundredth year.
But I will live otherwise: none of such life!
At once I begin as I mean to end.
Go on with the world, get gold in its strife,
Give your spouse the slip and betray your friend!
There are two who decline, a woman and I,
And enjoy our death in the darkness here.

I liked that way you had with your curls
Wound to a ball in a net behind:
Your cheek was chaste as a Quaker-girl's,
And your mouth — there was never, to my mind,
Such a funny mouth, for it would not shut;
And the dented chin too — what a chin!
There were certain ways when you spoke, some words
That you know you never could pronounce:
You were thin, however; like a bird's
Your hand seemed — some would say, the pounce
Of a scaly-footed hawk — all but!
The world was right when it called you thin,

But I turn my back on the world: I take
Your hand, and kneel, and lay to my lips.
Bid me live, Edith! Let me slake
Thirst at your presence! Fear no slips:
'Tis your slave shall pay, while his soul endures.

Full due, love's whole debt, summiun jus.
My queen shall have high observance, planned
Courtship made perfect, no least hue
Crossed without warrant. There you stand,
Worn too, and white too: would this wine
Had washed all over that body of yours.
Ere I drank it, and you down with it, thus!

ABT VOGLER
(AFTER HE HAS BEEN EXTEMPORIZING UPON THE MUSICAL INSTRUMENT OF HIS INVENTION)

Would that the structure brave, the manifold music I build,
Bidding my organ obey, calling its keys to their work,
Claiming each slave of the sound, at a touch, as when Solomon willed
Armies of angels that soar, legions of demons that lurk,
Man. brute, reptile, fly, — alien of end and of aim,
Adverse, each from the other heaven-high, hell-deep removed,
Should rush into sight at once as he named the ineffable Name.
And pile him a palace straight, to pleasure the princess he loved!

Would it might tarry like his, the beautiful building of mine,
This which my keys in a crowd pressed and importuned to raise!
Ah, one and all, how they helped, would disparl
now and now coramine.
Zealons to hasten the work, heighten their master his praise!
And one would bury his brow with a blind
plunge down to hell.
Burrow awhile and build, broad on the roots of things.

Then up again swim into sight, having based me my palace well,
Founded it, fearless of flame, flat on the nether springs.
And another would mount and march, like the excellent minion he was,
Ay, another and yet another, one crowd but with many a crest.
Raising my rampired walls of gold as transparent as glass,
Eager to do and die, yield each his place to the rest:
For higher still and higher (as a runner tips with fire,
When a great illumination surprises a festal night —
Outlined round and round Rome's dome from space to spire).
Up, the pinnacled glory reached, and the pride of my soul was in sight.

In sight? Not half! for it seemed, it was certain, to match man's birth,
Nature in turn conceived, obeying an impulse as I;
And the emulous heaven yearned down, made effort to reach the earth,
As the earth had done her best, in my passion, to scale the sky:
Novel splendors burst forth, grew familiar and dwelt with mine.
Not a point nor peak but found and fixed its wandering star:
Meteor-moons, balls of blaze: and they did not pale nor pine,
For earth had attained to heaven, there was no more near nor far.

Nay more; for there wanted not who walked in the glare and glow,
Presences plain in the place; or, fresh from the Psephist,
Furnished for ages to come, when a kindlier
wind should blow,
Lured now to begin and live, in a house to their liking at last:
Or else the wonderful Dead who have passed through the body and gone,
But were back once more to breathe in an old world worth their new:
What never had been, was now; what was, as it shall be anon;
And what is, — shall I say, matched both? for I was made perfect too.

All through my keys that gave their sounds to a wish of my soul,
All through my soul that praised as its wish flowed visibly forth,
All through music and me! For think, had I painted the whole,
Why, there it had stood, to see, nor the process so wonder-worth:
Had I written the same, made verse — still,
effect proceeds from cause.
Ye know why the forms are fair, ye hear how the tale is told;
It is all triumph art, but art in obedience to laws.

Painter and poet are proud in the artist-list enrolled:

But here is the finger of God, a flash of the will that can,

Existent behind all laws, that made them and, lo, they are!

And I know not if, save in this, such gift be allowed to man.

That out of three sounds he frame, not a fourth sound, but a star.

Consider it well: each note of our scale in itself is taught;

It is everywhere in the world — loud, soft, and all is said:

Give it to me to use! I mix it with two in my thought:

And there! Ye have heard and seen: consider and bow the head!

Well, it is gone at last, the palace of music I reared;

Gone! and the good tears start, the praises that come too slow;

For one is assured at first, one scarce can say that he feared,

That he even gave it a thought, the gone thing was to go.

Never to be again! But many more of the kind

As good, nay, better perchance: is this your comfort to me?

To me, who must be saved because I cling with my mind

To the same, same self, same love, same God: ay, what was, shall be.

Therefore to whom turn I but to thee, the ineffable Name?

Builder and maker, thou, of houses not made with hands!

What, have fear of change from thee who art over the same?

Doubt that thy power can fill the heart that thy power expands?

There shall never be one lost good! What was, shall live as before;

The evan is null, is taught, is silence implying sound;

What was good shall be good, with, for evil, so much good more;

On the earth the broken arcs; in the heaven a perfect round.

All we have willed or hoped or dreamed of good shall exist;

Not its semblance, but itself; no beauty, nor good, nor power.

Whose voice has gone forth, but each survives for the melolist

When eternity affirms the conception of an hour.

The high that proved too high, the heroic for earth too hard.

The passion that left the ground to lose itself in the sky.

Are music sent up to God by the lover and the bard;

Enough that he heard it once: we shall hear it by and by.

And what is our failure here but a triumph’s evidence

For the fulness of the days? Have we withered or agonized?

Why else was the pause prolonged but that singing might issue thence?

Why rushed the discord in, but that harmony should be prized?

Sorrow is hard to bear, and doubt is slow to clear.

Each sufferer says his say, his scheme of the weal and woe:

But God has a few of us whom he whispers in the ear;

The rest may reason and welcome: ’tis we musicians know.

Well, it is earth with me; silence resumes her reign:

I will be patient and proud, and soberly acquiesce.

Give me the keys. I feel for the common chord again.

Sliding by semitones till I sink to the minor,

—yes, and I blunt it into a ninth, and I stand on alien ground,

Surveying awhile the heights I rolled from into the deep:

Which, hark, I have dared and done, for my resting-place is found.

The C Major of this life: so, now I will try to sleep.

RABBI BEN EZRA

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be.
The last of life, for which the first was made:
Our times are in his hand.

Who saith, ‘’ A whole I planned,
Youth shows but half; trust God: see all, nor be afraid! ’’

Not that, amassing flowers,
Youth sighed, ’’ Which rose make ours.
Which lily leave and then as best recall? ’’

Not that, admiring stars,
It yearned, ’’ Nor Jove, nor Mars;
Mine be some figured flame which blends, transcends them all! ’’

Not for such hopes and fears
Annulling youth’s brief years,
Do I renounce: folly wide the mark!
Rather I prize the doubt
Low kinds exist without,
Finished and finite clods, untroubled by a spark.

Poor vaunt of life indeed,
Were man but formed to feed
On joy, to solely seek and find and feast:
Such feasting ended, then
As sure an end to men;
Irks care the crop full bird? Frets doubt the maw-crammed beast?

Rejoice we are allied
To that which doth provide
And not partake, effect and not receive!
A spark disturbs our clad;
Ne'er we hold of God
Who gives, than of his tribes that take, I must believe.

Then, welcome each rebuff
That turns earth's smoothness rough,
Each sting that bids nor sit nor stand but go!
Be our joys three-parts pain!
Strive, and hold cheap the strain;
Learn, nor account the pang; dare, never grudge the three!

For thence,—a paradox
Which comforts while it mocks,—
Shall life succeed in that it seems to fail:
What I aspired to be,
And was not, comforts me:
A brute I might have been, but would not sink
i' the scale.

What is he but a brute
Whose flesh has soul to suit,
Whose spirit works lest arms and legs want
play?
To man, propose this test—
Thy body at its best,
How far can that project thy soul on its lone
way?

Yet gifts should prove their use:
I own the Past profuse
Of power each side, perfection every turn:
Eyes, ears took in their dole,
Brain treasured up the whole;
Should not the heart, beat once "How good to live and learn?"

Not once beat "Praise be thine!
I see the whole design,
I, who saw power, see now Love perfect
too:
Perfect I call thy plan:
Thanks that I was a man!
Maker, remake, complete,—I trust what thou shalt do!"

For pleasant is this flesh;
Our soul, in its rose-mesh
Pulled ever to the earth, still yearns for rest;
Would we some prize might hold
To match those manifold Possessions of the brute,—gain most, as we did best!

Let us not always say,
"Spite of this flesh to-day
I strove, made head, gained ground upon the whole!"
As the bird wings and sings,

Let us cry, "All good things
Are ours, nor soul helps flesh more, now, than flesh helps soul!"

Therefore I summon age
To grant youth's heritage,
Life's struggle having so far reached its term:
Thence shall I pass, approved
A man, for eye removed
From the developed brute; a God though in the germ.

And I shall thereupon
Take rest, ere I be gone
Once more on my adventure brave and new:
Fearless and un perplexed,
When I wage battle next,
What weapons to select, what armor to indue.

Youth ended, I shall try
My gain or loss thereby;
Leave the fire ashes, what survives is gold:
And I shall weigh the same,
Give life its praise or blame:
Young, all lay in dispute; I shall know, being old.

For note, when evening shuts,
A certain moment cuts
The deed off, calls the glory from the gray:
A whisper from the west
Shoots—"Add this to the rest,
Tak' it and try its worth; here dies another
day."

So, still within this life,
Though lifted o'er its strife,
Let me discern, compare, pronounce at last,
"This rage was right i' the main,
That acquiescence vain:
The Future I may face now I have proved the Past."

For more is not reserved
To man, with soul just nerved
To act to-morrow what he learns to-day:
Here, work enough to watch
The Master work, and catch
Hints of the proper craft, tricks of the tool's true
play.

As it was better, youth
Should strive, through acts uncount, Toward making, then repose on aught found made:
So, better, age, exempt
From strife, should know, than tempt Further. Thou waitest age: wait death nor be afraid!

Enough now, if the Right
And Good and Infinite
Be named here, as thou callest thy hand thine own,
With knowledge absolute,
Subject to no dispute
From fools that crowded youth, nor let thee feel alone.
A DEATH IN THE DESERT

Be there, for once and all,
Severed great minds from small,
Announced to each his station in the Past!
Was I, the world arraigned,
Were they, my soul disdained,
Right? Let age speak the truth and give us peace at last!

Now, who shall arbitrate?
Ten men love what I hate,
Shun what I follow, slight what I receive;
Ten, who in ears and eyes
Match me, we all surmise,
They this thing, and I that: whom shall my soul believe?

Not on the vulgar mass
Called 'work,' must sentence pass,
Things done, that took the eye and had the price;
O'er which, from level stand,
The low world laid its hand,
Found straightway to its mind, could value in a truce:

But all, the world's coarse thumb
And finger failed to plumb,
So passed in making up the main account;
All instincts immature,
All purposes unsure,
That weighed not as his work, yet swelled the man's amount:

Thoughts hardly to be packed
Into a narrow set,
Fancies that broke through language and escaped;
All I could never be,
All, men ignored in me,
This, I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.

Ay, note that Potter's wheel,
That metaphor! and feel
Why time spins fast, why passive lies our clay,
— Thou, to whom fools propound,
When the wine makes its round,
"Since life fleets, all is change; the Past gone, seize to-day!"

Fool! All that is, at all,
Lasts ever, past recall;
Earth changes, but thy soul and God stand sure;
What entered into thee,
That was, is, and shall be:
Time's wheel runs back or stops: Potter and clay endure.

He fixed thee 'mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This Present, thou, forsooth, would fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.

What though the earlier grooves,
Which ran the laughing loves
Around thy base, no longer pause and press?
What though, about thy rim,
Skull-things in order grim
Grow out, in graver mood, obey the sterner stress?

Look not thou down but up!
To uses of a cup,
The festal board, lamp's flash and trumpet's peal,
The new wine's foaming flow,
The Master's lips aglow!
Thou, heaven's consummate cup, what needst thou with earth's wheel?

But I need, now as then,
Thee, God, who mouldest men;
And since, not even while the whirl was worst,
Did I—to the wheel of life
With shapes and colors rife,
Bound dizzily—mistake my end, to shake thy thirst:

So, take and use thy work:
Amend what flaws may lurk,
What strain o' the stuff, what warpings past the aim!
My times be in thy hand!
Perfect the cup as planned!
Let age approve of youth, and death complete the same!

A DEATH IN THE DESERT

[Supposed of Pamphyloop the Antiochene:
It is a parchment, of my rolls the fifth,
Hath three skins glued together, is all Greek,
And goeth from Epsilon down to Mu:
Lies second in the surnamed Chosen Chest,
Stained and conserved with juice of tere-binth,
Covered with cloth of hair, and lettered A,
From Xanthus, my wife's uncle now at peace:
Mu and Epsilon stand for my own name.
I may not write it, but I make a cross
To show I wait His coming, with the rest,
And leave off here: beginneth Pamphyloop.]

I said, "If one should wet his lips with wine,
And slip the broadest plantain-leaf we find,
Or else the lappet of a linen robe,
Into the water-vessel, lay it right,
And cool his forehead just above the eyes
The while a brother, kneeling either side,
Should chafe each hand and try to make it warm,—
He is not so far gone but he might speak."

This did not happen in the outer cave,
Nor in the secret chamber of the rock,
Where, sixty days since the decree was out.
We had him, bedded on a camel-skin,
And waited for his dying all the while;
But in the midstest grotto: since moon's light
Reached there a little, and we would not lose
The last of what might happen on his face.
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ
I at the head, and Xanthus at the feet. With Valens and the Boy, had litted him. And brought him from the chamber in the depths. And laid him in the light where we might see: For certain smiles began about his mouth; And his lids moved, presageful of the end.

Beyond, and halfway up the month o' the cave, The Bactrian convert, having his desire, Kept watch, and made pretence to graze a goat That gave us milk, on rags of various herb. Plantain and quitch, the rocks' shade keeps alive: So that if any thief or soldier passed, (Because the persecution was aware.) Yielding the goat up promptly with his life, Such man might pass on, joyful at a prize, Nor care to pry into the cool o' the cave. Outside was all noon and the burning blue.

"Here is wine," answered Xanthus, — dropped a drop; I stooped and placed the lap of cloth aright, Then chafed his right hand, and the Boy his left: But Valens had bethought him, and produced And broke a ball ofnard, and made perfume. Only, he did — not so much wake, as — turn And smile a little, as a sleeper does If any dear one call him, touch his face — And smiles and loves, but will not be disturbed.

Then Xanthus said a prayer, but still he slept: It is the Xanthus that escaped to Rome. Was burned, and could not write the chronicle.

Then the Boy sprang up from his knees, and ran, Stung by the splendor of a sudden thought, And fetched the seventh plate of graven head Out of the secret chamber, found a place, Pressing with finger on the deeper dints. And spoke, as 't were his mouth proclaiming first, "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

Whereat he opened his eyes wide at once, And sat up of himself, and looked at us; And thenceforth nobody pronounced a word: Only, outside, the Bactrian cried his cry Like the lone desert-bird that wears the ruff, As signal we were safe, from time to time.

First he said, "If a friend declared to me, This my son Valens, this my other son, Were James and Peter, — may, declared as well This lad was very John. — I could believe! — Could, for a moment, doubtlessly believe: So is myself withdrawn into my depths, The soul retreated from the perished brain Whence it was wont to feel and use the world Through these dull members, done with long ago. Yet I myself remain; I feel myself: And there is nothing lost. Let be, awhile!"

[This is the doctrine he was wont to teach, How divers persons witness in each man,

Three souls which make up one soul: first, to wit, A soul of each and all the bodily parts, Seated therein, which works, and is what Does, And has the use of earth, and ends the man Downward; but, tending upward for advice, Grows into, and again is grown into By the next soul, which, seated in the brain, Truth the first with its collected use, And feeleth, thinketh, willeth, — is what Knows: Which, duly tending upward in its turn, Grows into, and again is grown into By the last soul, that uses both the first, Subsisting whether they assist or no, And, constituting man's self, is what Is — And leans upon the former, makes it play, As that played off the first; and, tending up, Holds, is upheld by, God, and ends the man Upward in that dead point of intercourse, Nor needs a place, for it returns to Him. What Does, what Knows, what Is; three souls, one man.

I give the glossa as Theotypas.]

And then, "A stick, once fire from end to end; Now, ashes save the tip that holds a spark! Yet, blow the spark, it runs back, spreads itself. A little where the fire was: thus I urge The soul that served me, till it task once more What ashes of my brain have kept their shape, And these make effort on the last o' the flesh. Trying to taste again the truth of things" — (He smiled) — "their very superficial truth; As that ye are my sons, that it is long Since James and Peter had release by death, And I am only he, your brother John, Who saw and heard, and could remember all. Remember all! It is not much to say, What if the truth broke on me from above As once or oftimes? Such might hap again: Doubtlessly He might stand in presence here. With head wool-white, eyes flame, and feet like brass, The sword and the seven stars, as I have seen — I who now shudder only and surmise 'How did your brother bear that sight and live?'"

"If I live yet, it is for good, more love Through me to men: be taught but ashes here That keep awhile my semblance, who was John. — Still, when they scatter, there is left on earth No one alive who knew (consider this!) — Saw with his eyes and handled with his hands That which was from the first, the Word of Life. How will it be when none more saith 'I saw'?

"Such ever was love's way: to rise, it stoops. Since I, whom Christ's mouth taught, was bids den teach, I went, for many years, about the world, Saying 'It was so; so I heard and saw,'
Speaking as the case asked: and men believed. Afterward came the message to myself in Patmos isle; I was not hidden teach, But simply listen, take a book and write, Nor set down other than the given word. With nothing left to my arbitrament. To choose or change: I wrote, and men believed.

Then, for my time grew brief, no message more. No call to write again, I found a way, And, reasoning from my knowledge, merely taught Men should, for love's sake, in love's strength believe; Or I would pen a letter to a friend And urge the same as friend, nor less nor more.

Friends said I reasoned rightly, and believed. But at the last, why, I seemed left alive Like a sea-jelly weak on Patmos strand, To tell dry sea-beach gazers how I fared When there was mid-sea, and the mighty things;

Left to repeat, 'I saw, I heard, I knew,' And go all over the old ground again, With Antichrist already in the world, And many Antichrists, who answered prompt, 'Am I not Jasper as thyself art John?' Nay, young, whereas through age thou mayest forget;

Wherefore, explain, or how shall we believe? I never thought to call down fire on such, Or, as in wonderful and early days. Pick up the scorpion, tread the serpent dumb; But patient stated much of the Lord's life Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it work: Since much that at the first, in deed and word, Lay simply and sufficiently exposed. Had grown (or else my soul was grown to much, Fed through such years, familiar with such light, Guarded and guided still to see and speak) Of new significance and fresh result; What first were guessed as points, I now knew stars.

And named them in the Gospel I have writ, For men said, 'It is getting long ago; Where is the promise of his coming?' — asked These young ones in their strength, asloth to wait;

Of me who, when their sires were born, was old, I, for I loved them, answered, joyfully, Since I was there, and helpful in my age; And, in the main, I think such men believed. Finally, thus endeavoring, I fell sick. Ye brought me here, and I supposed the end, And went to sleep with one thought that, at least, Though the whole earth should lie in wickedness, We had the truth, might leave the rest to God. Yet now I wake in such dejectitude As I had slidden down and fallen afar, Past even the presence of my former self, Grasping the while for stay at facts which snap. Till I am found away from my own world.

Feeling for foothold through a blank profound, Along with unborn people in strange lands, Who say — I heard said or conceive they say — 'Was John at all, and did he say he saw?' Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!

"And how shall I assure them? Can they share — They, who have flesh, a veil of youth and strength About each spirit, that needs must hide its time, Living and learning still as years assist Which wear the thickness thin, and let man see —

With me who hardly am withheld at all, But shudderingly, scarce a shred between, Lie bare to the universal prick of light? Is it for nothing we grow old and weak, We whom God loves? When pain ends, gain ends too.

To me, that story — ay, that Life and Death Of which I wrote 'it was' — to me, it is; — Is, here and now: I apprehend naught else. Is not God now i the world his power first made?

Is not his love at issue still with sin, Visibly when a wrong is done on earth? Love, wrong, and pain, what see I else around? Yea, and the Resurrection and Uprise To the right hand of the throne — what is it beside,

When such truth, breaking bounds, o'erthroned my soul, And, as I saw the sin and death, even so See I the need yet transiency of both, The good and glory consumed thenese, I saw the power; I see the Love, once weak, Resume the Power; and in this word 'I see,' Lo, there is recognized the Spirit of both That moving o'er the spirit of man, unblinds his eye and bids him look. These are, I see; But ye, the children, his beloved ones too. Ye need — and should use an optic glass I wondered at meanwhile, somewhere in the world, It had been given a crafty smith to make: A tube, he turned on objects brought too close, Lying confusedly insubordinate For the unassisted eye to master once; Look through his tube, at distance now they lay, Become succinct, distinct, so small, so clear! Just thus, ye needs must apprehend what truth I see, reduced to plain historic fact, Diminished into clearness, proved a point. And far away: ye would withdraw your sense From out eternity, strain it upon time. Then stand before that fact, that Life and Death,

Stay there at gaze, till it dispars, dispread, As though a star should open out, all sides, Grow the world on you, as it is my world.

"For life, with all it yields of joy and woe, And hope and fear, — believe the aged friend. Is just our chance o' the prize of learning love, How love might be, hath been indeed, and is; And that we hold thenceforth to the uttermost Such prize despite the envy of the world.
And, having gained truth, keep truth: that is all.
But see the double way wherein we are led.
How the soul leans diversely from the flesh!
With flesh, that hath so little time to stay,
And yields mere basement for the soul's emprise,
Expect prompt teaching. Helpful was the light,
And warmth was cherishing and food was choice
To every man's flesh, thousand years ago,
As now to yours and mine; the body sprang
At once to the height, and stayed: but the soul,—no!
Since sages who, this noontide, meditate
In Rome or Athens, may descry some point
Of the eternal power, hid yestereve;
And, as thereby the power's whole mass extends,
So much extends the aether floating o'er
The love that tops the might, the Christ in God.
Then, as new lessons shall be learned in these
Till earth's work stop and senseless time run out,
So daly, daily, needs provision be
For keeping the soul's prowess possible.
Building new barriers as the old decay,
Saving us from evasion of life's proof.
Putting the question ever, 'Does God love,
And will ye hold that truth against the world?'
Ye know there needs no second proof with good
Gained for our flesh from any earthly source:
We might go freezing, ages,—give us fire,
Thereafter we judge fire at its full worth,
And guard it safe through every chance, ye know!
That fable of Prometheus and his theft,
How mortals gained Jove's fiery flower, grows old
(I have been used to hear the pagans own)
And out of mind; but fire, how'er her birth,
Here is it, precious to the sophist now
Who laughs the myth of Æschylus to scorn,
As precious to those satyrs of his play,
Who touched it in gay wonder at the thing.
While were it so with the soul,—this gift of truth
Once grasped, were this our soul's gain safe, and sure
To prosper as the body's gain is wont. —
Why, man's probation would conclude, his Crumble; for he both reasons and decides.
Weighs first, then chooses: will he give up fire
For gold or purple once he knows its worth?
Could he give Christ up were his worth as plain?
Therefore, I say, to test man, the proofs shift,
Nor may he grasp that fact like other fact,—
And straightforward in his life acknowledge it,
As, say, the indubitable bliss of fire,
Sigh ye, 'T had been easier once than now?'
To give you answer I am left alive;
Look at me who was present from the first!
Ye know what things I saw; then came a test,
My first, befitting me who so had seen:
'Forsake the Christ thou sawest transfigured,
him
Who trod the sea and brought the dead to life?
What should wring this from thee!'—ye laugh
and ask.
What wrung it? Even a torchlight and a noise,
The sudden Roman faces, violent hands,
And fear of what the Jews might do! Just that,
And it is written, 'I forsook and fled:'
There was my trial, and it ended thus.
Ay, but my soul had gained its truth, could grow:
Another year or two,—what little child,
What tender woman that had seen no least
Of all my sights, but barely heard them told,
Who did not clasp the cross with a light laugh,
Or wrap the burning robe round, thanking God?
Well, was truth safe forever, then? Not so.
Already had begun the silent work
Whereby truth, deadened of its absolute blaze,
Might need love's eye to pierce the o'erstretched doubt.
Teachers were busy, whispering 'All is true
As the aged ones report; but youth can reach
Where age gropes dimly, weak with stir and strain,
And the full doctrine slumbers till to-day.'
Thus, what the Roman's lowered spear was found.
A bar to me who touched and handled truth,
Now proved the glozing of some new shrewd tongue.
This Ebion, this Cerinthus or their mates,
Till imminent was the outcry 'Save our Christ!'
Whereon I stated much of the Lord's life
Forgotten or misdelivered, and let it work.
Such work done, as it will be, what comes next?
What do I hear say, or conceive men say,
'Was John at all, and did he say he saw?
Assure us, ere we ask what he might see!'
"Is this indeed a burden for late days,
And may I help to bear it with you all,
Using my weakness which becomes your strength?
For if a babe were born inside this grot,
Grew to a boy here, heard us praise the sun,
Yet had but you sole glimmer in light's place,—
One loving him and wishful he should learn,
Would much rejoice himself was blinded first
Month by month here, so made to understand
How eyes, born darkling, apprehend amiss:
I think I could explain to such a child
There was more glow outside than gleams he caught,
Aye, nor need urge 'I saw it, so believe!'—
It is a heavy burden you shall bear.
In latter days, new lands, or old grown strange,
Left without me, which must be very soon.
What is the doubt, my brothers? Quick with it!
I see you stand conversing, each new face,
Either in fields, of yellow summer eyes,
On islets yet unnamed amid the sea;
Or pace for shelter 'neath a portico
Out of the crowd in some enormous town
Where now the larks sing in a solitude;
Or muse upon blank heaps of stone and sand
"Quick, for time presses, tell the whole mind out.

And let us ask and answer and be saved!

My book speaks on, because it cannot pass;

One listens quietly, nor scoffs but pleads.

"Here is a tale of things done ages since;

What world was ever told the second day?

Wonders, that would prove doctrine, go for naught.

Remains the doctrine, love; well, we must love,

And what we love most, power and love in one,

Let us acknowledge on the record here,

Accepting these in Christ: must Christ then be?

Has he been? Did we ourselves make him?

Our mind receives but what it holds, no more,

First of the love, then; we acknowledge Christ——

A proof we comprehend his love, a proof

We had such love already in ourselves,

Knew first what else we should not recognize.

'Tis mere projection from man's immorat mind,

And, what he loves, thus fails reflected back,

Becomes accounted somewhat out of him;

He throws it up in air, it drops down earth's,

With shape, name, story added, man's old way,

How prove you Christ came otherwise at least?

Next try the power: he made and rules the world:

Ceres there is a world once made, now ruled,

Unless things have been ever as we see.

Our sire's declared a charioteer's yoked steeds,

Brought the sun up the east and down the west,

Which only of itself now rises, sets,

As if a hand impelled it and a will——

Thus they long thought, they who had will and hands:

But the new question's whisper is distinct,

Wherefore must all force needs be like ourselves?

We have the hands, the will; what made and drives

The sun is force, is law, is named, not known.

While will and love we do know; marks of these,

Eye-witnesses attest, so books declare——

As that, to punish or reward our race,

The sun at unth he times arise or set

Or else stood still: what do not men affirm?

But earth requires as urgently reward

Or punishment to-day as years ago.

And none expects the sun will interpose;

Therefore it was mere passion and mistake,

Or erring zeal for right, which changed the truth.

Go back, far, farther, to the birth of things;

Ever the will, the intelligence, the love,

Man's!—which he gives, supposing he but finds,

As late he gave head, body, hands and feet.

To help these in what forms he called his gods.

First, Jove's brow, Juno's eyes were swept away.

But Jove's wrath, Juno's pride continued long;

As last, will, power, and love discarded these,

So law in turn discards power, love, and will.

What proveth God is otherwise at least?

All else, projection from the mind of man!

"Nay, do not give me wine, for I am strong,

But place my gospel where I put my hands.

"I say that man was made to grow, not stop;

That help, he needed once, and needs no more,

Having grown but an inch by, is withdrawn:

For he hath new needs, and new helps to these.

This imports solely, man should mount on each

New height in view; the help whereby he mounts.

The ladder-rung his foot has left, may fall,

Since all things suffer change save God the Truth.

Man apprehends him newly at each stage.

Whereat earth's ladder drops, its service done;

And nothing shall prove twice what once was proved.

You stick a garden-plot with ordered twigs

To show inside lie germs of herbs unborn.

And check the careless step would spoil their birth;

But when herbs wave, the guardian twigs may go,

Since should ye doubt of virtues, question kinds,

It is no longer for old twigs ye look,

Which proved once underneath lay store of seed,

But to the herb's self, by what light ye boast,

For what fruit its signs are. This book's fruit is plain,

Nor miracles need prove it any more.

Doth the fruit show? Then miracles bade ware

At first of root and stem, saved both till now
From trampling ox, rough boar and wanton goat.

What? Was man made a wheelwork to wind up,

And be discharged, and straight wound up anew?

No!—grown, his growth lasts; taught, he ne'er forgets:

May learn a thousand things, not twice the same.

"This might be pagan teaching; now hear mine.

"I say, that as the babe, you feed awhile,

Becomes a boy and fit to feed himself,

So, minds at first must be spoon-fed with truth.

When they can eat, babe's nurture is withdrawn.

I fed the babe whether it would or no:

I bid the boy or feed himself or starve.

I cried once, 'That ye may believe in Christ,

Behold this blind man shall receive his sight!'

I cry now. Urgest thou, for I am shrived

And smile at stories how John's word could care——

Repeat that miracle and take my faith?"

I say, that miracle was duly wrought
When, save for it, no faith was possible,
Whether a change were wrought it the shows
o’ the world,
Whether the change came from our minds which see
Of shows o’ the world so much as and no more
Than God wills for his purpose, — (what do I
See now, suppose you, there where you see rock
Round us? — I know not; such was the effect,
So faith grew, making void more miracles
Because too much: they would compel, not help.
I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ
Accepted by thy reason, solves for thee
All questions in the earth and out of it,
And has so far advanced thee to be wise,
Wouldst thou improve this to re-prove the proved?
In life’s mere minute, with power to use that proof,
Leave knowledge and revert to how it sprung?
Thou hast it; use it forthwith, or die!

"For I say, this is death and the sole death,
When a man’s loss comes to him from his gain,
Darkness from light, from knowledge ignorance,
And lack of love from love made manifest;
A lamp’s death when, replete with oil, it
choke;
A stomach’s when, surcharged with food, it staves.
With ignorance was certainty of a cure.
When man, appalled at nature, questioned first,
‘What if there lurk a might behind this might?’
He needed satisfaction God could give,
And did give, as ye have the written word:
But when he finds might still redouble might,
Yet asks, ‘Since all is might, what use of will?’
— Will, the one source of might, — he being
man
With a man’s will and a man’s might, to teach
In little how the two combine in large;
That man has turned round on himself and stands.
Which in the course of nature is, to die.

"And when man questioned, ‘What if there be love
Behind the will and might, as real as they?’ —
He needed satisfaction God could give,
And did give, as ye have the written word:
But when, beholding that love everywhere,
He reasons, ‘Since such love is everywhere,
And since ourselves can love and would be loved,
We ourselves make the love, and Christ was
not;’ —
How shall ye help this man who knows himself,
That he must love and would be loved again,
Yet, owning his own love that proveth Christ,
Rej ecteth Christ through very need of him?
The lamp o’erswims with oil, the stomach flags
Loaded with nurture, and that man’s soul dies.

"If he rej oin, ‘But this was all the while
A trick;’ the fault was, first of all, in thee,
Thy story of the places, names and dates,
Where, when and how the ultimate truth had rise,
— Thy prior truth, at last discovered none,
Whence now the second suffers detriment,
What good of giving knowledge if, because
O’ the manner of the gift, its profit fail?
And why refuse what medium of help
Had stopped the after-doubt, impossible
I’ the face of truth — truth absolute, uniform?
Why must I hit of this and miss of that,
Distinguish just as I be weak or strong.
And not ask of thee and have answer prompt,
Was this once, was it not once? — then and
now
And evermore, plain truth from man to man.
Is John’s procedure just the heathen bard’s?
Put question of his famous play again
How for the ephemerals’ sake, Jove’s fire was filed,
And carried in a cane and brought to earth:
The fact is in the fable, cry the wise.
Mortals obtained the boon, so much is fact,
Though fire be spirit and produced on earth.
As with the Titan’s, so now with thy tale:
Why breed in us perplexity, mistake,
Nor tell the whole truth in the proper words?

"I answer, Have ye yet to argue out
The very primal thesis, plainest law,
— Man is not God but hath God’s end to serve.
A master to obey, a course to take,
Somewhat to cast off, somewhat to become?
Grant this, then man must pass from old to new.
From vain to real, from mistake to fact,
From what once seemed good, to what now proves best.
How could man have progression otherwise?
Before the point was mooted ‘What is God?’,
No savage man inquired ‘What am myself?’
Much less replied, ‘First, last, and best of things.’
Man takes that title now if he believes
Might can exist with neither will nor love,
In God’s case — what he names now Nature’s Law—
While in himself he recognizes love
No less than might and will: and rightly takes.
Since if man prove the sole existent thing
Where these combine, whatever their degree,
However weak the might or will or love,
So they be found there, put in evidence, —
He is as surely higher in the scale
Than any might with neither love nor will,
As life, apparent in the poorest midge, (When the faint dust-speck flits, ye guess its wing.)
Is marvellous beyond dead Atlas’ self—
Given to the nobler mide for resting-place!
Thus, man proves best and highest — God, in fine.
And thus the victoryleads but to defeat,
The gain to loss, best rise to the worst fall,
His life becomes impossible, which is death.

"But if, appealing thence, he answers, avouch
He is mere man, and in humility
Neither may know God nor mistake himself.
I point to the immediate consequence.
And say, by such confession straight he falls
Into man's place, a thing nor God nor beast,
Made to know that he can know and not more:
Lower than God who knows all and can all,
Higher than beasts which know and can so far.
As each beast's limit, perfect to an end,
Nor conscious that they know, nor craving more:
While man knows partly but conceives beside,
Creeps ever on from fancies to the fact,
And in this striving, this converting air
Into a solid he may grasp and use,
Finds progress, man's distinctive mark alone,
Not God's, and not the beasts': God is, they are.
Man partly is and wholly hopes to be.
Such progress could no more attend his soul
Were all it struggles after found at first
And guesses changed to knowledge absolute,
Than motion wait his body, were all else
Than it the solid earth on every side.
Where now through space he moves from rest to rest.
Man, therefore, thus conditioned, must expect
He could not, what he knows now, know at first;
What he considers that he knows to-day,
Come but to-morrow, he will find misknown;
Getting increase of knowledge, since he learns
Because he lives, which is to be a man,
Set to instruct himself by his past self:
First, like the brute, obliged by facts to learn,
Next, as man may, obliged by his own mind,
Bent, habit, nature, knowledge turned to law.
God's gift was that man should conceive of truth.
And yearn to gain it, catching at mistake,
As midway help till he reach fact indeed.
The statutory eve he mould a shape
Boasts a like gift, the shape's idea, and next
The aspiration to produce the same;
So, taking stock, he calls his shape elsewhere.
Cries ever: 'Now I have the thing I see.'
Yet all the while goes changing what was wrought.
From falsehood like the truth, to truth itself.
How where it had he cried, 'I see no face,
No breast, no feet in the intellectual clay'?
Rather commend him that he clapped his hands,
And laughed: 'It is my shape and lives again.'
Enjoyed the falsehood, touched it on to truth,
Until yourselves applaud the flesh indeed
In what is still flesh-mutating clay.
Right in you, right in him, such way be man's!
God only makes the live shape at a jet.
Will ye renounce this pact of creaturship?
The pattern on the Mount subsists no more,
Seemed awhile, then returned to nothingness;
But copies. Moses strove to make thereby,
Serve still and are replaced as time requires:
By these, make newest vessels, reach the type!
If ye demur, this judgment on your head,
Never to reach the ultimate, angels' law,
Indulging every instinct of the soul.
There where law, life, joy, impulse are one thing!

"Such is the burden of the latest time,
I have surviyed to hear it with my ears,
Answer it with my lips: does this suffice?
For if there be a further woe than such,
Wherein my brothers struggling need a hand,
So long as any pulse is left in mine,
May I be absent even longer yet,
Plucking the blind ones back from the abyss,
Though I should tarry a new hundred years!"

But he was dead: 't was about noon, the day
Somewhat declining: we five buried him
That eve, and then, dividing, went five ways,
And I, disguised, returned to Ephesus.

By this, the cave's mouth must be filled with sand.
Valens is lost, I know not of his trace;
The Bactrian was but a wild childish man,
And could not write nor speak, but only loved:
So, lest the memory of this go quite,
Seeing that I to-morrow fight the beasts,
I tell the same to Phoebas, whom believe!
For many look again to find that face,
Beloved John's to whom I ministered,
Somewhere in life about the world; they err:
Either mistaking what was darkly spoke
At ending of his book, as he relates,
Or misconceiving somewhat of this speech.
Scattered from mouth to mouth, as I suppose.
Believe ye will not see him any more.

About the world with his divine regard!
For all was as I say, and now the man
Lies as he lay once, breast to breast with God.

[Cerinthus read and mused; one added this:

"If Christ, as thou affirmest, be of men
Mere man, the first and best but nothing more,— Account him, for reward of what he was,
Now and forever, wretchedest of all.
For see; himself conceived of life as love,
Conceived of love as what must enter in,
Fill up, make one with his each soul he loved:
Thus much for man's joy, all men's joy for him.
Well, he is gone, thou sayest, to fit reward.
But by this time are many souls set free,
And very many still retained alive:
Nay, should his coming be delayed awhile,
Say, ten years longer (twelve years, some compute).
See if, for every finger of thy hands,
There be not found, that day the world shall end,
Hundreds of souls, each holding by Christ's word
That he will grow incorporate with all,
With me as Pamphyllax, with him as John,
Groom for each bride! Can a mere man do this?
Yet Christ saith, this he lived and died to do.
Call Christ, then, the illimitable God,
Or lost!'"

But 't was Cerinthus that is lost.]
CALIBAN UPON SETEBOS:
OR, NATURAL THEOLOGY IN THE ISLAND

"Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself."

[Will sprawl, now that the heat of day is best, Plat on his belly in the pit's much mire, With elbows wide, fists clenched to prop his chin.

And, while he kicks both feet in the cool slush, And feels about his spine small eft-things coarse, Run in and out each arm, and make him laugh: And while above his head a pompon-plant, Coating the cave-top as a brow its eye, Creeps down to touch and tickle hair and beard, And now a flower drops with a bee inside, And now a fruit to snap at, catch and crunch, — He looks out o'er yeon sea which sunbeams cross And recross till they weave a spider-web, Musses of fire, some great fish breaks at times,) And talks to his own self, how'er he please, Touching that other, whom his dam called God.

Because to talk about Him, vexes — ha, Could He but know! and time to vex is now, When talk is safer than in winter-time. Moreover Prosper and Miranda sleep,

In confidence he drudges at their task, And it is good to cheat the pair, and gibe, Letting the rank tongue blossoms into speech.]

Setebos, Setebos, and Setebos!
'Thinketh, He dwelleth i' the cold o' the moon.

'Thinketh He made it, with the sun to match, But not the stars; the stars came otherwise; Only made clouds, winds, meteors, such as that: Also this isle, what lives and grows thereon,

And nasty sea which rounds and ends the same. 'Thinketh, it came of being ill at ease: He hated that He cannot change His cold, Nor cure its ache. 'Hath spied an icy fish That longed to 'scape the rock-stream where she lived, And swam herself within the lukewarm brine O' the lazy sea her stream thrusts far amid. A crystal spike 'twixt two warm walls of wave; Only, she ever sickened, found repulse At the other kind of water, not her life, (Green-dense and dim-delicious, bred o' the sun.) Flowered back from bliss she was not born to breathe,

And in her old bounds buried her despair, Hating and loving warmth alike: so He.

'Thinketh, He made thereat the sun, this isle, Trees and the fowls here, beast and creeping thing. You otter, sleek-wet, black, lithe as a leech; You ang, one fire-eye in a ball of foam, That floats and feeds; a certain badger brown He hath watched hunt with that slant white-wedge eye

By moonlight; and the pie with the long tongue
That pricks deep into oakwarts for a worm, And says a plain word when she finds her prize.

But will not eat the ants; the ants themselves
That build a wall of seeds and settled stalks About their hole — He made all these and more, Made all we see, and us, in spite: how else? He could not, Himself, make a second self
To be His mate; as well have made Himself;

He would not make what He mislikes or slighta,

An eyesore to Him, or hurt Him in His pains:

But did, in envy, listlessness or sport,

Make what Himself would fain, in a manner, be —

Weaker in most points, stronger in a few,

Worthy, and yet mere playthings all the while, Things He admires and mocks too, — that is it. Because, so brave, so better though they be, It nothing skills if He begin to plague.

Look now, I melt a gourd-fruit into mash, Add honeycomb and pods, I have perceived, Which bite like pinches when they bill and kiss,—

Then, when froth rises bladdery, drink up all,

Quick, quick, till maggots scamper through my brain;

Last, throw me on my back i' the seeded thyme, And wanton, wishing I were born a bird.

Put case, unable to be what I wish, I yet could make a live bird out of clay:

Would not I take clay, pinch my Caliban Able to fly? — for, there, see, he hath wings,

And great comb like the hoopoe's to admire, And there, a sting to do his foes offence,

There, and I will that he begin to live, Fly to your rock-top, nip me off the horns Of grrigs high up that make the merry din, Saucy through their veined wings, and mind me not.

In which feat, if his leg snapped, brittle clay, And he lay stupid-like, — why, I should laugh;

And if he, spying me, should fall to weep, Beseech me to be good, repair his wrong,

Bid his poor leg smart less or grow again, — Well, as the chance were, this might take or else.

Not take my fancy: I might hear his cry,

And give the mankin three sound legs for one, Or pluck the other off, leave him like an egg, And lessoned he was mine and merely clay.

Were this no pleasure, lying in the thyme, Drinking the mash, with brain become alive, Making and marring clay at will? — So He.

'Thinketh, such shows nor right nor wrong in Him,

Nor kind, nor cruel: He is strong and Lord,

'Am strong myself compared to yonder crabs

That march now from the mountain to the sea;

'Let twenty pass, and stone the twenty-first, Loving not, hating not, just choosing so.

'Say, the first stranger that boasts purple spots

Shall join the file, one pincer twisted off;

'Say, this bruised fellow shall receive a worm, And two worms he whose nippers end in red;

As it likes me each time, I do; so He.

Well then, 'supposeth He is good i' the main.

Pleasable if His mind and ways were guessed.

But rougher than His handiwork be sure!
'Keep's for his Ariel a tall punch-hill crane
He birds go wade for fish and straight disgorge;
Also a sea-beast, biped, which he snared.
Blinded the eyes of, and brought somewhat tame.
And split its toe-webs, and now pens the drudge
In a hole o' the rock and calls him Caliban;
A bitter heart that bides its time and bites.
Th'fains thus at being Prosper in a way,
Taketh his mirth with make-believes: so He.
His dam held that the Quiet made all things
Which Setebos vexed only: 'holds not so,
Who made them weak, meant weakness He might vex.
Had He meant other, while His hand was in,
Why not make horne eyes no thorn could prick,
Or plate my scalp with bone against the snow,
Or overscale my flesh 'neath joint and joint,
Like an orec's armor? Ay, — so spoil His sport!
He is the One now: only He doth all.
'Saith, He may like, perchance, what profits
Him.
Ay, himself loves what does him good; but why?
'Gets good no otherwise. This blinded beast
Loves whose places flesh-meat on his nose,
But, had he eyes, would want no help, but hate
Or love, just as it liked him: He hath eyes.
Also it pleaseth Setebos to work,
Use all His hands, and exercise much craft.
By no means for the love of what is worked.
'Casteth, himself, no finer good i' the world
When all goes right, in this safe summer-time,
And he wants little, hungers, aches not much,
Than trying what to do with wit and strength.
'Falls to make something: 'piled yon pile of turfs,
And squared and stuck there squares of soft white chalk,
And, with a fish-tooth, scratched a moon on each,
And set up endwise certain spikes of tree,
And crowned the whole with a sloth's skull atop.
Found dead i' the woods, too hard for one to kill.
No use at all i' the work, for work's sole sake;
'Shall some day knock it down again: so He.
'Saith He is terrible: watch His feats in proof!
One hurricane will spoil six good months' hope.
He hath a spite against me, that I know,
Just as He favors Prosper, who knows why?
So it is, all the same, as well I find.
'Wave wattles half the winter, fenced them firm
With stone and stake to stop she-tortoises
Crawling to lay their eggs here: well, one wave,
Feeling the foot of Him upon its neck,
Gaped as a snake does, loll'd out its large tongue,
And licked the whole labor flat: so much for spite.
'Saw a ball flame down late (wonder it lies)
Where, half an hour before, I slept? i' the shade:
Often they scatter sparkles: there is force!
'Dug up a nev't He may have envied once
And turned to stone, shut inside a stone.
Please Him and hinder this? — What Prosper does?
Aha, if He would tell me how! Not He!
There is the sport: discover how or die!
All need not die, for of the things o' the isle
Some flee afar, some dive, some run up trees;
Those at His mercy, — why, they please Him
most
When . . . when . . . well, never try the same way twice!
Repeat what act has pleased, He may grow
wroth.
You must not know His ways, and play Him off,
Sure of the issue. 'Oth the like himself:
'Spareth a squirrel that it nothing fears
But steals the nut from underneath my thumb,
And when I threaten, bites stoutly in defence;
'Spareth an archan that contrariwise,
Curls up into a ball the pretending death
For fright at my approach: the two ways possible,
But what would move my choler more than this,
That either creature counted on its life
To-morrow and next day and all days to come,
Saying, forsooth, in the inmost of its heart,
"Because he did so yesterday with me,
And otherwise with such another brute,
So must he do henceforth and always."
— Ay? Would teach the reasoning couple what "must" means?
'Doth as he likes, or wherefore Lord? So He.

'Conceiveth all things will continue thus,
And we shall have to live in fear of Him
So long as He lives, keeps His strength: no
change.
If He have done His best, make no new world
To please Him more, so leave off watching
this,
— If He surprise not even the Quiet's self.
Some strange day, — or, suppose, grow into it
As grubs grow butterflies: else, here we are,
And there is He, and nowhere help at all.

'Believeth with the life, the pain shall stop,
His dam held different, that after death
He both plagued enemies and feasted friends:
Idly! He doth His worst in this our life,
Giving just respite lest we die through pain,
Saving last pain for worst, — with which, an end.
Meanwhile, the best way to escape His ire
Is, not to seem too happy. 'Sees, himself,
Yonder two dies, with purple films and pink,
Bask on the pompton-bell above: kills both;
'See two black painful beetles roll their ball
On head and tail as if to save their lives:
Moves them the stick away they strive to clear,

Even so, 'would have Him misconceive, suppose
This Caliban strives hard and ails no less,
And always, above all else, envies Him;
Wherefore he mainly dances on dark nights,
Meets in the sun, gets under holes to laugh,
And never speaks his mind save housed as now;
Outside, 'groans, curses. If He caught me here, O'heard this speech, and asked "What chucklest at?"
'Would, to appease Him, cut a finger off,
Or of my three kid yearlings burn the best,
Or let the toothsome apples rot on tree,
Or push my tame beast for the ore to taste:
While myself lit a fire, and made a song
And sung it, "What I hate, be consecrate
To celebrate Thee and Thy state, no mate
For Thee: what see for envy in poor me?"
Hoping the while, since evils sometimes mend,
Warts rub away and sores are cured with alime,
That some strange day, will either the Quiet catch
And conquer Setebos, or likelier He
Decrepit may doze, doze, as good as die.

[What, what? A curtain o'er the world at once!
Crickets stop hissing; not a bird — or, yes,
There sends His raven that has told Him all!
It was fools' play, this prattling! Ha! The wind
Shoulders the pillar'd dust, death's house o'
the move,
And fast invading fires begin! White blaze —
A tree's head snaps — and there, there, there,
there, there,
His thunder follows! Fool to give at Him!
Lo! 'Lieth flat and loveth Setebos!
'Maketh his teeth meet through his upper lip,
Will let those quails fly, will not eat this month
One little mess of whelks, so he may 'seape!]

CONFESSIONS

What is he buzzing in my ears?
"Now that I come to die,
Do I view the world as a vale of tears?"
Ah, reverend sir, not I!

What I viewed there once, what I view again
Where the physic bottles stand
On the table's edge, — is a suburb lane,
With a wall to my bedside hand.

That lane sloped, much as the bottles do,
From a house you could desire
O'er the garden-wall: is the curtain blue
Or green to a healthy eye?

To mine, it serves for the old June weather
Blue above lane and wall
And that farthest bottle labelled "Ether"
Is the house o'ertopping all.

At a terrace, somewhere near the stopper,
There watched for me, one June,
A girl: I know, sir, it's improper,
My poor mind's out of tune.

Only, there was a way . . . you crept
Close by the side, to dodge
Eyes in the house, two eyes except:
"They styled their house 'The Lodge.'"
What right had a lingerer up their lane?
But, by creeping very close,
With the good wall's help, — their eyes might strain
And stretch themselves to Oes,

Yet never catch her and me together,
As she left the attic, there,
By the rim of the bottle labelled "Ether,"
And stole from stair to stair,

And stood by the rose-wreathed gate. Alas,
We loved, — used to meet:
How sad and bad and mad it was —
But then, how it was sweet!

MAY AND DEATH

Among Browning's companions in boyhood were three Silverthornes, cousins on his mother's side. The name of Charles in the poem stands for the more familiar Jim, and it was in remembrance of him, the eldest and most talented of the three, that this poem was written. First published in The Keepsake, 1857.

I wish that when you died last May,
Charles, there had died along with you
Three parts of spring's delightful things;
Ay, and, for me, the fourth part too.

A foolish thought, and worse, perhaps!
There must be many a pair of friends
Who, arm in arm, deserve the warm
Moon-births and the long evening-ends.

So, for their sake, be May still May!
Let their new time, as mine of old,
Do all it did for me: I bid
Sweet sights and sounds through manifold.

Only, one little sight, one plant,
Woods have in May, that starts up green
Save a sole streak which, so to speak,
Is spring's blood, spilt its leaves between, —

That, they might spare; a certain wood
Might miss the plant; their loss were small:
But I, — when'er the leaf grows there,
Its drop comes from my heart, that's all.

DEAF AND DUMB

A GROUP BY WOOLNER

Only the prism's obstruction shows aright
The secret of a sunbeam, breaks its light
Into the jewelled bow from blankest white;
So may a glory from defect arise:
Only by Deafness may the vexed Love wreak
Its insuppressive sense on brow and cheek,
Only by Dumbness adequately speak
As favored mouth could never, through the eyes.

PROSPICE

Written in the autumn following Mrs. Browning's death. The closing lines intensify the association.

FAR death? — to feel the fog in my throat,
The mist in my face,
When the moon begins, and the blasts denote
I am nearing the place,
The power of the night, the press of the storm,
The post of the foe;
Where he stands, the Arch Fear in a visible form,
Yet the strong man must go:
For the journey is done and the summit attained,
And the barriers fall,
Though a battle's to fight ere the guerdon be gained,
The reward of it all,
I was ever a fighter, so — one fight more,
The best and the last!
I would hate that death bandaged my eyes, and forbore,
And bade me creep past.
No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers
The heroes of old,
Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
Of pain, darkness and cold.
For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
The black minute's at end,
And the elements' rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
Shall dwindle, shall blend,
Shall change, shall become first a peace out of pain,
Then a light, then thy breast,
O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again.
And with God be the rest!

EURYDICE TO ORPHEUS

A PICTURE BY LEIGHTON

First published, without metrical divisions, in the Royal Academy Catalogue, 1864.

But give them me, the mouth, the eyes, the brow!
Let them once more absorb me! One look now
Will lap me round forever, not to pass
Out of its light, though darkness he beyond:
Hold me but safe again within the bond
Of one immortal look!  All woe that was,
Forgotten, and all terror that may be,
Defied, — no past is mine, no future: look at me!
YOUTH AND ART

It once might have been, once only:
We lodged in a street together,
You, a sparrow on the house-top lonely,
I, a lone she-bird of his feather.

Your trade was with sticks and clay,
You thumbed, thrust, patted and polished,
Then laughed "They will see some day
Smith made, and Gibson demolished."

My business was song, song, song;
I chirped, cheeped, trilled and twittered.
"Kate Brown's on the boards ere long,
And Grisi's existence embittered!"

I earned no more by a warble
Than you by a sketch in plaster;
You wanted a piece of marble,
I needed a music-master.

We studied hard in our styles,
Chipped each at a crust like Hindoo's,
For air, looked out on the tiles,
For fun, watched each other's windows.

You lounged, like a boy of the South,
Cap and blouse — nay, a bit of beard too;
Or you got it, rubbing your mouth
With fingers the clay adhered to.

And I — soon managed to find
Weak points in the flower-fence facing.
Was forced to put up a blind
And be safe in my corset-facing.

No harm! It was not my fault
If you never turned your eye's tail up
As I shook upon E in all,
Or ran the chromatic scale up:

For spring bade the sparrows pair,
And the boys and girls gave guesses,
And stalls in our street looked rare
With bulrush and watercresses.

Why did not you pinch a flower
In a pellet of clay and fling it?
Why did not I put a power
Of thanks in a look, or sing it?

I did look, sharp as a lynx,
(And yet the memory rankles.)
When models arrived, some minx
Tripped up-stairs, she and her ankles.

But I think I gave you as good!
"That foreign fellow,— who can know
How she pays, in a playful mood,
For his tuning her that piano?"

Could you say so, and never say,
"Suppose we join hands and fortunes,
And I fetch her from over the way,
Her, piano, and long tunes and short tunes?"

No, no: you would not be rash,
Nor I rash, and something over:
You 've to settle yet Gibson's hash,
And Grisi yet lives in clover.

But you meet the Prince at the Board,
I'm queen myself at bans-pare,
I've married a rich old lord.
And you 're dubbed knight and an R. A.

Each life unfulfilled, you see;
It hangs still, patchy and scrappy:
We have not sighed deep, laughed free,
Starved, feasted, despaired, — been happy

And nobody calls you a dunee,
And people suppose me clever:
This could but have happened once,
And we missed it, lost it forever.

A FACE

If one could have that little head of hers
Painted upon a background of pale gold,
Such as the Tuscan's early art prefers!
No shade encroaching on the matchless mould
Of those two lips, which should be opening soft
In the pure profile; not as when she laughs,
For that spoils all; but rather as if aloft
You hyacinth, she loves so, leamed its staff's
Burden of honey-colored buds to kiss
And capture 'twixt the lips apart for this.
Then her lone hand, three fingers might sur-round,
How it should waver on the pale gold ground
Up to the fruit shaped, perfect chin it lifts!
I know, Correggio loves to mass, in rifts
Of heaven, his angel faces, orb on orb
Breaking its outline, burning shades absorb:
But these are only massed there, I should think,
Waiting to see some wonder momentarily
Grow out, stand full, fade slow against the sky
(That's the pale ground you'd see this sweet face by),
All heaven, meanwhile, condensed into one eye
Which fears to lose the wonder, should it wink.

A LIKENESS

Some people hung portraits up
In a room where they dine or sup;
And the wife clinks tea-things under,
And her cousin, he stirs his cup.
Asks, "Who was the lady, I wonder?"
" 'T is a dumb John bought at a sale,"
Quoth the wife, — looks black as thunder,
"What a shade beneath her nose!
Snuff-taking, I suppose," —
Adds the cousin, while John's corns ail.

Or else, there 's no wife in the case,
But the portrait's queen of the place,
Alone 'mid the other spoils
Of youth, — masks, gloves and foils,
And pipe-sticks, rose, cherry-tree, jasmine,
And the long whip, the tandem-lasher.
And the cast from a fist ("not, alas! mine,
But my master's, the Tipton Slasher"),
And the cards where pistol-balls mark ace,
And a satin shoe uses for cigar-case,
And the chamois-horns ("shot in the Chablais")
And prints — Rarely drumming on Cruiser,
And Sayers, our champion, the bruiser,
And the little edition of Rabelais:
Where a friend, with both hands in his pockets,
May saunter up close to examine it,
And remark a good deal of Jane Lamb in it,
"But the eyes are half out of their sockets;
That hair's not so bad, where the gloss is.
But they've made the girl's nose a proboscis:
Jane Lamb, that we danced with at Vichy!
What, is not she Jane? Then, who is she?"

All that I own is a print,
An etching, a mezzotint:
It is a study, a fancy, a fiction,
Yet a fact (take my conviction)
Because it has more than a hint
Of a certain face, I never Saw elsewhere touch or trace of
In women I've seen the face of:
Just an etching, and, so far, clever.

I keep my prints, an imbraglio,
Fifty in one portfolio.
When somebody tries my claret,
We turn round chairs to the fire.
Chirp over days in a garret,
Chuckle o'er increase of salary,
Taste the good fruits of our leisure,
Talk about pencil and lyre,
And the National Portrait Gallery:
Then I exhibit my treasure.
After we've turned over twenty,
And the debt of wonder my cronys owes
Is paid to my Marc Antonomos,
He stops me — "Estime lente!"
What's that sweet thing there, the etching?"
How my waistcoat-strings want stretching,
How my cheeks grow red as tomatoes,
How my heart leaps! But hearts, after leaps,
Ach.

"By the by, you must take, for a keepsake,
That other, you praised, of Volpato's.
The fool! would he try a flight further and say —
He never saw, never before to-day,
What was able to take his breath away,
A face to lose youth for, to occupy age.
With the dream of, meet death with, — why,
I'll not engage
But that, half in a rapture and half in a rage,
I should toss him the thing's self — "T is only
A duplicate.
A thing of no value! Take it, I supplicate!"

MR. SLUDGE, "THE MEDIUM"

Mr. D. D. Home, an American spiritualist, Attracted much attention in the circle in which
Mr. and Mrs. Browning lived in Florence.

Now, don't, sir! Don't expose me! Just this once!
This was the first and only time, I'll swear,—
Look at me. — see, I kneel, — the only time,
I swear, I ever cheated, — yes, by the soul
Of Her who hears — (your sainted mother, sir!)
All, except this last accident, was truth —
This little kind of slip! — and even this,
It was your own wine, sir, the good champagne,
I took it for Catawba, you're so kind,)
Which put the folly in my head!

"Get up?"

You still inflict on me that terrible face?
You show no mercy? — Not for Her dear sake,
The sainted spirit's, whose soft breath even now
Blows on my cheek — (don't you feel something, sir)
You'll tell?

Go tell, then! Who the devil cares
What such a rowdy chooses to...
Please, sir! your thumbs are through my windpipe, sir!
Ch—ch!

Well, sir, I hope you've done it now!
Oh Lord! I little thought, sir, yesterday;
When your departed mother spoke those words
Of peace through me, and moved you, sir, so much.
You gave me — (very kind it was of you)
These shirt-studs — (better take them back again,
Please, sir) — yes, little did I think so soon
A trifle of trick, all through a glass too much
Of his own champagne, would change my best
Of friends!
Into an angry gentleman!

Through, 'twas wrong.
I don't contest the point; your anger's just:
Whatever put such folly in my head,
I know 'twas wicked of me. There's a thick
Dusk undeveloped spirit (I've observed)
Owes me a grudge — a negro's. I should say,
Or else an Irish emigrant's; yourself
Explained the case so well last Sunday, sir,
When we had summoned Franklin to clear up
A point about those shares I, the telegraph;
Ay, and he swore . . . or might it be Tom Paine? . . .
Thumping the table close by where I crunched,
He'd do me soon a mischief: that's come true!
Why, now your face clears! I was sure it
would!
Then, this one time . . . don't take your hand
away.
Through yours I surely kiss your mother's hand
You'll promise to forgive me? — or, at least,
Tell nobody of this? Consider, sir!
What harm can mercy do? Would but the shade
Of the venerable dead-one just vouchsafe
A rap or tip! What bit of paper's here?
Suppose we take a pencil, let her write.
Make the least sign, she urges on her child.
Forgiveness? There now! 'Eh? 'Oh! 'T was your foot.
And not a natural creak, sir?

Answer, then!
Once, twice, thrice . . . see, I'm waiting to say ' thrice!''
All to no use? No sort of hope for me?
It's all to post to Greeley's newspaper?

What? If I told you all about the tricks?
Upon my soul! — the whole truth, and naught else.
And how there's been some falsehood — for your part,
Will you engage to pay my passage out,
And hold your tongue until I'm safe on board?
England's the place, not Boston — no offence!
I see what makes you hesitate: don't fear!
I mean to change my trade and cheat no more,
Yes, this time really it's upon my soul!
Be my salvation! — under Heaven, of course.
I'll tell some queer things. Sixty V's must do.
A trifle, though, to start with! We'll refer
The question to this table?

How you're changed!
Then split the difference; thirty more, we'll say.
Ay, but you leave my presents! Else I'll swear
'Twas all through those: you wanted yours again.
So, picked a quarrel with me, to get them back!
Tread on a worm, it turns, sir! If I turn,
Your fault! 'Tis you'll have forced me!
Who's obliged
To give up life yet try no self-defence?
At all events, I'll run the risk. 'Eh?

Done!
May I sit, sir? This dear old table, now!
Please, sir, a parting eggnog and cigar!
I've been so happy with you! Nice stuffed chairs,
And sympathetic sideboards; what an end
To all the instructive evenings! (It's alight.)
Well, nothing lasts, as Bacon came and said.
Here goes, — but keep your temper, or I'll scream!

Fol-lol-the-rido-fiddle-idle-ol!
You see, sir, it's your own fault more than mine;
It's all your fault, you curious gentlefolk!
You're prigs — excuse me, — like to look so spry,
So clever, while you cling by half a claw
To the perch whereon you puff yourselves at rest.
Such piece of self-conceit as serves for perch
Because you chose it, so it must be safe.
Oh, otherwise you're sharp enough! You spy
Who slips, who slides, who holds by help of wing,

Wanting real foothold, — who can't keep up-right
On the other perch, your neighbor chose, not you:
There's no outwitting you respecting him!
For instance, men love money — that, you know —
And what men do to gain it: well, suppose
A poor lad, say a help's son in your house,
Listening at keyholes, hears the company
Talk grand of dollars, V-notes, and so forth,
How hard they are to get, how good to hold,
How much they buy, — if, suddenly, in pops he—
"I've got a V-note!" — what do you say to him?
What's your first word which follows your last kick?
"Where did you steal it, rascal?" That's because
He finds you, fain would fool you, off your perch,
Not on the special piece of nonsense, sir.
Elected your parade-ground: let him try
Lies to the end of the list, — "He picked it up,
His cousin died and left it him by will,
The President flung it to him, riding by,
An actress trucked it for a curl of his hair,
He dreamed of luck and found his shoe enriched.
He dug up clay, and out of clay made gold"—
How would you treat such possibilities?
Would not you, prompt, investigate the case
With cowhide? "Lies, lies, lies," you'd shout: and why?
Which of the stories might not prove mere truth?
This last, perhaps, that clay was turned to coin!
Let's see, now, give him me to speak for him!
How many of your rare philosophers,
In plague books I've had to dip into,
Believed gold could be made thus, saw it made,
And made it? Oh, with such philosophers
You're on your best behavior! While the lad—
With him, in a trice, you settle likelihoods,
Nor doubt a moment how he got his prize:
In his ease, you hear, judge and execute,
All in a breath: so would most men of sense.

But let the same lad hear you talk as grand
At the same keyhole, you and company,
Of signs and wonders, the invisible world;
How wisdom scours our vulgar unbelief
More than our vulgar credulity;
How good men have desired to see a ghost,
What Johnson used to say, what Wesley did,
Mother Goose thought, and fiddle-diddle-dee:—
If he break in with, "Sir, I saw a ghost!"
Ah, the ways change! He finds you perched and prim;
It's a conceit of yours that ghosts may be;
There's no talk now of cowhide. "Tell it out!
Don't fear us! Take your time and recollect
Sit down first: try a glass of wine, my boy!
And, David, (is not that your Christian name?)
Of all things, should this happen twice—it may—

Be sure, while fresh in mind, you let us know!"
Does the boy blunder, blurt out this, blab that,
Break down in the other, as beginners will?
All's candor, all's considerateness—"No haste!"

Pause and collect yourself! We understand!
That's the bad memory, or the natural shock,
Or the unexplained phenomena!"

Egad,
The boy takes heart of grace; finds, never fear,
The readiest way to ope your own heart wide.
Show—what I call your peacock-perch, pet post
To strut, and spread the tail, and squawk upon!

"Just as you thought, much as you might expect!
There be more things in heaven and earth,
Horatio" . . .
And so on. Shall not David take the hint,
Grow bolder, stroke you down at quickened rate?
If he ruffle a feather, it's "Gently, patiently!
Manifestations are so weak at first!
 Doubting, moreover, kills them, cuts all short,
Cures with a vengeance!"

There, sir, that's your style!
You and your boy—such pains bestowed on him,
Or any headpiece of the average weight,
To teach, say, Greek, would perfect him apace.
Make him a Person ("Person?" thank you, sir.)

Much more, proficient in the art of lies.
You never leave the lesson! Fire alight,
Catch you permitting it to die! You've friends:

There's no withholding knowledge, — least from those
Apt to look elsewhere for their souls' supply:
Why should not you parade your lawful prize?
Who finds a picture, digs a medal up,
Hits on a first edition— he henceforth
Gives it his name, grows notable: how much more,

Who ferrets out a "medium"? "David's yours!
You highly-favored man? Then, pity souls
Less privileged! Allow us share your luck!
So, David holds the circle, rules the roost.
Narrates the vision, peeps in the glass ball.
Sets-to the spirit-writing, hears the raps,
As the case may be.

Now mark! To be precise—

Though I say, "lies" all these, at this first stage
'Tis just for science's sake: I call such grubs
By the name of what they'll turn to, dragonflies.
Strictly it's what good people style untruth;
But yet, so far, not quite the full-grown thing:
It's fancying, fable-making, nonsense-work—
What never meant to be so very bad—
The knack of story-telling, brightening up
Each dull old bit of fact that drops its shine.
One does see somewhat when one shuts one's eyes,
If only space and streaks; tables do tip
In the oddest way of themselves: and pens, good Lord,
Who knows if you drive them or they drive you?
'T is but a foot in the water and out again;
Not that duck-under which decides your dive.
Note this, for it's important: listen why,

'I'll prove, you push on David till he dives
And ends the shivering. Here's your circle, now:
Two-thirds of them, with heads like you their host,
Turn up their eyes, and cry, as you expect,
"Lord, who'd have thought it!" But there's always one Looks wise, compassionately smiles, submits,
"Of your veracity no kind of doubt,
But—do you feel so certain of that boy's?
Really, I wonder! I confess myself
More chary of my faith!" That's galling, sir!
What, he the investigator, he the sage,
When all's done? Then, you just have shut your eyes,
Opened your mouth, and gulped down David whole,
You! Terrible were such catastrophe!
So, evidence is redoubled, doubled again,
And doubled besides; once more, "He heard,
we heard,
You and they heard, your mother and your wife,
Your children and the stranger in your gates:
Did they ever did they not?" So much for him,
The black sheep, guest without the wedding-garb,
The doubting Thomas! Now's your turn to crow:
"He's kind to think you such a fool! Sludge cheats?
Leave you alone to take precautions!"

Straight

The rest join chorus. Thomas stands abashed,
Sips silent some such beverage as this,
Considers if it be harder, shutting eyes.
And gulping David in good fellowship.
Then going elsewhere, getting, in exchange,
With no egress to lubricate the food,
Some just as tough a morsel. Over the way,
Holds Captain Sparks his court: is it better there?
Have not your hunting-stories, scalping scenes,
And Mexican War exploits to swallow plump
If you'd be free o' the stove-side, rocking-chair.
And trio of affable daughters?
Dramatis Personae

Victory! All your circle's yours again!
Out of the clubbing of submissive wits,
David's performance rounds, each chink gets patched.
Every protrusion of a point's filed fine,
All's fit to set a-rolling round the world,
And then return to David finally.
Lies seven feet thick about his first half-inch.
Here's a choice birth o' the supernatural,
Poor David's pledged to! You've employed no tool
That law exclaims at, save the devil's own,
Yet screwed him into henceforth gulling you
To the top o' your bent,—all out of one half-lie!

You hold, if there's one half or a hundredth part
Of a lie, that's his fault,—his be the penalty!
I dare say! You'd prove firmer in his place?
You'd find the courage,—that first flurry over,
That mild bit of romancing-work at end,—
To interpose with "It gets serious, this;
Must stop here. Sir, I saw no ghost at all,
Inform your friends I made . . . well, fools
of them,
And found you ready made. I've lived in clover
These three weeks: take it out in kicks of
me!"
I doubt it. Ask your conscience! Let me
know,

Twelve months hence, with how few embellishments
You've told almighty Boston of this passage
Of arms between us, your first taste o' the foil
From Sludge who could not fence, sir! Sludge, your boy!
I lied, sir,—there! I got up from my gorge
On offal in the gutter, and preferred
Your canvas-backs: I took their carver's size,
Measured his modicum of intelligence,
Tickled him on the cockles of his heart
With a raven feather, and next week found myself
Sweet and clean, dining daintily, dizzened smart.

Set on a stool buttressed by ladies' knees,
Every soft smiler calling me her pet,
Encouraging my story to uncoil
And creep out from its hole, inch after inch,
"How last night, I no sooner sang in bed,
Tucked up, just as they left me,—than came raps!
While a light whisked"

"Shaped somewhat like a star?"

"Well, like some sort of stars, ma'am."—"So we thought!
And any voice? Not yet? Try hard, next
time.
If you can't hear a voice; we think you may;
At least, the Pennsylvania 'mediums' did!"
Oh, next time comes the voice! "Just as we hoped!"
Are not the hoppers proud now, pleased, profuse
O' the natural acknowledgment?

Of course!

So, off we push, illy-oh-oy, trim the boat,
On we sweep with a cataract ahead.
We're midway to the Horse-shoe: stop, who can!
The dance of bubbles gay about our prow!
Experiences become worth waiting for,
Spirits now speak up, tell their kindest mind,
And compliment the "medium" properly,
Concern themselves about his Sunday coat,
See rings on his hand with pleasure. Ask yourself
How you'd receive a course of treats like these!
Why, take the quietest hack and stall him up,
Cram him with corn a month, then out with
him,
Among his mates on a bright April morn,
With the turf to tread; see if you find or no
A caper in him, if he buck's or bolts!

Much more a youth whose fancies sprout as rank
As toadstool-chump from melon-bed. 'Tis soon,

"Sirrah, you spirit, come, go, fetch and carry,
Read, write, rap, rub-a-dub, and hang yourself!
I'm spared all further trouble; all's arranged;
Your circle does my business; I may rave
Like an epileptic dervish in the books,
Foam, fling myself flat, rend my clothes to shreds;

No matter: lovers, friends and countrymen
Will lay down spiritual laws, read wrong things
right
By the rule o' reverse. If Francis Verulam
Styles himself Bacon, spells the name beside
With a y and a k, says he drew breath in York,
Gave up the ghost in Wales when Cromwell reigned.

(As, sir, we somewhat fear he was apt to say,
Before I found the useful book that knows)—
Why, what harm's done? The circle smiles apace,

"It was not Bacon, after all, you see!
We understand; the trick's but natural:
Such spirits' individuality
Is hard to put in evidence; they incline
To gibe and jeer, these undeveloped sorts.
You see, their world's much like a jail broke loose,

While this of ours remains shut, bolted, barred,
With a single window to it. Sludge, our friend.
Serves as this window, whether thin or thick,
Or stained or stainless; he's the medium-pane
Through which, to see us and be seen, they peep:

They crowd each other, huddle for a chance,
Tread on their neighbor's kibes, play tricks
enough!

Does Bacon, tired of waiting, swerve aside?
Up in his place jumps Barnum—"I'm your
man,
I'll answer you for Bacon!" Try once more!"

Or else it's—"What's a 'medium'? He's a means,
Good, bad, indifferent, still the only means
Spirits can speak by; he may misconceive.
Stutter and stammer, — he’s their Sludge and drudge,
Take him or leave him; they must hold their peace,
Or else, put up with having knowledge strained
To half-expression through his ignorance.
Suppose, the spirit Beethoven wants to shed
New music he’s butiful of; why, he turns
The handle of this organ, grinds with Sludge,
And what he poured in at the mouth o’ the mill
As a Thirty-third Sonata. (fancy now!)
Comes from the hopper as brin-new Sludge, naught else.
The Shakers’ Hymn in G, with a natural F,
Or the ‘Stars and Stripes’ set to consecutive fourths.
Sir, where’s the scrape you did not help me through,
You fast are wise? And for the fools, the folk
Who came to see, — the guests, (observe that word!)
Pray do you find guests criticise your wine,
Your furniture, your grammar, or your nose?
Then, why your “medium”’? What’s the difference?
Prove your madeira red-ink and gamboge, —
Your Sludge a cheat — then, somebody’s a goose
For vaunting both as genuine. “Guests!”
Don’t fear!
They’ll make a wry face, nor too much of that,
And leave you in your glory.

“No, sometimes
They doubt and say as much!” Ay, doubt they do!
And what’s the consequence? “Of course they doubt.” —
You triumph — ”that explains the hitch at once!
Doubt posed our ‘medium,’ puzzled his pure mind;
He gave them back their rubbish: pitch chaff in,
Could flour come out o’ the honest mill?” So, prompt
Applaud the faithful: cases flock in point.
“Now, when a mocker willed a ‘medium’ once
Should name a spirit James whose name was George.
‘James,’ cried the ‘medium,’ — ‘t was the test of truth!”
In short, a hit proves much, a miss proves more.
Does this convince? The better: does it fail?
Time for the double-shotted broadside, then —
The grand means, last resource. Look black and big!
“You style us idiots, therefore — why stop short?
Accomplices in rascality: this we hear
In our own house, from our invited guest
Found brave enough to outrage a poor boy
Exposed by our good faith! Have you been heard?

Now, then, hear us; one man’s not quite worth twelve.
You see a cheat? Here’s some twelve see an ass:
Excuse me if I calculate: good day!”
Out slinks the skeptic, all the laughs explode.
Sludge waves his hat in triumph?

Or — he don’t.
There’s something in real truth (explain who can!)
One casts a wistful eye at, like the horse
Who mopes beneath stuffed hay-racks and won’t munch
Because he spies a corn-bag: hang that truth,
It spoils all dainties proffered in its place!
I’ve felt at times when, cockered, cosseted
And cuddled by the aforesaid company,
Bidden enjoy their bullying. — never fear,
But o’er their shoulders spit at the flying man, —
I’ve felt a child: only, a fractional child
That, dandled soft by nurse, aunt, grandmother,
Who keep him from the kennel, sun and wind,
Good fun and wholesome mud, — enjoined be sweet,
And comedy and superior, — eyes askance
The ragged sons o’ the gutter at their game,
The would be down with them i’ the thick o’ the filth,
Making dirt-pies, laughing free, speaking plain,
And calling granny the gray old cat she is.
I’ve felt a spite, I say, at you, at them,
Huggings and humbug — gnashed my teeth to mark
A decent dog pass! It’s too bad, I say,
Ruining a soul so!

But what’s “so,” what’s fixed,
Where may one stop? Nowhere! The cheating’s nursed
Out of the lying, softly and surely spun
To just your length, sir! I’d stop soon enough:
But you’re for progress. “All old, nothing new now.”
Only the usual talking through the mouth,
Or writing by the hand? I own, I thought
This would develop, grow demonstrable,
Make doubt absurd, give figures we might see,
Flowers we might touch. There’s no one doubts you, Sludge!
You dream the dreams, you see the spiritual sights,
The speeches come in your head, beyond dispute.
Still, for the skeptics’ sake, to stop all mouths,
We want some outward manifestation! — well,
The Pennsylvanians gained such; why not Sludge?
He may improve with time!”

Ay, that he may!
He sees his lot: there’s no avoiding fate.
‘Tis a trifle at first. “Eh, David? Did you hear?
You jogged the table, your foot caused the squeak.
This time you’re . . . joking, are you not, my boy?”
"N-n-no!"—and I'm done for, bought and sold henceforth.
The old good easy jog-trot way, the . . . eh? The . . . not so very false, as falsehood goes.
The spinning out and drawing fine, you know.—
Really mere novel-writing of a sort. Acting, or improvising, make-believe.
Surely not downright cheaterly, — anyhow.
'T is done with and my lot cast; Cheat's my name:
The fatal dash of brandy in your tea
Has settled what you'll have the souchong's smack:
The caddy gives way to the dram-bottle.

Then, it's so cruel easy! Oh, those tricks
That can't be tricks, those feats by sleight of hand,
Clearly no common conjurer's! — no, indeed!
A conjurer? Choose me any craft 'tis the world
A man puts hand to; and with six months' pains,
I'll play you twenty tricks miraculous
To people untangled the trade: have you seen
Glass blown.
Pipes pierced? Why, just this biscuit that I chip,
Did you ever watch a baker toss one flat
To the oven? Try and do it! Take my word, Practice but half as much, while limbs are lité,
To turn, shove, tilt a table, crack your joints,
Manage your feet, dispose your hands aright.
Work wires that twitch the curtains, play the glove
At end of your slipper, — then put out the lights
And . . . there, there, all you want you'll get,
I hope!
I found it slip, easy as an old shoe.

Now, lights on table again! I've done my part,
You take my place while I give thanks and rest.
"Well, Judge Humgruffin, what's your verdict, sir?"
You, hardest head in the United States,—
Did you detect a cheat here? Wait! Let's see!
Just an experiment first, for candor's sake!
I'll try and cheat you, Judge! the table tilts:
Is it that move it? Write! I'll press your hand:
Cry when I push, or guide your pencil, Judge!"
Sludge still triumphant! "That a rap, indeed? That, the real writing? Very like a whale!"
Then, if, sir, you — a most distinguished man,
And, were the Judge not here, I'd say . . . no matter! Well, sir, if you fail, you can't take us in,— There's little fear that Sludge will!"

Won't he, ma'am? But what if our distinguished host, like Sludge,
Hade God bear witness that he played no trick,
While you believed that what produced the raps
Was just a certain child who died, you know,
And whose last breath you thought your lips had felt?

"He? That's a capital point, ma'am: Sludge begins
At your entreaty with your dearest dead,
The little voice set lisping once again,
The tiny hand made feel for yours once more.
The poor last image brought back, plain as dreams.
Which image, if a word had chanced recall,
The customary cloud would cross your eyes,
Your heart return the old tick, pay its pang!
A right mood for investigation, this!
One's at one's ease with Saul and Jonathan,
Pompey and Caesar: but one's own lost child . . .
I wonder, when you heard the first clod drop
From the spaddle at the grave-side, felt you free
To investigate who twitched your funeral scarf
Or brushed your flounces? Then, it came of course.
You should be stunned and stupid; then (how else?)
Your breath stopped with your blood, your brain struck work.
But now, such causes fail of such effects,
All's changed, — the little voice begins afresh,
Yet you, calm, consequent, can test and try
And touch the truth. "Tests? Didn't the creature tell
Its nurse's name, and say it lived six years,
And rode a rocking-horse? Enough of tests!
Sludge never could learn that!"

He could not, eh?
You compliment him. "Could not?" Speak for yourself!
I'd like to know the man I ever saw
Once, — never mind where, how, why, when, —
Once saw, Of whom I do not keep some matter in mind
He'd swear I "could not?" know, sagacious sort!
What? Do you live in this world's blow of blacks,
Palaver, gossipy, a single hour
Nor find one smut has settled on your nose.
Of a smut's worth, no more, no less? — one fact
Out of the drift of facts, whereby you learn
What some one was, somewhere, somehow, somehow?
You don't tell folk—"See what has stuck to me!
Judge Humgruffin, our most distinguished man,
Your uncle was a tailor, and your wife
Thought to have married Migg's, missed him, hit you!"

Do you, sir, though you see him twice a-week?
"No," you reply, "what use retailing it?"
Why should I?" But, you see, one day you should.
Because one day there's much use, — when this fact
Brings you the Judge upon both gouty knees
Before the supernatural; proves that Sludge
Knows, as you say, a thing he "could not" know:
Will not Sludge thenceforth keep an out-stretched face,
The way the wind drives?
"Could not!" Look you now, t'll tell you a story! There's a whiskered chap, A foreigner, that teaches music here And gets his bread, — knowing no better way: He says, the fellow who informed of him And made him fly his country and fall West, Was a hunchback cobbler, sat, stitched soles and sang, In some outlandish place, the city Rome, In a cellar by their Broadway, all day long; Never asked questions, stopped to listen or look, Nor lifted nose from lapstone; let the world Roll round his three-legged stool, and news run in The ears he hardly seemed to keep pricked up, Well, that man went on Sundays, touched his pay, And took his praise from government, you see; For something like two dollars every week, He'd engage tell you some one little thing Of some one man, which led to many more, Because one truth leads right to the world's end.) And make you that man's master — when he dined And on what dish, where walked to keep his health And to what street. His trade was, throwing thus His sense out, like an ant-eater's long tongue, Soft, innocent, warm, moist, impassible, And then it was crushed over with creatures slick. Their juice enriched his palate, "Could not Sludge!"

I'll go yet a step further, and maintain, Once the imposture plunged its proper depth I'll the rotten of your natures, all of you, — If one's not mad nor drunk, and hardly then! It's impossible to cheat — that's, be found out! Go tell your brethren this first slip of mine, All to-day's tale, how you detected Sludge, Behaved unpleasantly, till he was fain confess, and so has come to grief! You'll find, I think, Why Sludge still snaps his fingers in your face. There now, you've told them! What's their prompt reply? "Sir, did that youth confess he had cheated me, I'd disbelieve him. He may cheat at times; That's in the 'medium' nature, thus they're made. Vain and vindictive, cowards, prone to scratch. And so all cats are; still, a cat's the beast. You coax the strange electric sparks from out. By rubbing back its fur; not so a dog, Nor lion, nor lamb; 't is the cat's nature, sir! Why not the dog's? Ask God, who made them beasts! O' ve think the sound, the nicely-balanced man (Like me at ease) — "like you yourself." — (Said) "— He's stuff to make a "medium"? Bless your soul. "T is these hysteric, hybrid half-and-halves, Equivocal, worthless vermin yield the fire!

We take such as we find them, 'ware their tricks, Wanting their service. Sir, Sludge took in you — How, I can't say, not being there to watch: He was tried, was tempted by your easiness, He did not take in me!"

Thank you for Sludge! I'm to be grateful to such patrons, eh? When what you hear's my best word? 'T is a challenge, "Snap at all strangers, half-tamed prairie-dog, So you cover duly at your keeper's back!" Cat, show what claws were made for, muffling them Only to me! Cheat others if you can, Me, if you dare!" And, my wise sir, I dared — Did cheat you first, made you cheat others next, And had the help o' your vaunted manliness To bully the poor old Sludge? You used me? Have not I used you, taken full revenge, Persuaded folk they knew not their own name, And straight they 'd own the error! Who was the fool When, turned-a-struck wide-eyed open-mouthed Circle of sages, Sludge would introduce Milton composing baby-rhymes, and Locke Reasoning in gibberish, Homer writing Greek In naughts and crosses, Asaph setting psalms To crochet and quaver? I've made a spirit squeak In sham voice for a minute, then outbroke Bold in my own, defying the imbeciles — Have copied some ghost's pothooks, half a page, Then ended with my own serrail undisguised. "All right! The ghost was merely using Sludge, Suiting itself from his imperfect stock!" Don't talk of gratitude to me! For what? For being treated as a showman's ape, Encouraged to be wicked and make sport, First or last, grin or chimper, any mood So long as the ape be in it and no man — Because a nut pays every mood alike, Curse your superior, superintending sort, Who, since you hate smoke, send up boys that climb To cure your chimney, bid a "medium" lie To sweep you truth down! Curse your women too, Your insolent wives and daughters, that fire up Or faint away if a male hand squeeze theirs. Yet, to encourage Sludge, may play with Sludge As only a "medium," only the kind of thing They must humor, fondle . . . oh, to misconceive Were too preposterous! But I've paid them out! They've had their wish — called for the naked truth, And in she tripped, sat down and bade them stare; They had to blush a little and forgive! "The fact is, children talk so; in next world All our conventions are reversed, — perhaps Made light of: something like old prints, my dear!
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

The Judge has one, he brought from Italy,
A metropolis in the background,— o’er a bridge,
A team of trotting roadsters,— cheerful groups
Of wayside travellers, peasants at their work.
And, full in front, quite unconcerned, why not?
Three nymphs conversing with a cavalier,
And never a rag among them: ’tis fine, folk cry—
And heavenly manners seem not much unlike!
Let Sludge go on; we ’ll fancy it ’s in print!
If such as came for wool, sir, went home shorn,
Where is the wrong I did them? ’T was their choice;
They tried the adventure, ran the risk, tossed up
And lost, as some one’s sure to do in games;
They fancied I was made to lose,— smoked glass
Useful to spy the sun through, spare their eyes:
And had I proved a red-hot iron plate
They thought to pierce, and, for their pains, grew blind,
Whose were the fault but theirs? While, as things go,
Their loss amounts to gain, the more ’s the shame!
They ’ve had their peep into the spirit-world,
And all this world may know it! ’T were fed fat
Their self-conceit which else had starved: what chance
Save this, of cackling o’er a golden egg
And compassing distinction from the flock,
Friends of a feather? Well, they paid for it,
And not prodigiously; the price o’ the play,
Not counting certain pleasant interludes.
Was scarce a vulgar play’s worth. When you buy
The actor’s talent, do you dare propose
For his soul beside? Whereas, my soul you buy!
Sludge acts Macbeth, obliged to be Macbeth,
Or you’ll not hear his first word! Just go through
That slight formality, swear himself’s the Thane,
And thenceforth he may strut and fret his hour,
Spout, spawl, or spin his target, no one cares!
Why had n’t I leave to play tricks, Sludge as Sludge?
Enough of it all! I ’ve wiped out scores with you—
Vented my fustian, let myself be streaked
Like tom-fool with your ochre and carmine,
Worn patchwork your respectable fingers sewed
To metamorphose somebody,— yes, I ’ve earned
My wages, swallowed down my bread of shame,
And shake the crumbs off— where but in your face?

As for religion — why, I served it, sir!
I ’ll stick to that! — With my phenomena
I laid the atheist sprawling on his back,
Propped up Saint Paul, or, at least, Sweden-borh,
In fact, it ’s just the proper way to balk
These troublesome fellows — liars, one and all,
Are not these skeptics? Well, to battle them,
No use in being squeamish: lie yourself!

Erect your buttress just as wide o’ the line,
Your side, as they build up the wall on theirs;
Where both meet, midway in a point, is truth,
High overhead: so, take your room, pile bricks,
Lie! Oh, there ’s titillation in all shame!
What snow may lose in white, snow gains in rose!
Miss Stokes turns — Rahab,— nor a bad exchange!
Glory be on her, for the good she wrought,
Breeding belief anew, ’neath ribs of death,
Browbeating now the unabashed before,
Ridding us of their whole life’s gathered straws
By a live coal from the altar! Why, of old,
Great men spent years and years in writing books
To prove we ’ve souls, and hardly proved it then:
Miss Stokes with her live coal, for you and me!
Surely, to this good issue, all was fair—
Not only fondling Sludge, but, even suppose
He let escape some spice of knavery,— well,
In wisely being blind to it! Don’t you praise Nelson for setting spy-glass to blind eye
And saying . . . what was it — that he could not see
The signal he was bothered with? Ay, indeed!
I ’ll go beyond: there ’s a real love of a lie,
Liars find ready-made for lies they make,
As hand for glove, or tongue for sugar-plum.
At best, ’t is never pure and full belief;
Those furthest in the quagmire,— don’t suppose
They strayed there with no warning, got no chance
Of a filth-speck in their face, which they clenched teeth,
Bent brow against! Be sure they had their doubts,
And fears, and fairest challenges to try
The floor o’ the seeming solid sand! But no!
Their faith was pledged, acquaintance too apprised,
All but the last step ventured, kerschief waved,
And Sludge called “pet:” ’t was easier marching on
To the promised land; join those who, Thurs-day next,
Meant to meet Shakespeare; better follow Sludge
Prudent, oh sure! — on the alert, how else?
But making for the mid-bog, all the same!
To hear your orereties, one would think I caught
Miss Stokes by the scruff o’ the neck, and Pitched her flat,
Foolish-face-foremost! Hear these simpletons,
That’s all I beg, before my work’s begun,
Before I ’ve touched them with my finger-tip!
Thus they await me (do but listen, now!)
It’s reasoning, this is,— I can’t imitate
The baby voice, though), — “In so many tales
Must be some truth, truth though a pin-point big.
Yet, some a single man’s deceived, perhaps —
Hardly, a thousand: to suppose one cheat
Can gull all these, were more miraculous far
Than aught we should confess a miracle,—
And so on. Then the Judge sums up — (it’s rare)
Bids you respect the authorities that leap
To the judgment-seat at once,— why don’t you note
The limpid nature, the unblemished life,
The spotless honor, indisputable sense.
Of the first upstart with his story?— What—
Outrage a boy on whom you ne’er till now
Set eyes, because he finds rats trouble him?

Fools, these are: ay, and how of their opposites
Who never did, at bottom of their hearts,
Believe for a moment? — Men consensurate,
Blank of belief, who played, as cannabics use,
With superstition, — cold of blood.
Who saw what made for them i’ the mystery,
Took their occasion, and supported Sludge
— As proselytes? No, thank you, far too shrewed!

— But promisers of fair play, encouragers
O’ the claimant; who in candor needs must hoist
Sludge upon Mars’ Hill, get speech out of Sludge
To carry off, criticise, and count about!
Did n’t Athens treat Saint Paul so? — at any rate,
It’s “a new thing” philosophy fumbles at.
Then there’s the other picker-out of pearl
From dungheaps, — ay, your literary man,
Who draws on his kid gloves to deal with Sludge
Daintily and discreetly — shakes a dust
O’ the doctrine, flavors thence, he well knows how
The narrative or the novel, — half-believes
All for the book’s sake, and the public’s stare,
And the cash that ‘s God’s sole solid in this world!
Look at him! Try to be too bold, too gross
For the master! Not you! He’s the man for much;
Shovel it forth, full-splash, he’ll smooth your brown
Into artistic richness, never fear!
Find him the crude stuff; when you recognize
Your lie again, you’ll doff your hat to it,
Dressed out for company! “For company,” I say, since there’s the relish of success:
Let all pay due respect, call the lie truth,
Save the soft silent smirking gentleman
Who ushered in the stranger; you must sigh
“Now melancholy, he, the only one,
Fails to perceive the bearing of the truth
Himself gave birth to!” — There’s the triumph’s smack!
That man would choose to see the whole world roll
I’ the slime o’ the slough, so he might touch the tip
Of his brush with what I call the best of browns —
Tint ghost-tales, spirit-stories, past the power
Of the outwornumber and bistre!

Yet I think
There’s a more hateful form of folly
—
The social sage’s, Solomon of saloons
And philosophic dinnerton, the fribble
Who wants a doctrine for a chopping-block
To try the edge of his faculty upon,

Prove how much common sense he’ll lack and hew
I’ the critical moment ’twixt the soup and fish!
These were my patrons: these, and the like of them
Who, rising in my soul now, sicken it,—
These I’ve injured! Gratitude to these?
The gratitude, forsooth, of a prostitute
To the greenhorn and the bully — friends of hers,
From the wag that wants the queer jokes for his club,
To the snuff-box-decorator, honest man,
Who just was at his wits’ end where to find
So genial a Pasiphae! All and each
Pay, compliment, protest from the police:
And how she hates them for their pains, like me
So much for my remorse at thanklessness
Toward a deserving public!

But, for God?
Ay, that’s a question! Well, sir,— since you press
(How you do tease the whole thing out of me!)
I don’t mean you, you know, when I say
“them”:
Hate you, indeed! But that Miss Stokes, that Judge!
Enough, enough — with sugar; thank you, sir! Now for it, then! Will you believe me, though?
You’ve heard what I confess; I don’t unsay
A single word: I cheated when I could,
Rapped with my toe-joints, set sham hands at work,
Wrote down names weak in sympathetic ink,
Rubbed odic lights with ends of phosphor-match,
And all the rest; believe that: believe this,
By the same token, though it seem to set
The crooked straight again, unsay the said,
Stick up what I’ve knocked down; I can’t help that It’s truth! I somehow vomit truth to-day.
This trade of mine — I don’t know, can’t be sure
But there was something in it, tricks and all!
Really, I want to light up my own mind,
They were tricks,— true, but what I mean to add
Is also true.— First, — don’t it strike you, sir?
Go back to the beginning, — the first fact
We’re taught is, there’s a world beside this world,
With spirits, not mankind, for tenantry;
That much within that world once sojourned here,
That all upon this world will visit there,
And therefore that we, bodily here below,
Must have exactly such an interest
In learning what may be the ways o’ the world
Above us, as the disembodied folk
Have by all analogic likelihood
In watching how things go in the old home
With us, their sons, successors, and what not.
Oh, yes, with added powers probably,
Fit for the novel state, — old loves grown pure;
Old interests understood aright, — they watch!
Eyes to see, ears to hear, and hands to help,
Cried I, and by their help explained my life
The Jews’ way, still a working way to me,
Ghosts made the noises, fairies waved the lights,
Or Santa Claus slid down on New Year’s Eve
and stuffed with cakes the stocking at my bed, Changed the worn shoes, rubbed clean the fingered slate
O’ the sun that came to grief the day before.

This could not last long: soon enough I found
Who had worked wonders thus, and to what end:
But did I find all easy, like my mates?
Henceforth no supernatural any more?
Not a whif: what projects the billiard-balls?
“A cue,” you answer. “Yes, a cue,” said I;
But what hand, off the cushion, moved the cue?
What unseen agency, outside the world,
Prompted its puppets to do this and that,
Put cakes and shoes and slates into their mind,
These mothers and aunts, may even schoolmasters?”

Thus high I sprang, and there have settled since.
Just so I reason, in sober earnest still,
About the greater godsends, what you call
The serious gains and losses of my life.
What do I know or care about your world
Which either is or seems to be? This snap
O’ my fingers, sir! My care is for myself;
Myself am whole and sole reality
Inside a raree-show and a market-mob
Gathered about it: that’s the use of things.
’T is easy saying they serve vast purposes,
Advantage their grand selves: be it true or false,
Each thing may have two uses. What’s a star?
A world, or a world’s sun: does it serve
As taper also, time-piece, weather-glass,
And damask? Are stars not set for signs
When we should shear our sheep, sow corn,
Prune trees?
The Bible says so.

Well, I add one use
To all the acknowledged uses, and declare
If I spy Charles’s Wain at twelve to-night,
It warns me, “Go, nor lose another day,
And have your hair cut, Sludge!” You laugh: and why? “A"
Were such a sign too hard for God to give?
No: but Sludge seems too little for such grace;
Thank you, sir! So you think, so does not Sludge!
When you and good men gaze at Providence,
Go into history and bid us mark
Not merely powder-plots prevented, crowns
Kept on kings’ heads by miracle enough,
But private mercies — oh, you’ve told me, sir,
Of such interpositions! How yourself
Once, missing on a memorable day
Your band-archief — just setting out, you
know,
You must return to fetch it, lost the train,
And saved your precious self from what befell
The thirty-three whom Providence forgot.
You tell, and ask me what I think of this?
Well, sir, I think then, since you needs must know, What matter had you and Boston city to boast Sailed, skyward, like burnt onion-peelings? Much To you, no doubt: for me — undoubtedly The cutting of my hair concerns me more, Because, however sad the truth may seem, Sludge is of all-importance to himself ...

You set apart that day in every year For special thanksgiving, were a heathen else: Well, I who cannot boast the like escape, Suppose I said, "I don't thank Providence For my part, owing it no gratitude"? "'Nay, but you owe as much," — you'd tutor me, "You, every man alive, for blessings gained In every hour of the day, could you but know! I saw my crowning mercy: all have such, Could they but see!" "Well, sir, why don't they see?"

"Because they won't look, — or perhaps, they can't."

Then, sir, suppose I can, and will, and do Look, microscopically as is right, Into each hour with its infinitude Of influence at work to profit Sludge? For that's the case: I've sharpened up my sight To spy a providence in the fire's going out, The kettle boiling, the dune's sticking fast Despite the hole i' the pocket. Call such facts Fancies, too petty a work for Providence, And those same thanks which you exact from me Prove too prodigous payment: thanks for what, If not, guards and guards us little men? No, no, sir! You must put away your pride, Resolve to let Sludge into partnership! I live by signs and omens: looked at the roof Where the pigeons settle — "If the further bird, The white, takes wing first, I'll confess when thresh'd."

Not, if the blue does," — so I said to myself Last week, lest you should take me by surprise:

Off flapped the white, — and I'm confessing, sir! Perhaps 'tis Providence's whim and way With only me, i' the world: how can you tell? "Because unlikely!" Was it likelier, now, That this our one out of all worlds beside, The what-i'you-call'em millions, should be just Precisely chosen to make Adam for, And the rest o' the tale? Yet the tale's true, you know!

Such underserving clad was graced so once: Why not graced likewise underserving Sludge? Are we merit-mongers, flaunt we filthy rags? All you can bring against my privilege Is, that another way was taken with you, — Which I don't question. It's pure grace, my luck: I'm broken to the way of nods and winks, And need no formal summoning. You've a help;

Holloa his name or whistle, clap your hands. Stamp with your foot or pull the bell: all's one, He understands you want him, here he comes. Just so, I come at the knocking: you, sir, wait The tongue o' the bell, nor stir before you catch Reason's clear tingle, nature's clapper brisk, Or that traditional peal was wont to cheer Your mother's face turned heavenward: short of these There's no authentic intimation, eh? Well, when you hear, you'll answer them, start up And stride into the presence, top of toe, And there find Sludge beforehand, Sludge that sprung At noise o' the knuckle on the partition-wall! I think myself the more religious man. Religion's all or nothing; it's no mere smile Of contentment, sigh of aspiration, sir — No quality o' the fincher-tempered clay Like its whiteness or its tightness; rather, stuff O' the very stuff, life of life, and self of self, I tell you, men won't notice; when they do, They'll understand. I notice nothing else: I'm eyes, ears, mouth of me, one gaze and gape.

Nothing eludes me, everything's a hint. Handle and help. It's all absurd, and yet There's something in it all, I know: how much?

No answer! What does that prove? Man's still man, Still meant for a poor blundering piece of work When all's done; but, if somewhat done, like this, Or not done, is the case the same? Suppose I blunder in my guess at the true sense O' the knuckle-sunnious, nine times out of ten, —

What if the tenth guess happen to be right? If the tenth shovel-load of powdered quartz Yield me the nugget? I rather, crush, sift all. Pass o'er the failure, pounce on the success, To give you a notion, now — (let who wins, laugh!) When first I see a man, what do I first? Why, count the letters which make up his name, And as their number chances, even or odd, Arrive at my conclusion, trim my course: Hiram H. Horsefall is your honored name, And have n't I found a patron, sir, in you? "Shall I cheat this stranger?" I take apple-pips, Stick one in either canthus of my eye, And if the left drops first — (your left, sir, stuck) I'm warned. I let the trick alone this time. You, sir, who smile, superior to such trash, You judge of character by other rules: Don't your rules sometimes fail you? Pray, what rule Have you judged Sludge by hitherto? Oh, be sure, You, everybody blunders, just as I,
In simpler things than these by far! For see:
I knew two farmers,—one, a wiseacre
Who studied seasons, rummaged almanacs,
Quoted the dew-point, registered the frost,
And then declared, for outcome of his pains,
Next summer must be damphish: 't was a drought.
His neighbor prophesied such drought would fall,
Saved hay and corn, made cent, per cent.

And proved a sage indeed: how came his lore?
Because one brindled heifer, late in March,
Stiffened her tail of evenings, and somehow
He got into his head that drought was meant!
I don't expect all men can do as much:
Such kissing goes by favor. You must take
A certain turn of mind for this,—a twist
I' the flesh, as well. Be lively alive,
Open-mouthed, like my friend the ant-eater,
Letting all nature's loosely-guarded notes
Settle and, slick, be swallowed! Think your-

Self.
The one 't the world, the one for whom the world
Was made, expect it tickling at your mouth!
Then will the swarm of busy buzzing flies,
Clouds of coincidence, break egg-shell, thrive,
Breed, multiply, and bring you food enough.

I can't pretend to mind your smiling, sir!
Oh, what you mean is this! Such intimate way,
Close converse, frank exchange of offices,
Strict sympathy of the immeasurably great
With the infinitely small, betokened here
By a course of signs and omens, raps and

Sparks,—

How does it suit the dread traditional text
O' the 'Great and Terrible Name'? Shall the Heaven of Heavens
Stoop to such child's play?

Please, sir, go with me
A moment, and I'll try to answer you.
The "Magnum et terrible" (is that right?)
Well, folk began with this in the early day;
And all the acts they recognized in proof
Were thunders, lightnings, earthquakes, whirlwinds, dealt
Indisputably on men whose death they caused,
There, and there only, folk saw Providence
At work,—and seeing it, 't was right enough
All heads should tremble, hands wring hands amain,
And knees knock hard together at the breath
O' the Name's first letter; why, the Jews, I'm told,
Won't write it down, no, to this very hour,
Nor speak aloud: you know best if 't be so.
Each agony-fit of fear at end, they crept
(Because somehow people once born must live)
Out of the sound, sight, swing and sway o' the Name.

Into a corner, the dark rest of the world,
And safe space where as yet no fear had reached;

'Twas there they looked about them, breathed
again,

And felt indeed at home, as we might say.
The current o' common things, the daily life,
This had their due contempt; no Name pursued

Man from the mountain-top where fires abide,
To his particular mouse-hole at its foot
Where he ate, drank, digested, lived in short:
Such was man's vulgar business, far too small
To be worth thunders: "small," folk kept on,
"small,"
With much complacency in those great days!
A mote of sand, you know, a blade of grass—
What was so despicable as mere grass,
Except perhaps the life o' the worm or fly
Which fed there? These were "small" and men were great.

Well, sir, the old way's altered somewhat since.
And the world wears another aspect now:
Somebody turns our spyglass round, or else
Puts a new lens in it: grass, worm, fly grow big:

We find great things are made of little things,
And little things go lessening till at last Comes God behind them. Talk of mountains
now?

We talk of mould that heaps the mountain, mites.

That throng the mould, and God that makes the mites,

The Name comes close behind a stomach-cyst.
The simplest of creations, just a sac
That's mouth, heart, legs and belly at once,
yet lives

And feels, and could do neither, we conclude.
If simplified still further one degree:
The small becomes the dreadful and immense!
Lightning, forsooth? No word more upon
that!
A tin-foil bottle, a strip of greasy silk,
With a bit of wire and knob of brass, and there's
Your dollar's-worth of lightning! But the cyst—
The life of the least of the little things?

Preachers and teachers try another tack,
Come near the truth this time; they put aside
Thunder and lightning. "That's mistake,"
they cry;

"Thunderbolts fall for neither fright nor sport,
But do appreciable good, like tides,
Changes o' the wind, and other natural facts—
' Good' meaning good to man, his body or soul.
Mediate, immediate, all things minister
To man, —that's settled: be our future text
"We are His children!" So, they now harangue

About the intention, the contrivance, all
That keeps us up an incessant play of love,—
See the Bridgewater book.

Amen to it!

Well, sir, I put this question: I'm a child?
I lose no time, but take you at your word:
How shall I act a child's part properly?
Your sainted mother, sir, —used you to live
With such a thought as this

She has it in her power to throttle me,
Or stab or poison: she may turn me out,
Or lock me in, — nor stop at this to-day,
But cut me off to-morrow from the estate
I look for — (long may you enjoy it, sir!) —
"In brief, she may unchild the child I am."
You never had such catchets? Nor have I!

Who, frank confessing childishness from the first,
Cannot both fear and take my ease at once,
So, don't fear, — know what might be, well enough.
But know too, child-like, that it will not be,

At least in my case, mine, the son and heir
O' the kingdom, as yourself proclaim my style.
But do you fancy I stop short at this?
Wonder if suit and service, son and heir.
Needs must expect, I dare pretend to find?
If, looking for signs proper to such an one,
I straight perceive them irresistible?
Concede that homage is a son's plain right,

And, never mind the nods and raps and winks.
'Tis the pure obvious supernatural
Steps forward, does its duty: why, of course!
I have presentsments; my dreams come true.
I fancy a friend stands whistling all in white
Blithe as a boblink, and he's dead I learn.
I take dislike to a dog my favorite long.
And sell him; he goes mad next week and snaps.
I guess that stranger will turn up to-day
I have not seen these three years; there's his knock.

I wager "sixty peaches on that tree!"

That I pick up a dollar in my walk,
That your wife's brother's cousin's name was George —

And win on all points. Oh, you wince at this?

You'd fain distinguish between gift and gift,
Washington's oracle and Sludge's itch
O' the elbow when at what he ought to trump?
With Sludge it's too absurd? Fine, draw the line
Somewhere, but, sir, your somewhere is not mine!

Bless us, I'm turning poet! It's time to end.

How you have drawn me out, sir! All I ask
Is — am I heir or not heir? If I'm he,
Then, sir, remember, that same personage
(To judge by what we read 'i the newspaper)
Requires, beside one nobleman in gold
To carry up and down his coronet
Another servant, probably: a duke,
To hold egg-nog in readiness: why want
Attendance, sir, when helps in his father's house
Abound, I'd like to know?

Enough of talk!

My fault is that I tell too plain a truth.

Why, which of those who say they disbelieve,
Your never had such catchets? Nor have I.

Caught his coincidence, stumbled on his fact
He can't explain, (he'll tell you smilingly.)
Which he's too much of a philosopher
To count as supernatural, indeed.

So calls a puzzle and problem, proud of it:

Bidding you still be on your guard, you know,
Because one fact don't make a system stand.
Nor prove this an occasional escape
Of spirit beneath the matter: that's the way!
Just so wild Indians picked up, piece by piece.
The fact in California, the fine gold,
That underlay the gravel — hearded these,
But never made a system stand, nor dug!
So wise men hold out in each hollowed palm

A handful of experience, sparkling fact

They can't explain; and since their rest of life
Is all explainable, what proof in this?

Whereas I take the fact, the grain of gold,
And fling away the dirty rest of life,
And add this grain to the grain each fool has found

O' the million other such philosophers,—

Till I see gold, all gold and only gold.

Truth questionless though unexplainable,
And the miraculous proved the commonplace!
The other fools believed in mud, no doubt —
Failed to know gold they saw: was that so strange?

Are all men born to play Bach's fiddle-fugues,

"Time" with the foil in carte, jump their own height.

Cut the mutton with the broadsword, skate a five

Make the red hazard with the cue, clip nails

While swimming, in five minutes row a mile,

Pull themselves three feet up with the left arm,
Do sums of fifty figures in their head,

And so on, by the scores of instances?
The Sludge with luck, who sees the spiritual facts,

His fellows strive and fail to see, may rank
With these, and share the advantage.

Ay, but share

The drawback! Think it over by yourself;

I have not heart, sir, and the fire's gone gray.
Defect somewhere compensates for success,

Every one knows that. Oh, we're equals, sir!
The big-legged fellow has a little arm
And a less brain, though big legs win the race:

Do you suppose I escape the common lot?

Say, I was born with flesh so sensitive,
Soul so alert, that, practice helping both,
I guess what's going on outside the veil,

Just as a prisoner crane feels pairing-time

In the islands where his kind are, so must fall
To capering by himself some shiny night,
As if your back-yard were a plot of spice —

Thus am I 'ware o' the spirit-world: while you,

Blind as a beetle that way. — for amends.

Why, you can double fist and floor me, sir!

Ride that hot hardmouthed horrid horse of yours,

Laugh while it lightens, play with the great dog,

Speak your mind though it vex some friend to hear,

Never brag, never bluster, never blush.

In short, you've pluck, when I'm a coward —

There!

I know it, I can't help it. — folly or no,
DRAMATIS PERSONAE

I'm paralyzed, my hand's no more a hand,
Nor my head a head; in danger: you can smile
And plunge the pipe in your cheek. Your gift's not mine.

Would you swap for mine? No! but you'd add my gift
to yours: I dare say! I too sigh at times,
Wish I were stouter, could tell truth nor finch,
Kept cool when threatened, did not mind so
much
Being dressed gayly, making strangers stare,
Eating nice things; when I'd amuse myself,
I shut my eyes and fancy in my brain,
I'm—now the President, now Jenny Lind,
Now Emerson, now the Benicia Boy—
With all the civilized world a-wondering
And worshipping. I know it's folly and worse;
I feel such tricks sap, honeycomb the soul,
But I can't enure myself,—despond, despair,
And then, hey, presto, there's a turn o' the wheel,
Under comes uppermost, fate makes full
amends;
Sludge knows and sees and hears a hundred
things
You all are blind to,—I've my taste of truth,
Likewise my touch of falsehood,—vice no
doubt,
But you've your vices also: I'm content.

What, sir? You won't shake hands? "Because I cheat!"
"You've found me out in cheating!" That's enough
To make an apostle swear! Why, when I cheat,
Mean to cheat, do cheat, and am caught in the act.

Are you, or rather, am I sure o' the fact? 12.5-30 (There's verse again, but I'm inspired somehow.)

Well then I'm not sure! I may be, perhaps,
Free as a babe from cheating: how it began,
My gift,—no matter; what 'tis got to be
In the end now, that's the question; answer
that!

Had I seen, perhaps, what hand was holding
mine,
Leading me whither, I had died of fright:
So, I was made believe I led myself.
If I should lay a six-inch plank from roof
To roof, you would not cross the street, one step,
Even at your mother's summons: but, being shrewd,
If I paste paper on each side the plank
And swear 'tis solid pavement, why, you'll cross
Humming a tune in the while, in ignorance
Beacon Street stretches a hundred feet below:
I walked thus, took the paper-chemist for stone.
Some impulse made me set a thing o' the move
Which, started once, ran really by itself;
Beer flows thus, suck the siphon; toss the kite,
It takes the wind and floats of its own force.
Don't let truth's lump rot stagnant for the lack
Of a timely helpful lie to leaven it!
Put a chalk-egg beneath the chucking hen,
She'll lay a real one, laudably deceived.

Daily for weeks to come. I've told my lie,
And seen truth follow, marks none of mine;
All was not cheating, sir, I'm positive!
I don't know if I move your hand sometimes
When the spontaneous writing spreads so far.
If my knee lifts the table all that height,
Why the inkstand don't fall off the desk a-tilt,
Why the accordion plays a prettier Waltz
Than I can pick out on the pianoforte,
Why I speak so much more than I intend,
Describe so many things I never saw,
I tell you, sir, in one sense, I believe
Nothing at all,—that everybody can,
Will, and does cheat: but in another sense
I'm ready to believe my very self—
That every cheat 's inspired, and every lie
Quick with a germ of truth.

You ask perhaps
Why should I condescend to trick at all
If I know a way without it? This is why!
There 's a strange secret sweet self-sacrifice
In any desecration of one's soul
To a worthy end,—is 't not Herodotus
I wish I could read Latin! who describes
The single gift of 't: pride and vanity,
Demanded in those old Egyptian rites,
(I've but a hazy notion — help me, sir!)
For one purpose in the world, one day in a life,
One hour in a day—thereafter, purity,
And a veil thrown o'er the past forevermore!
Well now, they understood a many things
Down by Nile city, or wherever it was!
I've always vowed, after the minne's lie,
And the end's gain,—truth should be mine henceforth.

This goes to the root o' the matter, sir,—this plain
Plump fact: accept it and unlock with it
The wards of many a puzzle!

Or, finally,
Why should I set so fine a gloss on things?
What need I care? I cheat in self-defence,
And there's my answer to a world of cheats!
Cheat? To be sure, sir! What's the world worth else?
Who takes it as he finds, and thanks his stars?
Don't it want trimming, turning, furnishing up
And polishing over? Your so-styled great
men,
Do they accept one truth as truth is found,
Or try their skill at tinkering? What's your world?
Here are you born, who are, I'll say at once.
Of the luckiest kind, whether in head and
heart,
Body and soul, or all that helps them both.
Well, now, look back: what faculty of yours
Came to its full, had ample justice done
By growing when rain fell, hiding its time,
Solidifying growth when earth was dead.
Spiriting up, broadening wide, in seasons due?
Never! You shot up and frost nipped you off,
Settled to sleep when sunshine bade you sprout;
One faculty thwarted its fellow: at the end,
All you boast is, "I had proved a topping tree
In other elms."—yet this was the right elme
Had you foreknown the seasons. Young, you've force
Wasted like well-streams: old,—oh, then indeed.
Behold a labyrinth of hydraulic pipes
Through which you'd play off wondrous water-Mary.
Only, no water's left to feed their play.
Young,—you've a hope, an aim, a love: it's tossed
And crossed and lost: you struggle on, some spark
Shut in your heart against the puffs around,
Through cold and pain; these in due time side.
Now then for age's triumph, the hoarded light
You mean to loose on the altered face of things,—
Up with it on the tripod! It's extinct.
Spend your life's remnant, asking, which was best,
Light smothered up that never peeped forth once.
Or the cold cresset with full leave to shine?
Well, accept this too,—seek the fruit of it
Not in enjoyment, proved a dream on earth,
But knowledge, useful for a second chance.
Another life,—you've lost this world—you've gained.
Its knowledge for the next.—What knowledge, sir,
Except that you know nothing? Nay, you doubt
Whether 't were better made you man or brute,
If might be true, if good and evil clash.
No foul, no fair, no inside, no outside.
There's your world!

Give it me! I slap it brisk
With harlequin's pasteboard sceptre: what's it now?
Changed like a rock-flat, rough with rusty weed
At first wash-over o' the returning wave!
All the dry dead impracticable stuff
Starts into life and light again; this world
Pervaded by the influx from the next.
I cheat, and what's the happy consequence?
You find full justice straightway dealt you out,
Each want supplied, each ignorance set at ease,
Each folly fooled. No life-long labor now
As the price of worse than nothing! No mere film
Holding you chained in iron, as it seems,
Against the outstretched of your very arms
And legs! the sunshine moralists forbid!
What would you have? Just speak and, there, you see!
You're supplemented, made a whole at last,
Bacon advises, Shakespeare writes you songs.
And Mary Queen of Scots embraces you.
Thus it goes on, not quite like life perhaps,
But so near, that the very difference piques,
Shows that e'en better than this best will be
This passing entertainment in a hut
Whose bare walls take your taste since, one stage more,
And you arrive at the palace: all half real,
And you, to suit it, less than real beside.
In a dream, lethargic kind of death in life,
That helps the interchange of natures, flesh
Transmuted by souls, and such souls! Oh, 'tis chill
And if at whiles the bubble, blown too thin.
Seem nigh on bursting,—if you nearly see
The real world through the false,—what do you see?
Is the old so ruined? You find you're in a flock
O' the youthful, earnest, passionate—genius, beauty,
Rank and wealth also, if you care for these:
And all depose their natural rights, hail you
(That's me, sir) as their mate and yoke-fellow,
Participate in Sludgehood—nay, grow mine,
I veritably possess them—banish doubt,
And reticence and modesty alike!
Why, here's the Golden Age, old Paradise
Or new Utopia! Here's true life indeed,
And the world well won now, mine for the first time!

And all this might be, may be, and with good help
Of a little lying shall be: so, Sludge lies!—
Why, he's at worst your poet who sings how Greeks
That never were, in Troy which never was,
Did this or the other impossible great thing!
He's Lowell—it's a world (you smile applause)
Of his own invention—wondrous Longfellow,
Surprising Hawthorne! Sludge does more than they,
And gets the books they write: the more his praise!

But why do I mount to poets? Take plain prose—
Dealers in common sense, set these at work,
What can they do without their helpful lies?
Each states the law and fact and face o' the thing
Just as he'd have them, finds what he thinks fit,
Is blind to what missuits him, just records
What makes his ease out, quite ignores the rest.
It's a History of the World, the Lizard Age,
The Early Indians, the Old Country War,
Jerome Napoleon, whatsoever you please.
All as the author wants it. Such a scribe
You pay and praise for putting life in stones,
Fire into fog, making the past your world.
There's plenty of "How did you contrive to grasp
The thread which led you through this labyrinth?
How build such solid fabric out of air?
How on so slight foundation found this male,
Biography, narrative?" or, in other words,
"How many lies did it require to make
The porty truth you here present us with?"
"Oh," quoth the penman, parring at your praise.
"'Tis fancy all; no particle of fact:
I was poor and threadbare when I wrote that book
DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Or else you poisoned her! Confound the cuss!
Where was my head? I ought to have prophesied
He'll die in a year and join her: that's the way.

I don't know where my head is: what had I done?
How did it all go? I said he poisoned her,
And hoped he'd have grace given him to repent,
Whereon he picked this quarrel, bullied me
And called me cheat: I thrashed him,—who could help?
He howled for mercy, prayed me on his knees
To cut and run and save him from disgrace:
I do so, and once off, he slanders me.
An end of him! Begin elsewhere anew!
Boston's a hole, the herring-pond is wide,
V-notes are something, liberty still more.
Beside, is he the only fool in the world?

APPARENT FAILURE.

"We shall soon lose a celebrated building."
Paris Newspaper.

No, for I'll save it! Seven years since,
I passed through Paris, stopped a day
To see the baptism of your Prince;
Saw, made my bow, and went my way:
Walking the heat and headache off,
I took the Seine-side, you surmise,
Thought of the Congress, Gortschakoff,
Cavour's appeal and Buol's replies,
So sauntered till,—what met my eyes?

Only the Doria little Morgue!
The dead-house where you show your drowned:
Petrarch's Vaucluse makes proud the Sorge,
Your Morgue has made the Seine renowned.
One pays one's debt in such a case;
I plucked up heart and entered,—stalked,
Keeping a tolerable face
Compared with some whose cheeks were chalked:
Let them! No Briton's to be balked!

First came the silent gazers; next,
A screen of glass, we're thankful for;
Last, the sight's self, the sermon's text,
The three men who did most abhor
Their life in Paris yesterday,
So killed themselves: and now, enthroned
Each on his copper couch, they lay
Fronting me, waiting to be owned.
I thought, and think, their sin's atoned.

Poor men, God made, and all for that!
The reverence struck me; o'er each head
Religiously was hung its hat,
Each coat dripped by the owner's bed,
Sacred from touch: each had his berth,
His bounds, his proper place of rest,
Who last night tenanted on earth
Some arch, where twelve such slept abreast,—
Unless the plain asphalt seemed best.

R-r-r, you brute-beast and blackguard! Cowardly scamp!
I only wish I dared burn down the house
And spoil your snuggling! Oh, what, you're the man?
You're satisfied at last? You've found out
The Sludge?
We'll see that presently: my turn, sir, next!
I too can tell my story: brute,—do you hear?
You throttled your sainted mother, that old bag,
In just such a fit of passion: no, it was .
To get this house of hers, and many a note
Like these . . . I'll pocket them, however...

Ten, fifteen . . . ay, you gave her throat the twist,
How did it happen, my poor boy?
You wanted to be Buonaparte
And have the Tuileries for toy,
And could not, so it broke your heart?
You, old one by his side, I judge,
Were, red as blood, a socialist;
A leveller! Does the Empire grudge
You've gained what no Republic missed?
Be quiet, and unclench your fist!

And this—why, he was red in vain,
Or black,—poor fellow that is blue!
What fancy was it, turned your brain?
Oh, women were the prize for you!
Money gets women, cards and dice
Get money, and ill-luck gets just
The copper coin and one clear nice
Cool squirt of water o'er your bosom,
The right thing to extinguish lust!

It's wiser being good than bad;
It's safer being meek than fierce;
It's fitter being same than mad,
My own hope is, a sun will pierce
The thickest cloud earth ever stretched;
That, after Last, returns the First,
Though a wide compass round be fetched;
That what began best, can't end worst,
Nor what God blessed once, prove accurst.

EPILOGUE

FIRST SPEAKER, as David

On the first of the Feast of Feasts,
The Dedication Day,
When the Levites joined the Priests
At the Altar in robed array,
Gave signal to sound and say,—

When the thousands, rear and van,
Swarming with one accord,
Became as a single man
($eek, gesture, thought and word)
In praising and thanking the Lord,—

When the singers lift up their voice,
And the trumpets made endeavor,
Sounding, "In God rejoice!"
Saying, "In Him rejoice
Whose mercy endureth forever!" —

Then the Temple filled with a cloud,
Even the House of the Lord;
Porch bent and pillar bowed:
For the presence of the Lord,
In the glory of his cloud,
Had filled the House of the Lord.

SECOND SPEAKER, as Rehan

Gone now! All gone across the dark so far,
Sharpening fast, shuddering ever, shuttering still,
Dwindling into the distance, dies that star
Which came, stood, opened once! We gazed our fill

With upturned faces on as real a Face
That, stooping from grave music and mild fire,
Took in our homage, made a visible place
Through many a depth of glory, gyre on gyre
For the dim human tribute. Was this true?
Could man indeed avail, mere praise of his,
To help by rapture God's own rapture too.
Thrill with a heart's red finger: that pure pale bliss?
Why did it end? Who failed to beat the breast,
And shriek, and throw the arms protesting wide,
When a first shadow showed the star addressed
Itself to motion, and on either side
The rings contracted as the rays retired;
The music, like a fountain's sickening pulse,
Subsided on itself; awhile transpired
Some vestige of a Face no pangs convulse,
No prayers retard; then even this was gone,
Lost in the night at last. We, lone and left
Silent through centuries, ever and anon
Venture to probe again the vault bereft
Of all now save the lesser lights, a mist
Of multitudinous points, yet suns, men say—
And this leaps ruby, this lurks amethyst,
But where may hide what came and loved our clay?
How shall the sage detect in you expanse
The star which chose to stoop and stay for us?
Unroll the records! Hailed ye such advance
Indeed, and did your hope evanish thus?
Watchers of twilight, is the worst averred?
We shall not look up, know ourselves are seen.
Speak, and be sure that we again are heard,
Acting or suffering, have the disk's serene
Reflect our life, absorb an earthly flame.
Nor doubt that, were mankind inert and numb,
Its core had never crimsoned all the same,
Nor, missing ours, its music fallen dumb?
Oh, dread succession to a dizzy post,
Sad sway of sceptre whose mere touch appalls,
Ghostly dethronement, cursed by those the most
On whose repugnant brow the crown next falls!

THIRD SPEAKER

Witless alike of will and way divine,
How heaven's high with earth's low should intertwine!
Friends, I have seen through your eyes: now use mine!

Take the least man of all mankind, as I;
Look at his head and heart, find bow and why
He differs from his fellows utterly:
Then, like me, watch when nature by degrees
Grows alive round him, as in Arctic seas
(They said of old) the instinctive water flies
Toward some elected point of central rock,
As though, for its sake only, roamed the flock
Of waves about the waste; awhile they mock
With radiance caught for the occasion,—hues
Of blackest hell now, now such reds and blues
As only heaven could fitly interface,—
The mimic monarch of the whirlpool, king
O' the current for a minute: then they wring
Up by the roots and oversweep the thing,
And hasten off, to play again elsewhere
The same part, choose another peak as bare,
They find and flatter, feast and finish there.

When you see what I tell you,—nature dance
About each man of us, retire, advance,
As though the pageant's end were to enhance
His worth, and,—once the life, his product, gained
Roll away elsewhere, keep the strike sustained,
And show thus real, a thing the North but feigned—
When you acknowledge that one world could do
All the diverse work, old yet ever new,
Divide us, each from other, me from you.

Why, where's the need of Temple, when the walls
O' the world are that? What use of swells and falls
From Levites' choir, Priests' cries, and trumpet-calls?

That one Face, far from vanish, rather grows,
Or decomposes but to recompose,
Become my universe that feels and knows!

THE RING AND THE BOOK

This, the most long sustained of Browning's writings, was published originally in four volumes, successively in November, December, 1868, January, February, 1869. Mrs. Orr has given so circumstantial an account of the inception of the work, that the main facts are here reproduced from her Hand-Book.

"Mr. Browning was strolling one day through a square in Florence, the Piazza San Lorenzo, which is a standing market for old clothes, old furniture, and old curiosities of every kind, when a parchment-covered book attracted his eye, from amidst the artistic or nondescript rubbish of one of the stalls. It was the record of a murder which had taken place in Rome, and bore inside it an inscription [in Latin] which Mr. Browning transcribes [on p. 415].

"The book proved, on examination, to contain the whole history of the case, as carried on in writing, after the fashion of those days:

THE RING AND THE BOOK

Do you see this Ring?

"Tis Rome-work, made to match
(By Castellani's imitative craft)
Errurian eirlets found, some happy morn,
After a dropping April; found alive
Spark-like 'mid unearthen slope-side figtree-roots
That roof old tombs at Chiusi: soft, you see,
Yet crisp as jewel-cutting. There's one trick,
(Craftsmen instruct me) one approved device
And but one, fits such slivers of pure gold pleadings and counter-pleadings, the depositions of defendants and witnesses; manuscript letters announcing the execution of the murderer, and the 'instrument of the Definitive Sentence' which established the perfect innocence of the murdered wife; these various documents having been collected and bound together by some person interested in the trial, possibly the very Cencini, friend of the Franceschini family, to whom the manuscript letters are addressed. Mr. Browning bought the whole for the value of eightpence, and it became the raw material of what appeared four years later as The Ring and the Book."

In another place Mrs. Orr states that the subject was conceived about four years before the poet took it actually in hand, and that, before he wrote it himself, he offered the theme for prose treatment to Miss Ogle, the author of A Lost Love.

As this was,—such mere ooings from the mine,
Virgin as oval tawny pendent tear
At beehive-edge when ripened combs overflow,—
To bear the file's tooth and the hammer's tap:
Since hammer needs must widen out the round,
And file emboss it fine with lily-flowers,
Ere the stuff grow a ring-thing right to wear.
That trick is, the artificer melts up wax
With honey, so to speak; he mingles gold
With gold's alloy, and, duly tempering both,
Effects a manageable mass, then works:
But his work ended, once the thing a ring,
Oh, there's repristination! Just a spirit
O' the proper fiery acid o'er its face,
And forth the alow unfastened flies in fume;
While, self-sufficient now, the shape remains,
The roniture brave, the lilyed loveliness,
Gold as it was, is, shall be evermore:
Prime mature with an added artistry —
No earst lost, and you have gained a ring.
What of it? 'Tis a figure, a symbol, say;
A thing's sign: now for the thing signified.

Do you see this square old yellow Book, I toss
I' the air, and catch again, and twirl about
By the crumpled vellum covers, — pure crude fact
Secreted from man's life when hearts beat hard,
And brains, high-blooded, ticked two centuries since?
Examine it yourselves! I found this book,
Gave a lira for it, eightpence English just,
(Mark the predestination!) when a Hand,
Always above my shoulder, pushed me once,
One day still fierce 'mid many a day struck calm,
Across a square in Florence, crammed with booths.

Buzzing and blaze, noontide and market-time,
Toward Baccio's marble, — ay, the basement-ledge
O' the pedestal where sits and menaces
John of the Black Bands with the upright spear,
Twixt palace and church, — Riccardi where they lived,
His race, and San Lorenzo where they lie.
This book, — precisely on that palace-step
Which, meant for lounging knives o' the Medicis,
Now serves re-vendors to display their ware, —

Mongst oddity ens and ends of ravage, picture-frames
White through the worn gilt, mirror-sockets chipped,
Bronze angel-heads once knobs attached to chests (Handled when ancient dames chose forth brocade).

Modern chalk drawings, studies from the nude,
Samples of stone, jet, breccia, porphyry
Polished and rough, sundry amazing busts
In baked earth (broken, Providence be praised!)
A wreck of tapestry, proudly-purposed web
When reds and blues were indeed red and blue,
Now offered as a mat to save bare feet
(Since carpets constitute a cruel cost)
Treading the chill scagliola bedward; then
A pile of brown-etched prints, two crouze each,
Stopped by a catch a-top from fluttering forth
— Sowing the square with works of one and the same
Master, the imaginative Sienese
Great in the scenic backgrounds — (name and fame
None of you know, nor does he fare the worse?)
From these... Oh, with a Lionard going cheap
If it should prove, as promised, that Jocundle
Whereof a copy contents the Louvre! —
these
I picked this book from. Five colours in flank
Stood left and right of it as tempting more —
A dogs-eared Speculum: the fond tale

O' the Frail One of the Flower, by young Dumas,
Vulgarized Horace for the use of schools,
The Life, Death, Miracles of Saint Somebody,
Saint Somebody Else, his Miracles, Death and Life.

With this, one glance at the lettered back of which,
And "Stall!" cried I: a lira made it mine.

Here it is, this I toss and take again;
Small-quarto size, part print, part manuscript:
A book in shape but, really, pure crude fact
Secreted from man's life when hearts beat hard,
And brains, high-blooded, ticked two centuries since.

Give it me back! The thing's restorative
I' the touch and sight.

That memorable day,
(June was the month, Lorenzo named the Square),
I heaved a little and overlooked my prize
By the low railing round the fountain-source
Close to the statue, where a step descends:
While clinked the cans of copper, as stopped and rose
Thick-ankled girls who brimmed them, and made place
For marketmen glad to pitch basket down,
Dip a broad melon-leaf that holds the wet,
And whisk their fadined fresh. And on I read
Presently, though my path grew perilous
Between the upspread straw-work, piles of plait
Soon to be flapping, each over two black eyes
And swarthe of Tuscan hair, on festas fine:
Through fire-irons, tribes of tomes, shovels in sheaves
Skeleton bedsteads, wardrobe-drawers agape,
Rows of tall slim brass lamps with dangling gear, —
And worse, cast clothes a-sweetening in the sun:
None of them took my eye from off my prize,
Still read I on, from written title-page
To written index, on, through street and street.
At the Strozzi, at the Pillar, at the Bridge;
Till, by the time I stood at home again
In Casa Guindi by Felice Church,
Under the doorway where the black begins
With the first stone-slab of the staircase cold,
I had mastered the contents, knew the whole truth
Gathered together, bound up in this book,
Print three-fifths, written supplement the rest.
"Romana Homicidiorum" — may Better translate — "A Roman murder-case:
Position of the entire criminal cause
Of Guido Franceschini, nobleman,
With certain Four the cutthroats in his pay,
Tried, all five, and found guilty and put to death
By hanging or hanging as befitted ranks,
At Rome on February Twenty Two,
Since our salvation Sixteen Ninety Eight:
Wherein it is disputed if, and when, Husbands may kill adulterous wives, yet 'scape The customary forfeit."

Word for word, So ran the title-page: murder, or else Legitimate punishment of the other crime, Accounted murder by mistake, — just that And no more, in a Latin cramp enough When the law had her eloquence to launch, But interfilleted with Italian streaks When testimony stooped to mother-tongue, — That, was this old square yellow book about.

Now, as the ingot, eve the ring was forged, Lay gold, (beseech you, hold that figure fast!) So, in this book lay absolutely truth, Fanc'less fact, the documents indeed, Primary lawyer-pleadings for, against, The aforesaid Five; real summed-up circumstance Added in proof of these on either side, Put forth and printed, as the practice was, At Rome, in the Apostolic Chamber's type, And so submitted to the eye of the Court Presided over by His Reverence Rome's Governor and Criminal Judge, — the trial Itself, to all intents, being then as now Here in the book and nowise out of it; Seeing, there properly was no judgment-bar. No bringing of accuser and accused, And whose judge'd both parties, face to face Before some court, as we conceive of courts. There was a Hall of Justice; that came last: For Justice had a chamber by the hall Where she took evidence first, summed up the same. Then sent accuser and accused alike, In person of the advocate of each, To weigh its worth, thereby arrange, array The battle. 'Twas the so-styled Face began, Pleaded (and since he only spoke in print The printed voice of him lives now as then) The public Prosecutor — Murder's proved; With five ... what we call qualities of bad, Worse, worst, and yet worse still, and still worse yet; Crest over crest crowning the cockatrice, That beggar hell's regalia to enrich Count Guido Franceschini; punish him!" Thus was the paper put before the court In the next stage, (no noisy work at all,) To study at ease. In due time like reply Came from the so-styled Patron of the Poor, Official mouthpiece of the five accursed Too poor to fee a better. — Guido's luck Or else his fellows' — which, I hardly know, — An outbreak as of wonder at the world, A fury-fit of outraged innocence. A passion of betrayed simplicity: "Punish Count Guido? For what crime, what hint O' the color of a crime, inform us first! Reward him rather! Recognize, we say, In the deed done, a righteous judgment dealt! All conscience and all courage, — there's our Count Charactered in a word; and, what's more strange, He had companionship in privilege, Found four courageous conscientious friends: Absolve, applaud all five, as props of law, Sustainers of society! — perchance A trifle over-hasty with the hand To hold her tottering ark, had tumbled else; But that's a splendid fiend whereat we wink Wishing your cold correctness sparkled so!" Thus paper second followed paper first, Thus did the two join issue — nay, the four, Each pleader having an adjunct. "True, he killed — So to speak — in a certain sort — his wife. But laudably, since thus it hap'd!" quoth one:

Whereat, more witness and the case postponed. "Thus it hap'd not, since thus he did the deed, And proved himself thereby portentoussest Of cut-throats and a prodigy of crime. As the woman that he slaughtered was a saint, Martyr and miracle!" quoth the other to match: Again, more witness, and the case postponed. "A miracle, ay — of lust and impudence; Hear my new reasons!" interposed the first: "— Coupled with more of mine!" pursued his peer. "Beside, the precedents, the authorities!" From both at once a cry with an echo, that! That was a firebrand at each fox's tail Unleashed in a cornfield: soon spread flare enough. As hurled thither and there heaped themselves From earth's four corners, all authority And precedent for putting wives to death, Or letting wives live, sinful as they seem. How legislated, now, in this respect. Solon and his Athenians? Quote the code Of Romulus and Rome! Justinian speak! Nor modern Baldo, Bartolo be dumb! The Roman voice was potent, plentiful; Cornelia de Sicariis hurried to help Pompeia de Parrisidiis; Julia de Something-or-other jostled Lex this-and-that; King Solomon confirmed Apostle Paul: That nice decision of Dolabella, eh? That pregnant instance of Theodoric, oh! Down to that choice example Ælian gives (An instance I find much insisted on) Of the elephant who, brute-beast though he was, Yet understood and punished on the spot His master's naughty spouse and faithless friend; A true tale which has edified each child. Much more shall flourish favored by our court! Pages of proof this way, and that way proof, And always — once again the case postponed. Thus wrangled, brangled, jangled they a month, — Only on paper, pleadings all in print. Nor ever was, except i' the brains of men.
More noise by word of mouth than you hear now—
Till the court cut all short with " Judged, your cause."
Receive our sentence! Praise God! We pro-

Much nonnulla;
Count Guido devilish and damnable: His wife Pompilia in thought, word and deed, Was perfect pure, he murdered her for that: As for the Four who helped the One, all Five— Why, let employer and hirelings share alike In guilt and guilt's reward, the death their due!"

So was the trial at end, do you suppose? "Guilty you find him, death you doom him to? Ay, were not Guido, more than needs, a priest, Priest and to spare!"—this was a shot reerved: I learn this from epistles which begin Here where the print ends,—see the pen and ink Of the advocate, the ready at a pinch!— "My client boasts the clerical privilege, Has taken minor orders many enough, Shows still sufficient chism upon his pate To neutralize a blood-stain: presbytery, Presbiter, subdiaconus, Sacerdos, so he slips from underneath Your power, the temporal, slides inside the robe Of mother Church: to her we make appeal By the Pope, the Church's head!"

A parol plea,
Put in with noticeable effect, it seems; "Since straight,"—resumes the zealous orator, Making a friend acquainted with the facts, — "Once the word 'clericality' let fall, Procedure stopped and freer breath was drawn By all considerate and responsible Rome," Quality took the decent part, of course; Held by the husband, who was noble too: Or, for the matter of that, a churl would side With toor-refined susceptibility, And honor which, tender in the extreme, Stung to the quick, must roughly right itself At all risks, not sit still and whine for law As a Jew would, if you squeezed him to the wall,

Brisk-trotting through the Ghetto. Nay, it seems,
Even the Emperor's Envoy had his say To say on the subject; might not see, unmoved,
Civility menaced throughout Christendom By too harsh measure dealt her champion here. Lastly, what made all safe, the Pope was kind, From his youth up, reluctant to take life, If mercy might be just and yet show grace; Much more unlikely then, in extreme age, To take a life the general sense had spare. 'T was plain that Guido would go scathless yet.

But human promise, oh, how short of shine! How topple down the piles of hope we rear! How history proves ... nay, read Herodotus! Suddenly starting from a nap, as it were,

A dog-sleep with one shut, one open orb, Cried the Pope's great self,— Innocent by name And nature too, and eighty-six years old, Antonio Pignatelli of Naples, Pope, Who had trod many lands, known many deeds, Probed many hearts, beginning with his own, And now was far in readiness for God,— 'T was he who first bade leave those souls in peace, Those Jansenists, re-nicknamed Molinists, (Gainst whom the cry went, like a trowsy tune, Tickling men's ears—the sect for a quarter of an hour I' the teeth of the world which, clown-like, loves to chew Be it but a straw 'twixt work and whistling-while, Taste some vituperation, bite away, Whether at marjoram-sprig or garlic-clove, Aught it may sport with, spoil, and then spit forth.) "Leave them alone," bade he, "those Molinists! Who may have other light than we perceive, Or why is it the whole world hates them thus?" Also he peeled off that last scandal-rag Of Nepotism; and so observed the poor That men would merrily say, "Halt, deaf and blind, Who feed on fat things, leave the master's self To gather up the fragments of his feast. These be the nephews of Pope Innocent!— His own meal costs but five carlines a day, Poor-priest's allowance, for he claims no more." —He cried of a sudden, this great good old Pope, When they appealed in last resort to him, "I have mastered the whole matter: I nothing doubt, Though Guido stood forth priest from head to heel, Instead of, as alleged, a piece of one, — And further, were he, from the tousled scalp To the sandaled sole of him, my son and Christ's. Instead of touching us by finger-tip As you assert, and pressing up so close Only to set a blood-smutch on our robe, — I and Christ would renounce all right in him. Am I not Pope, and presently to die, And busied how to render my account, And shall I wait a day ere I decide On doing or not doing justice here? Cut off his head to-morrow by this time, Hang up his four mates, two on either hand, And end one business more!"

So said, so done—

Rather so writ, for the old Pope bade this, I find, with his particular chirograph, His own no such inferno hand, Friday night; And next day, February Twenty Two, Since our salvation Sixteen Ninety Eight, — Not at the proper head-and-hanging-place On bridge-foot close by Castle Angelo, Where custom somewhat staled the spectacle. ('T was not so well I the way of Rome, beside,
The noble Rome, the Rome of Guido's rank
But at the city's newer gayyer end,—
The cavalading promenading place
Beside the gate and opposite the church
Under the Pincian gardens green with Spring,
'Neath the obelisk 'twixt the fountains in the Square,
Did Guido and his fellows find their fate,
All Rome for witness, and — my writer adds —
Remonstrant in its universal grief.
Since Guido had the sallfrage of all Rome.

This is the bookful; thus far take the truth,
The untampered gold, the fact untampered
with,
The mere ring-metal ere the ring be made!
And what has hitherto come of it? Who preserves
The memory of this Guido, and his wife
Pomptila, more than Ademollo's name,
The etcher of those prints, two crazie each,
Saved by a stone from snowing broad the Square?
With scenic backgrounds? Was this truth of force?
 Able to take its own part as truth should,
Sufficient, self-sustaining? Why, if so —
Yonder 's a fire, into it goes my book,
As who shall say me now, and what the loss?
You know the tale already: I may ask,
Rather than think to tell you, more thereof,—
Ask you not merely who were he and she,
Husband and wife, what manner of mankind,
But how you hold concerning this and that
Other yet-unnamed actor in the piece.
The young frank handsome courtly Canon, now,
The priest, declared the lover of the wife,
He who, no question, did clope with her,
For certain bring the tragedy about,
Giuseppe Caponscachi: — his strange course
Of the matter, was it right or wrong or both?
Then the old couple, slaughtered with the wife
By the husband as accomplices in crime,
Those Comarini, Pietro and his spouse, —
What say you to the right or wrong of that,
Where, at a known name whispered through the door
Of a lone villa on a Christmas night,
It opened that the joyous hearts inside
Might welcome as it were an angel-guest
Come in Christ's name to knock and enter, sup
And satisfy the loving ones he saved;
And so did welcome devils and their death?
I have been silent on that circumstance
Although the couple passed for close of kin
To wife and husband, were by some accounts
Pompilia's very parents: you know best.
Also that infant the great joy was for,
That Gaetano, the wife's two-weeks' babe,
The husband's first-born child, his son and heir,
Whose birth and being turned his night to day—
Why must the father kill the mother thus
Because she bore his son and saved himself?

Well, British Public, ye who like me not,
(God love you!) and will have your proper laugh

At the dark question, laugh it! I laugh first.
Truth must prevail, the proverb vows; and
truth
— Here is it all i' the book at last, as first
There it was all i' the heads and hearts of Rome
Gentle and simple, never to fall nor fade
Nor be forgotten. Yet, a little while,
The passage of a century or so,
Decades thrice five, and here's time paid his tax.
Oblivion gone home with her harvesting,
And all left smooth again as saythe could shave.
Far from beginning with you London folk,
I took my book to Rome first, tried truth's power
On likely people. "Have you met such names?
Is a tradition extant of such facts?
Your law-courts stand, your records found a-rest
What if I rove and rummage?" "— Why, you'll waste
Your pains and end as wise as you began!
Every one snickered: "names and facts thus old
Are newer much than Europe news we find
Down in to-day's Diario. Records, quotia?
Why, the French burned them, what else do
the French?
The rap-and-reading nation! And it tells Against the Church, no doubt,—another girl
At the Temporality, your Trial, of course?"
"— Quite otherwise this time," submitted I;
"Clean for the Church and dead against the
world,
The flesh and the devil, does it tell for once."
"— The rarer and the happier! All the same,
Content you with your treasure of a book,
And waive what 's wanting! Take a friend's advice!
It's not the custom of the country. Mend
Your ways indeed and we may stretch a point:
Go get you manned by Manning and new-named
By Newman and, mayhap, wise-manned to boot
By Wiseman, and we 'll see or else we won't!
Thanks meantime for the story, long and strong,
A pretty piece of narrative enough,
Which scarce ought so to drop out, one would think,
From the more curious annals of our kind,
Do you tell the story, now, in off-hand style, Straight from the book? Or simply here and
there;
(Th' while you vault it through the loose and large)
Hang to a hint? Or is there book at all,
And don't you deal in poetry, make-believe,
And the white lies it sounds like?"

Yes and no!
From the book, yes; thence bit by bit I dug
The lingot truth, that memorable day,
Assayed and knew my piecemeal gain was gold,—
Yes; but from something else surpassing that,
Something of mine which, mixed up with the mass,
Made it bear hammer and be firm to file.
Fancy with fact is just one fact the more;
To wit, that fancy has informed, transparented,
Thrided and so thrown fast the facts else true.
As right through ring and ring runs the dju-ree.
And binds the loose, one bar without a break.
I fused my live soul and that inert stuff,
Before attempting smithcraft, on the night.
After the day when — truth thus grasped and gained —
The book was shut and done with and laid by.
On the cream-colored massive agate, bread
'Neath the twin cherubs in the tarnished frame
O' the mirror, tall thence to the ceiling-top,
And from the reading, and that slab I leant
My elbow on, the while I read and read.
I turned, to free myself and find the world,
And stepped out on the narrow terrace, built
Over the street and opposite the church,
And paced its lozenge-brickwork sprinkled cool;
Because Felice-church-side stretched, aglow
Through each square window fringed for festival,
Whence came the clear voice of the cloistered ones
Chanting a chant made for midsummer nights —
I know not what particular praise of God,
It always came and went with June.
Beneath I the street, quick shown by openings of the sky
When flame fell silently from cloud to cloud,
Richer than that gold snow Jove rained on Rhodess
The townsman walked by twos and threes, and talked.
Drinking the blackness in default of air —
A busy human sense beneath my feet;
While in and out the terrace-plants, and round
One branch of tall datura, waxed and waned
The lamp-fly lured there, wanting the white flower.
Over the roof o' the lighted church I looked
A bowshot to the street's end, north away
Out of the Roman gate to the Roman road
By the river, till I felt the Apennine.
And there would be Arezzo, the man's town,
The woman's trap and cage and torture-place,
Also the stage where the priest played his part,
A spectacle for angels — ay, indeed.
There lay Arezzo! Farther then I fared,
Feeling my way through the hot and dense,
Romeward, until I found the wayside inn
By Castelnuovo's few mean hut-like homes
Huddled together on the hill-foot bleak,
Bare, broken only by that tree or two
Against the sudden bloody splendor poured
Cursewise in day's departure by the sun.
On the low house-roof of that squallid inn
Where they three, for the first time and the last,
Husband and wife and priest, met face to face.
Whence I went on again, the end was near,
Step by step, missing none and marking all,
Till Rome itself, the ghastly goal, I reached.
Why, all the while, — how could it otherwise? —
The life in me abolished the death of things.
Deep calling unto deep: as then and there
Acted itself over again once more
The tragic piece. I saw with my own eyes
In Florence as I trod the terrace, breathed
The beauty and the fearfulness of night,
How it had run, this round from Rome to Rome —
Because, you are to know, they lived at Rome,
Pomplilia's parents, as they thought themselves,
Two poor ignoble hearts who did their best
Part God's way, part the other way than God's,
To somehow make a shift and scramble through
The world's mud, careless if it splashed and spoiled,
Provided they might so hold high, keep clean
Their child's soul, one soul white enough for three.
And lift it to whatever star should stoop,
What possible sphere of purer life than theirs
Should come in aid of whiteness hard to save,
I saw the star stoop, that they strained to touch,
And did touch and depose their treasure on,
As Guido Franceschini took away
Pomplilia to be his forevermore.
While they sang "Now let us depart in peace,
Having beheld thy glory, Guido's wife!"
I saw the star supposed, but log o' the fen,
Gilded star-fashion by a glint from hell;
Having been heaved up, haled on its gross way,
By hands ungessed before, invisible help
From a dark brotherhood, and specially
Two obscure goblin creatures, fox-faced this,
Cat-clawed the other, called his next of kin
By Guido the main monster, — cloaked and caped,
Making as they were priests, to mock God more, —
Abate Paul, Canon Girolamo,
These who had rolled the starlike pest to Rome
And stationed it to suck up and absorb
The sweetness of Pomplilia, rolled again
That flated bubble, with her soul inside,
Back to Arezzo and a palace there —
Or say, a fissure in the honest earth
Whence long ago had curled the vapor first,
Blown big by neither fires to appall day:
It touched home, broke, and blasted far and wide.
I saw the cheated couple find the cheat
And guess what foul rite they were captured for, —
Too faint to follow over hill and dale
That child of theirs caught up thus in the cloud
And carried by the Prince o' the Power of the Air
Whither he would, to wilderness or sea.
I saw them, in the potency of fear,
Break somehow through the satyr-family
(For a gray mother with a monkey-mien,
Mopping and mowing, was apparent too,
As confident of capture, all took hands
And danced about the captives in a ring)
— Saw them break through, breathe safe, at Rome again.
Saved by the selfish instinct, losing so
Their loved one left with haters. These I saw
In recrudescency of baffled hate,
Prepare to wring the uttermost revenge.
From body and soul thus left them; all was sure.
Fire laid and caldron set, the obscene ring traced,
The victim stripped and prostrate: what of God?
The cleaving of a cloud, a cry, a crash,
Quenched lay their caldron, cowered i' the dust
the crew,
As, in a glory of armor like Saint George,
Out again sprang the young good beauteous priest
Bearing away the lady in his arms,
Saved for a splendid minute and no more.
For, whom i' the path did that priest come upon,
He and the poor lost lady borne so brave,
— Checking the song of praise in me, had else
Swelled to the full for God's will done on earth —
Whom but a husk misshapen messenger,
No other than the angel of this life,
Whose ears is lest men see too much at once.
He made the sign, such God-glimpse must suffice,
Nor prejudice the Prince o' the Power of the Air,
Whose ministration piles us overhead
What we call, first, earth's roof and, last,
heaven's floor,
Now grate o' the trap, then outlet of the cage:
So took the lady, left the priest alone,
And once more canopied the world with black.
But through the blackness I saw Rome again,
And where a solitary villa stood
In a lone garden-quarter; it was eve,
The second of the year, and oh so cold!
Ever and anon there flittered through the air
A snow-flake, and a scanty cough of snow
Cruised the grass-walk and the garden-mound.
All was grave, silent, sinister, — when, ha?
Glimmeringly did a pack of were-wolves pad
The snow, those flames were Guido's eyes in front,
And all five found and footed it, the track,
To where a threshold-streak of warmth and light
Betrayed the villa-door with life inside,
While an inch outside were those blood-bright
eyes,
And black lips wrinkling o'er the flash of teeth,
And tongues that lolled — O God that madest
man!
They parleyed in their language. Then one whined —
That was the policy and master-stroke —
Deep in his throat whispered what seemed a
name —
"Open to Caponsacchi !" Guido cried:
"Gabriel !" cried Lucifer at Eden-gate.
Wide as a heart, opened the door at once,
Showing the joyous couple, and their child
The two-weeks' mother, to the wolves, the wolves
To them. Close eyes! And when the corpses
lay
Stark-stretched, and those the wolves, their wolf-work done,
Were safe-embosomed by the night again,
I knew a necessary change in things:
As when the worst watch of the night gives
way,
And there comes dully, to take cognizance,
The scrutinizing eye-point of some star —
And who despairs of a new daybreak now?
Lo, the first ray protruded on those five!
It reached them, and each felon writhed transfixed,
Awhile they palpitated on the spear
Motionless over Tophet: stand or fall?
"I say, the spear should fall — should stand, I
say!"
Cried the world come to judgment, granting grace
Or dealing doom according to world's wont.
Those world's bystanders grouped on Rome's cross-road
At pricks and summons of the primal curse
Which bids man love as well as make a lie.
There prattled they, dis curated the right and wrote.
Turned wrong to right, proved wolves sheep and sheep wolves,
So that you scarce distinguished fell from fleece;
Till out spoke a great guardian of the fold.
Stood up, put forth his hand that held the crook,
And motioned that the arrested point declare:
Horribly off, the wriggling dead-weight reeled,
Rushed to the bottom and lay ruined there.
Though still at the pit's mouth, despite the smoke
O' the burning, terriers turned again to talk
And trim the balance, and detect at least
A touch of wolf in what showed whitest sheep,
A cross of sheep redeeming the whole wolf, —
Vex truth a little longer: — less and less,
Because years came and went, and more and
more
Brought new lies with them to be loved in turn.
Till all at once the memory of the thing: —
The fact that, wolves or sheep, such creatures
were —
Which hitherto, however men supposed,
Had somehow plain and pillar-like prevailed
I' the midst of them, indisputably fact,
Granite, time's tooth should grate against, not graze, —
Why, this proved sandstone, friable, fast to fly
And give its grain away at wish o' the wind,
Ever and ever more diminutive,
Base gone, shaft lost, only entablature,
Dwindled into no bigger than a book,
Lay of the column; and that little, left
By the roadside 'mid the orbium, shards and weeds.
Until I haply, wandering that lone way,
Kicked it up, turned it over, and recognized,
For all the crumbling. this abacus,
This square old yellow book, — could calculate
By this the lost proportions of the style.
This was it from, my fancy with those facts,
I used to tell the tale, turned gay to grave,
But lacked a listener seldom; such alloy,
Such substance of me interlaced the gold
Which, wrought into a shapely ring therewith,
Hammered and filed, fingered and favored, last
Lay ready for the renovating wash
O' the water, " How much of the tale was true?"
I disappeared; the book grew all in all;
The lawyers' pleadings swelled back to their size,
 Doubled in two, the crease upon them yet,
For more commodity of carriage, see! —
And these are letters, veritable sheets
That brought post-haste the news to Florence, writ
At Rome the day Count Guido died, we find,
To stay the craving of a client there,
Who bound the same and so produced my book.
Lovers of dead truth, did ye gave the worse?
Lovers of live truth, found ye false my tale?
Well, now: there's nothing in nor out o' the world
Good except truth: yet this, the something else,
What's this then, which proves good yet seems untrue?
This that I mixed with truth, motions of mine
That quickened, made the inertness malleable.
O' the gold was not mine, — what's your name for this?
Are means to the end, themselves in part the end?
Is fiction which makes fact alive, fact too?
The somehow may be this show.
I find first
Writ down for very A B C of fact,
"In the beginning God made heaven and earth
From which, no matter with what lisp, I spell
And speak you out a consequence — that man,
Man, — as befits the made, the inferior thing,
 Purposed, since made, to grow, not make in turn,
Yet forced to try and make, else fail togrow, —
Formed to rise, reach at, if not grasp and gain
The good beyond him, — which attempt is growth, —
Repeats God's process in man's due degree,
Attaining man's proportionate result, —
Creates, no, but resuscitates, perhaps.
Inalienable, the arch-prerogative
Which turns thought, act — conceives, expresses too!
No less, man, bounded, yearning to be free,
May so project his surplisage of soul
In search of body, so add self to self
By owning what lay ownerless before, —
So find, so fill full, so appropriate forms —
That, although nothing which had never life
Shall get life from him, be, not having been,
Yet, something dead may get to live again,
Something with too much life or not enough,
Which, either way imperfect, ended once:
An end whereat man's impulse intervenes,
Makes new beginning, starts the dead alive,
Completes the incomplete and saves the thing,
Man's breath were vain to light a virgin wick,
Both her putative parents; killed the three.
Aged they, seventy each, and she, seventeen,
And, two weeks since, the mother of his babe
First-born and heir to what the style was worth
O' the Guido who determined, dared and did
This deed just as he purposed point by point.
Then, bent upon escape, but hotly pressed.
And captured with his co-mates that same night,
He, brought to trial, stood on this defence —
Injury to his honor caused the act;
And since his wife was false, (as manifest by flight from home in such companionship.)
Death, punishment deserved of the false wife
And faithless parents who abetted her
† the flight aforesaid, wronged nor God nor man.
"Nor false she, nor yet faithless they," replied
The accuser; "choked and masked this murder glooms!
True was Pomplia, loyal too the pair;
Out of the man's own heart a monster curled,
Which — crime coiled with connivancy at crime —
His victim's breast, he tells you, hatched and reared;
Uncoil we and stretch stark the worm of hell!"
A month the trial swayed this way and that
Ere judgment settled down on Guido's guilt;
Then was the Pope, that good Twelfth Innocent, Appealed to: who well weighed what went before.
Affirmed the guilt and gave the guilty doom.
Let this old wee step on the stage again!
Act itself o'er anew for men to judge.
Not by the very sense and sight indeed —
(Which take at best imperfect cognizance.
Since, how heart moves brain, and how both move hand.
What mortal ever in entirety saw?
— No case of purer truth than man digests.
But truth with falsehood, milk that feeds him
now,
Not strong meat he may get to bear some day —
To wit, by voices we call evidence.
Uproar in the echo, live fact deadened down.
Talked over, bruited abroad, whispered away,
Yet helping us to all we seem to hear:
For how else know we save by worth of word?
Here are the voices presently shall sound
In due succession. First, the world's outcry
Around the rush and ripple of any fact Fallen stonewise, plumb on the smooth face of things;
The world's guess, as it crowds the bank o' the pool,
At which were figure and substance, by their splash:
Then, by vibrations in the general mind,
At depth of deed already out of reach.
This threefold murder of the day before, —
Say, Half-Rome's feel after the vanished
truth:
Honest enough, as the way is: all the same,
Harboring in the centre of its sense
A hidden germ of failure, shy but sure,
To neutralize that honesty and leave
That feel for truth at fault, as the way is too,
Some prepossessions such as starts amiss.
By but a hair's breadth at the shoulder-blade.
The arm o' the feeler, dip he ne'er so bold;
So heads arm waveringly, lets fall wide
Of the mark its finger, sent to find and fix
Truth at the bottom, that deceptive speck.
With this Half-Rome, — the source of swerving, call
Over-belief in Guido's right and wrong
Rather than in Pomplia's wrong and right:
Who shall say how, who shall say why? 'T is
there —
The instinctive theorizing whence a fact
Looks to the eye as the eye likes the look.
Gossip in a public place, a sample-speech.
Some worthy, with his previous hint to find
A husband, inside the safer, and no whit
Aware he is not. Excuse the while,
How such an one supposes and states fact
To whose-oe of a multitude
Will listen, and perhaps prolong thereby
The not-unpleasant flutter at the breast,
Born of a certain spectacle shut in
By the church Lorenzo opposite. So, they lounge
Midway the month o' the street, on Corso side.
"Twixt palace Piano and palace Ruspoli,
Linger and listen; keeping clear o' the crowd,
Yet wishful one could lead that crowd one s eye's,
(So universal is its plague of squint)
And make hearts beat our time that flutter false:
— All for the truth's sake, mere truth, nothing
else!
How Half-Rome found for Guido much excuse.
Next, from Rome's other half, the opposite feel
For truth with a like swerve, like unsuccess,—
Or if success, by no skill but more luck.
This time, through siding rather with the wife
Because a fancy-fit inclined that way,
Than with the husband. One wears drab, one pink;
Who wears pink, ask him "Which shall win
the race,
Of coupled runners like as egg and egg?"
"Why, if I must choose, he with the pink scarf."
Doubtless for some such reason choice fell here.
A piece of public talk to correspond
At the next stage of the story; just a day
Let pass and new day brings the proper change.
Another sample-speech 'tis the market-place
O' the Barberini by the Capucins;
Where the old Triton, at his fountain-sport,
Bernini's creature platted to the paps,
Plugs up steel sleet which breaks to diamond dust.
A spray of sparks snorted from his comeh.
High over the cartellas, out o' the way
O' the motley merchandising multitude.
Our murder has been done three days ago,
The frost is over and gone, the south wind lounges,
And, to the very tiles of each red roof
A-smoke 't the sunshine, Rome lies gold and glad.
So, listen how, to the other half of Rome,
Pompilia seemed a saint and martyr both!

Then, yet another day let come and go,
With pause presage still of novelty,
Hear a fresh speaker! — neither this nor that Half-Rome aforesaid; something bred of both:
One and one breed the inevitable three,
Such is the personage harangues you next;
The elaborated product, tertium quid:
Rome's first communion in subsidence gives
The card o' the cream, flower o' the wheat, as it were,
And finer sense o' the city. Is this plain?
You get a reasoned statement of the case,
Eventual verdict of the curious few
Who care to sift a business to the bran
Nor coarsely bolt it like the simpler sort.
Here, after ignorance, instruction speaks;
Here, clarity of candor, history's soul,
The critical mind, in short: no gossip-guess.
What the superior social section thinks,
In person of some man of quality
Who — breathing music from lace-work and brocade,
His solitaire amid the flow of frill,
Powdered peruke on nose, and bag at back,
And cane dependent from the ruffled wrist —
Harangues in silvery and selectest phrase
'Neath wax-light in a glorified salon
Where mirrors multiply the girandole:
Counting the approbation of no mob,
But Eminence This and All-Illustrious That
Who take snuff softly, range in well-bred ring,
Card-table-quitters for observance' sake,
Around the argument, the rational word —
Still, spite its weight and worth, a sample-speech.
How Quality dissertated on the case.

So much for Rome and rumor; smoke comes first:
Once let smoke rise untroubled, we desire
Clearer what tongues of flame may spire and spit.
To eye and ear, each with appropriate tinge
According to its food, or pure or foul.
The actors, no mere rogues of the act,
Intervene. First you hear Count Guido's voice,
In a small chamber that adjoins the court,
Where Governor and Judges, summoned thence,
Tommati, Venturini and the rest,
Find the accused ripe for declaring truth.
Soft-cushioned sits he; yet shifts seat, shirks truth.
As, with a twitchy brow and wincing lip
And check that changes to all kinds of white,
He professes his defence, in tones subdued
Near to mock-mildness now, so mournful seems
The obturer sense truth fails to satisfy;
Now, moved, from pathos at the wrong endured,
To passion; for the natural man is roused

At fools who first do wrong, then pour the blame
Of their wrong-doing, Satan-like, on Job.
Also his tongue at times is hard to curb;
Insensate, night satiric bites the phrase,
Roughly, yet somehow claiming privilege
— It is so hard for showliness to admit.
Folly means no harm when she calls black white!

— Eruption momentary at the mast,
Modified forthwith by a fall of the fire,
Jace acquiescence; for the world's the world,
And, what it errs in, Judges rectify:
He feels he has a fist, then folds his arms
Crosswise and makes his mind up to be meek.
And never once does he detach his eye
From those ranged there to slay him or to save.
But does his best man's service for himself,
Despite, — what twitches brow and makes lip wrinkle.
His limbs' late taste of what was called the Cord.

Or Vigil-torture more facetiously,
Even so; they were wont to tease the truth
Out of loth witness (toying, trilling time)
By torture: 't was a trick, a vice of the age,
Here, there and everywhere, what would you have?
Religion used to tell Humanity
She gave him warrant or denied him course,
And since the course was much to his own mind,
Of pinching flesh and pulling bone from bone
To unhurt truth a-hiding in its hulls,
Nor whisper of a warning stopped the way,
He, in their joint behalf, the burly slave,
Bestirred him, maned, and maimed all recusants.
While, prim in place, Religion overlooked;
And so had done till doomsday, never a sign
Nor sound of interference from her mouth.
But that at last the burly slave wiped brow,
Let eye give notice as if soul were there.
Muttered "'T is a vile trick, foolish more than vile,
Should have been counted sin; I make it so:
At any rate no more of it for me—
Say, for I break the torture-engine thus!
" Then did Religion start up, stare aghast,
Look round for help and see none, smile and say
"What, broken is the rack? Well done of thee!
Did I forget to abrogate its use?
Be the mistake in common with us both!
— One more fault our blind age shall answer for,
Down in my book denounced though it must be Somewhere. Henceforth find truth by milder means!"

Ah but, Religion, did we wait for thee?
To ope the book, that serves to sit upon,
And pick such place out, we should wait indeed!
That is all history: and what is not now,
Was then, defendants found it to their cost.
How Guido, after being tortured, spoke.

As hear Caponsacchi who comes next,
Man and priest— could you comprehend the coil!

In days when that was rife which now is rare.
How, mingling each its multifarious wires,
Now heaven, now earth, now heaven and earth at once.

Had plucked at and perplexed their puppet here,

Played off the young frank personable priest;

Sworn fast and tonsured plain heaven’s celibate,

And yet earth’s clear-accepted servitor,

A courtly spiritual Cupid, squire of dames

By law of love and mandate of the mode,

The Church’s own, or why parade her seal?

Wherefore that chrism and consecrative work?

Yet verily the world’s, or why go badged

A prince of somneaters and lunatics,

Show color of each vanity in vogue

Borne with decorum due on blameless breast?

All that is changed now, as he tells the court

How he had played the part excepted at;

Tells it, moreover, now the second time:

Since, for his cause of scandal, his own share

’T the flight from home and husband of the wife,

He has been censured, punished in a sort

By relegation,— exile, we should say,

To a remote distance for a little time,—

Whence he is summoned on a sudden now,

Informed that she, he thought to save, is lost,

And, in a breath, hidden re-tell his tale,

Since the first telling somehow missed effect,

And then advise in the matter. There stands he,

While the same grim black-panelled chamber

blinks

As though rubbed shiny with the sins of Rome;

Told the same oak for ages—wave-washed wall

Against which sets a sea of wickedness.

There, where you yesterday heard Guido speak,

Speaks Caponsacchi; and there face him too

Tommati, Venturini and the rest

Who, eight months earlier, scarce repressed the

smile,

Forewent the wink; waived recognition so

Of pecadillos incident to youth,

Especially youth high-born; for youth means

love,

Vows can’t change nature, priests are only men,

And love likes stratagem and subterfuge:

Which age, that once was youth, should recognize,

May blame, but needs not press too hard upon.

Here sit the old Judges then, but with no grace

Of reverend carriage, magisterial port.

For why? The accused of eight months since,

—the same

Who cut the conscious figure of a fool,

Changed countenance, dropped bashful gaze to

ground,

While hesitating for an answer then,—

Now is grown judge himself, terrifies now

This, now the other culprit called a judge,

Whose turn it is to stammer and look strange,

As he speaks rapidly, angrily, speech that smites:

And they keep silence, beat blow after blow,

Because the seeming-solitary man,

Speaking for God, may have an audience too,

Invisible, no discreet judge provokes.

How the priest Caponsacchi said his say.

Then a soul sighs its lowest and its last

After the loud ones,— so much breath remains

Unused by the four-days’dying; for she lived

Thus long, miraculously long, ’twas thought,

Just that Pompilia might defend herself.

How, while the hireling and the alien stoop,

Comfort, yet question,— since the time is brief

And folk, allowably inquisitive,

Encircle the low pallet where she lies

In the good house that helps the poor to die,—

Pompilia tells the story of her life.

For friend and lover,— leech and man of law

Do service; busy helpful ministrants

As varied in their calling as their mind,

Temper and age: and yet from all of these,

About the white bed under the arched roof,

Is somehow, as it were, evolved a one,—

Small separate sympathies combined and large.

Nothings that were, grown something very much:

As if the bystanders gave each his straw,

All he had, though a trifle in itself,

Which, plaited all together, made a Cross

Fit to die looking on and praying with,

Just as well as if it were or gold.

So, to the common kindliness she speaks,

There being scarce more privacy at the last

For mind than body: but she is used to bear,

And only unused to the brotherly look.

How she endeavored to explain her life.

Then, since a Trial ensued, a touch o’ the same

To sober us, fluttered with frothy talk,

And teach our common sense its helplessness.

For why deal simply with divining-rod,

Scrape where we fancy secret sources flow,

And ignore law, the recognized machine,

Elaborate display of pipe and wheel

Framed to muchoke, pump up and pour apace

Truth till a flowery foam shall wash the world?

The patent truth-extracting process,— ha?

Let us make that grave mystery turn one wheel,

Give you a single grind of law at least!

One orator, of two on either side,

Shall teach us the puissance of the tongue

—That is, o’ the pen which simulated tongue

On paper and saved all except the sound

Which now was. Law’s speech beside law’s thought?

That were too stunning, too immense an odds:

That point of vantage law lets nobly pass.

One lawyer shall admit us to behold

The manner of the making out a case,

First fashion of a speech; the chick in egg,

The masterpiece law’s bosom incubates.

How Don Giacinto of the Arcangelo,

Called Procurator of the Poor at Rome,

Now advocate for Guido and his mates,—

The jolly learned man of middle age,

Cheek and jowl all in laps with fat and law,

Mirthful as mighty, yet, as great hearts use,

Despite the name and fame that tempt our flesh,

Constant to that devotion of the hearth,

Still captive in those dear domestic ties!—

How he,— having a cause to triumph with,

All kind of interests to keep intact,

More than one efficacious personage

To tranquilize, conciliate and secure,

And above all, public anxiety

To quiet, show its Guido in good hands,—
Also, as if such burdens were too light, A certain family-feast to claim his care, The birthday-banquet for the only son— Paternity at smiling strife with law— How he brings both to buckle in one bond; And, thick at throat, with waterish under-eye, Turned on his taste and settled to the seat And puts his utmost means in practice now: Wheezes out law-phrase, whistles Latin forth, And, just as though roast lamb would never be, Makes logic levigate the big crime small: Rubs palm on palm, takes foot with itchy foot, Conceives and incoheres the argument, Sprinkling each flower appropriate to the time,— Ovidian quip or Ciceronian crank, A-bubble in the larynx while he laughs, As he had fritters deep down frying there, How he turns, twists, and tries the oily thing Shall he—first speech for Guido 'gainst the Fisc. Then with a skip as it were from heel to head, Leaving yourselves fill up the middle bulk O' the 'Trial, reconstruct its shape august, From such exordium clap we to the close; Give you, if we dare wing to such a height, The absolute glory in some full-grown speech On the other side, some finished butterfly, Some breathing diamond-flake with leaf-gold fans, That takes the air, no trace of worm it was, Or cabbage-bed it had production from. Giovambattista o' the Bottini, Fisc, Pompilia's patron by the chance of the hour, To-morrow her persecutor,—composite, he, As becomes who must meet such various calls— Odds of age joined in him with ends of youth, A man of ready-smile and facile tear, Improvised hopes, despairs at nod and beck, And language—ah, the gift of eloquence! Language that goes, goes, easy as a glove; O'er good and evil, smoothens both to one. Rashness helps caution with him, fires the straw, In free enthusiastic careless fit, On the first proper pinnacle of rock Which offers, as reward for all that zeal, To lure some bark to founder and bring gain: While calm sits Caution, rapt with heavenward eye, A true confessor's gaze, amid the glare Beseeming to the breaker, death and hell. "Well done, thou good and faithful!" she approves: "Hadst thou let slip a fagot to the beach, The crew might surely spy thy precipice And save their boat; the simple and the slow Might so, forsooth, forestall the wreckers' fee! Let the next crew be wise and hail in time!" Just so compounded is the outside man, Blue juvenile pure eye and pippin cheek, And brow all prematurely soiled and smeared With sudden age, bright devastated hair, Ah, but you miss the very tones o' the voice, The seramnel pipe that screams in heights of head, As, in his modest studio, all alone. The tall wight stands a-tiptoe, strivest and strains, Both eyes shut, like the cockerel that would crow, Tries to his own self amorously o'er What never will be uttered else than so— Since to the four walls, Forum and Mars' Hill, Speaks out the paean which, penned, turns prose at last: Clavecinist debarred his instrument, He yet thrums—shirking neither turn nor trill, With desperate fnger on dumb table-edge— The sovereign rondo, shall conclude his Suite, Charm an imaginary audience there, From old Corelli to young Haendel, both T' the flesh at Rome, ere he perfecly go print. The cold black score, mere music for the mind— The last speech against Guido and his gang, With special end to prove Pompilia pure, How the Fisc vindicates Pompilia's fame. Then comes the all but end, the ultimate Judgment save yours. Pope Innocent the Twelfth, Simple, sagacious, mild yet resolute, With prudence, probity and—what beside From the other world he feels impress at times, Having attained to fourscore years and six,— How, when the court found Guido and the rest Guilty, but law supplied a subterfuge And passed the final sentence to the Pope, He, bringing his intelligence to bear This last time on what ball behoves him drop In the urn, or white or black, does drop a black. Send five souls more to just precede his own. Stand him in stead and witness, if need were, How he is wont to do God's work on earth. The manner of his sitting out the dim Droop of a sombre February day In the plain closet where he does such work. With, from all Peter's treasury, one stool, One table and one latchen crucifix. There sits the Pope, his thoughts for company: Grave but not sad,—nay, something like a cheer Leaves the lips free to be benevolent, Which, all day long, did duty firm and fast. A cherishing there is of foot and knee, A chaplain loose-skinned large-veined hand with hand,— What steward but knows when stewardship earns its wage? May leny praise, anticipate the lord? He reads, notes, lays the papers down at last, Muses, then takes a turn about the room; Uncasps a huge tome in an antique guise, Primitive print and tongue half obsolete, That stands him in diurnal stead; o'pens page, Finds place where falls the passage to be combed According to an order long in use: And, as he comes upon the evening's chance, Starts somewhat, solemnizes straight his smile. Then reads aloud that portion first to last, And at the end lets flow his own thoughts forth Likewise aloud, for respite and relief, Till by the dreary relies of the west Wan through the half-moon window, all his light. He bows the head while the lips move in prayer, Writes some three brief lines, signs and seals
the same,
Tinkles a hand-bell, bids the obsequious Sir
Who puts foot presently o' the closet-still
He watched outside of, bear as superscribed
That mandate to the Governor forthwith:
Then leaves abroad his cares in one good sigh,
Traverses corridor with no arm's help,
And so to sup as a clear conscience should,
The manner of the judgment of the Pope.

Then must speak Guido yet a second time,
Satan's old saw being npt here — skin for skin,
All a man hath that will he give for life.
While life was graspable and gainable,
And bird-like buzzed her wings round Guido's brow,
Not much truth stiffened out the web of words
He wove to catch her: when away she flew
And death came, death's breath rivelled up the lies,
Left bare the metal thread, the fibre fine
Of truth, i' the spinning: the true words shone last.
How Guido, to another purpose quite,
Speaks and despairs, the last night of his life,
In that New Prison by Castle Angelo
At the bridge-foot: the same man, another voice.
On a stone bench in a close fetid cell,
Where the hot vapor of an agony,
Struck into drops on the cold wall, runs down —
Horrible worms made out of sweat and tears —
There crouch, wellnigh to the knees in dungeon-straw,
Lit by the sole lamp suffered for their sake,
Two awe-struck figures, this a Cardinal,
That an Abate, both of old styled friends
O' the thing part man, part monster in the midst,
So changed is Franceschini's gentle blood.
The tiger-cat screams now, that whined before,
That cried and tried and trod so gingerly,
Till in its silkiness the trap-teeth joined;
Then you know how the bristling fury foams.
They listen, this wrapped in his folds of red.
While his feet fumble for the filth below;
The other, as beseems a stouter heart,
Working his best with heads and crosse to ban
The enemy that comes in like a flood
Spite of the standard set up, verily
And in no trope at all, against him there:
For at the prison-gate, just a few steps
Outside, already, in the doubtful dawn.
Thither, from this side and from that, slow sweep
And settle down in silence solidly,
Crow-wise, the frightful Brotherhood of Death.
Black-hatted and black-veiled huddle they,
Black rosaries a-dangling from each waist;
So take they their grim station at the door,
Torches lit, skull-and-crossbones-bannerspread,
And that gigantic Christ with open arms,
Grounded. Nor lacks there angst but that the ground.
Break forth, into the lamentable psalm,
"Out of the deeps, Lord, have I cried to thee!"

When inside, from the true profound, a sign
Shall bear intelligence that the foe is foiled,
Count Guido Franceschini has confessed.
And is absolved and reconciled with God,
Then they, intoning, may begin their march,
Make by the longest way for the People's Square.

Carry the criminal to his crime's award:
A mob to cleave, a scaffold to reach,
Two gallows and Maunfrau crowning all.
How Guido made defence a second time.

Finally, even as thus by step and step
I led you from the level of to-day
Up to the summit of so long ago,
Here, whence I point you the wide prospect round.

Let me, by like steps, slope you back to smooth,
Land you on mother-earth, no whitt the worse,
To feed o' the fat o' the furrow: free to dwell,
Taste our time's better things profusely spread
For all who love the level, corn and wine,
Much cattle and the many-folded fleece.
Shall not my friends go feast again on sward,
Though cognizant of country in the clouds
Higher than wistful eagle's horned eye
Ever_unclosed for, 'mid ancestral crags,
When morning broke and Spring was back once more,
And he died, heaven, save by his heart, unreached?
Yet heaven my fancy lifts to, ladder-like, —
As Jack reached, holpen of his beanstalk rungs!

A novel country: I might make it mine
By closing which one aspect of the year
Suited mood best, and putting solely that
On panel somewhere in the House of Fame.

Landscaping what I saved, not what I saw:
— Might fix you, whether frost in gobin-time
Startled the noon with his abrupt bright laugh,
Or, August's hair aloft in filmy fire,
She fell, arms wide, face foremost on the world,
Swooned there and so sang out the strength of things.
Thus were abolished Spring and Autumn both,
The land dwarfed to one likeness of the land,
Life cramped corpse-fashion. Rather lean and love
Each face-flash of the revolving year! —
Red, green and blue that whirl into a white,
The variance now, the eventual unity,
Which make the miracle. See it for yourselves.

This man's act, changeable because alive!
Action now shronds, nor shows the informing thought;
Man, like a glass ball with a spark a-top,
Out of the magic fire that lurks inside,
Shows one tint at a time to take the eye:
Which, let a finger touch the silent sleep,
Shifted a hair's-breath shoots you dark for bright,
Suffuses bright with dark, and baffles so
Your sentence absolute for shine or shade.
Once set such orbs, — white styled, black stigmatazed,—
A-rolling, see them once on the other side.
Your good men and your bad men every one,
From Guido Franceschini to Guy Faux,
Oft would you rub your eyes and change your names.

Such, British Public, ye who like me not,
(God love you?)—whom I yet have labored for.
Perchance more careful whose runs may read
Than erst when all, it seemed, could read who ran,
—
Perchance more careless whose reads may praise
Than late when he who praised and read and wrote

Was apt to find himself the self-same me,
Such labor had such issue, so I wrought
This arc, by furtherance of such alloy,
And so, by one spirt, take away its trace
Till, justitably golden, rounds my ring.

A ring without a posy, and that ring mine?

O lyric Love, half angel and half bird,
And all a wonder and a wild desire, —
Holdest of hearts that ever braved the sun,
Took sanctuary within the holier blue,
And sang a kindred soul out to his face, —
Yet human at the red-ripe of the heart.
When the first summons from the darkling earth
Reached thee amid thy chambers, blanched their blue,
And bared them of the glory — to drop down,
To toil for man, to suffer or to die, —
This is the same voice: can thy soul know change?

Hail then, and hearken from the realms of help!
Never may I commence my song, my due
To God who best taught song by gift of thee.
Except with bent head and beseeching hand —
That still, despite the distance and the dark,
What was, again may be; some interchange
Of grace, some splendor once thy very thought,
Some benediction anciently thy smile:
— Never conclude, but raising hand and head
Thither where eyes, that cannot reach, yet yearn
For all hope, all sustamient, all reward,
Their utmost up and on, — so blessing back
In these thy realms of help, that heaven thy home,
Some whiteness which, I judge, thy face makes proud.

Some wanness where, I think, thy foot may fall!

II

HALF-ROME

What, you, Sir, come too? (Just the man I’d meet.)

Be ruled by me and have a care o’ the crowd:
This way, while fresh folk go and get their gaze:
I’ll tell you like a book and save your shins.
Fie, what a roaring day we’ve had! Whose fault?

Lorenzo in Lucina, — here’s a church
To hold a crowd at need, accommodate
All corners from the Corso! If this crush
Make not its priests ashamed of what they show

For temple-room, don’t prick them to draw purse
And down with bricks and mortar, eke us out
The beggarly transplent with its bit of upse
Into a decent space for Christian ease,
Why, to-day’s lucky pearl is cast to swine.
Listen and estimate the luck they’ve had!
(The right man, and I hold him.)

Sir, do you see,
They bid both bodies in the church, this morn
The first thing, on the chancel two steps up,
Behind the little marble balustrade:
Disposed them, Pietro the old murdered fool
To the right of the altar, and his wretched wife
On the other side,
In trying to count stabs,
People supposed Violante showed the most,
Till somebody explained us that mistake;
His wounds had been dealt out indifferent where
But she took all her stabblings in the face,
Since punished thus solely for honor’s sake,
Honoris causa, that’s the proper term.
A delicacy there is, our gallants hold,
When you avenge your honor and only then,
That you disfigure the subject, fray the face,
Not just take life and end, in clownish guise.
It was Violante gave the first offence,
Got therefore the conspicious punishment:
While Pietro, who helped merely, his mere death
Answered the purpose, so his face went free.
We fancied even, free as you please, that face
Showed itself still intolerably wronged;
Was wrinkled over with resentment yet,
Nor calm at all, as murdered faces use,
Once the worst ended: an indignant air
O’ the head there was — ’t is said the body turned Round and away, rolled from Violante’s side
Where they had laid it loving-husband-like.
If so, if corpses can be sensitive,
Why did not he roll right down altar-step,
Roll on through nave, roll fairly out of church.
Depryve Lorenzo of the spectacle,
Pay back thus the succession of affrents
Whereeto this church had served as theatre?
For see: at that same altar where he lies,
To that same inch of step, was brought the baby
For blessing after baptism, and there styled Pompilia, and a string of names beside,
By his bad wife, some seventeen years ago,
Who purchased her simply to palm on him,
Flatter his dotage and defraud the heirs.
Wait awhile! Also to this very step
Did this Violante, twelve years afterward,
Bring, the mock-mother, that child-cheat full-grown,
Pompilia, in pursuance of her plot,
And there brave God and man a second time
By linking a new victim to the lie.
There, having made a match unknown to him.
She, still unknown to Pietro, tied the knot.
Which nothing cuts except this kind of knife;
Yes, made her daughter, as the girl was held,
Marry a man, and honest man beside,
And man of birth to boot, — chaste-stingly because of this, because of that, because O' the devil's will to work his worst for once.
Confident she could top her part at need
And, when her husband must be told in turn,
Ply the wife's trade, play off the sex's trick
And, alternating worry with quiet quahus,
Bravado with submissiveness, prettily fool
Her Pietro into patience; so it proved.
Ay, 'tis four years since man and wife they grew,
This Guido Franceschini and this same
Pompilia, foolishly thought, falsely declared
A Comparini and the couple's child:
Just at this altar where, beneath the piece
Of Master Guido Reni, Christ on cross,
Second to naught observable in Rome,
That couple lie now, murdered yestereve.
Even the blind can see a providence here.

From dawn till now that it is growing dusk,
A multitude has flocked and filled the church,
Coming and going, coming back again.
Till to count crazied one. Rome was at the show.
People climbed up the columns, fought for spikes
O' the chapel-rail to perch themselves upon,
Jumped over and so broke the wooden work
Painted like porphyry to deceive the eye;
Serve the priests right! The organ-loft was crammed,
Women were fainting, no few fights ensued,
In short, it was a show repaid your pains.
For, though their room was scant undoubtedly,
Yet they did manage matters, to be just,
A little at this Lorenzo. Body o' me!
I saw a body exposed . . . never mind!
Enough that here the bodies had their due.
No stinginess in wax, a row all round,
And one big taper at each head and foot.

So, people pushed their way, and took their turn,
Saw, threw their eyes up, crossed themselves, gave place
To pressure from behind, since all the world
Knew the old pair; could talk the tragedy
Over from first to last: Pompilia too,
Those who had known her — what 't was worth to them!
Guido's acquaintance was in least request;
The Count had lounged somewhat too long in Rome,
Made himself cheap; with him were hand and glove
Barbers and blare-eyed, as the ancient sings.
Also he is alive and like to be:
Had he considered died, — aha!
I losted Luca Cini on his staff,
Mate in the midst, the whole man one amaze,
Staring amain and crossing brow and breast.
"How now?" asked I. "'Tis seventy years," quoth he,
"Since I first saw, holding my father's hand,
Bodies set forth: a many have I seen,
Yet all was poor to this I live and see.
Here they, and 's wickedness seals up the sun;
What with Molinos' doctrine and this deed.
Antichrist surely comes and doomsday's near.
May I depart in peace. I have seen my see.'
"Depart then," I advised, "nor block the road
For youngsters still behindhand with such sights!"
"Why no," rejoins the venerable sire,
"I know it's horrid, hideous past belief,
Burdenome far beyond what eye can bear;
But they do promise, when Pompilia dies
I' the course of the day, — and she can't outlive
night, —
They'll bring her body also to expose
Beside the parents, one, two, three abreast;
That were indeed a sight which, might I see,
I trust I should not last to see the like!"
Whereat I bade the senior spare his shanks,
Since doctors give her till to-night to live,
And tell us how the butchery happened. "Ah,
But you can't know!" sighs he, "I 'll not despair:
Beside I'm useful at explaining things —
As, how the dagger laid there at the feet,
Caused the peculiar cuts; I mind its make,
Triangular 't the blade, a Genoese.
Armed with those little hook-teeth on the edge
To open in the flesh nor shut again:
I like to teach a novice: I shall stay!"
And stay he did, and stay be sure he will.

A personage came by the private door
At noon to have his look: I name no names:
Well then, His Eminence the Cardinal,
Whose servitor in honorable sort
Guido was once, the same who made the match,
(Will you have the truth?) whereof we see effect.
No sooner whisper ran he was arrived
Than up pops Curate Carlo, a brisk lad,
Who never lets a good occasion slip,
And volunteers improving the event,
We looked he'd give the history's self some help,
Treat us to how the wife's confession went
(This morning she confessed her crime, we know)
And, maybe, throw in something of the Priest —
If he's not ordered back, punished anew,
The gallant, Caponsacchi, Lucifer
I' the garden where Pompilia, Eve-like, hired
Her Adam Guido to his fault and fall.
Think you we got a sprig of speech akin
To this from Carlo, with the Cardinal there?
Too wary he was, too widely awake, I trow.
He did the murder in a dozen words:
Then said that all such outrages crop forth
I' the course of nature, when Molinos' tares
Are sown for wheat, flourish and choke the Church:
So shit on to the abominable sect
And the philosophic sin — we've heard all that,
And the Cardinal too, (who book-made on the same)
But, for the murder, left it where he found.
Oh but he's quick, the Curate, minds his game!
And, after all, we have the main o' the fact:
Case could not well be simpler,—mapped, as it were.

We follow the murder's maze from source to sea,
By the red line, past mistake: one sees indeed Not only how all was and must have been,
But cannot other than to be to the end of time.
Turn out here by the Ruspoli! Do you hold Guido was so prodigiously to blame?
A certain cousin of yours has told you so? Exactly! Here's a friend shall set you right,
Let him but have the handsel of your ear.

These wretched Camparini were once gay
And galliard, of the modést middle class:
Born in this quarter seventy years ago,
And married young: they lived the accustomed life.
Citizens as they were of good repute:
And, childless, naturally took this ease
With only their two selves to care about
And use the wealth for: wealthy is the word,
Since Pietro was possessed of house and land —
And specially one house, when good days smiled,
In Via Vittoria, the aspectable street,
Where he lived mainly; but another house
Of less pretension did he buy betimes,
The villa, meant for jaunts and jollity,
I' the Pauline district, to be private there —
Just what puts murder in an enemy's head.
Moreover, — here's the worm i' the core, the germ
O' the tenness and ruin which arrived, —
He owned some usufract, had money's use
Lifelong, but to determine with his life
In heirs' default: so, Pietro craved an heir,
The story always old and always new
Shut his fool's-eyes fast on the visible good
And wealth for certain, opened them owl-wide
On fortune's sole piece of forgetfulness.
The child that should have been and would not be.

Hence, seventeen years ago, conceive his glee
When first Violante, 'twixt a smile and blush, With touch of agitation proper too,
Announced that, spite of her unpromising age,
The miracle would in time be manifest.
An heir's birth was to happen: and it did
Somehow or other, — how, all in good time!
By a trick, a sleight of hand you are to hear, —
A child was born, Pomphilia, for his joy, Plaything at once and prop, a fairy-gift,
A saints' grace or, say, grant of the good
God —
A fiddle-pin's end! What imbeciles are we!
Look now: if some one could have prophesied, "For love of you, for liking to your wife,
I undertake to crush a snake I spy
Settling itself i' the soft of both your breasts.
Give me your babe to strangle painlessly! She'll soar to the safe: you'll have your crying out,

Then sleep, then wake, then sleep, then end your days
In peace and plenty, mixed with mild regret.
Thirty years hence when Christmas takes old folk

How had old Pietro sprung up, crossed himself.
And kicked the conjurer! Whereas you and I.
Being wise with after-wit, had clapped our hands:
Nay, added, in the old fool's interest,
"Strangle the black-eyed babe, so far so good,
But on condition you relieve the man
O' the wife and thralde him Violante too —
She is the mischief!"

We had hit the mark.
She, whose trick brought the babe into the world.
She it was, when the babe was grown a girl.
Judged a new trick should reinforce the old,
Send vigor to the he now somewhat spent
By twelve years' service; lest Eve's rule decline

Over this Adam of hers, whose cabbage-plot
Throve dubiously since turned fools'-paradise,
Spite of a nightingale on every stump,
Pietro's estate was dwindling day by day,
While he, rapt far above such mundane care,
Crawled all-fours with his baby pick-a-back,
Sat at serene cats'-cradle with his child,
Or took the measured tallness, top to toe.
Of what was grown a great girl twelve years old:
Till sudden at the door a tap discreet,
A visitor's premonitory cough,
And poverty had reached him in her rounds.

This came when he was past the working-time,
Had learned to dandle and forgot to dig,
And who must but Violante cast about,
Contrive and task that head of hers again?
She who had caught one fish could make that catch
A bigger still, in angler's policy:
So, with an angler's mercy for the bait,
Her minnow was set wriggling on its barb
And tossed to mid-stream; which means, this grown girl
With the great eyes and bounty of black hair
And first crisp youth that tempts a jaded taste,
Was whisked i' the way of a certain man, who snapped.

Count Guido Franceschini the Aretine
Was head of an old noble house enough,
Yet over-rich, you can't have everything,
But such a man as riches rub against.
They readily stick to, — one with a right to them
Born in the blood: 'twas in his very brow
Always to knit itself against the world,
Beforehand so, when that world stinted due
Service and suit: the world ducks and defers.
As such folks do, he had come up to Rome
To better his fortune, and, since many years.
Was friend and follower of a cardinal;
Waiting the rather thus on providence.
That a shrewd younger poorer brother yet,
The Abate Paolo, a regular priest,
Had long since tried his powers and found he swam

With the deftest on the Galilean pool;

But then he was a web-foot, free o' the wave,

And no ambiguous dab-chick hatched to strut,

Humbled by any fond attempt to swim

With fiercer fowl usurped his dunghill-top —

A whole priest, Paolo, no mere piece of one.

Like Guido taunted thus to the Church's tail!

Guido moreover, as the head o' the house,

Claiming the main prize, not the lesser luck,

The centre lily, no mere chickweed fringe.

He waited and learned waiting, thirty years;

Got promise, missed performance — what would you have?

No petty post rewards a nobleman

For spending youth in splendid lackey-work,

And there's concurrence for each rarer prize;

When that falls, rougher hand and readier foot

Push aside Guido spite of his black looks.

The end was, Guido, when the warning showed,

The first white hair y' the glass, gave up the game,

Determined on returning to his town,

Making the best of bad incurable,

Patching the old palace up and lingering there

The customary life out with his kin.

Where honor helps to spice the scanty bread.

Just as he trimmed his lamp and girt his loins

To go his journey and be wise at home,

In the right mood of disappointed worth,

Who but Violante sudden spied her prey

(Where was I with that angler-simile?)

And threw her bait, Pompilia, where he sulked —

A gleam i' the gloom!

What if he gained thus much,

Wrung out this sweet drop from the bitter

Past,

Bore off this rose-bud from the prickly brake

To justify such torn clothes and scratched hands,

And, after all, brought something back from

Rome?

Would not a wife serve at Arezzo well

To light the dark house, lend a look of youth

To the mother's face grown meagre, left alone

And famished with the emptiness of hope,

Old Donna Beatrice? Wife you want

Would you play family-representative,

Carry you elder-brotherly, high and right

O'er what may prove the natural petulance

Of the third brother, younger, greedier still,

Girolamo, also a fledgling priest,

Beginning life in turn with callow beak

Agape for luck, no luck had stopped and stilled.

Such were the pinks and grays about the bait

Persuaded Guido gulp down hook and all.

What constituted him so choice a catch,

You question? Past his prime and poor beside!

Ask that of any she who knows the trade.

Why first, here was a nobleman with friends,

A palace one might run to and be safe

When presently the threatened fate should fall.

A big-browed master to block doorway up,

Parley with people bent on pushing by,

And praying the mild Pietro quick clear scores:

Is birth a privilege and power or no?

Also — but judge of the result desired,

By the price paid and manner of the sale.

The Count was made woo, win and wed at once.

Asked, and was hailed for answer, lest the heat

Should cool, to San Lorenzo, one blind eye,

And had Pompilia put into his arms

O' the sly there, by a hasty candle-blink,

With sanction of some priest-confederate

Properly paid to make short work and sure.

So did old Pietro's daughter change her style

For Guido Franceschini's lady-wife

Eve Guido knew it well; and why this haste

And scramble and indecent secrecy?

"Lest Pietro, all the while in ignorance,

Should get to learn, gainsay and break the match;

His peevishness had promptly put aside

Such honor and refused the proffered boon,

Pleased to become authoritative once.

She remedied the willful man's mistake —"

Did our discreet Violante. Rather say,

Thus did she lest the object of her game,

Guido the gullèd one, give him but a chance,

A moment's respite, time for thinking twice,

Might count the cost before he sold himself,

And try the clink of coin they paid him with.

But coin paid, bargain struck and business done,

Once the clandestine marriage over thus,

All parties made perforce the best o' the fact;

Pietro could play vast indignation off,

Be ignorant and astounded, dupe, poor soul.

Please you, of daughter, wife and son-in-law,

While Guido found himself in flagrant fault.

Must e'en do suit and service, soothe, subdue

A father not unreasonably chafed,

Bring him to terms by paying son's devoir.

Pleasant initiation!

The end this:

Guido's broad back was saddled to bear all —

Pietro, Violante, and Pompilia too —

Three lots cast confidently in one lap,

Three dead-weights with one arm to lift the three.

Out of their limbo up to life again,

The Roman household was to strike fresh root

In a new soil, graced with a novel name,

Gilt with an alien glory, Arcine

Henceforth and never Roman any more,

By treaty and engagement; thus it ran:

Pompilia's dowry for Pompilia's self

As a thing of course, — she paid her own expense;

No loss nor gain there; but the couple, you see,

They, for their part, turned over first of all

Their fortune in its rags and rottenness

To Guido, fusion and confusion, he

And his with them and theirs, — whatever rag
With coin residuary fell on floor
When Brother Paolo's energetic shake Should do the relics justice: since 't was thought.
Once vulnerable Pietro out of reach,
That, left at Rome as representative,
The Abate, backed by a potent patron here,
And otherwise with purple flushing him,
Might play a good game with the creditor,
Make up a moiety which, great or small,
Should go to the common stock—if anything,
Guido's, so far repayment of the cost
About to be, — and if, as looked more like,
Nothing,—why, all the nomber cost were his
Who guaranteed, far better or for worse,
To Pietro and Violante, house and home,
Kith and kin, with the pick of company
And life o' the fat o' the land while life should last.

How say you to the bargain at first blush?
Why did a middle-aged not-silly man
Show himself thus besotted all at once?
Quoth Solomon, one black eye does it all.

They went to Arezzo,—Pietro and his sponse,
With just the dux o' the day of life to spend,
Eager to use the twilight, taste a treat,
Enjoy for once with neither stay nor stint
The luxury of lord-and-lady-ship,
And realize the stuff and nonsense long
Assimmer in their noddles; yent the fame
Born there and bred, the citizen's conceit
How fares nobility while crossing earth,
What ramprat or invisible body-guard
Keeps off the taint of common life from such.
They had not fed for nothing on the tales
Of grandees who give banquet worthy Jove,
Spending gold as if Plutus paid a whim,
Gained by obsequies as when... what God?
'I'm at the end of my tether; 't is enough
You understand what they came primed to see:
While Guido who should minister the sight,

Stay all this quaintish greediness of soul
With apples and with flagons — for his part.
Was set on life diverse as pole from pole:
Lost of the flesh, lust of the eye, — what else
Was he just now awake from, sick and sage.
After the very debanch they would begin? —
Suppose such stuff and nonsense really were.
That bubble, they were bent on blowing big,
He had blown already till he burst his cheeks.
And hence found soapsuds bitter to the tongue.
He hoped now to walk softly all his days
In soberness of spirit, if haply so,
Pinching and paring he might furnish forth
A frugal board, bare sustenance, no more.
Till times, that could not well grow worse,
Should mend.

Thus minded then, two parties mean to meet
And make each other happy. The first week,
And fancy strikes fact and explodes in full.
"This," shrieked the Comparini. "this the Count,
The palace, the signorial privilege.
The pomp and pageantry were promised us?
For this have we exchanged our liberty,
Our competence, our darling of a child?

To house as spectres in a sepulchre
Under this black stone heap, the street's disgrace,
Grimnest as that is of the gruesome town,
And here pick garbage on a pewter plate,
Or cough at verjuice dripped from earthenware?
Oh Via Vittoria, oh the other place
T'-the Pauline, did we give you up for this?
Where's the foregone housekeeping good and gay.
The neighborhood, the companionship,
The treat and feast when holidays came round,
The daily feast that seemed no treat at all,
Called common by the uncommon fools we were!

Even the sun that used to shine at Rome,
Where is it? Robbed and starved and frozen too,
We will have justice, justice if there be!"
Did not they shout, did not the town resound?
Guido's old lady-mother Beatrice,
Who since her husband, Count Tommaso's death,
Had held sole sway i' the house, — the doited clone
Slow to acknowledge, courtesy and abdicate,—
Was recognized of true novercal type,
Dragon and devil. His brother Girolamo
Came next in order: priest was he? The worse!

No way of winning him to leave his munaps
And help the laugh against old ancestry
And formal habits long since out of date,
Letting his youth be patterned on the mock
Approved of where Violante laid down law.
Or did he brighten up by way of change,
Dispose himself for affability?
The malapert, too complaisant by half
To the alarmed young novice of a bride!
Let him go buzz, betake himself elsewhere.
Nor singe his fly-wings in the candle-flame!

Four months' probation of this purgatory,
Dog-snap and cat-claw, curse and counterblast.
The devil's self were sick of his own din;
And Pietro, after trumpeting huge wrongs
At church and market-place, pillar and post,
Square's corner, street's end, now the palace-step
And now the wine-house bench — while, on her side,
Violante up and down was volatile
In whatsoever pair of ears would perk
From goody, gossip, cater-cousin and sib,
Curious to peep at the inside of things
And catch in the act pretentious poverty
At its wits' end to keep appearance up.
Make both ends meet, — nothing the vulgar loves.
Like what this couple pitched them right and left.
Then, their worst done that way, both struck tent, marched
— Renounced their share o' the bargain, flung what dues
Guido was bound to pay, in Guido's face,
Left their hearts' darling, treasure of the twain
And so forth, the poor inexperienced bride,
To her own devices, bade Areqco rot,
Cursed life signorial, and sought Rome once more.

I see the comment ready on your lip,
"The better fortune, Guido's — free at least
By this deflection of the foolish pair,
He could begin make profit in some sort
Of the young bride and the new quietness,
Lead his own life now, henceforth breathe un-plagued."
Could he? You know the sex like Guido's self.
Learn the Violante-nature!

Once in Rome,
By way of helping Guido lead such life,
Her first act to inaugurate return
Was, she got pricked in conscience: Jubilee
Gave her the hint. Our Pope, as kind as just,
Attained his eighty years, announced a boon
Should make us bless the fact, held Jubilee —
Short shrift, prompt pardon for the light offender
And no rough dealing with the regular crime
So this occasion were not suffered slip—
Otherwise, sins commuted as before,
Without the least abatement in the price.
Now, who had thought it? All this while, it seems,
Our sage Violante had a sin of a sort
She must compound for now or not at all,
Now be the ready riddance! She confessed
Pompiilla was a fable, not a fact:
She never bore a child in her whole life.
Had this child been a changeling, that were grace
In some degree, exchange is hardly theft;
You take your stand on truth ere leap your lie:
Here was all lie, no touch of truth at all,
All the lies hers — not even Pietro guessed
He was as childless still as twelve years since.
The babe had been a find! the fifth-heep, Sir,
Catch from the kennel! There was found at Rome,
Down in the deepest of our social dregs,
A woman who professed the wanton's trade
Under the requisite thin coverture,
Communs meretrix and washer-wife:
The creature thus conditioned found by chance
Motherhood like a jewel in the muck,
And straightway either trafficked with her prize
Or listened to the tempter and let be,— Made pact abolishing her place and part
In womankind, beast-fellowship indeed,
She sold this babe eight months before its birth
To our Violante, Pietro's honest spouse,
Well-famed and widely-instance d as that crown
To the husband, virtue in a woman's shape.
She it was, bought, paid for, passed off the thing
As very flesh and blood and child of her
Despite the flagrant fifty years, — and why?
Partly to please old Pietro, fill his cup
With wine at the late hour when lees are left,
And send him from life's feast rejoicingly, —
Partly to cheat the rightful heirs, agape,
Each uncle's cousin's brother is son of him,
For that same principal of the usufruct.
It vext him he must die and leave behind.

Such was the sin had come to be confessed.
Which of the tales, the first or last, was true?
Did she so sin once, or, confessing now,
Sin for the first time? Either way you will.
One sees a reason for the cheat: one sees
A reason for a cheat in owning cheat
Where no cheat had been. What of the revenge?
What prompted the contrition all at once,
Made the avowal easy, the shame slight?
Why, prove they but Pompiilla not their child,
No child, no dowry! this, supposed their child,
Had claimed what this, shown alien to their blood.
Claimed nowise: Guido's claim was through his wife,
Null then and void with hers. The biter bit,
Do you see! For such repayment of the past,
One might conceive the penitential pair
Ready to bring their case before the courts,
Publish their infamy to all the world
And, arm in arm, go chuckling thence content.

Is this your view? 'T was Guido's anyhow,
And colorable; he came forward then,
Protested in his very bride's behalf
Against this lie and all it led to, least
Of all the loss o' the dowry; no! From her
And him alike he would expunge the blot.
'Erase the brand of such a bestial birth,
Participate in no hideous heritage
Gathered from the gutter to be garnered up
And glorified in a palace. Peter and Paul!
But that who likes may look upon the pair
Exposed in yonder church, and show his skill
By saying which is eye and which is mouth
Through those stabs thick and threefold, — but for that —
A strong word on the liars and their lie
Might crave expression and obtain it, Sir!
— Though prematurely, since there's more to come.
More that will shake your confidence in things
Your cousin tells you, — may I be so bold?

This makes the first act of the farce, — anon
The sombre element comes stealing in
Till all is black or blood-red in the piece.
Guido, thus made a laughing-stock abroad,
A proverb for the market-place at home,
Left alone with Pompiilla now, this graft
So reputable on his ancient stock,
This plague-seed set to fester his sound flesh.
What does the Count? Revenge him on his wife?
Unfasten at all risks to rid himself
The noisome Lazar-badge, fall foul of fate,
And, careless whether the poor rag was ware
O' the part it played, or helped unwittingly.
Bid it go burn and leave his frayed flesh free?
Plainly, did Guido open both doors wide.
Spurn thence the cur-cast creature and clear scores.
As man might, tempted in extreme like this?
No, birth and breeding, and compassion too saved her such scandal. She was young, he thought.
Not privy to the treason, punished most
I the proclamation of it; why make her a party to the crime she suffered by?
Then the black eyes were now her very own,
Not any more Violante's: let her live,
Lose in a new air, under a new sun,
The taint of the impudent parentage
Truly or falsely, take no more the touch
Of Pietro and his partner anyhow!
All might go well yet.

So she thought, herself,
It seems, since what was her first act and deed
When news came how these kindly ones at Rome
Had stripped her naked to amuse the world
With spots here, spots there and spots everywhere?
— For who should tell you that they noised abroad
Not merely the main scandal of her birth,
But slanders written, printed, published wide,
Staring which set forth all the pleasantry
Of how the promised glory was a dream,
The power a bubble, and the wealth — why,
dust.
There was a picture, painted to the life,
Of those rare doings, that superlative
Initiation in magnificence
Conferring on a poor Roman family
By favor of Arezzo and her first
And famousest, the Franceschini there.
You had the Countship holding head aloft
Bravely although bespattered, shifts and straits
In keeping out o' the way o' the wheels o' the
world,
The comic of those home-contrivances
When the old lady-mother's wit was taxed
To find six clamorous mouths in food more real
Than fruit plucked off the cobwebbed family-
trees,
Or acorns shed from its girt moulder'd frame —
Cold glories served up with stale fame for sauce.
What, I ask, — when the drunkenness of hate
Hiccuped return for hospitality,
Befouled the table they had feasted on,
Or say, — God knows I'll not prejudice the case, —
Grievances thus distorted, magnified,
Colored by quarrel into calumny, —
What side did our Pomptilia first espouse?
Her first deliberate measure was, she wrote,
Pricked by some local impulse, straight to Rome
And her husband's brother the Abate there.
Who, having managed to effect the match,
Might take men's censure for its ill success.
She made a clean breast also in her turn,
And qualified the couple properly,
Since whose departure, hell, she said, was heaven.
And the house, late distracted by their peals,
Quiet as Carmel where the lilies live.
Herself had oftentimes complained: but why?

All her complaints had been their prompting tales
Trumped up, devices to this very end.
Their game had been to thwart her husband's
love
And cross his will, malign his words and ways,
To reach this issue, furnish this pretence
For impudent withdrawal from their bond; —
Theft, indeed murder, since they meant no less
Whose last injunction to her simple self
Had been — what parents' - precept do you think?
That she should follow after with all speed,
Fly from her husband's house clandestinely,
Join them at Rome again, but first of all
Pick up a fresh companion in her flight,
So putting youth and beauty to fit use, —
Some gay dare-devil cloak-and-rapiere spark
Capable of adventure, — helped by whom
She, some fine eye when lutes were in the air,
Having put poison in the posset-cup,
Laid hands on money, jewels and the like,
And, to conceal the thing with more effect,
By way of parting benediction too,
Fired the house, — one would finish famously
I the tumult, slip out, scurry off and away
And turn up merrily at home once more.
Fact this, and not a dream o' the devil, Sir!
And more than this, a fact none dare dispute,
Word for word, such a letter did she write,
And such the Abate read, nor simply read
But gave all Rome to ruminate upon,
In answer to such charges as, I say,
The couple sought to be beforehand with.

The cause thus carried to the courts at Rome,
Guido away, the Abate had no choice
But stand forth, take his absent brother's part,
Defend the honor of himself beside.
He made what head he might against the pair,
Maintained Pomptilia's birth legitimate
And all her rights intact — hers, Guido's now:
And so far by his policy turned their flank,
(The enemy being beforehand in the place)
That, — though the courts allowed the cheat for the fact
Suffered Violante to parade her shame,
Publish her infamy to heart's content,
And let the tale o' the feigned birth pass for proved, —
Yet they stopped there, refused to intervene
And dispossess the innocents, befooled
By gifts o' the guilty, at guilt's new caprice.
They would not take away the dowry now
Wrongfully given at first, nor bar at all
Succession to the aforesaid usufruct,
Established on a fraud, nor play the game
Of Pietro's child and now not Pietro's child
As it might suit the gamester's purpose. Thus
Was justice ever ridiculed in Rome:
Such be the double verdicts favored here
Which send away both parties to a suit
Nor puffed up nor cast down, — for each a crumb
Of right, for neither of them the whole loaf.
Whence, on the Comparini's part, appeal —
Counter-appeal on Gnido's, — that's the game.
And so the matter stands, even to this hour,
Bandied as balls are in a tennis-court,
And so might stand, unless some heart broke first,
Till doomsday.

Leave it thus, and now revert
To the old Arezzo whence we moved to Rome,
We 've had enough o' the parents, false or true,
Now for a touch o' the daughter's quality.
The start 's fair hence-forth, every obstacle
Out of the young wife's footpath, she's alone,
Left to walk warily now: how does she walk?
Why, once a dwelling's threshold marked and crossed
In rubric by the enemy on his rounds
As eligible, as fit place of pray,
Baffle him henceforth, keep him out who can!
Stop up the door at the first hint of hoof,
Presently at the window taps a horn,
And Satan's by your fireside, never fear!
Pompilia, left alone now, found herself;
Found herself young too, sprightly, fair enough,
Matched with a husband old beyond his age
(Though that was something like four times her own)
Because of cares past, present and to come:
Found too the house dull and its inmates dead,
So, looked outside for light and life.
And love
Did in a trice turn up with life and light,
— The man with the ancreole, sympathy made flesh.
The all-consoling Caponsacchi, Sir!
A priest — what else should the consoler be?
With goodly shoulder-blade and proper leg,
A portly make and a symmetrical shape,
And curls that clustered to the tonsure quite,
This was a bishop in the bud, and now
A canon full-blown so far: priest, and priest
Nowise exorbitantly overworked,
The courtly Christian, not so much Saint Paul
As a saint of Cæsar's household: there posed he Sending his god-glance after his shot shaft,
Apollé turned Apollo, while the snake
Pompilia writhed transfixed through all her spires.
He, not a visitor at Guido's house,
Scare an acquaintance, but in prime request
With the magnates of Arezzo, was seen here,
Heard there, felt everywhere in Guido's path
If Guido's wife's path be her husband's too.
Now he threw confits at the theatre
Into her lap, — what harm in Carnival?
Now he pressed close till his foot touched her gown
His hand brushed hers, — how help on promenade?
And, ever on weighty business, found his steps
Incline to a certain haunt of doubtful fame
Which fronted Guido's palace by mere chance;
While — how do accidents sometimes combine! —
Pompilia chose to cloister up her charms
Just in a chamber that o' overlooked the street,
Sat there to pray, or peep thence at mankind.

This passage of arms and wits amused the town.
At last the husband lifted eyebrow, — bent
On day-book and the study how to wring
Half the due vintage from the worn-out vines
At the villa, seize a quarter the old rent
From the farmstead, tenants swore would tumble soon,
Pricked up his ear a-singing day and night
With "ruin, ruin," — and so surprised at last
Why, what else but a titter? Up he jumps.
Back to mind come those scratchings at the grange,
Prints of the paw about the outhouse; rife
In his head at once again are word and wink,
Mum here and budget there, the smell o' the fox,
The musk o' the gallant. "Friends, there's falseness here!"

The proper help of friends in such a strait
Is waggery, the world over. Laugh him free
O' the regular jealous-fit that's incident
To all of them who have wives and strong wives,
And he'll go duly dictates all his days.
"Somebody courts your wife, Count? Where and when?
How and why? Mere horn-madness: have a care!
Your lady loves her own room, sticks to it.
Locks herself in for hours, you say yourself.
And — what, it's Caponsacchi means you harm?
The Canon? We caress him, he's the world's.
A man of such acceptance, — never dream.
Though he were fifty times the fox you fear,
He'd risk his brush for your particular chick.
When the wide town's his hen-roost! Fie o' the fool!"
So they dispensed their comfort of a kind.
Guido at last cried, "Something is in the air,
Under the earth, some plot against my peace.
The trouble of eclipse hangs overhead;
How it should come of that officious orb
Your Canon in my system, you must say:
I say — that from the pressure of this spring
Began the chime and interchange of bells,
Ever one whisper, and one whisper more,
And just one whisper for the silvery last,
Till all at once a-row the bronze-throats burst
Into a larum both significant
And sinister: stop it I must and will.
Let Caponsacchi take his hand away
From the wire! — disport himself in other paths
Than lead precisely to my palace-gate, —
Look where he like's except one window's way
Where, check on hand, and elbow set on sill,
Happens to lean and say her litanies
Every day and all day long, just my wife —
Or wife and Caponsacchi may fare the worse!"

Admire the man's simplicity. "I'll do this,
I'll not have that, I'll punish and prevent!" —
'Tis easy saying. But to a fray, you see,
Two parties go. The badger shows his teeth:
The fox nor lies down sheep-like nor dares fight.
Oh, the wife knew the appropriate warfare well
The way to put suspicion to the blush!
At first hint of remonstrance, up and out
The face of the world, you found her: she could speak.
State her case. — Franceschini was a name.
Guido had his full share of foes and friend. —
Why should not she call these to arbitrate?
She bade the Governor do governance.
Cried out on the Archbishop, — why, there
now.
Take him for sample! Three successive times
Had he to reconduct her by main force
From where she took her station opposite
His shut door, — on the public steps thereto,
Wringing her hands, when he came out to see,
And shrieking all her wrongs forth at his foot, —
Back to the husband and the house she fled :
Judge if that husband warned him in the face
Of friends or frowned on foes as heretofore!
Judge if he missed the natural grim of folk,
Or lacked the customary compliment.
Of cap and bells, the luckless husband’s fit!

So it went on and on till — who was right?
One merry April morning, Guido woke
After the cuckoo, so late, near noonday,
With an inordinate yawning of the jaws,
Ears plugged, eyes grinned together, palate, tongue
And teeth one mud-paste made of poppy-milk;
And found his wife flown, his scritoire the worse.

For a rummage, — jewelry that was, was not,
Some money there had made itself wings too, —
The door lay wide and yet the servants slept
Sound as the dead, or dozed, which does as well.
In short, Pompilia, she who, candid soul,
Had not so much as spoken all her life
To the Canon, nay, so much as peeped at him
Between her fingers while she prayed in church,

This hand of the innocent of fifteen years
(Such she was grown to by this time of day)
Had simply put an opiate in the drink
Of the whole household overnight, and then
Got up and gone about her work secure,
Laid hand on this waif and the other stray,
Spoiled the Philistine and marched out of doors
In company of the Canon, who, Lord’s love,
What with his daily duty at the church,
Nightly devor where ladies congregate,
Had something else to mind, assure yourself,
Beside Pompilia, paragon though she be,
Or notice if her nose were sharp or blunt!
Well, anyhow, albeit impossible,
Both of them were together jollily
Jaunting it Rome-ward. half-way there by this,
While Guido was left go and get undrugged,
Gather his wits up, groaningly give thanks
When neighbors crowded round him to console.
“ Ah,” quoth a gossip, “ well I mind me now,
The Count did always say he thought he felt
He feared as if this very chance might fall!
And when a man of fifty finds his curma
Ache and his joints throb, and foresees a storm,
Though neighbors laugh and say the sky is clear,

Let us henceforth believe him weatherwise! ”
Then was the story told, I’ll cut you short:
All neighbors knew: no mystery in the world.
The lovers left at nightfall — overnight
Had Caponsacchi come to carry off

Pompilia, — not alone, a friend of his,
One Guillichini, the more conversant
With Guido’s housekeeping that he was just
A cousin of Guido’s and might play a prank —
“ Have you too a cousin that’s a waif?”
— Lord and a Canon also, — what would you have?

Such are the red-clothed milk-swollen poppy-heads
That stand and stiffen mid the wheat o’ the Church! —

This worthy came to aid, abet his best,
And so the house was ransacked, booty bagged.
The lady led downstairs and out of doors
Guided and guarded till, the city passed,
A carriage lay convenient at the gate.
Good-by to the friendly Canon; the loving one
Could peradventure do the rest himself.
In jumps Pompilia, after her the priest,
“ Whisp, driver! Money makes the mare to go,
And we’ve a bagful. Take the Roman road!”
So said the neighbors. This was eight hours since.

Guido heard all, swore the befitting oaths,
Shook off the relics of his poison-drench,
Got horse, was fairly started in pursuit
With never a friend to follow, found the track
Fast enough, ’t was the straight Perugia way,
Trod soon upon their very heels, too late
By a minute only at Canoscia, reached
Chiusi, Foligno, ever the fugitives
Just ahead, just out as he galloped in,
Getting the good news ever fresh and fresh,
Till, lo, at the last stage of all, last post
Before Rome, — as we say, in sight of Rome
And safety (there’s impunity at Rome
For priests you know) at — what’s the little place? —

What some call CastelImmo, some just call
The Osteria, because o’ the post-house inn, —
There, at the journey’s all but end, it seems,
Triumph deceived them and undid them both,
Secure they might foretell felicity
Nor fear surprise: so, they were surprised.
There did they halt at early evening, there
Did Guido overtake them: ’t was daybreak;
He came in time enough, not time too much,
Since in the courtyard stood the Canon’s self
Urging the drowsy stable-grooms to haste
Harness the horses, have the journey end,
The trilling four-hours’ running, so reach Rome,

And the other runaway, the wife? Upstairs,
Still on the couch where she had spent the night,
One couch in one room, and one room for both
So gained they six hours, so were lost thereby.

Sir, what’s the sequel? Lower and beloved
Fall on their knees? No impudence serves here?
They beat their breasts and beg for easy death.
Confess this, that and the other? — anyhow
Confess there wanted not some likelihood
To the supposition so preposterous.
That, O Pompilia, thy sequenthred eyes
Had noticed, straying o'er the prayer-book's edge,
More of the Canon than that black his coat,
Buckled his shoes were, broad his hat of brim:
And that, O Canon, thy religious care
Had breathed too soft a benedictio
To banish trouble from a lady's breast
So lonely and so lovely, nor so lean!
This you expect? Indeed, then, much you err.
Not to such ordinary end as this
Had Caponsacchi flung the cassock far,
Doffed the priest, donned the perfect cavalier.
The die was cast: over shoes over boots:
And just as she, I presently shall show,
Pompilia, soon looked Helen to the life,
Recumbent upstairs in her pink and white,
So, in the inn-yard, bold as 't were Troy-town,
There strutted Paris in correct costume,
Cloak, cap and feather, no appointment missed,
Even to a wicked-looking sword at side,
He seemed to find and feel familiar at.
Nor wanted words as ready and as big
As the part he played, the bold abashless one.
"I interposed to save your wife from death,
Yourself from shame, the true and only shame:—
Ask your own conscience else!" — or, failing that,
What I have done I answer, anywhere,
Here, if you will; yea I see I have a sword:
Or, since I have a tonsure as you taunt,
At Rome, by all means,—priests to try a priest.
Only, speak where your wife's voice can reply!"
And then he fingered at the sword again.
So, Guido called, in aid and witness both,
The Public Force. The Commissary came,
Officers also; they secured the priest;
Then, for his more confusion, mounted up
With him, a guard on either side, the stair
To the bedroom where still slept or feigned a sleep
His paramour and Guido's wife: in burst
The company and bade her wake and rise.

Her defence? This. She woke, saw, sprang upright
I' the midst and stood as terrible as truth,
Sprang to her husband's side, caught at the sword
That hung there useless,—since they held each hand
O' the lover, had disarmed him properly.—
And in a moment out flew the bright thing
Full in the face of Guido: but for help
O' the guards, who held her back and pinioned her
With pains enough, she had finished you my tale
With a flourish of red all round it, pinked her man
Prettily; but she fought them one to six.
They stopped that,—but her tongue continued free:
She spat forth such invective at her spouse,
O'erforshed him with such foam of murderer,
Chief, pandar—that the popular tide soon turned,

The favor of the very shirri, straight
Ebbed from the husband, set towards his wife;
People cried, "Hands off, pay a priest respect!"
And "persecuting fiend" and "martyred saint"
Began to lead a measure from lip to lip.

But facts are facts and flinch not; stubborn things,
And the question "Prithee, friend, how comes my purse
I' the poke of you?" — admits of no reply.
Here was a priest found out in masquerade,
A wife caught playing truant if no more;
While the Count, mortified in mien enough,
And, nose to face, an added palmi in length,
Was plain writ "husband" every piece of him
Capture once made, release could hardly be.
Beside, the prisoners both made appeal,
"Take us to Rome!"

Taken to Rome they were;
The husband trooping after, piteously,
Tail between legs, no talk of triumph now—
No honor set firm on its feet once more
On two dead bodies of the guilty,—nay,
No dubious salve to honor's broken pate.
From chance that, after all, the hurt might seem
A skin-deep matter, scratch that leaves no scar:
For Guido's first search,—ferreting, poor soul,
Here, there and everywhere in the vile place
Abandoned to him when their backs were turned,
Found,—furnishing a last and best regale—
All the love-letters bandied 'twixt the pair
Since the first timid trembling into life
O' the love-star till its stand at fiery full
Mad prose, mad verse, fears, hopes, triumph, despair,
Avowal, disclaimer, plans, dates, names,—was naught
Wanting to prove, if proof consoles at all,
That this had been but the fifth act o' the piece
Whereof the due proemium, months ago,
These playwrights had put forth, and ever since
Matured the middle, added 'neath his nose.
He might go cross himself: the case was clear.

Therefore to Rome with the clear case; there plead
Each party its best, and leave law do each right.
Let law shine forth and show, as God in heaven,
Vice prostrate, virtue pedestalled at last.
The triumph of truth! What else shall glad our gaze
When once authority has knit the brow
And set the brain behind it to decide
Between the wolf and sheep turned litigants?
"This is indeed a business," law shook head:
"A husband charges hard things on a wife,
The wife as hard o' the husband: whose fault here?
A wife that flies her husband's house, does wrong:
The male friend's interference looks amiss,
Leads a suspicion: but suppose the wife,
On the other hand, be jeopardized at home—
Nay, for she simply hold, ill-groundedly,
An apprehension she is jeopardized,—
And further, if the friend partake the fear,
And, in a commendable charity
Which trusteth all, trust her that she mistrusts,—
What do they but obey law — natural law?
Pretext may this be and a cloak for sin,
And circumstances that concur i' the close
Hint as much, loudly — yet scarce loud enough
To drown the answer 'strange may yet be true,'
Innocence often looks like guiltiness.
The accused declare that in thought, word and deed,
Innocent were they both from first to last
As male-babe haply laid by female-babe.
At church on edge of the baptismal font
Together for a minute, perfect-pure,
Difficult to believe, yet possible,
As witness Joseph, the friend's patron-saint.
The night at the inn — there charity high Chokes
Ere swallow what they both asseverate;
Though down the gulnet faith may feel it go,
When mindful of what flight fatigued the flesh
Out of its faculty and fleshliness.
Subdued it to the soul, as saints assure:
So long a flight necessitates a fall
On the first bed, though in a lion's den,
And the first pillow, though the lion's back:
Difficult to believe, yet possible,
Last come the letters' bundled beastliness —
Authority repugns give glance to — may
Turns head, and almost lets her whip-lash fall:
Yet here a voice cries 'Respite!' from the clouds
The accused, both in a tale, protest, disclaimer.
Abominate the horror: 'Not my hand'
Asserts the friend — 'Nor mine' chimes in the wife,
'Seeing I have no hand, nor write at all,'
Illiterate — for she goes on to ask,
What if the friend did pen now verse now verse
Commend it to her notice now and then?
'T was pearls to swine: she read no more than wrote,
And kept no more than read, for as they fell
She ever brushed the burr-like things away.
Or, better, burned them, quenched the fire in smoke.
As for this fardel, filth and foolishness.
She sees it now the first time: burn it too!
While for his part the friend vows ignorance
Alike of what bears his name and bears hers:
'T is forgery, a felon's masterpiece,
And, as 'tis said the fox still finds the stench,
Home-manufacture and the husband's work.
Though he confesses, the ingenuous friend.
That certain missives, letters of a sort,
Flighty and feeble, which assigned themselves
To the wife, no less have fallen, far too oft,
In his path: wherefrom he understood just this.
That were they verify the lady's own,
Why, she who penned them, since he never saw
Save for one minute the mere face of her,
Since never had there been the interchange
Of word with word between them all their life,
Why, she must be the fondest of the frail,
And fit, she for the 'apage' he flung.
Her letters for the flame they went to feed!
But, now he sees her face and hears her speech.
Much he repents him if, in fancy-freak
For a moment the minutest measurable,
He coupled her with the first flimsy word
O' the self-spin fabric some mean spider-soul
Furnished forth: stop his films and stamp on him!
Never was such a tangled knottiness,
But thus authority cuts the Gordian through,
And mark how her decision suits the need.
Here's troublesomeness, scandal on both sides,
Plenty of fault to find, no absolute crime:
Let each side own its fault and make amends!
What does a priest in cavalier's attire
Consorting publicly with vagrant wives
In quarters close as the confessional,
Though innocent of harm? 'T is harm enough:
Let him pay it. — say, be relegate a good
Three years, to spend in some place not too far
Nor yet too near, midway 'twixt near and far,
Rome and Arezzo. — Civita we choose,
Where he may lounge away time, live at large,
Find out the proper function of a priest,
Nowise an exile. — that were punishment. —
But one our love thus keeps out of harm's way
Not more from the husband's anger than mayhap,
His own... say, indiscretion, waywardness,
And wanderings when Easter eyes grow warm.
For the wife, — well, our best step to take with her,
On her own showing, were to shift her root
From the old cold shade and unhappy soil
Into a generous ground that fronts the south:
Where, since her fallow soul, a-shiver late,
Craved simply warmth and called mere passage
By to the rescue, she should have her fill of shine.
Do house and husband hinder and not help?
Why then, forget both and stay here at peace,
Come into our community, enrol
Herself along with those good Convertites,
Those sinners saved, those Magdalen's re-made,
Accept their ministration, well bestow
Her body and patiently possess her soul,
Until we see what better can be done.
Last for the husband: if his tale prove true,
Well is he rid of two domestic plagues —
Both wife that ailed, do whatsoever he would,
And friend of hers that undertook the cure.
See, what a double load we lift from breast!
Off he may go, return, resume old life,
Laud at the priest here and Pompilia there
In limbo each and punished for their pains.
And grateful tell the inquiring neighborhood
In Rome, no wrong but has its remedy.'
The case was closed. Now, am I fair or no
In what I utter? Do I state the facts, Having forechosen a side? I promised you!

The Canon Caponsacchi, then, was sent
To change his garb, re-trim his tonsure, tie
The clerkly silk round, every plait correct,
Make the impressive entry on his place
Of relegation, thrill his Civita,
As Odin, a like sufferer in the cause,
Planted a primrose-patch by Pontus: where, —
What with much culture of the sommet-stave
And converse with the aborigines,
Soft savagery of eyes unused to roll,
And hearts that all awry went pit-a-pat
And wanted setting right in charity. —
What were a couple of years to while away?
Pompilia, as enjoined, betook herself
To the aforesaid Convertites, soft sisterhood
In Via Langara, where the light ones live.
Spin, pray, then sing like linnets o'er the flux,
"Anywhere, anyhow, out of my husband's house
Is heaven," cried she, — was therefore suited so.
But for Count Guido Franceschini, he —
The injured man thus righted — found no heaven
If the house when he returned there, I engage,
Was welcomed by the city turned upside down
In a chorus of inquiry. "What, back — you?
And no wife? Left her with the Penitents?
Ah, being young and pretty, 't were a shame
To have her whipped in public: leave the job
To the priests who understand! Such priests as yours —
(Pontifex Maximus whipped Vestals once)
Our madcap Caponsacchi: think of him!'
So, he fired up, showed fight and skill of fence?
Ay, you drew also, but you did not fight!
The wiser, 'tis a word and a blow with him,
True Caponsacchi, of old Head-i'-the-Sack
That fought at Fiesole ere Florence was:
He had done enough, to firk you were too much.
And did the little lady menace you,
Make at your breast with your own harmless sword?
The spitfire! Well, thank God you're safe and sound,
Have kept the sixth commandment whether or no
The lady broke the seventh: I only wish
I were as saint-like, could contain me so,
I, the poor sinner, fear I should have left
Sir Priest no nose-tip to turn up at me!"
You, Sir, who listen but interpose no word,
Ask yourself, had you borne a baiting thus?
Was it enough to make a wise man mad?
Oh, but I'll have your verdict at the end!

Well, not enough, it seems: such mere hurt falls,
Frets awhile, aches long, then grows less and less,
And so gets done with. Such was not the scheme
O' the pleasant Comparini: on Guido's wound
Ever in due succession, drop by drop,
Came slow distillation from the alembic here
Set on to simmer by Canidian hate,
Corrosives keeping the man's misery raw.
First fire-drop, — when he thought to make the best
O' the head, to wring from out the sentence passed,
Poor, pitiful, absurd although it were.
Yet what might eke him out result enough
And make it worth while to have had the right
And not the wrong i' the matter judged at Rome.
Inadequate her punishment, no less
Punished in some slight sort his wife had been,
Then, punished for adultery, what else?
On such admitted crime he thought to seize,
And institute procedure in the courts
Which cut corruption of this kind from man.
Cast loose a wife proved loose and castaway:
He claimed in due form a divorce at least.

This claim was met now by a counterclaim:
Pompilia sought divorce from bed and board
Of Guido, whose outrageous cruelty,
Whose mother's malice and whose brother's hate
Were just the white o' the charge, such dreadful depths
Blackened its centre, — hints of worse than hate.
Love from that brother, by that Guido's guile,
That mother's prompting. Such reply was made,
So was the engine loaded, wound up, sprung
On Guido, who received bolt full in breast;
But no less bore up, giddily perhaps.
He had the Abate Paolo still in Rome,
Brother and friend and fighter on his side;
They rallied in a measure, met the foe
Manlike, joined battle in the public courts,
As it to shame sincere law from her shoth:
And waiting her award, let beat the while Arezzo's banter, Rome's buffoonery.
On this ear and on that ear, deaf alike,
Safe from worse outrage. Let a scorpion nip,
And never mind till he contorts his tail!
But there was sting i' the creature; thus it struck.
Guido had thought in his simplicity —
That lying declaration of remorse,
That story of the child which was no child
And motherhood no motherhood at all,
— That even this sin might have its sort of good
Inasmuch as no question more could be, —
Call it false, call the story true, — no claim
Of further parentage pretended now:
The parents had abjured all right, at least,
I' the woman owned his wife: to plead right
Still
Were to declare the abjuration false:
He was relieved from any fear henceforth
Their hands might touch, their breath defile
Again.
Pompilia with his name upon her yet.
Well, no: the next news was, Pompilia's health
Demanded change after full three long weeks
Spent in devotion with the Sisterhood, —
Which rendered sojourn — so the court opined —
Too irksome, since the convent's walls were high
And windows narrow, nor was air enough
Nor light enough, but all looked prison-like,
And helpful hands which female straits require,
When in the blind mute villa by the gate,
Pompilia—what? sang, danced, saw company?
Gave birth, Sir, to a child, his son and heir,
Or Guido’s heir and Caponsacchi’s son.
I want your word now: what do you say to this?
What would say little Arezzo and great Rome,
And what did God say and the devil say,
One at each ear o’ the man, the husband, now
The father? Why, the overburdened mind
Broke down, what was a brain became a blaze.
In fury of the moment—that first news
Fell on the Count among his vines, it seems,
Doing his farm-work,—why, he summoned steward,
Called in the first four hard hands and stout hearts
From field and furrow, poured forth his appeal
Not to Rome’s law and gospel any more.
But this clown with a mother or a wife,
That clodpole with a sister or a son
And, whereas law and gospel held their peace,
What wonder if the sticks and stones cried out?

All five soon somehow found themselves at Rome,
At the villa door: there was the warmth and light
The sense of life so just an inch inside—
Some angel must have whispered “One more chance!”

He gave it: bade the others stand aside:
Knocked at the door.—”Who is it knocks?” cried one.
”I will make,” surely Guido’s angel urged,
”One final essay, last experiment,
Speak the word, name the name from out all names,
Which, if—as doubtless strong illusions are,
And strange disguisings whereby truth seems false,
And, since I am but man, I dare not do
God’s work until assured I see with God,—
If I should bring my lips to breathe that name
And they be innocent,—say, by one mere touch
Of innocence redeemed from utter guilt,—
That name will bar the door and bid fate pass.
I will not say ‘It is a messenger,
A neighbor, even a belated man,
Much less your husband’s friend, your husband’s self:’
At such appeal the door is bound to open.
But I will say”—here’s rhetoric to spare!
Why, Sir, the stumbling-block is cursed and kicked,
Block though it be; the name that brought offence
Will bring offence: the burnt child dreads the fire
Although that fire feed on some taper-wick
Which never left the altar nor singed a fly:
And had a harmless man tripped you by chance.
How would you wait him, stand or step aside,
When next you heard he rolled your way?
Enough.

" Giuseppe Caponsacchi! " Guido cried;
And open flew the door: enough again.
Vengeance, you know, burst, like a mountain-wave
That holds a monster in it, over the house,
And wiped its filthy four walls free at last
With a wash of hell-fire,—father, mother, wife,
Killed them all, bathed his name clean in their blood,
And, recking so, was caught, his friends and he,
Haled hither and imprisoned yesternight
O' the day all this was.
Now, Sir, tale is told,
Of how the old couple come to lie in state
Though hacked to pieces,—never, the expert say,
So thorough a study of stabbing,—while the wife
(Viper-like, very difficult to slay)
Wretches still through every ring of her, poor wretch,
At the Hospital hard by—survives, we'll hope.
To somewhat purify her putrid soul
By full confession, make so much amends
While time lasts; since at day's end die she must.

For Caponsacchi,—why, they'll have him here,
As hero of the adventure, who so fit
To figure in the coming Carnival?
'Twill make the fortune of whate'er saloon
Hears him recount, with helpful cheek, and eye
Hotly indignant now, now dewy-dimmed,
The incidents of flight, pursuit, surprise,
Capture, with hints of kisses all between —
While Guido, wholly unromantic spouse,
No longer fit to laugh at since the blood
Gave the broad face an all too brutal air.
Why, he and those four lackloose friends of his
May tumble in the straw this bitter day —
Laid by the heels i' the New Prison, I hear,
To hide their trial, since trial, and for the life,
Follows if but for form's sake: yes, indeed!

But with a certain issue: no dispute,
"Try him," bids law; formalities oblige:
But as to the issue,—look me in the face!—
If the law thinks to find them guilty, Sir,
Master or men—touch one hair of the five,
Then I say in the name of all that's left
Of honor in Rome, civility i' the world
Whereof Rome boasts herself the central source,—
There's an end to all hope of justice more.
Astraea's gone indeed, let hope go too!
Who is it dares impugn the natural law,
Deny God's word "the faithless wife shall die");
What, are we blind? How can we fail to learn
This crowd of miseries make the man a mark,
Accumulate on one devoted head.

For our example?—yours and mine who read
Its lesson thus—"Henceforward let none dare
Stand, like a natural in the public way,
Letting the very scribas twitch his beard
And tweak his nose, to earn a nickname so,
Be styled male-Grisset or else modern Job;"

Had Guido, in the twinkling of an eye,
Summed up the reckoning, promptly paid himself,
That morning when he came up with the pair
At the wayside inn,—exact his just debt
By aid of what first mattock, pitchfork, axe
Came to hand in the helpful stable-yard,
And with that axe, if provision so pleased,
Cloven each head, by some Roland-stroke,
In one clean cut from crown to clavicle,
—Slain the priest-gallant, the wife-paramour,
Sticking, for all defense, in each skull's cleft
The rhyme and reason of the stroke thus dealt,
To wit, those letters and last evidence
Of shame, each package in its proper place,—
Bidding, who pitied, mutilate the skulls,
I say, the world had praised the man. But no!
That were too plain, too straight, too simply just!
He hesitates, calls law forsooth to help.
And law, distasteful to who calls in law
When honor is beforehand and would serve
What wonder if law hesitate in turn.
Plead her diocese to calls o' the kind, reply
(Smiling a little), "'T is yourself assess
The worth of what's lost, sum of damage done.
What you touched with so light a finger-tip,
Yon whose concern it was to grasp the thing.
Why must law gird herself and grapple with?
Law, alien to the actor whose warm blood
Asks heat from law whose veins run lukewarm milk, —
What you dealt lightly with, shall law make out
Heinous forsooth?"

Sir, what's the good of law
In a case o' the kind? None, as she all but says.
Call in law when a neighbor breaks your fence,
Cries from your field, tampers with rent or lease.
Touches the purse or pocket,—but woos your wife?
No: take the old way trod when men were men!
Guido preferred the new path,—for his pains,
Stuck in a quagmire, floundered worse and worse.
Until he managed somehow scramble back
Into the safe sure rutted road once more.
Revegved his own wrong like a gentleman.
Once back 'mid the familiar prints, no doubt
He made too rash amends for his first fault.
Vaulted too loftily over what barred him late.
And lit i' the mire again,—the common chance.
The natural over-energy: the deed
Mahdrafot yields three deaths instead of one,
And one life left: for where's the Canons' corpse?
All which is the worse for Guido, but, he fake —
The better for you and me and all the world.
THE OTHER HALF-ROME

Husbands of wives, especially in Rome.
The thing is put right, in the old place,—ay, The rod hangs on its nail behind the door, Fresh from the brine: a matter I command To the notice, during Carnival that's near. Of a certain what's-his-name and jackanapes Somewhat too civil of eyes with lute and song About a house here, where I keep a wife. (You, being his cousin, may go tell him so.)

THE OTHER HALF-ROME

Another day that finds her living yet, Little Pomplia, with the patient brow And lamentable smile on those poor lips, And, under the white hospital-array, A flower-like body, to frighten at a bruise You'd think, yet now, stabbed through and through again, Alive 'tis the ruins, 'T is a miracle. It seems that, when her husband struck her first, She prayed Madonna just that she might live So long as to confess and be absolved; And whether it was that, all her sad life long Never before successful in a prayer, This prayer rose with authority too dread, Or whether, because earth was hell to her, By compensation, when the blackness broke She got one glimpse of quiet and the cool blue, To show her for a moment such things were, Or else, — as the Augustinian Brother thinks, The friar who took confession from her lip, When a probationary soul that moved From nobleness to nobleness, as she, Over the rough way of the world, succumbs, Bloodies its last thorn with unfinishing foot, The angels love to do their work betimes, Stanch some wounds here nor leave so much for God.

Who knows? However it be, confessed, absolved, She lies, with overplus of life beside To speak and right herself from first to last. Right the friend also, lamb-pure, lion-brave, Care for the boy's concerns, to save the son From the sire, her two-weeks infant orphaned thus, And — with best smile of all reserved for him — Pardon that sire and husband from the heart. A miracle, so tell your Molinists!

There she lies in the long white lazaret-house. Rome has besieged, these two days, never doubt, Saint Anna's where she waits her death, to hear Though out the chink o' the bell, turn o' the hinge When the reluctant wicket opes at last, Let's in, on now this and now that pretence, Too many by half, — complain the men of art,— For a patient in such plight. The lawyers first Paid the due visit — justice must be done:

They took her witness, why the murder was. Then the priests followed properly, — a soul To shrive; 't was Brother Celestine's own right,

The same who noises thus her gifts abroad. But many more, who found they were old friends, Pushed in to have their stare and take their talk And go forth boasting of it and to boast. Old Monna Baldi chatters like a jay, Swears — but that, prematurely trundled out Just as she felt the benefit begin, The miracle was snapped up by somebody. — Her palsied limb 'gan prick and promise life At touch o' the bedclothes merely, — how much more Had she but brushed the body as she tried! Cavalier Carlo — well, there's some excuse For him — Maratta who paints Virgins so — He too must fee the porter and slip by With pencil cut and paper squared, and straight There was he figuring away at face: "A lovelier face is not in Rome," cried he, "Shaped like a peacock's egg, the pure as pearl, That hatches you anon a snow-white chick,"

Then, oh that pair of eyes, that pendent hair, Black this and black the other! Mighty fine — But nobody cared ask to paint the same, Nor grew a poet over hair and eyes Four little years ago, when, ask and have, The woman who wakes all this rapture leaned Flower-like from out her window long enough, As much uncomplimented as uncropped By comers and goers in Via Vittoria: eh? 'Tis just a flower's fate: past parterre we trip, Till peradventure some one plucks our sleeve — "You blossom at the brier's end, that's the rose Two jealous people fought for yesterday And killed each other; see, there's undisturbed A pretty pool at the root, of rival red!" Then cry we, "Ah, the perfect paragon!" Then crave we, "Just one keepsake-leaf for us!"

Truth lies between: there's anyhow a child Of seventeen years, whether a flower or weed, Ruined: who did it shall account to Christ — Having no pity on the harmless life And gentle face and girlish form he found, And thus flings back. Go practise if you please With men and women: leave a child alone For Christ's particular love's sake! — so I say. Somebody at the bedside said much more, Took on him to explain the secret cause O' the crime: quoth he, "Such crimes are very rife, Explode nor make ns wonder nowadays, Seeing that Antichrist disseminates That doctrine of the Philosophic Sin: Molinos' sect will soon make earth too hot!" "Nay," groaned the Augustinian, "what's there new?
Crime will not fail to flare up from men's hearts.

While hearts are men's and so born criminal;
Which one fact, always old yet ever new,
Accounts for so much crime that, for my part,
Molinos may go whistle to the wind
That waits outside a certain church, you know!"
